SOUTH DAKOTA (UPI) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, who engineered a disguised assassination attempt on her son, is in critical condition.

Gandhi was shot in her car in an apparent bid to assassinate the 29-year-oldYousuf Gandhi. The man was returned to Indira’s policy advisory team, where he was one of 25 that touched every hand.

She survived a serious attempt on her life last week by a truck driver and two others.

But Thursday morning, a bullet riddled her car, killing Yousuf Gandhi, who had been holding a meeting with four of his associates.

The bullet hit Gandhi in the shoulder and chest, causing him to fall from the car.

Gandhi was rushed to a hospital, where doctors said she was in critical condition.

A spokesperson for the Indian government said they were working to identify the perpetrators of the attack.

U.S. big biz in S.A. condemned

In reply to John Adams' letter concerning the U.S.-South Africa relationship, I would like to present a few points.

Adams writes that the U.S. should not continue to support the regime of South African President P. W. Botha.

I disagree with Adams' position. The U.S. has a moral obligation to continue supporting the regime of South Africa, as it is the only way to ensure that the country remains stable.

Furthermore, Adams' argument that the U.S. should impose sanctions on South Africa is not sustainable. Sanctions have only been successful in a few cases, and their effects are often temporary.

Instead, the U.S. should continue to work with South Africa to improve the country's human rights record and economic situation.

I will not run

I have been asked to write about the possibility of running for public office. Unfortunately, I must decline.

While I have always been interested in public service, I believe that there are other people who are better suited for the role.

I am committed to working behind the scenes to support those who are running for office.

Will not run

I have a certain type of resolution to certain types of people, and I must respectfully decline.

The readers of this magazine have a right to expect leadership, and I believe that I am not the type of leader that they need.

I have spent my life working for the common good, but I have come to the conclusion that I am not the type of person who can effectively lead the country.

I have therefore decided not to run for public office.

I hope that my decision will not be taken as a defeat for the cause I hold dear.

Instead, I hope that my decision will inspire others to step forward and take up the challenges of leadership.

I am confident that the right person will emerge to lead our country into the future.
CPS helps cheated consumers show a little muscle

What? Is it possible that the look on your face when you pull your wallet out of your pocket could say, “Whoops, not so fast” or “no cherubic angel is even looking at you?” Hearing those words is common when consumers have been cheated.

Consumer Protection Service (CPS) helps those people take action when they believe they’ve been cheated on.

According to Barry Badler, former director of CPS, the number of complaints tallied by the organization is in the thousands every year.

“We’re not the only ones who believe that we’re in the midst of a consumer, complaints’ war,” Badler said. “We’re in the middle of a war that can happen to anyone.”

Regardless of how careful consumers are today, they still run the risk of not getting what they pay for. In fact, each consumer who has been cheated is a victim of a consumer fraud.

Badler said the actual numbers of complaints filed are impractical to guess.

People frequently ask CPS if they must report complaints with them, according to Badler. They are in the beginning of a process to gather the total number of complaints against certain businesses, which is run by volunteers.

Badler said, “It would be irresponsible to complain if a complaint is not made.”

“People wonder what the reason is to them,” Badler added. “You will be responding to the fact that complaints have been labeled. It could happen in the future.”

"Then we ask ourselves whether there’s a legitimate need for it, and if so, what resources we should take to help people deal with it," Badler continued. "The agencies are working on different kinds of legislation, including consumer fraud, and so I think the answer is yes. We need to take it to the next level, and we can do it if we really want to.

ANMAAN, Jordan (1975) - In a recent interview with the Jordanian Secretary of State, the Egyptian government has been urged to be more flexible in its negotiations with Israel. Jordanian sources say that the Egyptian government should be more willing to compromise in order to achieve a lasting peace in the Middle East.

The Egyptian government has been accused of being too rigid in its stance on the issue of Palestinian refugees. The Jordanian government is concerned that the Egyptian stance could escalate tensions in the region and lead to further conflicts.

The Egyptian government has been urged to take into account the interests of all parties involved in the conflict. The Jordanian government is hoping that a peaceful resolution can be reached in the coming months.
Funeral directors: Rules raise cost, reduce dignity

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's funeral directors oppose a House bill that would require them to post notices of their prices to try $11 billion in medical malpractice cases per year by 1999. The directors say the notices would give customers better price information and minimize lawsuits, according to a congressional proposal along the lines of the National Funeral Directors Association plan. But directors say such a proposal would be too costly and would delay their business decisions.

One of the main concerns expressed about the bill is that it would make it difficult for funeral directors to quickly determine how much they are charging and what services they are offering. Another concern is that the bill would force funeral directors to keep detailed records of their prices, which many say would be too expensive and time-consuming.

In addition, the bill would require funeral directors to provide customers with a written statement of their prices and services. The directors say this would be too burdensome and would put them at a competitive disadvantage with other funeral homes that do not have to provide this information.

A representative for the National Funeral Directors Association said the proposed bill was an improvement over previous proposals that would have required funeral directors to post their prices on a public bulletin board. The group said it was still concerned about the bill's potential impact on funeral directors' businesses and was working to find a compromise with House leaders.

The bill has been introduced by Rep. Joe Pitts, R-Pa., and would require funeral directors to post a notice of their prices at the funeral home, on the funeral home's website, and on a public bulletin board. The bill would also require funeral directors to provide customers with a written statement of their prices and services, and to keep records of their prices and services.

The National Funeral Directors Association has opposed the bill, saying it would be too costly for funeral directors and would delay their business decisions. The group has said it would prefer a proposal that would allow funeral directors to post their prices on a public bulletin board, rather than requiring them to provide customers with a written statement of their prices and services.

The bill has been endorsed by the National Funeral Directors Association, the Funeral Directors Association of America, and the Funeral Service Association of America. The groups say the bill would provide customers with better price information and minimize lawsuits, while still allowing funeral directors to make business decisions quickly.

The tax revolt that started in California spread to other states this week, with Gov. Edward G. Brown of Massachusetts and Gov. George Deukmejian of New Jersey being among those bordering on the idea of voting it down. In New York, the state Senate passed a tax cut of $2 billion, which must now be approved by the Assembly.

Brown, who was moms by his own effort of a non-partisan tax revolt, said that he planned to work with his colleagues in the Legislature to ensure that the tax cut is implemented. He also promised to continue his efforts to reduce the state's reliance on sales tax revenue.

Criticism of Guard, Ray hints

By United Press International

The controversy that has buffeted the Iowa National Guard for the past several weeks has continued to escalate, with members of the Guard expressing frustration over the lack of support from the state's leaders.

Guard members, who have been deployed for operations in Iraq and Afghanistan, have been critical of the Guard's leadership, which they believe has failed to provide adequate support and resources.

"We're getting nowhere," said one member of the Guard. "We've been asked to do our part and now we're being asked to do more. It's a recipe for disaster."}

Books that battle sexism

By United Press International

DES MOINES (UPI) -- Some Iowa textbooks have been criticized for their treatment of gender and social issues.

"Some Iowa textbooks," said Iowa State Auditor Tom Miller, "are derogatory and sexist. They are not suitable for use in our schools.

"We need to do better," said Iowa Sen. Jane Duff, who has introduced a bill to ban the sale of such textbooks. "We need to make sure that our textbooks reflect the values of our society.

"I am grateful to those who have brought this issue to our attention," said Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad. "We will work to ensure that our textbooks are inclusive and respectful of all students."

Leach action criticized by Myers

Cedar Rapids (Iowa) — Democratic candidate for Congress Dick Myers had suddenly criticized Rep. James Leach, Iowa's long-time member of the House, during an attempt to raise money for his campaign — and for raising the national interest.

"One of those votes was on balancing the federal budget, " Myers said. "So he was trying to service his district, but one vote obviously didn’t mean as much to him as the other." Myers said that he was looking for the disservice that was not done to the public.

He accused Myers of being a "disease" to the people of Iowa, and that he was "disease" to the people of the country.

"We need a new leader, " Myers said. "But we can’t afford to lose Leach."

The volleyball team wasn't really in the mood for cheers or applause. They had just blown a lead Tuesday night and lost to Georgia in the first round of the NCAA Women's Volleyball Championship in the McGowan Arena on the campus of the University of Pittsburgh. The Buccaneers won 3-1, 25-23, 25-15, 25-21.

AUGUSTA, Maine (UPI) - The Philadelphia Flyers on Friday traded behind-the-scenes with the Atlanta Hawks over the future of Bobby Dandridge who left camp last week.

The Bullets meet the Houston Rockets tonight in the last of an 18-game series.

In Iowa's opening meet of the season, the players' pension fund.

For various reasons, there are not expenses paid for their meals or their own transportation. They have to rely on a government grant for their own services and can only work an hour a day for the pay they get.

In Georgia's opening meet of the season, the players' pension fund.

The team's game plan will be to use their home court advantage and try to outscore the U.S. in the first 10 minutes of the game. The team will focus on improving their defense and trying to put in more points than their opponent.

Team's cry 'ou! in NHLCommentary

In the United States, the federal government has taken steps to address the problem settled.

Bobby Dandridge's stockbroker, Edgar Friel, said, "I think the NBA has a legitimate point of view. I think they are trying to make the game a safer one." But he added, "I think the real problem is that the players are trying to make too much money and not enough time is being spent on the court." He also said that the players are not taking the game seriously enough.
