Berkowitz declared competent; insanity plea planned

NEW YORK (UPI) — Son of Sam suspect David Berkowitz Monday was ruled mentally fit to stand trial next month for the murder of Stacy Moskowitz, the last of six victims in the .44-caliber killings that terrorized this city for a year.

State Supreme Court Justice Joseph Corso, who made the ruling following several days of hearings, set May 8 for the beginning of the trial in Brooklyn.

Following the decision, defense attorneys Ira Jultak and Leon Stern said they would plead Berkowitz innocent by reason of insanity. Berkowitz, in early court hearings, had said he wanted to plead guilty.

Stern and Jultak said that once they have exhausted their pre-emptory challenges during jury selection, they would file a motion asking that the trial be moved from Brooklyn. A previous motion for a change of venue was denied by a state appeals court.

"It would be most difficult ... impossible to get a fair trial in Brooklyn because of pre-trial publicity," said Jultak, who added that he did not believe an impartial jury could be found anywhere in the country.

Berkowitz, a 24-year-old former postal worker, is accused of killing six young people and wounding seven others in a series of nighttime ambushes with a .44-caliber "Bulldog" revolver.

The terror spree began July 29, 1976, with the Bronx killing of 18-year-old Donna Luria and ended July 31, 1977 with the slaying of Moskowitz, 20, as she sat in a parked car with her boyfriend. Berkowitz was arrested 10 days later outside his suburban Yonkers apartment.

During the intense hunt for the killer, police and newspaper columnist Jimmy Breslin received cryptic notes that made references to "Son of Sam."

At the time of his arrest and later at his first competency hearing, Berkowitz said "Sam" was his 64-year-old neighbor, Sam Carr, who, through his dog, ordered him to kill to quench his thirst for "young blood."

Judge Corso, in his six-page decision, said "a preponderance of evidence" established that "the defendant does not as a result of mental disease or defect lack capacity to understand the proceedings against him or assist in his defense."

He said psychiatric testimony and evidence presented at a four-day, closed competency hearing earlier this month indicated Berkowitz "is most certainly oriented as to time and place and has contact with reality. He can perceive, recall (if he wishes to) and relate."

Berkowitz has been held at the psychiatric ward of Kings County Hospital since his arrest.

Berkowitz was found competent to stand trial at an earlier hearing last fall. But a new hearing was ordered by Corso when he replaced the original judge, who stepped down amid controversy over public statements he had made about the case.

Council 'joint effort' for senior center, housing project fails

By RHONDA DICKEY
Staff Writer

Conflicts among the members of a joint task force on housing and a community center for elderly persons caused the Iowa City Council Monday to adopt a "declaration of independence" from task force member Rev. Robert Welsh.

The council decided in its informal session Monday to adopt, by resolution, an April 21 memorandum stating that the senior citizens' center will be owned and operated by the city, that it will be open for all elderly persons regardless of place of residence or religious belief, and that the center will be separate from the 100-unit elderly housing project.

The senior citizens' center will be located in the old Post Office building at the corner of Washington and Linn streets; the housing will be located behind the center.

Councilor Carol deProse alluded to problems in working with Welsh: "The time is now to be very frank about it."

Councilors, however, made little more than oblique references to Welsh at the meeting.

According to Councilor Mary Neuhauser, "I think we've talked a lot about joint (efforts), and I think that's led to a lot of confusion." Neuhauser suggested that the city and the Ecumenical Housing Corp. — a non-profit organization sponsoring the federally financed housing project — assume the role of "next-door neighbors." She indicated that she believed it is important to maintain distinction between the center and the housing project.

Mayor Robert Vevera told the council that the center and housing project are "really not going to be as much of a joint effort as, dream-wise, you'd want it to be." Vevera is also a member of the joint task force.

DeProse added, "I honestly believe that the possibility of having that housing not constructed is a very real one." While she had wanted the two projects to be an "integrated effort," deProse said, she does not want the city's senior citizens' center to suffer because of delays associated with the housing project.

DeProse said later that Welsh's frequent refusal to accept what a majority of task force members have agreed to has caused delays and problems. Local sponsors have 18 months to get such details as programming and drawings approved; if that schedule is not met, deProse said, the city will lose the housing allocation from the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). The 18-month period is approximately half over for Iowa City, deProse said.

"Everybody gets along fine with everybody, but nobody gets along with Rev. Welsh," deProse said.

The memorandum "sounds very general and innocuous" but constitutes "a declaration of independence from Rev. Welsh"; it is an attempt to dissuade Welsh from telling city officials and task force members what to do, she said.

Community Development Program Coordinator Julie Vann said that while formal documents show that the housing project and the center are two separate projects, Welsh "feels a real, personal control over both projects, and he would like to manage them."

Vann is a city staff member working with the task force on the senior citizens' center.

Vann also indicated that Welsh is not receptive to comments from the public on the projects. "It seems like he says he wants lots of citizen input," Vann said, but he appreciates comments only when they conform to his ideas.

According to HUD records, Vann said, the allocation for housing has been granted to the First Christian Church, of which Welsh is the minister.

Welsh is an influential member of the joint task force because he "spends probably 40 hours a week on this project" and because of his affiliation with the First Christian Church, she said.

"He has a lot of cards to play with that role," Vann said of Welsh's part in the church's sponsorship.

Congregate meals, health services and recreational programs are examples of programming being considered for the city's senior citizens' center.

Welsh was not available Monday night for comment.

Exchange of leftists for Moro refused

ROME (UPI) — The Italian government flatly rejected the Red Brigades' latest demands for the release of 13 jailed leftists Monday night just hours after a handwritten letter believed to be from kidnapped ex-Premier Aldo Moro warned, "We are at the moment of slaughter."

The letter, found on a Rome street addressed to Benigno Zaccagnini, secretary of the ruling Christian Democratic Party that Moro heads, pleaded: "We are almost at zero hour. We are at seconds rather than minutes from it."

"We are at the moment of slaughter." Following a meeting between Premier Giulio Andreotti and his security council at Chigi Palace, the government issued a statement that said:

"A government examination of latest events leads to the conclusion that so far the kidnapers have given indications that show no prospects of any real intention to restore Aldo Moro to freedom.

"Requests to exchange prisoners were and are unacceptable because they are directed against the freedom of everyone."

The letter purportedly written by Moro was found under a window shutter by the Rome evening newspaper Vita Sera after an anonymous telephone call. Vita Sera officials said the seven-page, handwritten signed letter was an original, not a photocopy, and appeared genuine.

Hours earlier the Red Brigades issued their eighth communique since they kidnaped Moro on a Rome street and killed his five police guards March 16. In this one, for the first time, the ultra-leftist guerrilla gang spelled out its terms for his release.

"If this is not done, we will immediately draw the appropriate conclusions and execute the (death) sentence that has been passed on Moro," the message said without setting a firm deadline.

The Red Brigades earlier threatened to kill Moro at 3 p.m. (9 a.m. EST) last Saturday if the government did not say in a "clear and definitive" way that it agreed to an exchange with an unspecified number of "communist prisoners." The gang let that deadline pass in silence and without explanation.

"Things could not be worse," said Christian Democratic Sen. Guido Gonella as he left the ruling party's headquarters after hearing of the terrorists' latest demands.

Premier Giulio Andreotti summoned a meeting of the national security council at his Chigi Palace office.

Moro's wife Eleonora left her home with a police escort for an unknown destination after news of the new Moro letter arrived.

In the letter, Moro alternately pleaded that the Christian Democrats act to save him and upbraided them for not doing so.

"Do not think," he wrote, "that the Christian Democrats will overcome the problem by liquidating Moro. I repeat that I do not accept the iniquitous and ungrateful sentence of the party. I repeat that I absolve and justify nobody."

"For this reason, for obvious incompatibility, I ask that my funeral be attended neither by state officials nor by men of the party. I want to be accompanied by the few who really wished me well

Senate proposes eastside Cambus route

By TERRY IRWIN
Staff Writer

A supplemental Cambus route that would provide late night bus service for eastside residents has been proposed by members of the UI Student Senate.

Senate Vice President John Frew and Sens. David Dix and Lynn Griebahn, in response to petitions and letters they have received from their constituents, have recommended that a Cambus run from 10:30 to 12:30 p.m. on a route through the most heavily student-populated areas on the east side of campus, including the area around College and Market streets and Iowa Avenue.

Frew said that after receiving letters and petitions from students supporting an extension of the Cambus system on the east side, it became a question of whether Cambus administrators would support such a proposal and, if so, when the routes would be run.

He said he informed Cambus Coordinator Carol Dehne that if there was a disagreement in which Cambus did not support the wishes of his constituency, the senate might consider removing Cambus from the senate's optional-fees card. The card enables Cambus to gain funding through a student check-off system at registration. Cambus also receives mandatory student fees allocated by the Student Services Department.

At a meeting Monday, Cambus officials and members of the senate considered two proposals for route times for such an extension. The first would provide that Cambus begin an eastside route early in the evening.

Dehne said there is an informal agreement between the UI and city transit system that Cambus will not duplicate city bus routes. Evening bus service by the city system runs from approximately 6:30 to 10 p.m. It was also noted that some of the Cambus buses need to be serviced during that time and could not be available for use until approximately 8:15 p.m.

A compromise proposal that would enable Cambus to supplement rather than duplicate city bus service by starting Cambus routes at 10:30 p.m. was accepted by the group. Dehne offered some support for the proposal, saying she would "be willing to try to make it happen," pending approval by city officials.

Frew said the purpose of urging the creation of such a route was not to make the city system lose money from students who might wait for a free Cambus ride rather than pay the 25-cent fare on the last bus leaving the downtown area.

It would also help to "serve female students who have to walk through a darkened area" walking home from classes or the library, he said. Students would then be able to stay for a longer time downtown, he added.

Frew said the next step in getting the extension will be to talk to city transit officials to see whether they will support the proposal. The senate executives, he said, will also be looking for possible sources of funding for the proposed service. Dehne estimated that the expense would be about $20 per day or approximately $5,200 per year because Cambus runs 52 weeks per year.

Under the proposal, the buses would run approximately every 20 minutes.

Dix said he initiated the effort to extend the service after being approached by a member of Panhellenic Council about creating an eastside route. He wrote letters to members of sorority houses to see if there was additional interest in a possible route.

Members of the houses later petitioned residents of the east side, including students in the Greek houses and in off-campus housing in the area, Dix said. Residents of that area also began writing letters to Dix and other senators about the issue.

Dix said approximately 750 persons have signed petitions requesting "the extension of Cambus service to the area directly east of campus and west of Dodge Street..." He said he expects to have 1,000 signatures by this week's senate meeting (Thursday).

Dix said he has also received approximately 30 letters from residents supporting the extension of Cambus service.

Vindication

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Judiciary Committee has concluded Rep. Joshua Eilberg, D-Pa., was not personally under investigation when he telephoned President Carter last November urging the dismissal of Republican U.S. attorney David Marston of Philadelphia.

The committee's report officially recorded its confirmation of Benjamin R. Civiletti as deputy attorney general. However, Sens. Malcolm Wallop, R-

Wyo., and Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., had used the confirmation hearing in an attempt to show Eilberg wanted Marston dismissed because the attorney was passing an indictment against him in a local hospital funding investigation.

The hearing failed to show a connection, as the committee report stated.

"There was no 'cover-up' of any investigation simply because there was no such investigation in existence during the time in question," it said.

Marston's own affidavit to the committee said on the Nov. 4 date of Eilberg's call to Carter, he did not consider any indictment of Eilberg likely.

Trial

SANTA ANA, Calif. (UPI) — A jury of nine men and three women started deliberations Monday in the trial of a doctor accused of strangling a minutes-old baby he had tried to abort from his 18-year-old mother.

Superior Court Judge James K. Turner instructed the panel that it could find Dr. William B. Waddill guilty of first-or second-degree murder, first-or second-degree attempted murder or declare him innocent of the charges.

A possible manslaughter conviction was dropped from the judge's instructions at the request of the defense attorney for Waddill, an obstetrician and gynecologist who has one of the largest practices in Orange County.

The fishermen were upset at the loss of their fish catch to the mammals. The Japanese government has said it did not approve of the Iki slaughter, but local officials paid a bounty of $12 per dolphin killed.

Dolphins

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., Monday called for House passage during next week's visit by the Japanese prime minister of a resolution criticizing the recent slaughter of 1,000 dolphins by Japanese fishermen.

A House International Relations subcommittee is considering a resolution expressing "strong concern" over the February slaughter of dolphins by fishermen on the island of Iki.

Conte also asked that colleagues who share his concern request President Carter to raise the subject in his talks with the prime minister.

Conte said the committee, of which he is not a member, should complete work on the resolution by next week so it can pass the House during the visit of Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda.

Alcohol

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Council of Ministers called Monday for intensification of the campaign against drunkenness, a major social problem in the Soviet Union.

A series of directives published in the government newspaper Izvestia ordered for a tightening up of enforcement of existing laws on the sale of alcohol and treatment of drunks, wider research on the problem of alcoholism and the launching of a radio and television campaign on the evils of drink.

Drinking has been blamed for three quarters of all violent crimes in the Soviet Union.

CAC allocates $78,000 to 71 groups

By LEE SEVIG
Staff Writer

Approximately $78,000 was approved for 71 student organizations Monday by the Collegiate Associations Council (CAC). Various groups had originally requested $208,000.

The Associated Residence Halls (ARH), had requested $5,260 and the CAC Budgeting and Auditing Committee recommended $200 for office supplies. ARH President Dave Ecklund asked for an additional $200 for a newsletter but the CAC rejected the request.

CAC Vice President Niel Ritchie asked Ecklund why Residence Services, which works closely with the ARH, did not fund the project.

Ecklund said Residence Services had not funded the project in the past because it did not involve program or housing funds. As a result, the ARH had not requested funding from Residence Services for the newspaper this year, he said.

CAC Treasurer Dave Bahls said the Budgeting and Auditing Committee did not recommend funding for the project because the Liberal Arts Review, a newsletter produced by the Liberal Arts Students Association (LASA), did the same thing.

Ecklund said not all students in residence halls are liberal arts students, however, and those students would not receive the LASA newsletter.

Former ARH President Jeff Romine said the ARH newsletter could be printed more economically by mimeograph instead of the offset printing Ecklund was requesting. He also suggested the paper may have failed because of inadequate leadership.

IowaPIRG had requested $6,000 and received only $1,600. IowaPIRG Director Geoff King criticized CAC's lack of funds and recommended it find alternative sources of funds.

King, a former vice president of the CAC, said the CAC should investigate alternative funding sources since the organization was receiving many more budgeting requests than in the past.

King criticized the optional-fees-card system of obtaining funds and said the CAC spends more money on optional fee cards than the cards bring in.

Councilor Steve Hodge, a member of the Budgeting and Auditing Committee, said the committee suggested alternative sources of funding to all groups that requested funds from the CAC.

CAC President Benita Dilley said budgeting requests are determined by how much initiative the organization shows and how much money it makes on its own. She said if the CAC changed that, "it could be in big trouble."

A project studying the "social and scientific phenomena" of unidentified flying objects was funded $600, a change from the committee's recommendation of giving it nothing. A participant in the project said it was supported by the student body, proven by a random telephone survey the group did. He said the survey showed half the student body thought the project should be done and one-sixth of the student body would participate in that project.

When Councilor Art Petrzela questioned whether the students had sufficient scientific knowledge to undertake such a project, the representative said science professors had volunteered their time to give advice on it.

The Budgeting and Auditing Committee refused funding to "political organizations," which included the Revolutionary Student Brigade and the University Democrats. Bahls said the committee also cut funding for all requests to send students to out-of-town conferences, which reduced allocated funds in student groups by approximately $6,000.

WRAC may receive 'rescue funds' from UI

By BILL JOHNSON
University Editor

The UI may give $2,500 to the Women's Resource and Action Center (WRAC) so it can continue some of its current programs, Philip Hubbard, vice president for Student Services, said Monday.

On April 20, the Student Senate Budget Committee recommended that WRAC receive only $1,239 this year in senate funds, with the money to be used for the Rape Victim Advocacy Program. Last year WRAC received $7,610 from the senate.

"We're going to tell Hubbard that WRAC is a student service," Stanley said. "We don't see ourselves paying $8,000 a year to help support the Student Services Department."

WRAC is an "administrative unit" of Student Services, according to Hubbard; approximately half of its $30,000-a-year budget is allocated through Student Services. Included in the UI funding are $12,500 as salary for Linda McGuire, WRAC coordinator, and $5,000 for office expenses, including the use of office space.

Barbara Ettleson, chairwoman of the WRAC advisory board, said additional funding from Student Services would help WRAC, but could not totally replace the senate funds. "I would guess that his (Hubbard's) offer would certainly be an alternative," Ettleson said. "We'd have to talk to various groups about it."

"Even if we got no additional funding, we would keep the center open," Ettleson said. "We would not let anybody go. We would keep up our facilities and things here, and would keep up our low-budget programs, like the Brown Bag Lunch."

"Women are a larger part of the college population now," she said. "Limiting funding, which means limiting WRAC, would have an adverse impact on this campus."

Labor Department 'frustrated' efforts to halt union crime

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Federal prosecutors told a Senate panel Monday many labor union locals are still controlled by organized crime that deals in sweetheart contracts, "ghost" workers, kickbacks, payoffs, violence and intimidation.

They told the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations efforts to halt such activity was being frustrated by poor assistance from the Labor Department.

"The same schemes and the same faces and the same tyranny dominate the field of labor racketeering today as did during the original McClellan Committee hearings," Robert Stewart, attorney in charge of the Justice Department's Newark and Buffalo field offices, said in referring to the famous hearings of the 1950s.

Peter F. Vaira, attorney in charge of the Chicago strike force and nominated to succeed ousted David Marston as U.S. attorney in Philadelphia, said investigations performed by the Labor Department "are badly done, often with serious factual errors."

He cited a recent case in which an employer complained to the Labor Department he was being forced to employ unneeded manpower under threat of violence. He said the department closed the investigation by informing the union in writing of the allegation and including the name of the employer.

"Several weeks later the employer's place of business was bombed," Vaira said.

Acting Deputy Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti, who said the 300 syndicate influenced union locals accounted for less than 1 per cent of the total, agreed that lack of Labor Department investigators has been "a serious handicap."

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., citing indications the Labor Department deliberately shied away from aggressively ferreting out union corruption, said "The federal government should not have to fight organized crime with one hand tied behind its back."

Miami strike force chief Martin Steinberg said labor racketeering "is rampant in at least four or five major south Florida labor unions."

Letter to 'DI' provokes local union controversy

By THERESA CHURCHILL
Staff Writer

An internal disciplinary hearing has been scheduled by a local union against one of its members following a Feb. 2 letter to The Daily Iowan in which he supported the union's decision not to separate into three local unions.

The action is pending apparently because the member brought internal union business into public view.

The employee, Loren Schutt, who works at Medical Laboratories, said that "nothing has been decided" regarding his letter, but he did not want to discuss it further because "this is an internal union matter, and I would like to leave it that way."

In his letter to the DI, Schutt said his reason for writing about the union's decision was its omission from the Jan. 24 newsletter of Local 12 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME). Local 12 represents approximately 3,000 UI employees.

Union officials refused to comment on Schutt's letter and would not say whether he is facing disciplinary action. An informed source within the union, however, confirmed that Schutt is facing internal disciplinary action and that internal defense counsel has been obtained.

Dennis Kopf, AFSCME eastern Iowa coordinator, said, "We feel very strongly that those type of things should stay within the ranks of the membership." He declined to comment on a reason for the decision's omission from the union newsletter or talk further about Schutt's letter.

Kopf said, however, the union has decided that splitting into three locals is "not in the best interest of the employees for the time being." The restructuring would have divided the union into three bargaining units of employees: blue-collar, technical and clerical employees.

AFSCME currently has bargaining rights for 1,700 blue-collar employees and 1,200 technical employees at the UI, but has not yet obtained bargaining rights for clerical employees, which was a major reason the union decided against the proposed restructuring, Kopf said.

"Since we don't have bargaining rights for the clerical unit, and the other units aren't that well organized, we felt that the employees needed the protection and clout of the entire local," Kopf explained.

In his letter to the DI, Schutt wrote, "I strongly oppose dividing our forces into separate locals, which would only cause divisions both internally and externally and weaken us critically..." Schutt said he has not changed his opinion and does not regret writing the letter.

Doug Hart, international union assistant area director, spoke in favor of the restructuring but said, "The decision is one only the local union alone can make."

Hart said the restructuring would "certainly lend itself toward increasing the membership because of bargaining-unit identity." He said it would not weaken the position of the employees because, "they would still be going together to the bargaining table — in fact, the restructuring would probably strengthen their position because more members would be represented."

AFSCME Local 363, which includes all state employees except those of the state Board of Regents' institutions, recently formed 38 separate locals, Hart said, adding that these locals will be able to "deal more efficiently with particular concerns."

Iowa Abortion

DES MOINES (UPI) — The Senate Monday stood firm on limiting welfare abortions — rejecting more liberal language offered by the House as well as an attempt to include further restrictions on the use of state money.

"The thing that bothers me," said Sen. Philip Hill, R-Des Moines, "is that both houses are dominated by people who have never had the problem. Here are a bunch of men talking about making a bunch of decisions about something that's never going to affect us at all."

The abortion debate was revived as the Senate considered House changes to a $252 million social services funding bill. The bill was passed by the Senate earlier this session with the abortion restrictions attached to the budget of the Medicaid program, then amended by the House to offer public assistance for abortions in a broader range of cases.

Coming into Monday's Senate debate, the two chambers differed not only on abortion, but also on funding levels for social services programs. However, the Senate, with little debate, agreed to add more than $1.7 million to its original version, bringing it $275,000 above the funding level approved by the House and leaving abortion as the only major issue dividing the two chambers.

The abortion language originally approved by the Senate would allow state funding in cases where the woman's life is in danger, where the fetus may be deformed or mentally deficient or where the pregnancy was the result of rape or incest.

The House, through hours of debate, broadened the Senate restrictions by voting to allow welfare abortions for a woman who would suffer severe and long-lasting physical damage.

The addition of the health provision proved to be a major obstacle to Senate agreement.

Sen. John Murray, R-Ames, warned the legislature could be treading on shaky legal grounds if it did not allow abortions to protect a woman's health and urged the Senate to go along with the House to prevent a possible challenge of the abortion restrictions that could result in them being struck down by the courts as unconstitutional.

Hill said the question was one of fairness.

"The law is very plain that if that individual had the money, she could get it (an abortion) for any reason she wants to," he said.

Bribery

DES MOINES (UPI) — The lobbyist practice of winning and dining lawmakers will again be out next year unless Senate and House Democrats can get together and resolve a dispute over a comprehensive revision of Iowa's bribery laws.

Legislators this session have been turning down lobbyists' invitations for dinners or even for a casual cup of coffee for fear of violating the state's new bribery statute. Their fear stems from a legal opinion by Attorney General Richard C. Turner, who said the law — part of the new Criminal Code — represented a flat ban on gift taking by all public officials.

That new forced code of ethics has changed drastically the after-hours activities of some lawmakers, but others say they have grown to like the policy, which gives them an excuse to turn down lobbyists and others who want to push their causes over dinner.

Nevertheless, most lawmakers have agreed the law should be clarified so legislators would not have to be afraid of breaking the law every time they accept a small item such as a dinner, and also to clear up the situation for local officials, who are covered by the new statutes but may not be aware of it.

The Senate attempted to address a revision of the bribery statute in a bill passed

March 20 that would permit the acceptance of gifts valued up to $50 at one time from a single source and $100 annually from the same source. However, the Senate bill also contains strict provisions to require the reporting of any gifts valued in excess of $5, and to require public officials and candidates for office at the state level to file statements listing their financial interests.

In the past, the upper chamber has required its members to report such information, but the House consistently has resisted such a code of ethics, which has caused the problem.

Senate Majority Leader George Kinley, D-Des Moines, said Monday he has asked House leaders to debate the gifts and bribery bill passed by the upper chamber. Although House Speaker Dale Cochran, D-Eagle Grove, said lower chamber leaders still were considering that request, most evidence indicates that even if the bill is debated, chances of its passage are slim.

Meanwhile, the House Judiciary Committee last week approved for floor debate a bill to make some minor corrective changes to the Criminal Code and added an amendment that once again would make it legal for lawmakers to accept small gifts and favors.

Sitting broad jump

Johnny Carson is propelled about 12 feet in the air from a sitting position during a taping of the "Tonight show." The explosion, caused by a blast of air, was part of a demonstration by movie and TV stuntman Dennis Madalone showing Carson how an explosion works on film and TV. Carson's remark after being blown through the air was, "It's a wild experience."

Korean jet trespassed in Soviet military zone

BODO, Norway (UPI) — An off-course Korean Airlines jetliner flew over some of the world's most secret military installations before being detected by Soviet air defenses and forced to crash land, Norwegian military sources said Monday.

The aircraft was picked up by Norwegian radar at Bodo long before it entered Soviet airspace last Thursday, but Soviet defenses ignored the plane until it had passed over the biggest concentration of warships, submarines and missiles in the world, they said.

'Holocaust' may air in Germany

BONN, West Germany (UPI) — West Germany's two television networks Monday were urged to show "Holocaust," the U.S. television series on the Nazi extermination of Jews, to combat any revival of Nazism.

The National Committee of the ruling Social Democratic Party made the proposal at the urging of a party official who saw the series on a recent visit to the United States.

Horst Ehmke, the party's deputy parliamentary floor leader, said he was deeply impressed by the series, which depicts the lives of two German families — one Jewish — during World War II.

Both West German networks already are reported considering buying the series from NBC.

The series would be in accord with the cabinet's decision last week to vigorously oppose any revival of Nazism.

Former Chancellor Willy Brandt, the party chairman, told the Monday meeting there must be increased vigilance against neo-Nazism and right extremism and backed the decision of Justice Minister Hans Jochen Vogel to examine whether new tougher laws are necessary to crack down on new Nazis.

"Holocaust" was praised by German reviewers for its objectivity and its avoidance of clichés but some found it rather naive.

The newspaper Die Welt said the series missed an opportunity to use the dreadful documentary film material on the concentration camps.

The Duesseldorf newspaper Rheinische Post said, "It was not anti-German but investigated how such a catastrophe could happen in a civilized country. 'You did not see the stereotype of the monocled, heel-clicking German officer of the old American films.'"

Senior officials said at least one of the two Soviet fighters that finally intercepted the plane, which was carrying 110 passengers and crew, fired on it with an air-to-air missile.

The Norwegian radar technicians reportedly thought the KAL Boeing 707 was an ordinary Soviet flight and paid no particular attention to it.

They routinely tracked the plane for two hours as it flew across Murmansk and the Kola peninsula where the ships and missiles were located.

The plane was inside Soviet airspace for an hour before it was intercepted approximately 200 nautical miles over Russian territory, the officials said.

It then dropped off radar screens, apparently after it was hit and made a forced landing just inside the Arctic Circle.

The officials were reluctant to say exactly how much they knew about the interception for security reasons, but it seemed obvious the plane flew through what must be one of the most tightly guarded spots anywhere.

"I am sure Soviets are asking a lot of questions as to how it happened," one NATO official said.

Two passengers were killed in the incident. The survivors were flown back Monday, but the Soviets detained the captain and navigator for investigation.

The pilot seemed unaware he was over the Soviet Union. Officials said he reported his position as being over Greenland to air traffic control at Spitsbergen, 400 miles north of the Norwegian North Cape.

Spitsbergen heard him loud and clear and had no reason to question him.

Normally Soviet fighters would have intercepted the airliner as soon as it was approaching Soviet airspace, the officials said. The plane never crossed into Norwegian airspace.

Medical profession negligence

Following Betty Ford's admission last week that she has developed an overdependency on alcohol and prescription drugs, the National Institute on Drug Abuse released a statement that drug dependency is a 'dreadful' problem to women throughout the country. The institute's report suggested that the drug abuse epidemic may be partially responsible for "the increase in reported problems of child abuse, family violence, runaway children and a whole host of things including an unmeasured implication for the newborn handicapped and otherwise damaged infants."

Although the government has maintained a lopsided concentration on the abuse of illegal drugs, notably marijuana, cocaine and heroin, drug abuse is a problem in all parts of the country and among all classes of people. The abuse of the legal and socially sanctioned drug alcohol is a widespread affliction. While the popular stereotype of the alcoholic is the skid row bum, the incidence of alcoholism is especially high among non-working women and professionals such as doctors and lawyers.

Numerous social agencies attempt to deal with alcoholism and considerable publicity is given to the personal and social problems that attend alcohol addiction. But only sporadically are we reminded that the abuse of prescription drugs is a significant problem.

Drug abuse is a perplexing problem and, while numerous treatment methods — ranging from the substitution of other "less harmful" chemicals to Transcendental Meditation — boast of their success in combatting habituation and addiction, statistics show that, in general, one method is as good as another and no method is dependably and universally effective.

But the abuse of prescription drugs entails one factor that distinguishes it from all other types of drug abuse and suggests where attempts at a solution should be focused: The drugs are provided by medical doctors.

The report of the National Institute on Drug Abuse suggested that women are more affected by this problem than men because they are "much more inclined to take prescribed medications and not question them so much," according to Muriel Nellis, an institute representative. "Women see physicians much more than do men in the course of their lives."

Throughout this century, the medical profession has carefully nurtured our trust in and dependence on doctors and the curative powers of medical science. And it is certainly true that medical science has made impressive advances in the last few decades with the advent of antibiotics and medical machinery such as mechanical respirators.

But in its enthusiasm about the potential of drug therapies the medical profession has been insufficiently circumspect about the limitations and side-effects of chemical therapy. Hence, we find ourselves in the ironic situation of facing a dangerous health problem created by the very profession entrusted with the protection of our health.

The problem of the doctor-as-dealer is not, unfortunately, an isolated instance of physician negligence. For instance, the recent mammography screening program for the early detection of breast cancer, enthusiastically promoted by the National Cancer Institute and the American Cancer Society, was undertaken without appropriate consideration of the possible cancer-inducing effects of the X rays themselves. Some medical researchers have alleged that the screening program will result in an increased incidence of cancer a few years down the road. Or consider the widespread tragedy in Europe caused by the ill-considered prescription of thalidomide a generation ago.

But the medical profession is not alone to blame. The uncritical overprescription of barbiturates and amphetamines has been vigorously encouraged by drug companies that shows little concern for the effects of the chemicals they produce in quantities far above the amount needed for legitimate therapy.

When reading medical journals, doctors are constantly bombarded by slick advertising that advocates the routine and liberal prescription of mood-enhancing drugs. The typical add shows a pretty, young, depressed woman, for whom the medical solution is alleged to be popping some two-toned name-brand capsule. Often the ad enticement is blatantly sexual, emphasizing the dominant-submissive relationship between doctor and patient.

The irresponsibility of both the medical profession and the drug industry has contributed significantly to the creation and growth of the drug abuse problem. As intelligent and respected members of society, the public has a right to expect more of physicians than the casual prescription of dangerous addictive drugs. But the medical profession is carefully insulated from any outside influence and control. Through the American Medical Association, doctors protect their own, safeguarding the ability of incompetent and irresponsible physicians to inflict their lack of skill and dedication on a credulous public.

The medical profession makes a significant contribution to society and its practitioners are handsomely rewarded for their efforts. But it is time for doctors to clean their own house and act decisively to correct the drug-for-every-illment mentality that perpetuates the widespread dependence on addictive drugs before public confidence in the medical profession, already threadbare, disintegrates completely.

Are poor ripping off the rich again?

"Richer half of U.S. Pays 94 Pct. of Income Taxes," a headline on the front page of the Washington Post proclaimed the other day. There followed an editorial disguised as a news story that proclaimed that recently unearthed facts demonstrate the poor are taking advantage of the rich again.

"...the figures, compiled by the Treasury Department...show a stark fact about the way the tax burden is distributed in this country: While it's true some studies show that wealthier persons enjoy the biggest tax breaks and deductions, they also shoulder a disproportionate share of the tax burden — far beyond what is perceived generally. Moreover, the distortion has been heightened by the tendency of Congress in recent years to skew most of the tax breaks it has enacted to those at the lower end of the income scale."

nicholas von hoffman

Middle and lower income people who have just been skewed by enormous increases in their Social Security taxes may find this news a bit dizzying. Social Security isn't counted as part of the income tax, although, if it were, the 94 per cent in the headline would drop about 30 points.

The percentage would drop even lower if we could accurately compute what everybody's real income is. Employer-paid-for medical insurance isn't taxed as income, but while the best most of us can hope for in that regard is a funky and inadequate Blue Cross policy, upper echelon executives are given good, tax-free protection. Much the same holds true for pensions, life insurance and living expenses.

The rich get all kinds of goods, money and services that never have to be reported as income. Poorer people like waiters and taxi drivers have long since tried to do the same thing by not reporting their tips, but one of the differences between being rich and being poor is that the laws are rigged to make it easier to cheat when you can loll about in the upper income brackets.

Another way to look at tax equity is who is getting what back from the government. Are lower income people freeloading on the rich to any appreciable and unjust extent?

Postscripts item allegedly changed

To the Editor:

I would like to register several objections to the policy of the postscripts editor in changing the Iowa Socialist Party's postscript to make it appear that one of the demands of the Marion demonstration was "To free the alleged political prisoners." A minor objection is grammatical: It makes no sense for us to go to St. Louis and for people all over the country to go in order to demand "Freedom for alleged political prisoners" — clearly, we believe that they are political or we would not be making that demand.

In the second place, the postscripts column usually is, and ought to be, a place for groups to make statements about what they are doing, with, of course, no DI endorsement of such activities; otherwise, the Friday column would have to talk about a film "alleging" the deity of Jesus Christ and a gay rights group to which everyone is "allegedly" welcome.

But the central objection is that there are political prisoners in Marion Federal Penitentiary. Leonard Peltier is in Marion Prison because he is an AIM activist and because of the serious abuses of our system of justice that took place at his trial. The judge allowed the jury to be prejudiced by allowing evidence of other crimes, crimes for which he was later acquitted. The defense was not allowed to call witnesses who would have testified that they had been coerced by the FBI into making false statements. While what Raphael Cancel Miranda did over 20 years ago in attacking the House of Representatives might be considered a crime, it was undoubtedly a political crime designed to aid the struggle for the liberation of Puerto Rico. Lorezo Komboa Ervin, Victor Bono, Shahid Faris, Eddie Griffin...how long a list would you like? And there is another whole class of prisoners who, in our minds, must be considered political — those who became activists in prison and who are still behind bars, some of them in the long-term control unit, because they are now considered troublemakers by the prison authorities. Or do people forfeit all rights to petition of grievances upon conviction?

In conclusion, then, I would like to thank the DI for generally providing an open forum for the discussion of ideas and the promotion of events. Even when occasionally this is not the case, that in itself provides an opportunity for more agitation. That opportunity is something that the

The biggest single help working people get from the government is Social Security, but they pay 100 per cent of those costs themselves. In fact, numerous students of the system have pointed out that upper income people get far more out of Social Security than they put in. Most of the welfare and public housing go to the unemployed who pay no taxes and therefore aren't part of this discussion. Again, unemployment compensation, on which no taxes are paid by recipients, nets more for families making above $20,000 or $30,000 a year.

Most government programs designed to help working people are financed on a pay-as-you-go basis by the working people themselves. To a significant extent, the tax money the "richer half" pays goes to benefit the richer half. If they want to pay less, they should indulge themselves less.

The most salient example of how the rich people's money goes to rich people's benefit is federal aid to college and post-graduate education. It's the upper income half that attends those schools and that is employed by them. Then who better to put up the dough?

The proposition that all tax money should be used to the proportionate benefit of those paying is inadmissible unless you want an eye-for-an-eye society with the kind of equal justice that denies mercy, gratitude or love. Yet, that is the implicit message of editorials such as the one appearing in the Post and it is certainly the way we have been drifting as our major newspapers and principal politicians have insisted the way to run the country is on the slogan of work or starve.

It's not a new idea, as the Elizabethan poor laws attest, and maybe it's a correct one, but then we should be very sure who is and who is not getting the free lunches. Certainly the notion the multi-billion dollar federal deficits of the Ford-Carter administration are most owing to lower income working people is untrue. They get what they pay for and, since they can't pay for much, they don't get much.

The big deficits get rolled up on IOU's for jet planes and atomic submarines, projects the millions making under $20,000 a year care about chiefly as a source of employment. If weaponry or the $200-per-day outside consultants at the Department of Commerce were paid for in cash on the day the bills came due, as Social Security is, the richer half would find their tax bills quite a bit higher. Let everybody enjoy the benefits of the deficit or nobody; everybody on pay-as-you-go or nobody.

As it is, the lower paid half of the country is being ruined by the inflation engendered by upper-income-supported government deficits. If we're going to go to hell in a hack, let's everybody enjoy the ride.

Homosexual acts contradict nature

To the Editor:

Although I am not one who is often given to writing rebuttals to letters appearing on the editorial page, I feel this time I must, especially when they come from a "supposedly intelligent" source as Adam John Dydak (DI, April 24). Dydak has seen fit to attack the Iowa wrestling team on a personal level. I assume Dydak is leaning backwards in attempting to show us his own "gay pride." Perhaps it will make him more there is only one place and I am convinced that God created it as an outlet for the release of fecal materials. Perhaps the other words used by the wrestlers were a bit harsh, but I will not answer for them here.

Now, by all of this it may sound as though I have a passionate hatred of all homosexuals, yet, I am not entirely unreasonable. I don't believe it is someone's fault if they are not attracted to members of the opposite sex. They are not to be prosecuted. But those who preach it as an alternate lifestyle — those who defend it as a natural act — are those I find objection to...

Having fun is purpose of sex

To the Editor:

I was more than titillated to read the heroically masculine reply that some members of the wrestling team managed to write (DI, April 20) in response to Craig Johnson's letter (DI, April 12)...

Any heterosexual who uses or even condones the use of birth control devices clearly admits that at least one purpose of sex is to have fun. If this is true, what's the big beef against gays? The argument that homo-erotic sex is "unnatural" seem pretty ridiculous, unless you pick your birth control pills off trees...

Bruce Spencer

Eastside Cambus could curb rape

To the Editor:

The student senate is now considering a resolution that would extend the Cambus routes. Senators Lynn Griebahn and David Dix are supporting the bill that would benefit those students living in sororities and apartments east of central campus. This action has been tried in the past but was unfortunately defeated.

The women living in sororities and apartments are extremely vulnerable to rape. They are forced to walk nearly eight blocks every time they go home at night. The monthly maps printed by WRAC consistently identify the section of town where the sororities are located as a high sexual abuse area. It seems to me that a Cambus system that drops these women off within a block of home would drastically cut the number of rapes and hopefully protect these women.

Cambus is paid for by all students. When a system this expensive benefits only those who live near campus, it's time to re-evaluate the true needs of a bus system. A Cambus should be used to transport students from their homes to campus and from campus to their homes.

It doesn't seem fair that the students living to the east of campus (who do not have Cambus service) must walk six to eight blocks to get to their classes. At the same time, a myriad of buses crisscross the Pentacrest, taking students from Jessup to Burge.

I'm not saying that there isn't a need for the Interdorm and Pentacrest routes. I am saying that a route to the east of campus should have a much higher priority.

IC drinkers turn to dancing

To the Editor:

I was very happy to see that I wasn't the only one who was outraged by Tim Sacco's review of Saturday Night Fever. I never could have found the words to express it the way Jeffrey Thurman did (DI, April 21).

I, too, get tired of movies getting torn to shreds by critics who don't know what it means to go to a film and just be entertained. And if everyone will look around Iowa City, they'll notice that people are learning to dance again. The new discos in town are exciting and lively. Instead of just going to the bars to drink all night, they're saying, "Let's go out and dance tonight!" And that's good. Thanks to Saturday Night Fever. It is a great movie!

of a man in the eyes of his friends (I do hope that is the right way to phrase that). Yet, as he has stated in his letter, it is nothing to get upset about, although it could be construed as a blatant effort to bait the wrestlers.

I must admit here that I am a bit perplexed at Dydak's reference to Webster. Being a member of the Iowa wrestling team, I don't feel I have ever exhibited a sexual desire for any of my opponents. I find it hard to think of another man as an object of pleasure while I am forcing his arm around his neck and convincing myself that I will break it off if he doesn't turn over. Someday, if women are allowed to compete in NCAA wrestling with men (it's already being done on the high school level) it might convince Dydak that we're all not in it for the guys.

Also, even though I was not involved in the writing of the letter of April 20, I do feel that "deviant" is the proper word to use. It is a contradiction to nature. I hate to give Dydak a sex lesson, but it is most obvious how a man is supposed to "fit" in a woman. With another man

NEW YORK (UPI) — Time, Inc., announced Monday that it will begin republishing Life magazine on a monthly basis in October.

Time Inc. officials said the new Life, like the old one, will be devoted primarily to photojournalism, with "a few articles and columns." It will sell on newsstands for $1.50 a copy, with annual subscriptions costing $18.

Hedley Donovan, editor-in-chief of Time, Inc., said Life's domestic advertising circulation base is expected to be 700,000 a month.

The familiar red-and-white logo on the cover will be enlarged, but otherwise be identical to that which graced

Patty's last appeal dies

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Patricia Hearst lost a last-ditch appeal at the Supreme Court Monday, and almost certainly will have to serve out her prison term for helping the Symbionese Liberation Army rob a California bank in 1974.

With only Justice William Brennan wanting to hear arguments on some aspects of her case, the court let stand without comment her conviction and seven-year sentence.

Lawyers for the 24-year-old heiress said they may ask the high court to reconsider its rejection of the appeal — which is virtually never done — or ask a federal court in San Francisco to reduce her sentence.

Once the Supreme Court's order reaches the district court in California, authorities will be free to order Hearst back to prison, where she served about two months of the sentence before her family posted $1.2 million bail for her release pending appeal.

She would be eligible for parole within 14 months following her return to prison.

One of her attorneys, Albert Johnson, said in Boston it will take some time for the notification to arrive at the lower court, and "we are hopeful she will not have to surrender at all."

Johnson described Hearst as "gravely disappointed" at the outcome. But her father, millionaire newspaper executive Randolph Hearst, said in San Francisco the family would have no comment.

James Browning, the former U.S. attorney who prosecuted the case, described any move to keep Hearst out of prison as "the last gasp effort." He said U.S. District Judge William Orrick will have 120 days to consider such a motion, but that she could go back to jail in the interim.

Hearst was convicted in 1976 of helping the terrorist SLA, which had abducted her, rob a San Francisco bank on April 15, 1974.

At one point she announced that she had joined the group. But at her trial, she testified that her companions forced her at gunpoint to take part in the robbery.

After more than a year and a half as a fugitive, Hearst was arrested by the FBI on Sept. 18, 1975, along with others in the terrorist group.

Her lawyers said in the appeal there were a number of legal errors during the trial, both by the judge and by the prosecution. And they said there is no prison in the country where she would be safe, due to her "well-known cooperation with the authorities."

In other actions Monday, before starting the final week of arguments this term, the justices:

- cleared the way for a young California girl to press an $11 million damage suit against NBC and a California station on grounds an episode in a televised movie prompted a sexual attack on her when she was 9 years old;
- refused to allow the State Department to process notes on Henry Kissinger's telephone conversations as secretary of State while courts decide whether they must be made public;
- dismissed a challenge to the system under which two federal agencies compare notes on employer compliance with anti-discrimination to laws and regulations;
- agreed to rule on whether a railroad worker's future retirement benefits can be considered "community property" to be divided up in a divorce proceeding; and
- rejected Maryland's appeal from invalidation of an obscenity law because bookstore clerks could be punished but not movie projectionists.

Hanna sentenced to prison term

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former Rep. Richard Hanna, D-Calif., apologized for accepting payoffs in the Korean bribery scandal but saying Congress has taken a "bad rap" in the case, was sentenced Monday to six-to-30 months in prison.

"I apologize," Hanna told U.S. District Judge William Bryant in a broken voice. "I apologize as a lawyer, as a person who held public office. I hope in some way to atone for what I have done, whatever years I have left."

Hanna, 63, left the words hanging.

Bryant then sentenced him for a single conspiracy charge.

Hanna pleaded guilty March 17 to accepting more than $200,000 in a conspiracy to use his office to help South Korean rice agent Tongsun Park — who is accused of influence peddling in Congress.

Hanna, who reports May 8 to the prison camp at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., where former Attorney General John Mitchell had been imprisoned, later told reporters he knew Bryant would impose a prison term.

"Can you imagine what you people would be writing if he'd given me probation — 'Judge gives congressman slap on wrist!'" said Hanna.

Hanna could have received five years in prison and a $10,000 fine on the conspiracy count. Bryant did not assess a fine.

"Congress, I think, has been given a bad rap on this thing," Hanna said at a news conference later. "It has hurt the public image of Congress."

Hanna said Park's payments to other members of Congress were campaign contributions and the only other person he knows of with a "problem" is former Rep. Otto E. Passman, D-La., who also has been indicted on payoff charges.

"The Justice Department's scenario was something comparable to Watergate, which was always a mind-boggler to me," said Hanna.

Hanna's attorney, Charles McNelis, in arguing for leniency, said the Justice Department has backed away from accusing Hanna of passing any of Park's money to other members of Congress.

The federal prosecutors, McNelis said, "admit they have no scintilla of evidence that he transmitted any of the money to anyone else. That he was a bag man for anyone else? No! That he tried to influence Congress? No!"

"Here, indeed, is a man fit for probation," McNelis told the judge.

Hanna, who did not seek re-election in 1974, pleaded guilty after a plea-bargaining agreement under which prosecutors dropped 39 felony counts against him.

St. Paul votes on gay law

ST. PAUL, Minn. (UPI) — A Baptist-led moralist group trying to repeal the city's "gay rights" ordinance, a human rights group fighting to keep it, and a large number of undecided voters will decide the law's fate today.

Mayor George Latimer, who favors keeping the law, said he thinks the vote in the city election will be "very close." He said the bigger the turnout the more likely the repeal will be defeated.

The weather forecast predicted mild, sunny to partly cloudy weather. The polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.

The Rev. Richard A. Angwin, pastor of the Temple Baptist Church and a leader of the repeal movement's Citizens Alert for Morality, said there's "tremendous excitement and confidence on our side, and we feel we have 70 per cent of the people solid on our side."

It's the first major challenge of gay rights legislation since a "Save Our Children" group in Miami headed by Anita Bryant promoted repeal of the gay rights ordinance in Dade County, Fla., last June.

Repeat forces led by Baptist and Assembly of God ministers contend the issue is morality. Backers of homosexual rights argue the issue is human rights.

A poll by the St. Paul Dispatch indicated 35 per cent for repeal, 32 per cent for keeping the law and 33 per cent undecided.

"Three or four days ago I would have predicted the repeal would pass," the mayor said. "Now I have a feeling it will be very close, and I have more hope that the repeal effort will be defeated. If you ask me why, I'm in trouble."

"We are not endorsing a way of life but the human rights of individuals."

Anita Bryant's husband, Robert Green, told a pro-repeal rally last week the law should be thrown out to help stop the "moral breakdown of this nation."

The four-year-old law at the center of the controversy is part of the city's human rights ordinance and bars discrimination in housing, employment and other fields because of "sexual and affectional preference."

The main opponent of repeal is St. Paul Citizens for Human Rights, which also includes some clergymen. The Roman Catholic Church, while not taking a specific stand on the proposal, has said it does not condone homosexuality but favors protecting homosexuals' "basic human rights."

Also at stake in the election are the position of mayor and seven city council seats.

President Carter, while "not looking for a fight," will seek an arms package for Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia and threatens to scrap the entire plan if Congress blocks any of it, his chief spokesman said Monday.

The remarks came as Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd urged Carter to temporarily delay submitting the requests "to avoid bloodshed on the floor" on the Senate.

Press secretary Jody Powell said Carter intended to submit the controversial proposal this week. He said there was a "slight" chance for a delay, but that it would not amount to more than "a few days."

He said a final decision would be made by Wednesday on whether present plans would be altered. Powell ruled out the possibility of changing the size of the requests for any of the countries.

Under the proposal, which has four sections, the United States would sell Israel 75 F-16s and 15 F-15s, and tie that to the sale of 60 F-15s to Saudi Arabia and 50 F-5E's to Egypt. It is the first time an administration has asked to sell arms to an Arab nation.

"If any portion of this plan is blocked, no arms in the plan will be sold," Powell said.

Energy coalition claims Carter pledge dropped

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Ralph Nader and consumer and environmental leaders Monday claimed President Carter abandoned campaign pledges to give top priority to solar energy and conservation.

A coalition of 12 groups — the heart of the environmental movement that helped Carter win election — said many administration actions have been the opposite of what candidate Carter promised in 1976.

"We have waited patiently and silently for most of this past year for this administration to fulfill — or begin to fulfill — their oft-repeated promises," the groups said in a joint statement.

"Instead, we have watched in surprise and with growing discouragement as the president abandoned one campaign commitment after another."

Anthony Roisman of the Natural Resources Defense Council said getting "people enthusiastic about Carter" would be "an impossible task if he were running for office today on these issues."

"In other words, he's making it easier and easier for cautious Jerry Brown in 1980," said Nader, noting that California under Brown's governorship has adopted a nuclear moratorium.

The coalition was sharply critical of Energy Secretary James Schlesinger — saying he pushes a pro-industry position and opposes antitrust actions — and of administration proposals to speed up atomic plant construction, spend federal funds for synthetic fuel subsidies and cut federal spending on solar energy.

Louise Dunlap of the Environmental Policy Center said Schlesinger's plan to speed atomic plant construction would reduce citizen participation.

Spy-dissident swap proposed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — State Department officials Monday prepared to release a convicted East German spy as part of a three-nation prisoner exchange, amid talk of a deal to free jailed Soviet dissident Anatoly Shcharansky.

An East German lawyer was scheduled to fly to Washington this week to negotiate final details of an exchange of Robert G. Thompson, who has served 12 years in a U.S. prison for leaking military data to the Soviets, for Alan Van Norman, a Minnesota college student imprisoned in East Germany since last summer for trying to smuggle a family out of the country.

Lawyer Wolfgang Vogel also was expected to propose a private effort to win freedom for Shcharansky, a Jewish activist who has been imprisoned for 13 months.

Other discussions were under way regarding more possible prisoner trades, State Department officials said.

The Thompson-Van Norman exchange would complete a three-nation swap that began when Miron Marcus, an Israeli citizen, was released along the Mozambique border Sunday.

"It was a two-for-one deal, which is a novelty in that business," said an aide to Rep. Benjamin Gilman, D-N.Y., who helped negotiate the trade. The aide said East German diplomats in Mozambique apparently exerted influence on that nation to free Marcus as part of the deal.

Thompson is serving a 30-year sentence at Lewisburg, Pa. federal prison, and a decision on his application for parole is scheduled to be made May 4. He is expected to be released then, or possibly sooner.

State Department spokesman Tom Reston said the release of Marcus was tied to an "agreement in principle" on the trade of Thompson for Van Norman.

"If there are no unforeseen last-minute circumstances, Thompson is expected to go to East Germany at the conclusion of his parole," Reston said. Reston said Vogel was coming to Washington, at Gilman's invitation, "to discuss a variety of subjects," including the Thompson-Van Norman exchange.

"I can state categorically that no discussions are taking place for an exchange for Mr. Shcharansky," he said. "Nevertheless, we do have a humanitarian interest in what happens to Mr. Shcharansky. I cannot rule out the possibility that Mr. Vogel may raise the subject of Mr. Shcharansky."

Vogel, Van Norman's court-appointed lawyer, was instrumental in negotiating the 1962 swap of U-2 pilot Francis Gary Powers for Soviet spy Rudolf Abel.

Aides to Gilman, a member of the New York "Save Anatoly Shcharansky Committee," said there was "no indication" yet on the prospects for Shcharansky's release.

But Gilman, returning from a trip to the Mozambique border for Sunday's exchange, told reporters at New York's Kennedy Airport there has been "some discussion" about including Shcharansky in the complex prisoner swap.

"But these negotiations are very sensitive and I am not at liberty to discuss it further," he said.

Executive director Jerry Goodman of the National Conference on Soviet Jewry said he spoke by telephone with Shcharansky's wife, Avital, in Israel Monday and she knew of no formal efforts to win his freedom.

But Goodman said Vogel may be trying to set up a deal for Shcharansky involving large amounts of money from Flatto Sharon, a multi-millionaire who holds a seat in the Israeli parliament.

The State Department has consistently denied Soviet charges that Shcharansky worked for the CIA, and Reston said the department would make no exchange for the 30-year-old computer programmer "which in any way would imply that Mr. Shcharansky was or is an agent of the U.S. government."

Thompson, 42, who says he was born in East Germany and served as a major in the Soviet intelligence service, was considered bait as long ago as 1975 for an exchange for Lawrence Lunt, a contract employee for the CIA serving a 30-year sentence for espionage in Cuba.

His attorney was angered over the three-nation swap, but aides to Gilman said Cuban Premier Fidel Castro has since proposed — through Vogel — that Lunt be exchanged for Lolita LeBron. She has been jailed for more than 20 years as one of several Puerto Rican nationalists convicted for a shooting attack on the U.S. House in 1954.

Reston would not comment on the possibility of a trade for Lunt.

Hear no evil, print no evil

LONDON (UPI) — This is the story of Col. B, a spy whose name no one is supposed to know but just about everyone does.

His name — just his name — has mushroomed into a major freedom-of-the-press issue in Britain.

Three publications are being prosecuted for contempt of court for printing it.

Parliament is in an uproar about it.

Newspapers write editorials about it, and then defiantly print the colonel's name. The National Union of Journalists (NUJ) advertised a debate with posters using the colonel's name and demonstrators wrote it in letters 10 feet high on the sands of Whitley Bay.

Yet technically — and despite parliament used the colonel's name in a House of Commons debate — anyone printing it can be prosecuted.

Under all the furor lie complaints over Britain's outmoded Official Secrets Act, a catch-all law used to protect everything from H-bomb details to items government ministers find embarrassing.

A prosecution under this act first brought Col. B — his name actually begins with J — halfway out of the cold.

Two journalists and a former army corporal were being prosecuted under the Official Secrets Act for an article about defense communications. Col. B. was the main prosecution witness.

Three magazines reporting the case printed Col. B's name. All were charged with contempt of court under the Official Secrets Act's broadly worded Section Two.

One magazine so charged was The Journalist, the magazine of the NUJ.

Labor party members of parliament sprang to its defense. One of them, Josephine Richardson, demanded in the House of Commons a debate on freedom of the press and used Col. B's name in doing so.

Statements in parliament are privileged, and can be reported without fear of prosecution. But within hours the director of public prosecutions, Britain's chief legal prosecutor, circulated a memo to all editors instructing them not to use the colonel's name.

Most newspapers ignored this memo and printed Col. B's name. The NUJ removed the colonel's name from its posters and debated a motion omitting the name. In parliament a left-right debate developed.

Monday, the House speaker ruled out a debate on the case and told members of parliament not to mention Col. B's name in future. The court cases went on.

Soviets, Cuba offer aid to S. Africa liberation

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union and Cuba issued a joint communique Monday promising more "assistance and support" to the liberation movements of southern Africa.

The communique, marking the end of a visit by Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmerca Peoli, came only two days after Secretary of State Cyrus Vance raised the question of the Soviet bloc's expanding involvement in Africa during a meeting with President Leonid Brezhnev.

Vance told a ministerial session of the Central Treaty Organization in London just before flying to Moscow last week that the United States was deeply concerned that Moscow and Cuba were "unwilling to recognize the fundamental principle often stated by African nations that they can solve their own problems without the use of external force."

The Soviet-Cuban communique also stressed support for the Marxist governments of Angola and Mozambique and accused the forces of "international reaction" of trying to maintain tension on the Horn of Africa.

Moscow and Havana both have been giving massive military aid to their African allies, supplying both weapons and troops.

The State Department said last week 19,000 to 20,000 Cuban military personnel have remained in Angola following the 1975 civil war that brought President Agostinho Neto to power. They are helping Neto fight pro-Western guerrillas.

An estimated 17,000 Cuban troops and pilots and some 1,000 Soviet military advisers in Ethiopia were given most of the credit for winning the Ogaden war against Somalia.

Victim of wrong visa freed to return home

MOSCOW (UPI) — Charlie Puka, 89, just doesn't give up, not even against the massive bureaucracy of the Soviet Union.

This week, Charlie will return to the United States after almost a year in the Soviet Union, where he had become the victim of a bureaucratic foul-up.

"I feel good," he said, wearing a floppy black felt hat and a huge grin as he picked up his exit visa Monday.

"The first thing I'm going to do is sleep. I'm going to go see a movie picture and stuff like that and see my friends."

The retired Pennsylvania coal miner was born in the Trans-Carpathia region of the old Austro-Hungarian empire. He left for the United States when he was 20, fought in the American army in World War I and became a U.S. citizen in 1939.

Last August, he decided to visit his native country. That was the beginning of Charlie's nightmare.

Through an error, Charlie was issued a Soviet passport instead of a visitor's visa. The Soviets told Charlie he couldn't leave.

But Charlie, who says he has relatives in McKeesport and Glassport, Pa., refused to accept the Soviet ruling and kept returning to Moscow to fight the Kremlin's renowned red tape.

"I didn't tell them a lot," said Puka, his eyes shining bright behind a pair of thick glasses. "I just told them I wanted to get out of here."

Periodically, Charlie called the U.S. Embassy for help. He said he was in poor health and had lost considerable weight.

Charlie explained that in the Soviet Union, he had been living in the village of Velyatino with a sister and lived on $65 a month paid by the Soviet government.

"In the United States," Charlie said in broken English, "I got everything I want. I got relatives, I got eats, I got everything

A LIMERICK: PART 2

Our students from U of I did declare
A job we need - some money for to snare
But the pay was a song
And the hours were wrong
Job satisfaction was not anywhere.
