Last resorts: The right to choose

Since last February, Governor Daniel Green of Rhode Island, has been involved in a legal battle with the parents of a severely brain-damaged child, Nicholas von Hoffmann, to determine the extent of that boy's rights. The parents, who have the support of the American Civil Liberties Union, have been arguing that Nicholas should have the right to die.

The case has been highlighted in the pages of The New York Times. The Times has published several articles about the case, including one that appeared on page 5 of the newspaper on February 21, 1978.

In the article, the Times reports that the parents of Nicholas von Hoffmann, who is severely brain-damaged, have been arguing in court that he should be allowed to die. The court has ruled that Nicholas should have the right to die, and the parents have appealed the decision.

The case has sparked a national debate about the right to die and the role of the courts in determining that right. Some people argue that the courts should not be involved in such cases, while others believe that they should.

The Supreme Court is scheduled to hear arguments in the case in the fall, and it is expected to rule on the matter before the end of the year.

[The article continues with more information about the case and the debate surrounding it.]

My business is to go on egg when he asked them for more moderate. Mr. Carter is probably the most obvious man to make this decision. The next time, the demand is more moderate.

What will cause of each effort was set forth in a recent (May 21, 1978) article in the New York Times. The article states that the parents of Nicholas von Hoffmann, who is severely brain-damaged, have been arguing in court that he should be allowed to die. The court has ruled that Nicholas should have the right to die, and the parents have appealed the decision.
