

Cuban ex-consul: Visa photos do not look like Oswald

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The former Cuban consul in Mexico City told the House Assassinations Committee Monday that pictures of Lee Harvey Oswald do not resemble a man who sought a transit visa to Cuba two months before President John F. Kennedy was assassinated.

Eusebio Azcue Lopez, the Cuban consul in September 1963, said Oswald visited the consulate three times during two days.

"We never had any person so persistent and insistent despite our refusal (to issue the visa)," Azcue said.

The committee heard a taped interview by staff investigators with Sylvia Tirado Bazan, Azcue's secretary at the consulate. She said Oswald came to her three times Sept. 27, 1963, for the visa and became very angry when his application was rejected.

"He was red and he was almost crying and he was insisting and insisting," she said.

"We only thought that he was a crazy man, an adventurer, or something like that," she said. She could not believe Oswald was involved in the assassination, she said, "because I think that he was a weak man."

Azcue said two separate copies shown him of Oswald's visa application were authentic, but that the picture of Oswald on the visa form "is not the individual who went to the consulate. The man who went to the consulate was a man over 30, very thin face ... dark blond, a hard face ... cold eyes ... nose very straight and pointed."

Alfredo Mirabal, who succeeded Azcue as consul and who was present at two of the interviews with Oswald, compared photographs of the Oswald on the Cuban visa forms and pictures of

Oswald taken from his passport, and told the committee, "I believe he is the same person."

The committee intends to present a handwriting expert to state that the signatures on the visa applications were made by Oswald.

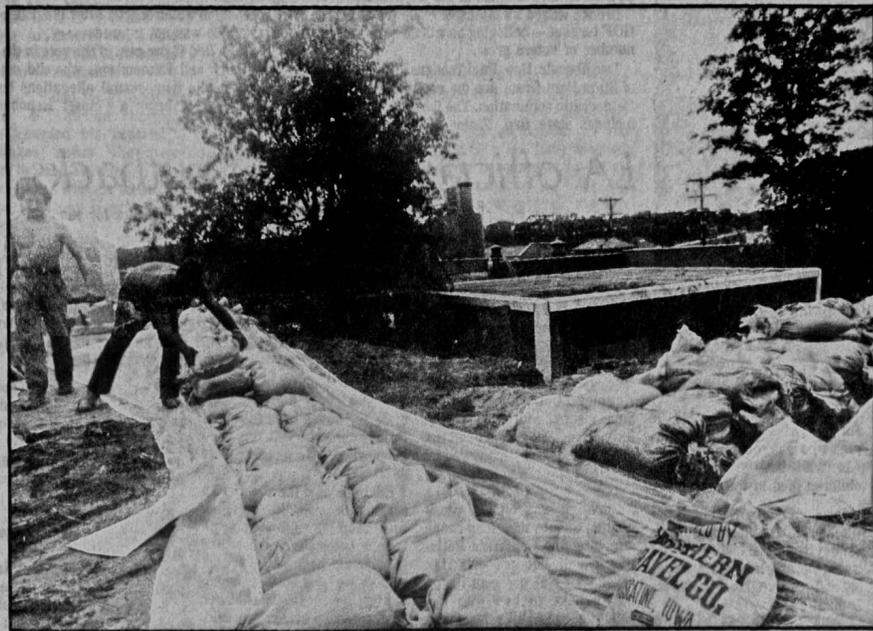

Conspiracy buffs contend some connection existed between the Cuban government and Oswald. Cuban President Fidel Castro denied any such link during an interview with panel chairman Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, and two other panel members this year.

UI workers constructed a sand-bag retaining wall Monday to prevent a recurrence of the mudslide that caused a power outage to campus buildings.

Humble mud causes power cut

By ROD BOSHART
Staff Writer

Power to eight UI buildings was lost for 17½ hours Monday after sliding mud and water from Sunday night's storm short-circuited two electrical transformers, according to James Howard, UI physical plant assistant director.

Howard said the mud temporarily knocked out two transformers in an east-side interconnector that connects the UI's two electrical systems near North Hall at approximately 1 a.m. Monday.

The mud slide occurred because the hillside above the interconnector, located between Davenport and Bloomington streets, was regraded and seeded earlier this summer but the ground is still loose and unstable, he said.

UI workers piled sandbags on the hillside several feet above the interconnector Monday afternoon to form a temporary retaining wall to prevent a recurrence in the event of more rain, Howard said.

UI buildings that were left without power until 6:30 Monday evening were: E.C. Mable Theatre, Trowbridge Hall, Calvin Hall, Gilmore Hall, Chemistry-Botany Building, Daum and Stanley residence halls and most of the Union.

The outage caused the cancellation of some early classes and meetings, as well as inconvenience and confusion.

In the Union, which closed at 5 p.m. Monday because of the outage, food service was reduced to the Meal Mart; the food in other areas of Union was kept chilled with dry ice, Union Manager James Burke said.

The union has two power sources since it was remodeled in 1967, Burke said. For that reason, several rooms on the basement and first floor levels, including the Meal Mart, were not affected by the outage.

"We moved most of the people out of the Iowa House who wanted to move and found them other accommodations," Burke said. "Those who wanted to stay were not charged."

Students in the Union Gold Feather Room ate and read by flood-light, and candles burned in many offices.

UI workers had to clean the transformers thoroughly, where mud and water had passed through the perforated brick walls that surround them, Howard said. The transformers' switchgears, which are enclosed in metal cabinets with ventilation holes, were also cleaned.

"The transformers and switchgears have to be extremely well dried because they are high voltage," he said. "We're cleaning them meticulously because we don't want to make a bad situation worse."

Nicaraguan guerrillas fall back from cities

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — The National Guard launched an air and ground assault Monday on the city of Esteli, the last major position held by Sandinista guerrillas battling government troops for the past nine days.

The Red Cross sent 10 ambulances to Esteli 80 miles north of Managua but all of them came back empty. Their drivers said the heavy fighting prevented them from entering the city to pick up wounded.

Witnesses said government planes strafed guerrilla positions while the guardsmen advanced block by block, harried by small arms fire from the guerrillas.

Esteli, Nicaragua's fourth largest city, was the last major position held by the guerrillas who launched their surprisingly fierce offensive nine days ago in a bid to topple the regime of President Anastasio Somoza Debayle.

With the rebels pushed out of six other cities including Leon, the country's second largest, much of the fighting switched to border with Costa Rica, where the guerrillas have bases.

Three observers from the Organization of American States went to the Costa Rican border village of Penas Blancas Monday to investigate the border fighting that threatened to embroil other Central American nations in the Nicaraguan civil war.

In Washington, the United States said it had dispatched an envoy on an eight-nation tour in an attempt to defuse the crisis and the OAS voted to convene an emergency meeting for the same purpose.

With much of the rebel resistance in Nicaragua's northwest crushed, fighting has been taking place near the Costa Rican border.

The OAS delegation arrived from San

Carter appeals to Arab moderates for conciliation

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter appealed to moderates in the Arab world Monday night to aid Egypt and Israel in the hazardous task of turning the Camp David "framework for peace" into "one of the bright moments in human history."

Carter told a nationally televised joint session of Congress he's sending Secretary of State Cyrus Vance to the Mideast Tuesday in a bid to get Jordan and Saudi Arabia to help turn "the promise of this moment" into reality.

Carter, who introduced Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin to the cheering lawmakers, said he has asked other Arab leaders "to help sustain progress toward a comprehensive peace."

The two one-time enemies, sitting with first lady Rosalynn Carter in the House VIP gallery, applauded each other when Carter mentioned their names.

In the Middle East, angry threats of underground resistance, assassination and war from Palestinian guerrillas and hard-line Arab states left little doubt of the many pitfalls along the path to peace.

In the first apparent sign of serious Egyptian domestic opposition, Foreign Minister Mohammed Ibrahim Kamel resigned in disagreement over Sadat's handling of the Camp David talks.

But the people of Israel and Egypt — divided by suspicion, fear and hostility since the birth of the Jewish state in 1948 — greeted the outcome of the Camp David summit with tears, jubilation and sheer joy.

"Look, peace has come," an emotional Jerusalem taxi driver shouted from the top of his lungs when he heard the news as he left for work along the twisting, cobblestone streets of the holy city.

Jose, Costa Rica, and its military advisers tried to determine the make of shells and bullets that hit this small border village straddling the Nicaraguan-Costa Rican border Sunday.

The guerrillas, pushed out of Leon and other major cities by government aircraft and tanks, launched five separate invasion attempts from Costa Rica Sunday, but the National Guard said all were beaten back.

On Sunday the rebels fired dozens of rockets against Nicaraguan border points, including Penas Blancas, and earlier Monday the national radio charged that Sandinista guerrillas again were shelling the town from Costa Rica.

But a first-hand inspection proved this wrong. There was a small skirmish with machine guns a few miles north, but no shelling was involved.

Carter also said that nations should "join in an effort to bring to an end the conflict and terrible suffering in Lebanon," but he offered no new initiatives in that direction.

"We need to consult closely with the Arab leaders, and I am pleased to say that King Hussein of Jordan and King Khalid of Saudi Arabia have now agreed to receive Secretary Vance," he said.

Carter said the secretary of state will try "to secure their support for the realization of the new hopes and dreams of the people of the Middle East."

"Today we are privileged to see the chance for one of the bright moments in human history — a chance that may open the way to peace," the president said.

He received a loud round of applause from Congress when he said the leaders of Israel and Egypt have challenged each other to speed up conclusion of a peace treaty in "a wonderful Christmas present for the world."

The president said the success of the 13-day summit exceeded his expectations, but he cautioned that the talks "left many difficult issues still to be resolved."

Carter spoke to Hussein by telephone as the monarch returned to Amman after cutting short a Mediterranean vacation. A U.S. official said Hussein declined to comment on the plan saying he wanted time to study it.

Carter, Begin and Sadat announced the two-part framework for peace Sunday night with a televised show of hugs, smiles and laughs that obscured five major dangers:

—The first part, providing five years of limited self-rule on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, will fall apart unless Jordan and the Palestinians living in the two regions agree to go along with it.

—The second section, leading to a formal peace treaty between Israel and Egypt by the end of the year, will collapse unless the Israeli parliament agrees within two weeks to abandon all Jewish settlements in the Sinai Desert.

Begin said in a television interview Monday he would not push for their removal.

—The blueprint failed to mention the rocky Golan Heights, leaving militant Syria on the sidelines as an everpresent threat to peace in the Middle East.

—The framework let Israel veto the participation of Yasser Arafat's powerful Palestine Liberation Organization, the largest of the guerrilla groups, in the interim Palestinian administration.

—The agreement deliberately bypassed the toughest issue in dispute — the future of Jerusalem, the war-scarred city of peace sacred to Christians, Moslems and Jews.

And the blueprint — unveiled at a flamboyant White House media event that contrasted with the 13 days of secret summit talks — left Sadat and Begin with the difficult task of facing up to critics back home.

Sadat appeared to have made the biggest concessions, agreeing to negotiate a full-scale peace treaty without receiving his often-demanded Israeli promise to withdraw from the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

And if Jordan and the Palestinians turn down the second part of the blueprint — a distinct possibility — Sadat will be isolated from the rest of the Arab world with a bilateral peace treaty with Israel.

A U.S. official said Sadat would brief Hussein on the summit later in the week in Morocco. He said the monarch is tentatively scheduled to travel to the United States in a few weeks.

Begin was believed to have emerged with much fewer concessions than expected, but he still has the tough task of convincing diehard nationalists in his right-wing Likud bloc to give up the Sinai settlements.

The section of the agreement concerning the West Bank and Gaza Strip — called "A Framework for Peace in the Middle East" — has six major provisions:

—A five-year transition period of limited self-rule for the Palestinian inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

—Withdrawal of Israeli troops stationed in the two territories to a limited number of specific garrisons.

—Negotiations involving Israel, Egypt, Jordan and elected Palestinians from the two territories to determine the final status of the West Bank and Gaza.

—No new Israeli settlements in the West Bank and Gaza during the negotiations.

—Intensive security arrangements that may involve U.N. forces, demilitarized zones and early warning stations. There would be no American troops.

—An exchange of letters by the United States, Israel and Egypt on the status of East Jerusalem, the former Jordanian section of the holy city.

The section of the accord concerning Sinai — called "A Framework for the Conclusion of a Peace Treaty between Egypt and Israel" — has five key

Peace-keeping troops remain in Lebanon

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — The U.N. Security Council voted Monday to keep all 6,000 U.N. peacekeeping troops in southern Lebanon for another four months — a time during which Israel and Egypt have promised to try to work out their own peace agreement.

The 15-member council voted 12-0 with two abstentions to extend the mandate of the U.N. force, but diplomatic attention plainly was centered on the Camp David agreements that U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim said were "unique and reflected an enormous effort to reach accommodation."

The Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia abstained, and China did not participate in the vote.

The Security Council originally sent in the U.N. troops to try to restore order in the wake of Israel's March 14 invasion of southern Lebanon to root out Palestinian guerrilla bases.

Waldheim wanted the mandate extended for another six months at an estimated cost of $69 million. France, which contributed 1,181 men to the force and suffered some casualties in the early stages of the operation, proposed that the extension be limited to three months.

More gov't fraud

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Billions of tax dollars are stolen annually through fraud in virtually every federal program — partly because the Justice Department has been slow to mount a crackdown, a government report charged Monday.

The General Accounting Office, Congress' investigating arm, said economic assistance programs totaling about $250 billion a year are being fleeced by fraudulent schemes of one kind or another, and that up to 10 percent of that amount may be lost each year.

The GAO's findings, which surveyed seven major federal agencies, were outlined before a Senate subcommittee which began hearings on corruption in the General Services Administration.

On tap to testify was GSA administrator Jay Solomon, who has ordered a major reorganization of the $5 billion a year government building and maintenance agency.

Meantime, Deputy Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti told the panel that "substantial progress" has been achieved in his department's investigation of the scandal-ridden GSA which is under the scrutiny of two grand juries, the FBI, and U.S. attorneys around the country.

Tax cut bill killed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A 33 percent across-the-board tax cut spread over three years, which Republicans have made a major congressional campaign issue, went down to a narrow defeat Monday in the Senate Finance Committee.

The committee then began work on a smaller one-year tax cut designed to offset the effects of impending Social Security tax increases and a part — but not all — of 1978-79 inflation.

Democrats, led by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, claimed the GOP plan would cause "roaring inflation." And committee chairman Russell Long, D-La., said if it passed, "in my judgment the President would veto the bill."

But Sen. William Roth, R-Del. — chief sponsor of the measure along with Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y. — said "once again we have forgotten the middle class." Roth said he would renew the effort before the full Senate.

"I intend to take the Roth-Kemp tax cut to the people and to the Senate floor," said Roth. "Those in Congress who oppose real tax relief had better wear a ballot-proof vest — because the tax revolt is just beginning."

The committee's defeat of the Kemp-Roth proposal came two days before the top stars of the Republican party, including Gerald Ford and Ronald Reagan, begin a three-day transcontinental "blitz" by chartered airliner to support the plan.

Legionnaires' death

WASHINGTON (UPI) — District of Columbia health officials announced Monday that a 65-year-old District woman has died from Legionnaires' disease.

The unidentified woman died Sept. 14, but Dr. Martin Levy, the Human Resources Department's chief of communicable disease control, said DHR only received a report confirming the Legionnaires' diagnosis Monday morning.

Levy said two blood tests at least two weeks apart are required before a diagnosis can be made.

The woman became ill Aug. 27 and was hospitalized Aug. 30.

Dr. Raymond Standard, head of the Community Health and Hospital Administration, said the woman also suffered from kidney disease and high blood pressure, ailments that doctors say contribute to Legionnaires' disease susceptibility and death.

Levy said there did not appear to be any connection with this case and two other Legionnaires' disease cases recently reported in the district.

One of the Legionnaires' disease patients — Allan Blanchard, the Washington bureau chief of the Detroit News — died Sunday at George Washington University Hospital.

The other patient, an unidentified 27-year-old man, is reported in serious condition at Washington Hospital Center.

Quake victims beg empress for aid

TABAS, Iran (UPI) — Empress Fara arrived in this earthquake-stricken area Monday to supervise relief operations and was met with anguished pleas to "help dig out the dead."

But rescue operations fell short of demand in Tabas and nearby towns where 15,000 persons are feared dead and tens of thousands are homeless.

For many victims there was no relief. They sat beside the dusty road and wept. Many had not eaten since Saturday, nor slept, nor said a word to anyone.

Authorities said 5,000 bodies were found and buried Monday as soldiers and civilian volunteers wearing white masks to keep out the stench of death pulled thousands of bodies out of the wreckage of Tabas.

Doctors warned of epidemics and burial of the dead was quick in rows of hastily dug graves. Officials said the final toll was expected to go over 15,000.

Survivors repeat the claim that 30,000 were killed, but doctors and other health workers were no longer concerned with checking figures as they shuttled from one distress point to another.

Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi ordered 56 tons of grains, rice, sugar, oil and tea flown in air force planes to the remote region near the Afghanistan border some 480 miles southeast of Tehran.

The conservative Moslem clergyman who challenged his regime in recent months also sent dozens of truckloads of food, blankets and medicines in a parallel effort that appeared to have political overtones.

The empress took a tour of Tabas but security men whisked her away when residents started shouting, "Dig out the dead! dig out the dead!"

Scores of injured men, women and children still lay in field hospitals on the outskirts of town or in improvised emergency centers in the midst of twisted metal, concrete slabs, felled trees and gray rubble.

Because of the overwhelming demand and scanty medical services many were unlikely to get the right kind of treatment at the right time.

The shovel-carrying troops, army doctors and nurses, a dozen C-130 cargo planes and thousands of grim-faced volunteers fell short of demand.

"They say anyone who stays here tonight will be inviting death, but I will stay," said Ali Mohammadi, a shopkeeper in Mashad, 240 miles to the north, who came to look for 110 of his relatives.

All he found by mid-day Monday were 17 bodies.

"What do you want to know my name for?" he beseeched a reporter.

"My whole family is gone. Will anyone give back my family if I give you my name? Will there ever be a compensation for any one of them?"

His bloodshot eyes darted wildly around the rubble. A broken frame holding his own photograph hung from what was left of a wall in his family home. All the rest was rubble.

Among his lost relatives were his grandparents and parents, two sisters — "two were engaged this month" — a younger brother and cousins, uncles and aunts.

Workmen dug for bodies beside a sign at the entrance to the town that said "Welcome to the Garden City of Tabas, population: 13,000." Less than 2,000 of that number were still alive in the town famed for its wheat, barley, oranges and dates.

When the car carrying the shah's wife drove by a young man threw himself forward. "Don't go sight-seeing," he cried out. "Go pull out bodies of my family." The empress sat motionless, looking as if she might burst into tears at any moment.

Her tour of the displaced residents housed in tents outside the town on the old silk route from China proved no better.

Entire families pushed forward to tell her about their tragedies. Security men pulled her away to her car.

An airborne hospital was flown to a narrow airstrip in the desert outside the town.

Farber again refuses testimony in court

HACKENSACK, N.J. (UPI) — New York Times reporter Myron Farber, testifying at Dr. Mario Jascavech's murder trial, refused for a second time Monday to reveal his sources or turn over his investigative notes on the curare poisoning case.

Acting Bergen County Superior Court Judge William Arnold said he would decide Tuesday whether to hold yet another hearing to determine if the reporter has a right to refuse to turn over information.

Farber, jailed for 27 days in August on contempt charges, twice asserted his reporter's privileges under the New Jersey Shield Law after he was called to the witness stand by defense attorney Raymond A. Brown.

It was the first time the reporter took the witness stand in the presence of the jury, which has been hearing the case since February.

Brown maintains the reporter's information is essential to the defense of Jascavech, charged with murdering three patients at Riverdell Hospital in Oradell in 1965 and 1966 with overdoses of curare, a deadly poison used in small doses as a muscle relaxant in surgery.

Brown tried to show that Farber and Bergen County authorities acted in collusion to frame the 51-year-old surgeon.

He also tried to prove Farber would gain financially from Jascavech's prosecution since the reporter had signed a book contract.

At times hostile and antagonistic, Brown demanded that Farber disclose his sources leading to a series of articles prompting Bergen County authorities to reopen the 10-year-old investigation.

"I'd like to assert my rights under the shield laws of New Jersey and New York and the First Amendment to the Constitution and refuse to comply with that subpoena," Farber said.

The conservative Moslem clergyman who challenged his regime in recent months also sent dozens of truckloads of food, blankets and medicines in a parallel effort that appeared to have political overtones.

Council discusses new bar ordinance

By JESS DeBOER Staff Writer

An ordinance that would require that all establishments which serve alcoholic beverages be located on the ground floor and have windows open to a public right-of-way was discussed by the Iowa City Council at its informal meeting Monday afternoon.

"This ordinance would prevent another Woodfield's from occurring," said Councilor Carol DeProsse.

Woodfield's, a disco above Nemo's Apartment Store, 225 E. Washington, has been the scene of several police problems, including a fight last spring in which four police officers were injured.

City Manager Neal Berlin said the ordinance would not affect any existing businesses, but only new establishments. A similar ordinance was part of the Iowa City code until a few years ago and Police Chief Harvey Miller has recommended that it be reimposed, Berlin said.

"They (upstairs bars) create police, maintenance and public safety problems," Berlin said.

Councilor Glenn Roberts said he opposed the ordinance as it now reads.

"Just think of that new mall we're going to build. Some little shop in there might want to serve beer and they certainly wouldn't have any windows," Roberts said.

Berlin said the current ordinance is not perfect, but some regulation is needed.

"Public visibility has something to do with what goes on in a place," Berlin said.

Councilor Mary Neuhauser said some bars were built on upper floors to avoid noise problems.

"But it seems like it hasn't worked (to avoid noise). But this ordinance seems a little premature," Neuhauser said.

The ordinance was to have been on the agenda for Tuesday's council meeting, but the consensus of the council seemed to be that the ordinance needs more work and should be deferred.

At times hostile and antagonistic, Brown demanded that Farber disclose his sources leading to a series of articles prompting Bergen County authorities to reopen the 10-year-old investigation.

"I'd like to assert my rights under the shield laws of New Jersey and New York and the First Amendment to the Constitution and refuse to comply with that subpoena," Farber said.

Indian leader wounded
Imprisoned Indian activist Russell Means talked to reporters Saturday in Sioux Falls following an incident in the prison yard in which he received a superficial stab wound in the chest. The incident occurred just hours before weekend rallies scheduled to draw attention to the American Indian Movement leader got underway.

Police beat

A 22-year-old Iowa City woman was raped about 3:30 a.m. Sunday in an alley between the 200 block of N. Linn and N. Gilbert streets.

The woman had attended a nearby party and was walking through the alley to reach her car when she was attacked by a man, police say.

Capt. Douglas Edmonds said Terrell, who was a junior at West High School, had left a party and walked about a mile east on IWW Road when he was struck by a four-wheeled vehicle about 3:30 a.m. Edmonds said the vehicle probably came from the west, the same direction as the party.

Terrell's body was discovered within five minutes of the accident by Iowa-Illinois Gas and Electric Co. repairmen. He was pronounced dead at UI Hospitals at 4:39 a.m.

Investigators believe Terrell was tired and had either lain on the road or slipped in front of the vehicle. "There is nothing to indicate he had been thrown or dragged," Edmonds said.

"We may even be talking about a situation where the driver who hit him didn't even realize he was hit," Edmonds said.

The Johnson County Sheriff's Department is questioning about 70 persons who were at a party attended by Dirk Terrell, 16, of University Heights, who was killed early Sunday morning as he walked along the IWW Road, the victim of an apparent hit-and-run traffic accident.

Menachem Begin

Anwar Sadat

'Breakthrough' or beginning?

Early reports from the sequestered Camp David Mideast summit were not encouraging. The talks were going badly, sources claimed, and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Begin despised each other. But in the end, Jimmy Carter's "risk" proved to have been well-taken. The news conference Sunday night announcing an agreement on "A Framework for Peace in the Middle East" was so significant an affair that it interrupted the special three-hour premiere of "Battlestar Galactica."

The affection that Begin and Sadat demonstrated, hugging to the applause of the hastily gathered audience, may have been feigned, but their personal friendship is not essential to the process of pacifying the region. What is essential, and what lies behind the concessions and compromises that made the agreement possible, is the mutual recognition of the Israeli and Egyptian leaders that a resolution of tensions is in the best interest of both their countries.

Continual war preparedness has sapped the economies of their nations, burdening taxpayers and diverting funds from pressing social needs. The leaders also realize that they have much to gain from the trade and cooperation that can result from peace. Sadat's willingness to alienate the more radical Arab governments and factions testifies to his realization that the attempt to demolish the Jewish state is futile and debilitating.

The Camp David breakthrough should not be considered the preface to a final solution. Besides the many delicate issues that must be negotiated in the coming three months, both nations must contend with the continuing, and possibly escalated, hostilities of other countries in the region. Only its involvement in Lebanon prevents Syria from confronting Israel on their strife-torn border. An Israeli-Egyptian agreement will not settle the question of the Golan Heights or dissuade Palestinian nationalists from their commitment to reclaim the land that was stolen from them three decades ago.

But it is an encouraging development, not merely because of specific elements of the agreement, but because it represents a new Israeli flexibility that offers hope for success in future talks with other parties. Whether this new willingness to compromise is the result of an internal Israeli decision, U.S. pressure or some unrevealed American assurances, it is the key element in the accord.

We can only hope, against all odds, that this agreement creates a contagious atmosphere of conciliation. Whatever views one may hold about the trying and complex issues that lie at the heart of a generation of armed struggle in the Mideast, it is clear that the only realistic solution is a diplomatic one. Camp David could be a beginning.

Name-calling

Public interest groups that oppose the proliferation of nuclear power plants are "anti-growth" and are afflicted with "an aversion to capitalism." That was the message delivered in Des Moines last week to a conference of the Coalition for the Orderly Development of Energy by Duane Arnold, president of the Iowa Electric Light and Power Company and a man with the rather dubious distinction of having a nuclear power plant named after him. While lashing out at the "enemies" of nuclear power, Arnold urged conferees to infiltrate the regulatory power structure to offset the influence of the interest groups that "now have the power to control energy in this country."

Accusing anti-nuclear forces of economic heresy is nothing new. New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson, whose state is site of the controversial Seabrook nuclear plant that has been the target of the Clamshell Alliance, has been perhaps the most outrageous of the pro-nuke rhetoricians. Arnold, we may be thankful, stopped short of calling groups like the Mobilization for Survival and the Critical Mass energy group communists, criminals and perverts.

Arnold's name-calling should not be allowed to cloud the issues of the nuclear power debate, issues that Arnold would like to define in line with his biases as an officer of a power company. In Arnold's lexicon, "growth" means the unhindered proliferation of nuclear power plants as the solution to the energy needs of the United States and, as a corollary, the expansion of the profits of the utilities of which he is a representative; "capitalism" means a system in which economic decisions are made by big business without the input and influence of consumers or the regulation of government agencies.

The individuals and groups that oppose nuclear power represent a great diversity of political and economic views. While some anti-nuke groups are socialist, to characterize the entire movement as anti-capitalist is certainly more irresponsible than to label all proponents of nuclear proliferation as anti-democratic.

The kernel of the anti-nuclear argument is that the program for energy development embraced by the federal government, the utilities and the nuclear industry is not the only option available to us. There are other approaches that are safer, cleaner, more economical and more reliable than nuclear energy. Growth should be judged by criteria of intelligent planning, manageable development and a concern for the quality of life and the environment, not just an inflation of the GNP, the expansion of corporate profits or a uncontrolled proliferation of goods and services. (A telling aspect of the corporate approach is that energy waste gets counted as growth.) And the planning of energy strategy should not be solely the province of corporate executives whose interests do not coincide with the needs of the public.

There is no question that energy development is essential, even if conservation strategies succeed. The question is what the priorities will be and whether men like Arnold will be allowed to set them.

A majority faced with intolerance

There are an estimated 50 million fat gentlemen and 60 million fat women hulked around America, trying to be inconspicuous and meeting with no success. Their lives are not happy ones. And now, they are even being blamed for the energy crisis.

Two University of Illinois researchers, Drs. Bruce Hannon and Timothy Lohman, have worked out a complicated formula whereby fat people, by easing off on their food intake, could free enough power to supply the residential to the country to dump the trash so tragically uncompact.

The most apparent fault in Hannon and Lohman's hypothesis is that there is no way to convert all those calories that would be suddenly unemployed into electricity or gasoline. But one can imagine them working busily at it. Maybe if they included the cessation of a number of other bad habits into their formula — allowing for cigarettes unsmoked, nails unbitten, thumbs unsucked — they could come up with something.

This sort of research is dangerous in that it could lead enraged endomorphs to begin plugging their stereos into fat people or trying to cram them into their gas tanks (although this could solve a serious problem for Pinto owners — fat people usually don't explode on impact.) It is also dangerous because fat people are starting to organize and it may not be safe to pick on them any longer.

In New Haven, Conn., Vivien Meyer has organized a group with the militant-sounding name, the Fat Liberation Front (FLF). According to Meyer, it is the purpose of the FLF to show that "a fat person is not just a slim person who has gone wrong," by using methods perfected by the women's movement — consciousness raising, court suits against discriminatory business practices aimed at fat people, and so on.

I can almost hear the observations of some waggish readers of this column now: "Fat people have to raise their consciousness — they can't raise anything else, har de har har." It is at this point, and for the benefit of such intolerant minds, that I feel should inject a personal note. At a time in my checkered past, I weighed in — when I could find a scales with tensile strength to hold me — at 284 pounds. So I have a precise idea what it is not to be merely overweight, but truly obese.

Put yourself, O you of little weight, into the position of someone who cannot get most sorts of insurance except at exorbitant rates, cannot buy clothing cut in any pattern except that of a circus tent, cannot find furniture of any sort in which you are truly comfortable, cannot find a moment's peace from people who are appallingly eager to remind you of how you look.

The usual reply to this is, "If you're so miserable, why don't you just diet?" I did, and I met with success uncommon for a truly fat person: I lost 125 pounds and I've been able to maintain that loss for three years; indeed, like most fat people I dieted constantly until it finally worked. But for some fat people, it never works. They simply can't diet because of glandular imbalances or a familial predisposition to overweight or emotional problems or a number of other factors beyond their control. There are, of course, some fat people who are simply gluttons and who are overweight because they are too lazy or have too little self-control to do anything about it. But I question whether such fat people form a majority of their — or rather of our — type.

This brings us down to the question of tolerance. We are in a period of time when everyone, no matter how out of the ordinary or unique their behavior or life style is, not only asks to be tolerated, but demands it. That is as it should be — any sort of truly civil society requires that its members at least tolerate, if not respect or revere, each other. And tolerance is, to a degree, even mandated by law (for instance, fair hiring laws, fair housing laws, fair credit laws). Fat people are without such social or statutory protection. While people demand tolerance for themselves, they deny it without a second thought to the overweight. In a country where a majority of the population is overweight, this is a peculiar social construction.

electric demands of Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Washington. Hannon and Lohman postulate that if their 110 million pudge-equipped fellow citizens cut their daily calorie intake by 600, reached "normal" weight and suppressed their appetites enough to maintain that weight loss, there would be a total caloric savings nationally of 9.1 trillion calories a year. After a little math magic, these 9.1 trillion calories translate to 160 trillion British Thermal Units (BTUs). For those of you who find BTUs uninteresting or gauche, think of those 9.1 calories as 1.3 billion gallons of gasoline, enough to amply 900,000 cars for a year.

Hannon's and Lohman's fanciful research demonstrates two things: (A) Science is weird; and (B) Unless the overweight diet, people in Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Washington — who are, I presume, among the unfat — won't be able to use their trash compactors or to drive

Another tale of parietal 'oppression'

To the Editor:
Residence Services officials and soon-to-be-visiting Regents should not be surprised at the widespread anti-parietal rule sentiment among UI students. Students are, after all, being forced to live in a fairly nasty place.

obnoxious lifestyles. Yes, it is an "educational" experience to live with others. But the ability to tolerate dirty socks, late-night parties or neo-Nazi political activists in your bedroom is hardly a skill necessary for life in a modern society. For all their "educational benefit," roommates can be a pain in the ass ("Yes, but why did you set my comb on fire?") and a great contributor to insecurity, academic underachievement and poor health.

Worst of all during my blessedly short tour of duty in Burge was the noise. A quadrasonic stereo down the hall regularly blasted out Bachman-Turner Overdrive albums at 3 a.m., so loudly that my own stereo was inaudible. (For you Regents, BTO is an extremely loud, sleazy rock group with lots of bass. Enough said.) A single shout or slammed door was capable of waking a dozen people, and often did. My R.A. didn't exactly ignore my pleas for quiet, but he didn't quiet things down any, either.

A nasty place, indeed, it was. It's downright immoral to force adults to live in such an environment except as punishment for high crimes and misdemeanors. I call on the Regents and the UI Administration to let my people go!

D.C. home rule

To the Editor:
Your editorial "Our Last Colony" (DI, Sept. 12) is ignorant, pretentious and very collegiate. Please consider the following facts in future judgments:

1. The District of Columbia lives by virtue of the federal government. There are no large private employers, and it has no financial base outside of the federal government. For this reason, direct control might advisably be placed with the federal government.
2. The District of Columbia has a powerful City Council, with full control over internal regulation and substantial control over money it does not own, e.g., that of the citizens of Maryland, Virginia and the United States generally. Recently discovered widespread corruption indicates the danger of this situation in the District.
3. The urban problems of the city of Washington have no historical relationship to the fact that it is the federal city. If anything, the problems are much less severe than they are in other cities, precisely because of the federal presence.
4. There is no sense in which the District is ruled by a "white minority". As stated above, the city is not "ruled" by anyone without, and many doubt if the city is ruled at all.
5. Washington is not a state and has no reason to become a state. And Mr. Will is quite astute in his defense of the thesis that only states can have senators.

The case against what is called "home rule" is not airtight. However, all commentators, even in the DI, should be moderately well informed.

In spite of 'low military profile'

ROTC: alive, well, and living at the UI

By DAVE ALBERT
Staff Writer

The Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) "is a department, just like any other department" in the UI, says Col. Carl Haaland of the Army program here.

In fact, Haaland says, "The vast majority (of those completing the program) do their active duty and then rejoin civilian life. The three or four years in the military gives them a chance to work with people in a management situation," in preparation for a career. Often students are told to postpone making the decision of whether to remain in the military or to become a civilian until after they complete their Army obligation. Third- and fourth-year students in the military science program seemed to agree that their futures would not be decided until after the completion of active duty.

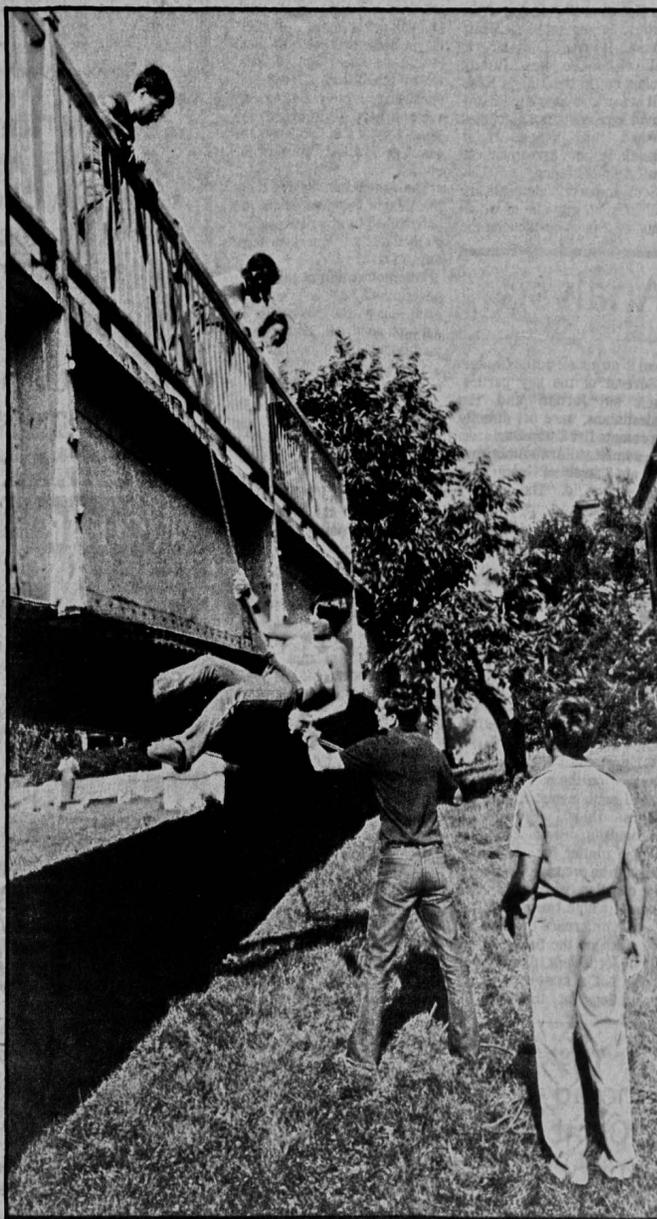

The ROTC program at the UI is one of the oldest in the nation. It was established in 1875, 27 years after the UI was formed. It is a four-year program designed to train students to become 2nd lieutenants, the lowest commissioned officer rank. In the first two years students are familiarized with the military and how it is organized, as well as trained in physical skills such as rappelling, cross-country skiing, riflery, water survival and combat techniques.

After the initial two years, students must decide whether to remain in the program or not. If they decide to stay, they sign a contract committing themselves to at least three years of active duty or six years in the reserves. Scholarship students must commit themselves to at least four years of active duty.

The final two years of the program include one year of preparation for advance camp in the summer between the junior and senior years, and the final year is spent studying military law and justice and administrative procedures and structures.

The advanced summer camp is a six-week training program at Fort Lewis, Wash. Here cadets must put into practice the skills they have learned in the first three years of ROTC. The cadets undergo field training and live in a military environment, eating Army food, sleeping in Army cots and being taught by Army instructors.

For the last two years of training, cadets are paid a subsistence allowance of $100 per month, with the two-year total not exceeding $2,000. Scholarship students receive the allowance for all four years of the program. When commissioned, the cadet can expect to earn over $11,000 per year. Furthermore, the Army will pay the scholarship student for the service," she said. The daughter of a career soldier who has served in the Navy, Air Force and Army, Heaton was raised in a military environment. She also remarked on some of the facility and resource limitations of the program, but said, "I am getting what I want and I really like it. It has given me a lot of confidence. Sometimes they demand a lot, but 99.9 per cent of the time I like it; I get a lot out of it."

Building confidence is one of the main appeals used by ROTC in its advertising. "Adventure and leadership training" seem to be the two watchwords in recruiting efforts. Newspaper ads cite the opportunity to learn to manage people and the chance to participate in such physical activities as rappelling and firing guns. Once a student has joined the program, he or she is trained in a variety of physical and survival skills and to take charge of groups of people. Leadership skills, Haaland said, are sought out and developed in cadets, rather than instilled.

In general cadets seemed to be pleased with the UI's ROTC program. Although no one said he or she would definitely stay with the Army upon completion of the required duty, many indicated that it was a possibility they had not ruled out. Most indicated they would wait and see what the Army offered before making their decision.

Only one criticism of the ROTC administration was brought up by some of the cadets, who asserted awards and "favors" were sometimes granted to undeserving members of the program. They explained the problem was part of a "numbers game."

In order to be cost-effective in the eyes of the Army, the ROTC program here must graduate a certain number of cadets. The guideline figures, according to Haaland, are 17 third-year cadets and 15 commissioned cadets at the end of the four-year class. The UI did not meet these guidelines from 1973 to 1975, he said. Enrollment had been climbing, peaking in 1977 with 114 cadets, until this year, when the number of ROTC recruits took a dive, dropping to 66 cadets. Ten of this year's cadets are women.

Haaland, who had projected a figure more like 90 to 100 students, could not explain why the actual number was so low. The traditional reason for the lack of sufficient cadets has been the "low military profile" in Iowa that Haaland cited. The lack of military facilities in the state leads in turn to a lack of awareness about the military, Haaland said. Thus recruiting cadets from high schools is much more difficult here, as opposed to recruiting in the East, South, or West, where military installations are far more numerous. Yet in order to survive in Iowa, ROTC must turn out a certain number of cadets ready for commissions and duty. This situation, one cadet maintained, has led to "some undeserving students getting breaks." Although the program has some outstanding students, the cadet said, there are also "losers and quitters. Some people just take the Army for a ride." He said that if a cadet drops out of the program after beginning the third year, the Army can order the student to active duty as an enlisted person for four years. But this almost never happens, he asserted.

According to the cadet, students are often given awards to encourage them to remain in the program. The awards help the students who are competing for a limited number of places as 2nd lieutenants. Another cadet agreed that undeserving students are sometimes given incentives, but asserted that ROTC is justified in doing so. ROTC is open to all UI academic majors. The majority of those in the program come from the College of Liberal Arts, Haaland said, but cadets come from "just about every area."

No matter what a student is majoring in, Haaland said, "there is some branch of the Army that has a relationship to that student." A chart prepared by the UI ROTC department suggests that only the disciplines related to religion, theology and medicine have no corresponding branch in the Army. This, Haaland said, is because the Army prefers to prepare its own pastors and medics.

There are also two- and three-year programs in ROTC at the UI, as well as programs for veterans of the armed forces. But the program is mostly aimed at the four-year student. "We think it takes four years to prepare to become an officer in the Army," Haaland said.

Two farmers reap cash crop for babysitting death-row cattle

FREMONT, Mich. (UPI) — Mick and Dick Kokx have found the silver lining in Michigan's PBB cloud.

The two livestock farmers who fell short of earning $20,000 last year have already topped $400,000 for babysitting livestock condemned by the state in its attempt to wipe out the last residue of the 1973 contamination disaster.

The brothers get $2 per cow per day for storing condemned animals on their 600-acre Newaygo County farm. The state pays for the storage and for mileage in hauling the animals that are well within legal limits in other states.

Even though taxpayers are footing the bill, the Kokx brothers don't have many kind things to say about their benefactors. They said they would gladly butcher and eat the animals they store, and the public has in effect bilked itself.

"Is the public getting ripped off by this?" Dick asked rhetorically. "I guess they aren't, since they were the (dummies) that wanted this in the first place."

PBB, a toxic fire retardant, accidentally was mixed with livestock feed in 1973 and shipped to farmers statewide.

Mideast still faces peace obstacles

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In the elation of the signing of the historic agreement at the White House, it was tempting to believe peace had finally broken out in the Middle East. It has not. Although the Camp David agreement is a giant step toward that peace, it is essentially an agreement to continue negotiating.

Some important elements are still lacking, any one of which could be a fatal obstacle on the Begin said Jerusalem is and will remain the capital of Israel, and will never again be divided. Egypt believes East Jerusalem should be ruled by the local Arab inhabitants. Moreover, sprawling Israeli settlements create sharp differences between Egypt and Israel on the exact geographic limits of the city.

The Americans believe these formidable negative points are outweighed by the new positive elements that emerged from Camp David.

road to an actual peace treaty: —Several of the key parties, such as Jordan and the Palestinians, were not directly represented at Camp David. As a prominent Arab-American, Hisham Sharabi of Georgetown University said, "The deeper I read in the documents, the more my heart sank because of the vagueness on the central issue of the Palestinians."

—The Americans believe the Israelis have implicitly committed themselves to eventual, partial withdrawal from occupied Arab territory. So does President Anwar Sadat. But Prime Minister Menachem Begin told a group of Israeli journalists the question is still a matter for negotiation.

—Egypt and Israel agreed to disagree on the subject of the Israeli settlements. Sadat considers their removal a prerequisite. Begin considers them a matter for negotiation although he promised to take up the question with the Israeli Knesset within two weeks.

—The difference between the two sides on the future of the city of Jerusalem is so extreme it was not a matter of major negotiations at the summit.

The momentum of the peace negotiations has been regained, even enhanced. There is an aura of good will between the traditional enemies that was almost palpable. Both Sadat and Begin appear to have dug as deep as they were able into their political reserves and come up with what appear to genuine compromises.

Israel can have the separate peace with Egypt that she has desired. Sadat can be remembered as the man who restored the Sinai peninsula to Egyptian sovereignty.

More important, perhaps, is that Sadat and Begin have become, once again, unofficial allies in the drive to settle the Middle East problems.

If the moderate Saudis and Jordanians enlist in the cause, peace may, in fact, break out in the Middle East.

provisions:
—A formal Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty will be signed within three months.
—A phased Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai with the last troops leaving the desert within three years.
—The handover of Israeli airfields in the Sinai to Egyptian civilian control. The United States will build Israel two new airfields in the Negev Desert.
—The establishment of an assortment of security zones in the Sinai.
—Normal relations between Israel and Egypt will be established at the completion of the first major troop withdrawal from Sinai — scheduled for three to nine months after the signing of the peace treaty.
—Arab leaders opposed to Sadat, including the heads of Syria, Libya, Iraq, Algeria, South Yemen and the PLO, meet in Damascus Wednesday for a summit of their own to counter the results of Camp David.

But the official news media of such moderate Arab states as Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates and North Yemen relayed the Camp David story without editorial comment.
Political observers in Jerusalem said Begin faces a tough fight over the accords in the 120-seat Knesset, which is scheduled to meet Sept. 25 to begin debating the twin accords.
"Everything the Knesset decides will be carried out," Begin said. "We are in the hands of the Knesset. We must accept the verdict of the Knesset as is. This is the very soul of democracy."
Opponents of the agreement, including Moshe Arens, a member of Begin's party and chairman of the powerful Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, were reported to be gearing up for the Knesset debate.

Egyptians, wearied of war and economic austerity, generally appeared to welcome news of the Camp David accords — even if it meant isolation in the Arab world.
"What have the Arabs done for us anyway?" said Mohammed Abdel Moneim, a cab driver. "They all want to fight until the last Egyptian soldier dies."
But diplomatic sources expressed fears the peace blueprint might deal a death blow to Arab solidarity, dividing the Arab states into hostile pro-American and pro-Soviet camps.
The leadership of Sadat's National Democratic Party met in an emergency session to examine the Camp David accords. Sadat is to convene the National Security Council — Egypt's highest policy-making body — when he returns,

Arabs denounce summit accords

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Arab hard-line states condemned the Camp David summit conference Monday, Libyans called for the death of President Anwar Sadat and the Palestine Liberation Organization vowed to continue its fight against Israel.
The official Libyan radio said PLO chief Yasser Arafat conferred with Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy in Tripoli, where thousands of protesters chanted slogans denouncing the Camp David accords.
Arafat later returned to Beirut, apparently to attend what a spokesman said was an "urgent meeting" Monday night of the PLO's executive committee and central command for a "detailed review of the dangerous results of Camp David."
Syria's official Damascus Radio said Egyptian President Anwar Sadat had entered into a "unilateral peace treaty" with Israel and called the accord on the West Bank a "violation of the rights of the Palestinian Arab people."
In Beirut, PLO spokesman Mahmoud Labady said the group will carry on its "armed resistance inside the occupied territories, and Sadat doesn't speak for the Palestinians."

"The Middle East will remain tense and a flashpoint and this agreement will not contribute to any just settlement in the Middle East," Labady said.
The official PLO news agency called Sadat "the first Egyptian leader to commit high treason against the Arab nation" and said "he has sold out (his fellow Arabs) for a handful of Sinai territories, and Sadat doesn't speak for the Palestinians."

The Libyan Radio said demonstrators in Tripoli chanted "Palestine!" and "Sadat is a criminal, kill him!" The radio said the accords between Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin were "agreements of humiliation, shame and treason."
No official comment was immediately available from Jordan, Saudi Arabia or other moderate states.
King Hussein, who was vacationing in Majorca with his American wife, Queen Noor, when the summit ended, postponed a scheduled trip to Rabat, Morocco and rushed home for consultations with his advisers.
"Prime Minister Begin was the only winner at Camp David," Radio Damascus said.

Soviets hit Sadat for 'plot'

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union Monday accused Egyptian President Anwar Sadat of betraying the Arab people and said the parties at the Camp David summit were only interested in pursuing "selfish interests."
In the first Soviet reaction, Tass summarized the two documents signed by Sadat, Israeli Premier Menachem Begin and President Carter at the conference, then focused on Sadat's role in the 13-day talks.
"The content of these documents shows that a real plot against the peoples of the Middle East and the interests of peace was woven in Camp David," Tass said.

"As to the Framework for Peace in the Middle East, it is evidence of Sadat's open rejection of the common Arab demands, his betrayal of the cause of the Arab people of Palestine, of surrender to all demands made by Tel Aviv and Washington."
The Soviet Union has condemned Sadat's attempts to reach peace with Israel since his first visit to Jerusalem last November. The words "betrayal of Arab interests" have been included in most stories.
The Soviet Union has said the only legitimate peace negotiations must be held in Geneva, with Soviet participation and representation for the Palestinians through the Palestine Liberation Organization.
Tass said the Western press tried to make the Camp David summit "which dragged on for 13 days" appear to be a success, but failed.
"All attempts of bourgeois propaganda to portray with the blessing of the White House the meeting in Camp David as a serious attempt to draw up a comprehensive settlement ended in failure," Tass said.

"In secrecy from the world public, behind the back of Arab peoples, a separate bargaining took place in Camp David. Its participants pursued their selfish interests."
It said the United States succeeded in guaranteeing itself a chance to expand U.S. military presence in the Middle East.
"As to the U.S. intentions to expand its military presence in the Middle East, they are concealed in the words about the utilization of some international force which will guarantee Israel's security," Tass said.

UI will seek suit against VA

By DENNIS FITZGIBBON
Staff Writer

The UI will ask the Board of Regents this week to approve a law suit against the Veterans Administration because of the VA's continued enforcement of a regulation change that resulted in reduced benefits to more than 100 UI undergraduate veterans this summer.

Under the new regulation, the VA is basing veterans' benefits on "contact hours" — the number of classroom hours per week — rather than on the number of credit hours determined by the UI.

Since fewer hours per week were spent in the classroom during the UI's accelerated summer session, approximately 115 veterans considered full-time students by the UI were given three-quarter-time status by the VA and thus received reduced benefits.

Kenneth Moll, UI associate dean of faculties, said Monday, "The Board of Regents will be asked this week to approve a law suit (against the VA) on behalf of the three state universities."

He added that, if approved, the suit would be brought against the VA by a state assistant attorney general.

The "contact hours" regulation was struck down by a U.S. District Court ruling Aug. 18 in Cedar Rapids, where a class-action suit had been brought against the VA by Kirkwood Community College.

"We have received no word from the VA since we wrote to them immediately after the Kirkwood decision," Moll said. "At that time, they responded that they could not extend the ruling to any school other than Kirkwood. Therefore, we feel we have exhausted our administrative remedies regarding this matter."

UI Assistant Registrar Norlin Boyd said "very few" veteran are affected by the regulation this fall.

"We knew ahead of time that it would not be as big a problem this fall," he said, "since most of the courses happen to fit the VA's 'classroom hours' definition."

If the Board of Regents approves the UI's request, Moll said he is not sure how soon litigation would begin. "That would depend upon how soon the assistant attorney general acts on the matter," he said.

Disillusioned, student leaves 'Moonies'

By LEE SEVIG
Staff Writer

The possibility that Unification Church leader Sun Myung Moon was Jesus Christ prompted Chris Elkins to join the "Moonies."

Elkins, who eventually left the Unification Church, is now working with a Baptist organization. He said he joined the Moonies because of their extreme love and the chance that Christ's second coming had already happened.

For Elkins to know if Moon was actually Christ, he had to join the Unification Church, the Moonies said. He did and left two years later, unconvinced.

Elkins, speaking at Currier Residence Hall, said he joined the Unification Church when a member, "smiling radiantly," approached him one day when he was reading about economics. Elkins, the president of his fraternity at the University of Arizona, said he was "taken back with the friendliness" of the Moonie.

The Moonie brought Elkins to a two-hour introductory lecture on the nature of God. Elkins said he did not find the Moonies emotional. "They were using their heads, they were using their minds," he said. "They obviously loved me. They were obviously concerned."

After Elkins' classes, a Moonie would be outside the classroom door waiting to greet him. He said if they were not there, a card or plate of cookies would be left at his fraternity house.

He said he thought God might be among the Moonies because of the great love they showed. He returned to more Moonie meetings where the Bible was always used, although out of context and sometimes with errors, Elkins said.

Elkins left school where he had received good grades and left his summer job at a bank. He told his parents he was working for an organization he believed was preparing for Christ's second coming.

His mother at first seemed to support what he was doing. But for the first two weeks, his parents called each night and asked him to come home. His mother cried each time, and "hurting her tore me up," Elkins said.

But any emotion his parents caused Elkins was discouraged by his fellow Moonies. Satan could be using his parents, they told him. When his father called and told Elkins that he could die, as far as he was concerned, Elkins found his parents' love conditional and became more dedicated to the Unification Church.

He remained with the church and learned their interpretation of the Bible. Among the interpretations he studied were that the perfect union was man and wife, as God planned with Adam and Eve, and that Christ failed in his mission, partly because he never married on earth, Elkins said.

Marriages in the Unification Church are creating a pure world, Elkins was told. He said Moon had matched 3,600 men and women and then had one mass marriage of 1,800 couples in 1975.

Elkins said Moonies believe that these marriages are made of innocent people who will eventually create a perfect earth. The perfect marriages, he was told, will mix with the imperfect, or non-Unification-Church marriages, and eventually evil in the earth will disappear.

After two and a half years with the Moonies, Elkins realized the Unification Church had not answered his questions. He added that he had never really been convinced of the church's teachings.

Elkins said he wanted to leave the church but was unsure of where to go. He said he was unable to go home because his parents had hired persons to "deprogram" him from Moonie beliefs, so he secretly left the church.

Corona retrial to be protracted

FAIRFIELD, Calif. (UPI) — The new trial of Juan Corona on charges of hacking to death 25 farm workers and burying their bodies in an orchard along a river bank will be a long one, his lawyers said Monday as proceedings opened in the Solano County courthouse.

Terence Hallinan, representing Corona, told Judge Richard E. Patton he would not be ready until next March 1 to begin the trial. He presented a long list of items he wants the state to turn over to him and said he would need several months to study this material and the record of the earlier trial.

Corona, a Mexican-American farm labor contractor, was convicted five years ago of killing the 25 men whose bodies were dug up near Yuba City in the spring of 1971. He was sentenced to life in prison, but the conviction was recently overturned by the state Supreme Court which said he did not have competent defense.

In the first pre-trial hearing in the courtroom at Fairfield, where the new trial was transferred, Corona appeared full of vigor. He was wearing white prison coveralls and was shackled with a chrome-plated chain.

"Your honor, judge, I will agree to whatever Mr. Hallinan and Mr. Mendelson decide," Corona said when asked if he objected to a delay in his trial. Michael Mendelson is another lawyer helping the Sutter County public defender's office on behalf of Corona.

The prosecution sought to get the trial moving more quickly, and asked Judge Patton to begin the trial Jan. 15.

DeLashmutt reaches Iowa (two years later)

By CATHY BREITENBUCHER
Staff Writer

It's only about 85 miles from Iowa City to Fort Madison, Iowa, but Ed DeLashmutt took a roundabout route to get to the University of Iowa.

He went by way of Manhattan, Kan., and Philadelphia.

DeLashmutt is the 1978 Big Eight champion in the indoor mile and an All-American by virtue of a fourth-place finish in the 1,000-yard run at the NCAA meet. But right now, he's working on regaining the enthusiasm for running he lost last spring in a war with his coach which caused him to transfer to Iowa from Kansas State.

His problems at K-State originally led to a decision to switch to Villanova, but one look at the City of Brotherly Love sent DeLashmutt scampering back to Iowa, where Asst. Coach Ted Wheeler welcomed him like a prodigal son.

Iowa was among the schools DeLashmutt considered two years ago after his successful senior year at Fort Madison which included victories in the Drake Relays, the Iowa state meet, the Atlanta Classic, the International Prep Invitational in Evanston, Ill., and the Golden West Invitational in Sacramento, Calif. Unbeaten by high schoolers in the mile, he was named the nation's top prep miler by Track & Field News magazine in 1976.

He was looking forward to a good career as a Wildcat under the tutelage of Jerome Howe, the 1972 Olympian whose state high school record DeLashmutt bettered with a 4:08.9 clocking in his own high school relays. But a pulled muscle bothered him through his freshman cross country season, and after only three indoor track races, he caught mononucleosis and was redshirted.

His second year got under way on a good note as he finished eighth in the Big Eight cross country meet. But as the winter wore on and track season approached, trouble started brewing between DeLashmutt and Coach Howe.

Howe's philosophy, DeLashmutt said, was "No. 1, you're an athlete first and a student second; No. 2, I'm your coach and not your friend; and No. 3, running is not fun." DeLashmutt described his coach as "an authoritarian."

Howe insisted that DeLashmutt run both the mile and 1,000 yards in an indoor dual meet with Oklahoma. "We knew we could win the meet by about 20 points, so I just couldn't see me running two events. I wanted to run just the mile," he recalled. "It was obvious that I could win the mile and the 1,000 relatively easy, you know, just sit and kick. I wanted to go all out for a good time in the mile because I had been running 4:12s and 4:13s.

"My goal was to be the Big Eight champ in the mile. It was a pretty weak event, but they (the coaches) didn't stress making national qualifying," DeLashmutt said. His winning time in the conference championship was 4:06.3, three-tenths of a second over national qualifying.

"They just don't gear you for nationals. To them, it was just the icing on the cake. But for me, the Big Eight was the icing and the NCAA was the cake," he said.

DeLashmutt got his "cake," though. He earned a trip to the Detroit meet, where he ran the 1,000. "Before nationals I asked my coach what he thought my chances were of making the final. He just said, 'Oh, about 30 per cent.' That's just his style. He's not a patting-on-the-back coach."

DeLashmutt not only qualified for the final, he won his preliminary race in 2:11.8 before running 2:09.8 to place fourth in the final and gain All-America status.

After his indoor season, DeLashmutt was "mentally exhausted. I needed to take four or five or six days off just to run on my own. But Howe said, 'no,' that we needed to keep working, keep working."

As the Texas-Kansas-Drake Relays circuit neared, Howe began gearing his distance men for the four-mile relays. "At Texas we had so many injuries that we had no kind of a relay at all. I was anchoring and we were miles out of it by the time I got the baton," DeLashmutt said. "The coach kept saying that if we don't run the relays, some people won't get to go to the meets, and that it was traditional for K-State to run the relays.

"So I said, 'Look, if we have to run relays, at least let me run first so I can get in a good time.' I even ran one 4:30 leg. I'd never felt so disenchanted with track before," he added.

Right after the Kansas Relays (held at Oklahoma this year), DeLashmutt decided to transfer. "I was really bummed out, and other people on the team were starting to see things my way."

But the final blow was when Howe chose to keep DeLashmutt and most of the other Wildcats out of the Drake Relays. The coach had gone out of town, leaving a graduate assistant coach to "babysit" while he was away. DeLashmutt told his teammates he wanted to run his own workout, and all but two of them joined him in the boycott. "The grad assistant just blew it all out of proportion, and Howe said, 'Okay, nobody runs at Drake.'"

"After that, Greg Glass and Pete Riley (and several others) decided not to return either," DeLashmutt said. "We were out running one day and we just looked at one another and said, 'Well, where are you guys going to school next year?'"

The trackmen's story became known after an article in a Topeka newspaper gave dissatisfaction with Howe as DeLashmutt's reason for finishing last in the 800- and 1,500-meters in a dual meet with Kansas.

In what seemed to be his last chance to qualify for the NCAA meet, DeLashmutt finished second in the Big Eight 1,500-meters in 3:46.4, four-tenths off the standard.

"I really wanted to get national qualifying, so they found me a meet in California and flew us out there. But we didn't go until the day of the meet for some strange reason and I didn't get to the track until 20 minutes before my race," he recalled. "I went through (three quarters) in 3:03 and ended up running 3:47, one second over qualifying."

"Right after that I wrote to Villanova. I figured it was my only choice. I wanted to go to a school that would make me a runner, and Villanova and Oregon consistently produce good runners," DeLashmutt said.

But DeLashmutt's family had other ideas. "My parents flew me out there (to Villanova) because they knew I would hate Philadelphia. My wife and I were really looking forward to the trip because we wanted to see the Liberty Bell and all that, but we hated it so much we left a day early and didn't see it," he said.

"They drove us around out there and tried to impress us by showing us where all the rich people live, but we just didn't like the city.

"My wife told me, 'Ed, I've never hated any place as much as I hate this place, but if it's where you want to go to school, it's OK with me.'"

On the way back from Philadelphia, DeLashmutt stopped in Iowa City to tell Wheeler he wanted to become a Hawkeye. "I always wanted to go to Iowa because it's close to home and I really like the coach. But Howe and (Head Coach Mike) Ross really bad-mouthed Iowa," he said.

DeLashmutt's attitude has improved markedly since moving to Iowa City. He has set up a day-by-day training schedule for the next 10 months, and he is working out with former Hawk miler John Clark. "I think I can get the right kind of training here and run with the right people," he said.

"I'm planning to lay low until October, then get in some cross country races," said DeLashmutt, who cannot run as a member of college or club team during his transfer year. He hopes to run the 1,000 in the AAU meet, but he said his big goal is the Drake Relays invitational mile, an event which has never been run in under four minutes.

Rec Services sets weekend outings

Sign up is already in progress for a rock climbing weekend sponsored by the UI Recreational Services Department.

The weekend, at Devil's Lake, Wis., is for the experienced and the amateur climber. Veteran climber John McLaughlin will provide expert instruction for the weekend outing set for Friday, Sept. 29 through Sunday, Oct. 1. The cost of the trip is $17.50 and persons interested are asked to call 353-3494 for more information or stop by Room 111 in the Field House.

Rec Services is also planning a cave exploration for Oct. 8 with sign up scheduled to begin Sept. 27.

Intramural Co-ed football schedules ready

Intramural Co-ed football schedules are available this morning and may be picked up outside the Intramural Office, Room 111 in the Field House.

UI Rugby Clubs record victories

The UI Rugby Club's "A" team defeated the Quad City Rednecks "A" team by an 8-0 score last Saturday.

The win ups the UI club's record to 2-1 following a victory over Bloomington and a loss to Illinois during the previous week. Both four-point tries were made in the first half by Steve Hedges and Mike Cassner during the UI-Quad City match.

The UI club's "B" squad also picked up a win by beating the Quad City "B" team 14-4.

The next home game will be Sunday, Sept. 24, at 1 p.m. on the field south of the Field House and all spectators are welcome.

Iowa Soccer Club tops Luther

The Iowa Soccer Club scored a 3-1 win over Luther College with goals by George Allinson, Cloy Schwartzendruber and Ahmad Nayad.

Nayad also led Iowa in a strong defensive showing along with halfbacks John Newlin and Jose Otero plus fullbacks Jim Barton, Rich Milich and Kazem Taghva.

The UI club will host Northern Iowa Sunday, Sept. 24 in a game scheduled for 2 p.m. on the field behind the Recreation Building.

Hawkeye Soccer Club suffers loss

The Hawkeye Soccer Club came out on the short end of a 3-0 score at home last Sunday against the Cedar Rapids Comets. The loss evened the club's record at 1-1.

The Hawkeye team beat Waterloo 6-1 in their season opener and will host Luther Sunday, Sept. 24, in a match scheduled for noon on the field behind the UI Recreation Building.

Judge rules on agents

DETROIT (UPI) — A federal judge ruled Monday that the National Hockey League's compensation requirement for teams signing free agents constitutes restraint of trade and is therefore illegal.

U.S. District Judge Robert Demaschio, in a case filed by Detroit Red Wing Dale McCourt, voided the league's rule that a team losing a free agent must be compensated by the club signing that player.

McCourt, a standout center in his rookie season last year, was awarded to the Los Angeles Kings last month by an NHL arbitrator after the Red Wings signed free agent goalie Rogie Vachon.

Under league rules, teams unable to agree on compensation must make a final offer, and the league arbitrator is required to choose one. The Los Angeles demand was accepted in the Vachon dispute.

Demaschio, in an oral ruling, said the compensation format was even more restrictive than the National Football League's so-called "Rozelle rule" dictating compensation.

He said the NHL policy was imposed by the league unilaterally and was not part of collective bargaining. Further, he said, testimony from hearings last week indicated both the players' association and the league knew the rule would never stand up in court.

Charges anger Ali; promoters drop suit

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Two white promoters who filed a $1 million suit branded as racist by Muhammad Ali said Monday they dropped the suit against three black co-promoters of the Ali-Leon Spinks fight because the co-promoters returned $225,000 in promotion funds.

New Orleans businessman Jake DiMaggio said he and City Councilman Phillip Ciaccio agreed to drop the suit Sunday night after Sherman Coperlin and Don Hubbard of Louisiana Sports Inc. returned $200,000 in corporate funds and former Top Rank Inc. executive Butch Lewis gave back a $25,000 advance.

"Copelin and Hubbard put $200,000 back in corporate funds and Lewis paid back $25,000 of his advance," DiMaggio said. "Everything was settled amicably."

robbing since the damn thing started and nobody jumped on them. These are niggers."

Ali said he extended his stay in New Orleans to ensure the three co-promoters received equal coverage on the suit dropped.

Hubbard said Top Rank President Bob Arum promised Copelin and him a $200,000 "finder's fee" one month before the first Ali-Spinks fight. Under terms of the oral agreement, Hubbard said the winner of the Ali-Spinks fight would come to the Superdome for his next fight.

Hubbard said this $200,000 was promised to Copelin and him even before the local promotions group Louisiana Sports was established with Ciaccio and DiMaggio.

The New England Patriots appeared to be determined to force their battle with Baltimore into overtime twice in the final stages of the fourth quarter. But a Joe Washington kickoff return with 1:18 remaining gave the Colts a 34-27 win despite another Patriot rally in the closing seconds.

Yanks push Brewers to 4th

NEW YORK (UPI) — Mickey Rivers' single off the glove of shortstop Robin Yount scored Chris Chambliss with the tie-breaking run in the eighth inning Monday night and gave the New York Yankees a 4-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

It was the fourth loss in a row for the Brewers and dropped them into fourth place.

Red Sox 5, Tigers 4

DETROIT (UPI) — Jerry Remy's two-out single in the 11th inning scored pinch-runner Gary Hancock with the winning run Monday night to give the Boston Red Sox a 5-4 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

The victory enabled the Red Sox to remain 2½ games behind the division-leading New York Yankees in the American League East.

Orioles 10, Indians 3

CLEVELAND (UPI) — Gary Roenicke belted his first major-league grand slam homer and Billy Smith hit a bases-loaded triple Monday night to power the Baltimore Orioles to a 10-3 romp over the Cleveland Indians.

Hawks prepare for ISU

Iowa Coach Bob Commings sent the Hawkeye football team through a 75-minute workout Monday to begin the countdown for Saturday's intrastate clash with Iowa State.

The Hawks ran through Monday's drills with emphasis placed on Iowa State plays and formations.

Commings announced that linebacker Leven Weiss, tight end Bill Ross and offensive tackle Jim Cody remain questionable following knee injuries sustained in last week's Northwestern contest.

candidate was also on the tail end of an 11-yard scoring pass from quarterback Terry Rubley.

Meis was praised by Bruce for his eight tackles and blocked punt which led to ISU's first touchdown.

Defensive tackle Randy Koch remains the only injured Cyclone and is questionable for this Saturday's contest.

Volleyball hosts Drake in opener

By EILEEN DAVIS
Staff Writer

Volleyball Coach Georganne Greene hopes that putting psychology into practice this season will result in a team both mentally and physically unbeatable. With a number of talented front-liners setting the pace, the Hawkeyes hope to put Greene's expectations on the line when they open the 1978 season against Drake at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the North Gym.

Determination and hustle have become the bywords for Greene's freshmen-laden team as they prepare to defend their state title against last year's main challenger, the runner-up Bulldogs.

"I don't really know what to expect from Drake this year, although last year they were our stiffest competition in Iowa. Drake is starting the season with a new coach and will probably be as strong as last year's team," Greene commented.

The Hawkeye mentor is extremely pleased with her new players and says they have the great physical potential required of a winning team.

"I have 13 varsity players this year, most of which are freshmen, as well as a junior varsity team comprised of nine women," Greene said. "I will probably start five or six of these freshmen and I can't emphasize enough the quality of the incoming players."

"We're working to build up our offense and because we have added more offensive players, we're progressing well," she said. "The development of an offensive game is a big factor in making the team more powerful."

Greene lists probable starters for tonight as powerful freshman Cindy Lamb, a 5-foot-8 dynamo from Cedar Rapids, and Joanne Suplee, a 5-9 hitter who hails from Lansing, Ill. She also mentions setter Gail Hodge, a 5-7 senior from Dubuque, as a "real hustler" and praises 5-6 Chicago freshman Liz Jones as having "incredible physical potential and the agility of a cat."

Jeannine Hahn, a 5-7 freshman from Arlington Heights, Ill., is described by Greene as a "really powerful outside hitter" and will be assisted by freshmen defensive specialists Jane Bixby, 5-6, of Park Ridge, Ill., and Crystal Henkes, a 5-7 power hitter from Dubuque.

Rounding out the team will be freshmen Holly Borchart and Sue Meinhard, sophomores Amy Pontow and Tracy Taylor, and junior Jean O'Leary.

Greene will implement a multiple offense with three front-row hitters to counter the lack of court and game experience.

"We definitely lack playing experience, but the girls are really receptive and willing to work. The players all have well-developed skills and a good working knowledge of the game, so I'm not starting from zero," she said. "I'm not sure, however, just how long it will take to develop our experience for the games against out-of-state schools."

Greene cites taking first or second at regionals as the team's goal for 1978, but also stresses the importance of working together as players.

"I put a high priority on having the women feel the practice is worthwhile. We practice together three hours every day, but the girls individually put in about 25 hours a week," Greene explained. "A great deal of the workout is mentally as well as physically exhausting and the girls often go home with afternoon practice on their minds all night. We have to grow together and I find that they teach me as well as each other."

Greene expects Wisconsin and Minnesota to provide her team with its real challenges in the Big Ten.

"One of our main goals is to be able to compete well against out-of-state schools as they will furnish our main experience. The Big Ten is a real powerhouse region but the girls are so enthusiastic and are really psyched up about the season," she said.

"I'm also trying out a new approach to practice this fall with a meditation session during the first 10 or 15 minutes of practice. I believe it's time well spent and allows the women to play with greater balance and agility. Fifty per cent of our practices are devoted to ourselves and the other 50 per cent to the encouragement of others."

Greene emphasizes her team's cohesiveness and commends the players as "really special and energetic human beings."

"The team this year is so willing to work. The girls are all individuals but we will form lasting friendships from our togetherness as players," Greene concluded.

The Hawkeyes will challenge Central Missouri Friday and Saturday and will then meet Iowa State Sept. 28 in Iowa City.

On the Line with the DI sports staff

Clip out the list of games and circle the team you predict will win. Circle both teams if you honestly believe the game will end in a tie. For the game designated "tiebreaker," you must circle the winner and you must predict a final score. Then you must clearly print your name and address. Send your entry (one entry per person) through the campus or U.S. Mail to On the Line, The Daily Iowan, or drop it off personally in Room 111 of the Communications Center by Thursday noon.

And now for this week's slate of challenging games.
