North Side lights called too costly

SHELTER'S directors say "no" to merger

Bobby Gummert

A proposed street-lighting project for the city's North Side will not be a cost-effective remedy for reducing crimes in that area, according to the city's police chief, Donald Haldeman.

Under the city's citizen's police board, which Haldeman heads, the board plans to request that the city install 44 lights on North Side streets. The project, which is expected to cost about $80,000, would be installed as part of a larger street-lighting plan.

Haldeman said the project would not be a cost-effective remedy because the area is already well-lit.

The North Side is one of the city's most crime-ridden areas, with a high rate of muggings and other violent crimes.

"This is not a cost-effective remedy," Haldeman said. "We already have a lot of street lights in the area, and the area is already well-lit."

Haldeman said the city should consider other options for reducing crime, such as increasing police patrols and improving lighting in other areas of the city.

The city's police department has a new seven-year plan that calls for increasing the number of police officers and improving community relations.

"We need to focus on other options," Haldeman said. "We can't keep spending money on street lights when there are other, more effective options for reducing crime."

Tito's condition 'still grave' 31ST AUG - Yugoslavia, (AP) - President Josip Broz Tito's condition was 'still grave' today, but officials said he was not in immediate danger of dying.

The latest medical bulletin, exactly two weeks after the first report of the serious illness in Tito's recovery from a heart attack last month, said the 70-year-old leader was on treatment for 'critical heart failure.' The bulletin did not give details of Tito's condition, but said he was 'calm, relaxed' and undergoing a special diet.

It was the first time medical officials had given a clear indication of Tito's condition since two weeks ago, when he was reported to be in a critical condition.

A high-ranking Yugoslav government official, who asked not to be identified, said Tito's condition was 'still grave' Sunday but he was 'calm, relaxed' and undergoing a special diet.

Supervisors should put the rug back

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors on Feb. 16 completely pulled the rug out from under the feet of the Adams and Alternatives to Violence of Boone County program.

Meeting with the supervisors on Tuesday, the Alternatives to Violence of Boone County program submitted its 2017 budget, which had been estimated at $47,755. However, the supervisors voted 4-1 not to fund AAV, an action that was in complete contradiction to everything that program advocates for and had been working so hard to achieve.

The vast majority of the discussion was that the board had vetoed a single component of the school violence program and that.

Advocates were expecting any action from the supervisors; at an earlier meeting the AAV supervisors had asked the supervisors about the feasibility of using mental health funds for the program. AAV supervisors had scheduled a meeting with the supervisors on Monday, Feb. 20 — the day after the county action — to inform the supervisors that the Mental Health Board was supportive of using $8,000 from the mental health AAVA funds found out about the supervisors’ action late Tuesday when the Advertiser expressed a desire to speak with AAV President Roseanne Haldeman to inform her of the supervisors’ decision.

After the shoot had subsided, AAVA proponents began to plan strategies to try to reestablish the program in its previous position. The first issue that had been settled was that the supervisors — after hearing from one client at their formal Thursday meeting — changed their Feb. 10 decision and voted 6 to 1 to fund the school program, provided that the program combination of services and operations with one of the crisis centers.

Candidates scorn Bush action; Reagan staff claims debate win

WINDSOR, N.H. (UPI) — The rewrite of the draft proposal by President Ronald Reagan's top aides yesterday, plus the introduction of a new Republican state senator as a candidate for the U.S. Senate, could help offset the damage done by the Republican National Committee. The committee's chairman, Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., said yesterday that the proposals would be dropped and a new one presented.

The White House said the new draft would be presented to the Senate today, and that the president would be present when it is introduced. The House Rules Committee has approved the measure, and it is expected to be considered by the full House later today.

The new draft would include provisions for the sale of all federal land, including public lands, to private companies. It would also allow the government to sell off all federal property, including national parks and forests, to private interests.

Baker said that it was the idea to "have a look at this with your eyes closed," and that he was "not about to publicly allow those four to go with Reagan one on one."
