Profits set record

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Profits at the Grateful Dead soared in the first three months of President Carter's administration over the same period a year earlier, according to Senate Finance Committee Chairman Phil Wicker.

"It is very difficult to get at labor unions and see that they are not just pay publishers without profits that high," Wicker said.

"In the first year of the administration's budget plan, the House is looking at a balanced budget and a limit on federal spending," Wicker said.

Among those supporting the resolution were Republicans Jerry Youngdahl of Montana, House GOP leader John Shumate of Tennessee, and Rep. Newt Gingrich of Georgia.

The resolution, which backed the administration's budget plan, was also supported by Rep. Bill Young of Florida, who said it should include a "safety valve" allowing for discretionary spending if the nation's fiscal situation warranted it.

Congress on the tube

Turn on, tune in, come to order

The time is approaching when you can see your very own congressman broadcast from his district - which is you - in your own living room. Not only will you get to see your own, but you will also have chance to see each congressional race in TV's most searching spotlight.

The first broadcast this past Monday was, by all accounts, a little lacking - there was none of the expected perfunctory barrage of "Drummon's Proposals to the Public", or "Hrabler's Plan for Economic Growth". The key vote, indeed, was the one to see how many congressmen bothered to show up - it was Monday, after all. But if the viewers were left feeling something more exciting than the traditional9am debate, they may, for one, have been surprised that there were even three broadcasted agencies.

For one thing, the story isn't over. We, the viewers, would have nothing more exciting than the combined TV-on-the-tube time. It often happens that the congressional agencies are up there, too, putting on a show. And if we're left wondering how much of this we can actually use, remember this:

Tax group's plan for indexing

By the Editor

We respectfully ask the Iowa General Assembly to adopt the concept of indexing personal income tax brackets to prevent the higher taxes caused by inflation. This move is made in an effort to floor the board of directors of Iowan for Tax Reform to educate you in the mechanics of making this letter to each state senator and representative.

We thank the several legislators who have introduced similar bills. We are pleased by the response to these bills, which have been introduced in both houses of the legislature.

Commentary

Turning to the issue of inflation, we note that the Joint Committee on Taxation, recently released a report on the effects of inflation on the tax system. The report indicates that inflation has increased the tax burden on individuals and businesses, and that the progressive tax system has been particularly affected.

The report suggests that indexing personal income tax brackets would help to alleviate some of the problems caused by inflation. However, it also notes that this approach would have certain drawbacks, such as the need for tax reductions in order to maintain a balanced budget.

We believe that indexing tax brackets is a necessary step in addressing the issue of inflation. While it may not be the perfect solution, it is one that can help to mitigate the negative effects of inflation on our tax system.

In conclusion, we urge the Iowa General Assembly to consider indexing personal income tax brackets as a way to address the issue of inflation. While there may be concerns about the potential drawbacks, we believe that the benefits outweigh the costs and that this approach is a necessary step in maintaining a just and fair tax system.
Immunity holds in later criminal trial, says Court

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court said Tuesday it would not allow a state to hold a criminal trial until it properly indexed the name of an individual who had been arrested, but who had not yet been charged. The court said such a practice was unconstitutional because it would prevent the defendant from obtaining timely and accurate information about the charges against him.

The court's decision in the case of United States v. Thompson, 435 U.S. 355, was a major victory for civil libertarians and others seeking to protect the rights of suspects in police custody. The court held that, under the Fourth Amendment, the police must properly index the name of an individual who has been arrested, but who has not yet been charged, before allowing the individual to be subjected to further police questioning.

"The indexed name is the key to unlocking the police's access to a suspect's personal information," Justice William J. Brennan Jr. wrote for the court. "Without this name, the police would be able to conduct a warrantless search of the suspect's person, thus violating the Fourth Amendment's prohibition against unreasonable searches and seizures."

The case involved a man named Thompson, who was arrested on suspicion of committing a crime. The police failed to properly index his name before questioning him. As a result, the court held, the police were unable to conduct a warrantless search of Thompson's person, and therefore violated his Fourth Amendment rights.

The court's decision was widely hailed as a major victory for civil libertarians, who had long argued that the police must properly index the name of an individual who has been arrested, but who has not yet been charged, before allowing the individual to be subjected to further police questioning. The decision was also seen as a significant victory for the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), which had represented Thompson in the case.

"This is a tremendous victory for the rights of suspects in police custody," Said ACLU attorney Jane O. Hall. "We have long argued that the police must properly index the name of an individual who has been arrested, but who has not yet been charged, before allowing the individual to be subjected to further police questioning. Today's decision is a major step forward in this fight for justice."
Oedipus: neoclassical Stravinsky

The work is intended to be staged as a theater piece — but not too theatrically, lest it become too emotionally expressive, violating Stravinsky's belief in music's non-expressive nature.

In 1912, shortly before leaving Russia to become a French subject, Stravinsky composed his first major work for the theater, Oedipus Rex. This work is a powerful expression of Stravinsky's classical ideals, and it presents a challenge to any theater director who is interested in contemporary performance practices.

The piece is based on the Greek myth of Oedipus, and it is a tragic story of a king who unknowingly杀死了他的父亲，娶了他的母亲，并且最终被赶出王宫。Stravinsky's music is highly complex, with a strong emphasis on rhythm and counterpoint. The piece is also known for its innovative use of different instruments, including a large choir and a solo singer.

In the performance as it was staged, the music and the staging were closely synchronized. The director used physical movement, lighting, and costume design to enhance the musical experience. The chorus was divided into two groups, with each group representing different elements of the Greek myth.

The performance featured a full orchestra, with a conductor at the center of the stage. The performers were dressed in period costumes, and the set was designed to look like a Greek temple. The performance was highly acclaimed, and it is considered one of Stravinsky's greatest works for the theater.
South Africa scandal taps up for sale

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (UPI) - A former government official=""S next door"" has been accused of receiving a bribe from a company that had dealings with the South African government.

The accused, 38-year-old James Van der Meulen, was arrested on Monday and faces charges of corruption and fraud.

Van der Meulen is accused of accepting a bribe from the company, which is owned by a wealthy businesswoman who is a friend of the South African president.

The company in question is accused of paying a bribe to secure a government contract to supply equipment to the South African military.

The bribe is said to be worth millions of dollars and was paid using so-called "rubber money," a form of currency that is supposed to be untraceable.

Van der Meulen is said to have used the money to pay for a luxury yacht and a private jet.

The police investigation into the case has already led to the arrest of several other people, including one who is said to have been involved in the supply of weapons to the South African military.

The case is expected to be a major test of the new anti-corruption laws that were introduced by the government last year.

The investigation has also led to the discovery of a large number of unexplained cash transactions, which are believed to be linked to the bribe.

The government is said to be determined to crack down on corruption and to ensure that the country's resources are used for the benefit of the people rather than for the benefit of a few wealthy individuals.
The decision is based on her determination to return to her alma mater, the University of Iowa, after a successful career as a head coach.

The University of Iowa announced on Tuesday that she will resign from her position as the women's basketball coach. She has been in charge of the team for the past 13 years, leading them to numerous championships and setting records for success.

By MIKE MARSH

The Big Ten Network has confirmed that women's basketball coach Teresa Carrol will resign from her position at Iowa. The announcement comes just three days after Carrol's team was defeated in the NCAA tournament.

Carrol, who has been the head coach of the Iowa Hawkeyes women's basketball team since 1994, will remain with the program as an assistant coach, according to the university.

The Hawkeyes finished the season with a 19-13 record, including a 6-12 mark in the Big Ten Conference. Carrol's 600th career win came earlier this season against Ohio State.

Carrol has been at Iowa since 1994, leading the program to 282 wins and two NCAA tournament appearances. The Hawkeyes won the Big Ten Tournament in 2019 under her guidance.

A native of Westtop, Carrol earned her undergraduate degree at the University of Illinois before coming to Iowa, where she obtained a master's degree. She has been involved in coaching at Iowa since 1988, when she became assistant coach for the men's basketball team. She became Iowa's women's basketball coach in 1994.

In 2001, Carrol was named the women's basketball coach at Iowa, succeeding her former assistant coach, C. Vivian Stringer, who had been named head coach at Rutgers University.

Carrol's program has had great success under her leadership, winning the Big Ten Conference title in 2009 and 2019, and reaching the NCAA tournament five times.

The Hawkeyes' record during Carrol's time as head coach is 250-167, with six Big Ten Tournament championships. Carrol also coached for two years at Illinois before returning to Iowa.

Carrol has been a strong advocate for women in sports, serving as a member of the NCAA Women's Basketball Coaches Association and the Women's Basketball Coaches Association of America.

Carrol's departure from Iowa leaves a void that the university will need to fill quickly. The search for her replacement will begin immediately, according to the university.

Carrol has been a respected figure in women's college basketball, and her departure will be felt throughout the sport.

Carrol's legacy at Iowa will continue to be remembered for years to come, and her contributions to the program will not be soon forgotten.

The Hawkeyes will look to build on their success under Carrol's guidance, and the university will work hard to find a new coach who can continue the tradition of excellence.

The university has made it clear that they are committed to finding the right person to lead the women's basketball program, and they will not settle for anything less than the best.

Carrol's departure is a loss for the Hawkeyes, but it is also an opportunity for the program to move forward and achieve even greater success in the future.

The university and the Hawkeyes will honor Carrol's contributions to the program and wish her the best in her future endeavors.

The Hawkeyes will continue to be a force to be reckoned with under the leadership of their new head coach, and they will be ready to compete at the highest level of women's college basketball.
