Worried Rhodesian guerrillas have been mounting a series of attacks on white farmers in Southern Rhodesia. The guerrillas, who have been operating in the area for several weeks, have targeted farms in the region of Bulawayo and Matopos, where they have been known to operate with increased frequency.

The attacks have included raids on farms, looting of crops, and the burning of homes. The guerrillas have also been known to steal livestock and machinery from the farms, causing significant economic damage to the farmers. The attacks have caused widespread fear and anxiety among the local population.

The guerrillas have been operating in the region using a network of safe houses and hideouts, which they have established in the surrounding mountains. They have been known to use a variety of tactics, including ambushes, sniper fire, and booby traps, to disrupt the operations of the security forces.

The government has responded to the attacks with a strong show of force, deploying additional soldiers and police to the area. However, the guerrillas have been able to evade capture and continue their attacks with relative impunity.

The situation in the region has become increasingly tense, with farmers and their families living in constant fear of attack. The government has appealed to the guerrillas to cease their activities and return to peaceful negotiations, but so far, the protests have shown no signs of abating.

N. Yemen army crushes 'abortive coup attempt'

The Yemeni government announced on Friday that it had crushed "an abortive coup" involving 300 men and 50 vehicles, including some tanks, which attempted to take over the presidential palace in the capital, Sana'a.

Yemeni President Ali Abdallah Saleh said in a statement that the coup attempt was "just another chapter in the long history of failed attempts by the Saudi and the Arab coalition to overthrow the Yemeni regime and occupy our country.

Saleh thanked the Arab states for their support and vowed to continue with his policies of unity and resistance against external threats.

EARN OVER $650 A MONTH RIGHT THROUGH YOUR SENIOR YEAR.

If you're a junior or a senior majoring in math, physics or engineering, the Navy has a program you should know about, it's called the Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate-Collegiate Program (NUPOC-C or short) and if you qualify, you can earn as much as $860 a month right through your senior year. Then after 16 weeks of Officer Candidate School, you'll receive an additional year of advanced technical education. This would cost you thousands in a civilian school, but in the Navy, we pay you. And at the end of the year of training, you'll receive a $3,000 cash bonus.

It isn't easy. There are fewer than 400 openings and only one of every six applicants will be selected. But if you make it, you'll have qualified for an elite engineering training program. With unequalled hands-on responsibility, a $24,000 salary in four years, and gilt-edged qualifications for jobs in private industry should you decide to leave the Navy (but we don't think you'll want to.)

Ask your placement officer to set up an interview with a Navy representative called "a career counselor." Counselor.

Then, you'll receive your order, and you'll report for duty, following your last 30 days of school. After a brief, you'll report for duty, following your last 30 days of school. After a brief, you'll report for duty.
Aerosols get canned: There's still plenty to sweat about

The backlash of post-World War II packaging has been controversial. Aerosols, originally designed to substitute for expensive canning methods, were a triumph of technology. When they ran low, which they did predictably, they could be discarded. The innovation turned out not to be so turn. Pursuing the convenience principle, it became apparent that some substances discovered that it was better to have them in hand than to be without them. Therefore, aerosols, pop-dispensable cans, could be used for anything from cosmetics to colds medicine, from light cleaning to fire extinguishers. Aerosol cans are worth looking into, but there are drawbacks to this useful medium.

Aerosol cans always had their follicies of buying products they might need in the future. They were not designed for a lifetime of convenience, but rather for a lifetime of practicality. When they were used, they were generally discarded. This was because of the materials and energy wasted in convenience packaging. And as inflation increased, the price of a can of spray out of reach and, in many cases, consumers began to recognize the folly of buying products they had no intention of using. The aerosol can is on its way out.

Aerosol canfail to conform to the country's environmental standards. In April, the Environmental Protection Agency proposed strict limits on the concentrations of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) in aerosol propellants. The proposal, which would require a phase-out of the chemicals by 1980, has been criticized by many scientists as being too lenient. However, the proposal has been welcomed by those who believe that the CFCs are responsible for depleting the earth's ozone layer, which filters out damaging ultraviolet radiation.

The proposal has been met with mixed reactions. Some scientists have applauded the move, citing the potential for reducing the damage to the ozone layer. Others have criticized the proposal, arguing that it is too restrictive and would lead to higher costs for consumers. Despite these concerns, the proposal has been signed into law and is expected to take effect in the near future.

The proposal is one of many recent initiatives to address the issue of ozone depletion. In 1990, the United Nations Environment Program (UNEP) established the Montreal Protocol, which called for a phase-out of CFCs and similar substances. The protocol was signed by 175 countries and has been hailed as a significant step in the battle against ozone depletion.

The proposal also has implications for the electronics industry, which uses CFCs in its manufacturing processes. The industry has been working to develop alternative technologies, and some companies have already reduced their use of CFCs. However, the transition to alternative technologies is expected to be slow and costly, and it may take several years before the industry can fully phase out CFCs.

In conclusion, while the proposal is a step in the right direction, it is important to remember that the battle against ozone depletion is ongoing. More work needs to be done to reduce our dependence on CFCs and other ozone-depleting substances. It is also important to support research into alternative technologies and to encourage the adoption of these technologies by industry. Only through collective action can we hope to protect the ozone layer and the health of our planet.

A guide for the credit card user

Credit cards have become popular because they offer the user a number of advantages. They enable the consumer to avoid carrying cash or writing checks, and they can be used for paying for goods and services anywhere they are accepted. Credit cards can also be used to obtain cash for personal needs, and they can be used to obtain cash advances at any time, without going through the inconvenience of obtaining a loan.

However, credit cards can also be a source of trouble if not used properly. Many people use them irresponsibly, and this can lead to serious financial problems. It is important to understand how credit cards work, and to use them in a responsible manner. Credit cards can be a valuable tool if used properly, but they can also be a dangerous weapon if used improperly.

Congress passes tax cut bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In a big debate Tuesday night, 293 voting representatives, 147 voting senators and four absentees approved a $29.3 billion tax cut bill. It was the end of a long, acrimonious battle between Congress and President Carter.

The House and Senate approved the bill by large margins, 293 to 147, as Carter signed it into law. The measure was the third Congress has considered this year to lower taxes on individuals and businesses.

The bill would cut 1981 and 1982 personal income tax payments by $29.3 billion and businesses taxes by $5.8 billion. The cuts would be phased in during the next three years.

But House Democrats were unhappy with the bill, charging that it was a giveaway to the rich. The National Association of American Teachers accused the president of being "anti-education." The American Federation of Teachers said the measure was an "anti-union" bill.

The bill would cut personal income taxes by $24.5 billion in 1981 and $4.8 billion in 1982. The business tax cut would be $5.8 billion over three years.

The bill would reduce the top income tax rate from 70 percent to 50 percent, but only for incomes over $60,000. The standard deduction would be increased from $1,000 to $6,000.

The bill would also provide a $1,000 credit for individuals who pay agriculture and property taxes, a $2,000 credit for married couples and a $1,000 credit for single taxpayers.

The bill would also provide for a $1,000 business tax credit for small businesses and a $2,000 credit for individuals who purchase new homes.

The bill would increase the exemption for children and the elderly to $6,000 per child and $3,000 per elderly person.

Carter envisioned the tax cut as a way to stimulate economic growth and create jobs. But critics charged that the bill would benefit only the wealthy and would do little to help the poor.

Carter signed the bill into law Tuesday night, saying it was a "major step forward in the fight against inflation." He added that the bill would "help to reduce the federal budget deficit and aid the recovery of the economy."

By United Press International

The second half has been split between two teams. The Rams have been split on offense, with two different quarterbacks at the helm. The Vikings have been split on defense, with two different players at the helm.

The Rams, trailing 14-3 at halftime, scored three consecutive touchdowns in the second half. They took the lead with a 1-yard touchdown run by quarterback John David Crow in the third quarter. Crow then led the Rams on a 75-yard drive, capped by a 15-yard touchdown pass to tight end Charlie Waters in the fourth quarter. The Rams added a field goal in the final 12 minutes to secure the victory.

The Vikings, on the other hand, struggled offensively in the second half. They managed just one touchdown, a 3-yard run by running back Alvin Love in the third quarter.

Hawkeyes' second half explosion falls short, 22-20

By JON MYERS

MINNEAPOLIS — Before considering the football team's defensive performance against Minnesota Saturday afternoon at TCF Bank Stadium, the question was whether the Gophers would take advantage of their first quarter points or whether the Hawkeyes would surge past them in the second half.

At halftime there was a 7-7 tie. By the time the second quarter ended, the score was 14-10. The Hawkeyes had the momentum.

"The score at halftime was 7-7," said Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz. "Our defense was playing pretty well in the first half. We had done a couple things on defense that we weren't doing a couple things on offense. The defense had done a good job of taking the opening drive away from Minnesota. I felt like we had a chance to win the game in the first half."

But the Hawkeyes were unable to bring the score within a touchdown in the second half.

"I think it was a matter of execution. They played better than we did in the second half," Ferentz said. "They had a good defensive game.
They were opportunistic and they made some critical plays at the end."

The Hawkeyes' second half explosion fell short of expectations.

"We had four or five opportunities to score," Ferentz said. "But we never scored.

The first touchdown of the game came from Minnesota in the first quarter. The Hawkeyes failed to score on their first two possessions.

"I think we had a couple opportunities in the first quarter. We drove down and put together some good drives in the first quarter. But we never got over the hump," Ferentz said.

The Hawkeyes' lone score in the second half came on a 27-yard field goal by coy Kooistra.
