Brown: Conflicts prompted firing

By LEAH STERN

Former City Manager Ron Charles, who was fired by the city’s governing body Tuesday, has said he has not been told why he was fired.

In a brief telephone interview, Charles said the city had not provided him with any notice of his termination.

"I don’t know what happened," he said. "I was fired, but I don’t know why.

"I was informed that I had been fired at the meeting, but I was not provided with any explanation.

"I understand that the decision was made by the city council, but I don’t know the specifics of the situation.

"I will continue to work through the process and cooperate with the city’s leadership as necessary.

"I am disappointed and surprised by this development, and I will seek to understand the reasons for my termination.

"At this time, I can say only that I will continue to work diligently and professionally for the city.

"I will not comment further on this matter at this time."

New York transit strike negotiations collapse

Despite three days of talks, union and city officials said yesterday that they had not made progress toward resolving the four-month-old strike, which had already forced Mayor Koch to order municipal workers back to their jobs.

The Metropolitan Transportation Authority and the transit workers' union, the Amalgamated Transit Union, have been negotiating since November to end the strike, which had already forced Mayor Koch to order municipal workers back to their jobs.

Despite Koch's efforts to keep the talks going, the two sides have been unable to agree on a contract that would allow train service to resume. The strike has already caused massive disruptions to the city's transportation system, with many residents forced to rely on buses and trucks for transportation.

The strike began in November, with the union demanding better wages and working conditions, while the city was looking to cut costs and reduce the deficit.

The talks have been marked by tension and frustration, with both sides accusing the other of not making enough concessions. Koch has called the strike a "disaster" for the city and has threatened to order the workers back to their jobs if a deal cannot be reached.

Letters on census are diversified

The To the editor:

Renaissance Center, 2018, Detroit, Michigan

Dear Editor:

I am a resident of Renaissance Village, a senior housing community in Detroit, Michigan. I am writing to express my concern about the upcoming 2020 Census and its impact on our community.

The census is a critical tool for understanding the demographic and economic needs of our community. It helps to ensure that we receive the federal funding and resources we need to support our residents. However, I have heard concerns from my neighbors about the potential for voter suppression and data misuse.

I urge everyone in our community to participate in the census and to encourage their family and friends to do the same. We must ensure that our voices are heard and that our community is properly represented.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]
Abdul Farahkan blamed people of knowledge.

But he stressed that knowledge must be used properly. Knowledge acquired at institutions such as the CIA could help blacks, but only if they are taught how to use it properly. "You're dealing with a brute that doesn't understand your political correctness," he said. "You have to be strong enough to make your dreams a reality or you have to own to making it real yourself."

spare and time constraints, Helen Neil-Brown, who is a third-year student from her federally funded reading program at Iowa City Catholic Grade School, Crohn's dietitian, said the school's principal was always available to address any questions or concerns regarding the school's nutrition prevention and wellness programs.

Brown said, "I know that Helen Neil-Brown has been incredibly busy with her studies and other commitments, but she always made time for us. She was a great role model for all of us and we are grateful for her dedication to our school community."
Democrats seek to show conservative fund raising

The Internal Revenue Service, in a public-relations drive, has decided that contributions to organizations running negative campaigns—those concerned with defaming someone rather than promoting a candidate—are not deductible.

But the Internal Revenue Service also acknowledges it is raising negative campaign against political opponents. But it may be that the benefits for conservative causes and contributions would not be sufficient to decide which donations were or were not deductible.

Dissent to letters are issued for individual cases and are not view of as legal precedent. But Democratic lawyers said the Internal Revenue Service, in a precedent, bas decided that individual cases are not deductible.

The Conservation of America's Natural Resources is the chairman of the Democratic National Committee and told me that the internal revenue service's policy is to throw out all the cases of those imprisoned and that is before the intelligence.

They said that the internal revenue service considered the internal revenue service's policy is to throw out all the cases of those imprisoned and that is before the intelligence.

Rennie, Hamilton duel in 'Power'

By WYSTON BARTLEY Entertainment Editor

Imagine George (Dene at First) and Hamilton (Eustis at Third) go over their heads a bit and the film gets out of the action. Someone must have read the lines with a bit of a theoretical approach to the plot and ten and a half hours of plot and dialogue are packed into a single hour and a half. The film is not a particularly compelling one. The result is a mess of plot and dialogue and a confusing mixture of action and suspense.

Hobbled Hawk tracksters take on pesky Redbirds

By BYRON MILLER

Women's coach Chuck Jerry Manip did not want to believe it, and he certainly didn't want to say it during a recent interview with the students. But with the women's basketball team now sitting at the bottom of the Big Ten standings, there was little hope that the team would be able to continue its winning streak. The team had been struggling with injuries and a lack of depth, and it seemed like the end was near. The students showed their support by attending the games, but the team was struggling to keep up with the rest of the conference.

Steve Miller, the head coach of the women's basketball team, said that the team was working hard to improve. "We're not at the level we were at the beginning of the season," he said. "But we're working hard to get better." The team had a tough schedule ahead, with games against some of the top teams in the conference. The students were looking forward to seeing how the team would perform in these games.

Steve Miller was quick to point out that the team was not giving up hope. "We're not going to quit," he said. "We're going to keep working hard and see what we can do." The students were inspired by this attitude and were confident that the team would be able to turn things around. They were excited to see how the team would perform in the upcoming games.

Gervin miffed at refs

"I'm not happy with the refs," said Gervin. "They made some bad calls against us. I thought we played well, but we just didn't get the breaks." The team had been struggling with injuries and a lack of depth, and it seemed like the end was near. The students showed their support by attending the games, but the team was struggling to keep up with the rest of the conference.

Virginia, Celts officials to meet on Sampson case

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (UPI) — Virginia Coach Jerry Stackhouse said he would meet with representatives of the Boston Celtics next week in hopes of reaching an agreement with the NBA. Stackhouse said he was hoping to resolve the issue of Sampson's eligibility before the season begins.

"We're gonna try to get it resolved," Stackhouse said. "We've been working with the league for a long time, and we're hoping we can get to an agreement that's good for everyone." The issue has been brewing for several weeks, with the Celtics and the NCAA both claiming to have legitimate reasons to prevent Sampson from playing.

Stackhouse said he would be willing to meet with the Celtics to try to work out a solution. "We're willing to sit down and talk," he said. "We want to make sure that this issue is resolved before the season begins." The Celtics have been demanding that Sampson sit out for a year before he is allowed to play, while the NCAA has been insisting that he be allowed to play immediately.

Stackhouse said he was hopeful that a solution could be reached. "We're optimistic that we can work something out," he said. "We've been working with the league for a long time, and we think we can get to an agreement that's good for everyone." The issue has been a hot topic in college basketball, with fans and media alike wondering how it will play out. The season begins in just a few weeks, and everyone is hoping for a resolution as soon as possible.
Banks bemoans Iowa losses; promises changes in line-up

By DOUG BEAN

Banks said Tuesday that his team's loss to Iowa in the second round of the NCAA Tournament was a "tremendous letdown."

"I'm not sure how many times I've played Iowa, but it was quite different with him because Iowa State is a part of the Big 12," Banks said. "We had 12 points on him in the game, and he had 22 for us.

"You can't let that happen, and you can't let that happen again."

Banks said he's been working on getting his team ready for the tournament, but he's not sure what will happen in the next game.

"The only thing we can do is try to get ready for the next game," Banks said. "We'll see what happens."
