Appeal of Eaton hit by fire union

By ROD BOSHART
Staff Writer

A majority of Iowa City firefighters oppose the City Council's decision to appeal the Linda Eaton sex discrimination case, the president of the Iowa City firefighters union said Sunday.

And prolonging the case and keeping it in the public eye "is certainly not going to ease the tension in the Fire Department," firefighters union President Nathan Hopkins said.

"Ultimately, they will not win," Hopkins said of the council's 4-3 decision last Tuesday to appeal the Iowa Civil Rights Commission ruling. On March 20, the commission found the city guilty of sex discrimination against Eaton in denying her request to nurse her son at the fire station.

"They may win one step along the way, but, if it goes to the Iowa Supreme Court, they'll lose," Hopkins said.

CALLING THE appeal a "face-saving measure," Hopkins said, "I don't think they're exercising good judgment. The city is on the wrong side of this civil rights issue and, if you're on the wrong side of a civil rights issue, you won't win in this day and age."

Hopkins also said that the firefighters union welcomes an investigation by the state Division of Criminal Investigation "or some other neutral third party" into allegations of recent threats against Eaton within the department, but he said it opposes that investigation being undertaken by the city's Police Department.

DCI Director Gerald Shanahan ruled out an investigation by his agency into allegations made last week by Eaton's attorney, Clara Oleson, that Eaton's life is in danger following incidents including the slitting of her firefighting gloves and physical abuse.

City Manager Neal Berlin requested an immediate DCI investigation of Oleson's allegations "to determine the validity of the charges, whether any criminal action has been undertaken and to attempt to identify the perpetrators."

AFTER A preliminary investigation by DCI Cedar Rapids supervisor Tim McDonald Thursday, Shanahan said, "With the cases we have going, we thought it was something the Iowa City police force was capable of handling. I don't know why it was even referred to us." He said the investigation could lead to "a vandalism charge, at best."

Shanahan said the glove slitting incident "is a serious thing" that he compared to putting blanks in a police officer's gun, but he said the law only covers the act and not the consequences that may result.

Iowa City Police Chief Harvey Miller has indicated that he will await official notification from the DCI before launching an investigation.

In a memorandum to the council Friday, Berlin said a written statement will be given to each Fire Department member "indicating that the perpetrators of such incidents will be subject to

Yugoslavia's Tito dies at 87

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (UPI) — President Josip Broz Tito, the last of the great World War II leaders and the founder of modern Yugoslavia, died Sunday — three days before his 88th birthday, his doctors announced.

The "tough old marshal," as he was known to his 22 million countrymen, succumbed to death four months and one day after first falling ill and being hospitalized at the Ljubljana Medical Center.

Doctors listed the cause of death as "post-operative complications," including heart, liver and kidney failure that set in after the amputation of his left leg.

Moments later, the collective leadership that had already taken over from him confirmed the doctors' bulletin, proclaiming to the nation the words it had expected to hear some many times during Tito's long, agonizing illness: "Comrade Tito is dead."

"THE CENTRAL committee of the Communist party of Yugoslavia and the presidium of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia announce tonight the following proclamation," an announcement on the national news agency Tanjug said.

"To the working class, to the working people and citizens, to the peoples and nationalities of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia — Comrade Tito is dead."

Tanjug said Tito died at 3:05 p.m. — 9:05 a.m. Iowa time — in the clinical center hospital in the northwest city of Ljubljana, where he had been hospitalized for a variety of serious medical complications for the past 113 days.

It gave no reason for the delay in the announcement, which came several hours after his death.

"On May 4, 1980, at 1505 hours in Ljubljana, the great heart of the president of our Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia ceased to beat," the announcement said.

ONLY TWO HOURS earlier, doctors reported that Tito had lapsed into "critical condition" for the second time in his illness.

But the official time of death cited by Tanjug meant that Tito was already dead before the medical bulletin listing his condition as critical was released. Tito created in post-war Yugoslavia a relatively liberal form of communism independent of Moscow, that boasted it was "West of East and East of West."

Respected even by his detractors, Tito's international standing was enhanced by his role in helping to found and lead the 80-member non-aligned movement.

Last year he made a dramatic appearance at the non-aligned summit in Havana to defend his original principles against those, like Fidel Castro, who wished to tilt the movement toward the Soviet bloc.

He named no successor, and Yugoslavia will be ruled by the collective leadership Tito himself devised in 1971.

Voices of Soul files bias complaint

By WENDY BARR
Staff Writer

The Voices of Soul and the Afro-American Graduate Student Organization Friday filed a discrimination complaint with the UI Human Rights Committee against the Student Senate Budgeting and Auditing Committee.

Reading a prepared statement, spokesman David Neely said the complaint was filed because of the "denial of adequate funds to operate effectively, the refusal to compromise and subsequent budget cuts" made by the budgeting committee.

In its proposals to the senate, the budgeting committee recommended that the Voices of Soul be allocated $1,405. The group had requested $8,950.

Speaking for the Voices of Soul at an April 24 meeting in which senators informally considered the budget plan, Neely charged that groups had received "unequal treatment" from the committee.

"The committee is doing a good job in following the footsteps of their forefathers by being insensitive to the needs of minority students," Neely told the senate.

THE AFRO-AMERICAN Graduate Student Association was excluded from the senate funding procedure because it missed a senate budgeting workshop, Neely said. Representatives of the group had been told that if their budget request was in order, missing the workshop would not disqualify them from funding, he said. Neely called the committee's actions "an insult to a history of injury." He also called for support from other minority groups.

"United we stand, divided, the insult to injury continues and continues," he said.

He said he filed the complaint because "minority groups are in a state of political powerlessness" at the UI and "this situation warrants special protection from higher authorities." The Human Rights Committee will conduct an "independent and detached investigation," he said.

ON FRIDAY afternoon, during a special session for final consideration of the budget, senators allocated an additional $980 to the group, bringing the total allocation to $2,385. The senate made additions to the budgets of a number of groups after cutting 5 percent of the money budgeted for itself and senate commissions.

Neely said Sunday the funding is "still inadequate."

"No matter what they did after that, it's still a fact that they acted arbitrarily and that they acted discriminatorily," he said.

M. Colleen Jones, chairwoman of the Human Rights Committee, said an investigation will begin "as soon as possible." Jones, who had not read the complaint, said she will be one of the committee members investigating the charge.

"The matter is serious enough, I think, that the chair of the Human Rights Committee should take a look," she said.

Senate President Bruce Hagemann and Sen. Tess Catalano, a member of the budgeting committee, refused to comment on the complaint. Other members of the budgeting committee could not be reached for comment Sunday night.

Scoring not set for Texas tests

By DON LEWIS
and ELISA MIALE
Staff Writers

Texas ninth-graders had to make a choice on their Texas Assessment of Basic Skills writing exams, but Westinghouse DataScore apparently couldn't make up its mind on how to score those exams, according to sources close to the project.

An investigation by The Daily Iowan recently revealed that 19 workers in the project say it was troubled by numerous scoring irregularities and haphazard administration of the scoring procedures.

According to scorers and Westinghouse representatives, problems in the ninth grade test began with the question itself. Students were told to imagine that their schools are short of money and have to eliminate all but one of the following: driver education, school athletics, art, music or vocational programs.

"YOU AND other students have been asked to write to the principal and tell which one program you most want to keep. Be sure to give the reasons for the one you choose," the question instructs.

This proposal was developed by the Educational Testing Service of Princeton, N. J., and designed for "holistic" scoring. In holistic scoring, according to Richard Lloyd-Jones, head of the UI English Department, "you examine the whole piece of writing for its total effectiveness." Holistic scoring also considers standard use of punctuation, grammar and sentence structure.

But the Texas Senate bill that mandated the statewide competency exam requires testing by "criterion-referenced assessment instrument." According to a recent education publication, criteria-referenced scoring looks for "development of particular skills in terms of absolute mastery." Students are judged not on a general basis, but rather by scoring guidelines seeking a fixed set of objectives.

IN A TWO-PART bidding procedure, ETS lost out to Westinghouse's bid on scoring and printing the tests. DataScore then developed scoring guidelines for the ETS question in consultation with the Texas Education Agency. The guidelines aimed at combining holistic scoring with a criteria-referenced assessment.

The TEA and DataScore settled on a hybrid they called "focused-holistic scoring." UI Education Professor Paul Retish said the method does not accomplish the aims of holistic scoring, is not compatible with the question and is in this case unfair to students and parents.

Scorers say that the scoring requires a carefully structured and non-personal argument, while the question asks for a letter to the principal and in no way forbids personal reasons.

THE ITEM (question) itself may not have been structured to produce the best kinds of scores," admits Donna Townsend, TEA program director for English language arts. "ETS used a so-called 'classical holistic' method. I think there could be structuring of the question that could allow kids to answer it better."

Several scorers in the six-week project said they soon realized that the question did not ask what the scoring guidelines required, and mentioned this to superiors.

"There was a great deal of apology given to us by people who designed the rubric (scoring guidelines)...that the original question had been designed by another party and the rubric developed by Westinghouse," one said.

THE SECOND MAJOR problem is inconsistent interpretation of the scoring guidelines. "Major changes in criteria were added to an already confusing system to begin with. This happened all the time," one source said.

Some examples: —Several sources confirmed that there was confusion on whether citation of polls was acceptable elaboration of an answer. "They told us that if the class took a vote, they were accepting that as a valid reason. Then they came back and said, 'No, that's not a valid reason.' And I don't know how that ended up," one scorer said.

Another gave this account: "At first it was unacceptable even if they say, 'We the student body got together for a vote;' obviously it was made up because they had no preparation for this test. About

Praise, flu meet cast of 'Spirits' at festival

By JUDITH GREEN
Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, D.C. — At the first appearance of Leslie (Julie Glander Kramer), an abused alcoholic woman in Distilling Spirits, a character tells her, "You make standing up look like a test of endurance." In the last of Spirits performances at the Kennedy Center for the 12th annual American College Theater Festival, that line literally came true.

Spirits was scheduled for three performances at ACTF, the evening of May 1 and matinee and evening May 2. The first performance went well; but the next morning, three company members — Kramer, Jo Vetter (the counselor) and playwright Dean-Michael Dolan were taken to a hospital with violent flu-like symptoms. Food poisoning was ruled out, and the final diagnosis was of a sudden, debilitating intestinal virus.

The two actresses felt so weak that director Bruce Levitt reluctantly cancelled the matinee. By evening, both were, if not well, at least able to honor the theater commandment, "The show must go on." A few things changed in the staging — Vetter, instead of holding the body of Madeline (Ellen Dolan) in a Pieta-like pose at the drama's climax, rushed offstage (aided by the other actors) before her legs gave out — but the performance was otherwise unaffected.

THE TWO performances were, in fact, among the cast's finest, equalled only by that at the ACTF regionals. Audience reaction both nights was overwhelmingly positive, after the viewers got over some initial confusion about the play's subject: "I thought this was supposed to be a musical" or "At the box office they said this was a comedy" were frequently-heard comments. As the Washington Star reviewer wrote, "The title... might lead the unsuspecting theatergoer to think he's about to see a frothy little Noel Coward-like piece set in one of those terribly chic British drawing rooms."

After the first performance, ACTF and Amoco (its funding source) officials presented bronze medallions to the cast and crew. It was the second medal for Levitt, production manager Dan Hall and composer Jon Westlead, who each received one last year for The Authentic Life of Billy the Kid. (A friend noted the unintentional irony that a play whose last words are "I am powerless" should be immediately followed by several well-tailored symbols of corporate wealth and influence.)

THE CAST was announced alphabetically, without benefit of explanation, and after a bemused audience had heard Robb Anderson and Sindri Anderson (set designer and actress, not related to each other), Dean Dolan and Ellen Dolan (not related) and tour technical director Eric Kramer and Julie Kramer (married to each other), someone behind me said, "What is this, a brother-and-sister act?"

President Willard Boyd, accepting an engraved plaque for the UI, followed his thanks with the dry comment, "I think, though, that creativity should be rewarded with creativity. Maybe next year you could give a painting or sculpture instead of a plaque." He and First District Congressman Jim Leach, who also attended the performance, posed with the cast for photographs.

Also announced that night was the Lorraine Hansberry Playwriting Award. See Spirits, page 7

Nine killed at papal mass

KINSHASA, Zaire (UPI) — Nine persons were killed and at least 69 injured Sunday in a crush to get to the mass celebrated by Pope John Paul II, who canceled the rest of the day's program in Zaire when he learned of the tragedy.

Officials said 72 persons were hospitalized, several in grave condition, and at least 500 others were injured in the crush.

Standing under an altar of thatched palm in the sweltering tropical heat, John Paul exhorted more than a million cheering Zaireans to reject injustice as his host — a man accused of running one of Africa's most corrupt regimes — sat impassively at his side.

The deaths occurred nearly four hours before the mass started, when officials opened a narrow gate into a field in front of the Chinese-built "Palace of the Peoples."

Police said five men, two women and two children were trampled underfoot as a crowd of tens of thousands surged through a narrow gate in the steel fence surrounding the open space where the mass was held.

Kent State rally peaceful

KENT, Ohio (UPI) — About 1,000 young people rallied peacefully at Kent State University Sunday in a 10th anniversary memorial for four students shot to death by National Guardsmen during a violent campus anti-war protest.

The rally featured several activists from the Vietnam era, who urged the crowd to rekindle the spirit of the 1960s in the fight for equal rights for women and minorities.

On May 4, 1970, four Kent State students were killed and nine others were wounded when National Guardsmen tried to break up an anti-Vietnam rally on the campus.

A calm, sunny atmosphere prevailed Sunday. American flags were hung from dormitory windows in a show of national unity over the holding of American hostages in Iran, some students played with frisbees and others lounged in the grass.

Participants in the rally chanted, "No more war, no more draft, Hell no, we won't go to war for Texaco." Members of various socialist groups passed out literature espousing their causes.

U.S. closes Cuban offices

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States will close its immigration, visa and refugee programs at the American diplomatic office in Havana today, because the Castro government has failed to protect Cubans visiting the building, the State Department said Sunday.

The personnel who run the programs will leave Cuba and "a sign will be put up telling any Cubans who come to the building that the programs are closed," a spokeswoman said.

Nearly 400 Cubans waiting for papers to emigrate to the United States took refuge in the U.S. Interest Section building on the grounds of the Swiss Embassy in Havana Friday after they were attacked by a group of men wielding clubs, pipes and chains.

"We will not let this kind of situation develop tomorrow. We are suspending the immigration, visa and refugee program there," said State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman.

"We will withdraw the personnel connected with those programs from Cuba until such time as the Cuban government can guarantee the safety of people who come to the interest section to conduct normal business."

Israel postpones decision to avenge West Bank raid

TEL AVIV, Israel (UPI) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin persuaded his government Sunday not to act hastily to avenge the terrorist ambush in the occupied West Bank where outbursts of insurrection flared anew among the restive Palestinians.

Sources close to Begin said he told his cabinet "no hasty steps" will be taken in the aftermath of Friday's attack. Israel must work to find ways to live in peace with the Arabs and negotiations on self-rule for West Bank and Gaza Palestinians should go on.

More than 4,000 mourners buried two of the five young Bible scholars who were victims of the ambush in a military cemetery outside Tel Aviv. They were killed by local Palestinian terrorists in Hebron, a West Bank town with a history of Arab-Israeli strife dating to 1929.

Funerals for the other victims — two Americans and a Canadian — were expected to be held today following the arrival of families from New York City and Montreal.

The cabinet decided after a 90-minute debate on the attack to refer its recommendations to an eight-member inner committee, a move that postponed a possible crisis in the midst of Palestinian autonomy talks. The cabinet hinted the proposals lean toward tighter control over the West Bank.

Area construction strike ends

Construction work on several local projects slowed by labor strikes last week was expected to resume today after iron workers and contractors settled for an 11 percent wage increase Friday.

Representatives of area contractors and the Cedar Rapids-based Iron Workers Union, Local 89, agreed to a three-year contract that increased iron workers' hourly wages by $1.50 as of May 1, said Eugene Larson, president of Allied Construction Interests — the contractors bargaining agent.

The new contract also provides for a $1 to $1.50 hourly wage increase next year with a 75 percent annual cost of living adjustment and a $1 to $1.75 hourly increase in 1982 with the same cost of living adjustment, Larson said.

Ironworkers earned $13.33 per hour under the contract that expired May 1.

Iron Workers set up pickets at several Iowa City projects Thursday when representatives for both sides failed to reach an agreement before their contract expired at midnight Wednesday.

Iowa City projects affected by the two-day strike were Phase B of the UI Hospitals Carver Pavilion, the second downtown parking ramp and the new Public Library.

Larson said the contractors and millwright workers still have not reached an agreement, but a meeting is scheduled for today. But he said that contract dispute does not affect work on projects in the Iowa City area.

Traffic accidents injure two

Traffic accidents in Iowa City over the weekend left one person in critical condition and another in serious condition, according to officials at UI Hospitals.

Richard R. Gerard, 19, of 285 Juniper Court, North Liberty, remained in critical condition at UI Hospitals Sunday after he lost control of the motorcycle he was driving at about 2 a.m. Saturday.

Iowa City Police said that Gerard was heading east on Iowa Avenue between Riverside Drive and Madison Street when the accident occurred.

Mary Francis Posten, 69, of 517 Holt Ave., remained in serious condition at UI Hospitals Sunday after she had been struck by a truck while crossing Dubuque Street on Friday at about 2:50 p.m.

Complaint leads to burglary charge

Johnson County Sheriff's deputies responding to an early morning burglary complaint, arrested two men and filed a total of five charges against them Friday.

A break-in at Schnobelen's Super Service led to the 4:45 a.m. arrest Michael Richard Lukavsky of Lot 19, Forest View Trailer Court, and Randall Ray Phelps, 510 Seventh Ave., Coralville.

The complaints charge each man with second-degree burglary and allege that the two men pried open the back door of the gas station and took a quantity of coins from the cash register.

A vehicle containing both Phelps and Lukavsky was stopped by investigators court records state. "Due to the hour, this was the only car moving in that section of town."

Officers gained permission to search the vehicle from the two men. Charges of possessing burglary tools were brought against Phelps and Lukavsky when deputies found a screw driver and tire iron in the car. The complaints also state that a quantity of coins were discovered in the car's glove compartment.

Lukavsky was also charged with possessing marijuana after a further search of the vehicle reportedly produced three bags of "green, plant-like substance" under the seat of the car.

Magistrate Joseph Thornton ordered the two to appear at preliminary hearings May 9. Lukavsky is being held in the county jail in lieu of $1,500 bond. Phelps was released on his own recognizance.

Nip and tuck in the Big Apple

NEW YORK (UPI) — Nearly 1,000 people were bitten by other people in New York City last year, making human nips the second most frequent kind of bite, behind dog bites.

There were 973 reported human bites last year, a 27 percent rise over a year earlier and health Commissioner Reinaldo Ferrer said officials are worried that the increase "exposes a growing, serious health problem."

He said dog bites, far in the lead with 15,814 cases last year, have been declining, mostly through better enforcement of leash laws. Men and boys, especially those involved in a fight, are most prone to bites as are abused children. Controlling human biting, Ferrer said, is not as easy as enforcing an animal law.

Ehrenreich describes corporation 'dumping' in Third World nations

By CINDY SCHREUDER
Staff Writer

Lethal products not approved for sale in the United States are often "dumped" in Third World countries by multinational corporations — an arrangement the U.S. government has aided, according to journalist Barbara Ehrenreich.

Pacifiers that babies can easily choke on, contraceptives that can cause death and children's sleepwear treated with a cancer-causing flame retardant are three products not approved for use in the United States, yet widely distributed in underdeveloped countries, Ehrenreich told about 75 people at the UI symposium on "Health Care in the '80s" Friday night at the Union.

Ehrenreich, who co-authored an article on corporate "dumping" that appeared in Mother Jones magazine last year, said Americans do not understand that developed and underdeveloped countries have different patterns of disease.

In the developed countries, she said, people tend to die of degenerative diseases such as cancer. But in Third World nations, people are more likely to die from malnutrition and infectious diseases.

SHE SAID Americans assume that the poor health of people in the Third World is a fact of life — "something that's kind of natural, like they're in a primitive state (and) they haven't developed yet."

"Many of the health care problems that you see in Third World countries today come about from the kinds of interaction those countries have with the developed world, with the First World," Ehrenreich said.

She said that the interaction takes two harmful forms. One is the exploitation of Third World resources by developed countries. For example, in some Third World countries, multinational agribusiness corporations own large amounts of the arable land, which they use to grow cash crops for export.

The other form, Ehrenreich said, is the "actual export of disease" to the Third World. An example of this, she said, is the exportation of the Dalkon Shield, an intrauterine contraceptive.

EHRENRICH SAID that within months after the contraceptive was marketed in the United States in 1971, the manufacturer, A.H. Robins Co., received a number of complaints from consumers. She said the contraceptive caused documented cases of pelvic disease and uterine trouble and that by 1974, 17 deaths could be attributed to the Dalkon Shield.

But U.S. sales of the device were dropping as early as 1972, Ehrenreich said, so Robins offered to sell the contraceptives — in a non-sterile form at a 48 percent discount — to the U.S. Agency for International Development's Office of Population. The devices, she said, then were distributed to 42 Third World countries.

In 1975, Robins issued an international recall of the Dalkon Shield. But Ehrenreich said that she believes the devices were still being offered to women in Africa and Latin America as late as 1979.

To halt the export of disease to the Third World, Ehrenreich said, people should boycott products from companies involved in dumping, alert legislators and educators to the problem and require that legislators make dumping a criminal offense.

Ehrenreich said that because the U.S. government is concerned about the increasing birth rate in underdeveloped countries, it should raise the standard of living in those areas so that people do not need large families to survive. But she added, "That's not the path our government has been willing to pursue."

Metropolitan area nuclear plants should close down, Johnson says

By JULIE VORMAN
Staff Writer

"Any nuclear plant upwind of a major metropolitan center should simply close down" to prevent excessive radioactive emissions, according to the president-elect of the American Public Health Association.

Dr. Carl Johnson, director of public health for Colorado's Jefferson County, has studied the effects of low-level radioactive emissions from the Rocky Flats Nuclear Weapons Facility. He believes area residents are suffering higher cancer rates because of the emissions.

Johnson, who spoke at the Union Friday as part of the "Health Care in the '80s" symposium, said his research shows "significantly higher" rates of leukemia and lung cancer among residents in the vicinity of the plant.

ACCORDING TO Johnson's study, which was funded by the National Cancer Institute, residents of the Rocky Flats and Denver area suffer a cancer rate about 24 percent higher for males and about 10 percent higher for females than the rate for the rest of the state.

After examining Johnson's results, the Colorado State Medical Society unanimously voted last fall that the Rocky Flats plant should be shut down or moved to another location.

"I've been urging people to take a look at their local nuclear plants and insist on evaluation of radioactive releases and the possibility of accidents," Johnson said.

He emphasized the evaluations should be made by an objective third party rather than plant personnel or even the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. "I don't trust the NRC," he said.

THE ROCKY FLATS plant, which recycles old plutonium nuclear warheads, is about 20 miles from Denver, Johnson said. Special filters are used to trap the emitted plutonium dust, he said, but the plant has exceeded federal guidelines for emissions since 1954.

A plant fire in 1962 caused emissions of more than 16,000 times the permissible amount, Johnson said. A second fire forced the Atomic Energy Commission to survey surrounding land for plutonium contamination, he said, but with "untrustworthy" results that indicated little danger.

"As a health officer, I was very concerned about people living downwind from the plant," Johnson said. "My main concern is with plutonium — it's a very, very potent carcinogen."

REPRESENTATIVES of the Rocky Flats plant, built in 1952 and now operated by Rockwell International, claim that plutonium emissions "disappear harmlessly into the air," Johnson said.

"If it's that harmless, I suggest they just recycle it back into the plant," Johnson said. "But this is never done."

"The problem with radiation exposure is that people don't see it, feel it, get sick from it, or fall over dead from it," he said. "The effects often aren't felt for 15 years or so."

He said the AEC and NRC have shown a lack of concern about the location and emissions from the Rocky Flats plant.

"Response from the federal government has been mixed," he said. "Most of the AEC people are industry-oriented rather than public health-oriented."

Bar hopping by the light of the moon

They hit George's, the Sanctuary, the Nickelodeon, Magoos, Tuck's Place, That Bar, Dave's Foxhead, the Vine and the Shamrock. Calling themselves "Christians Against Communism," members of the Collegiate Association for the Research of Principles tried to sell candy in the bars Saturday night. CARP, according to a report in the Washington Post, is a front organization for Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church.

Reportedly from San Francisco, CARP operates with all the deceptive practices associated with Moonie recruiting and soliciting. Whether contacting people in their homes, at the bars, at Riverfest or in the main library, they never mention their affiliation with Moon.

One bartender said the CARP peddlers claimed they were selling candy for the UI. At another bar, a man with a shoe box of candy distracted the employee at the door, while his partner slipped inside to sell candy.

Two persons who asked not to be identified said members of CARP came to their houses selling candy for "Christians Against Communism." Both sources said they were invited to dinner by the door-to-door salesman.

Someone who was offered a CARP newsletter at Riverfest subsequently received invitations to lunch, dinner and recreational activities. Three sources said CARP was extremely persistent and continued to call people who said they wanted no part of it.

In discussions with these prospective members, CARP members first talked generally about Christianity, attempting to gain the confidence of the recruit. Later they switched the conversation to CARP, which they described as an "international student organization."

CARP's affiliation with Moon has been recognized for several months. In January, a Washington Post article said CARP had drawn 250 college students from the Midwest and the East Coast to a crowded, inland camp in Florida that was run by Moon's church. The students were responding to a vacation offer promising "sun, fun, and surf."

Seven students who did not want to remain for the sun and fun (there was no surf) left the camp with the assistance of the Alachua County Sheriff's Office. Others left on their own. One said she became skeptical when Moonies said they would make it possible for her to live without her epilepsy medicine.

Although the Moonies' soliciting activities are a nuisance to everyone, the real victims are the prospective members who are showered with friendly attention by a deceptive organization that neither shares nor respects their beliefs.

Persons who were contacted several times reported feeling degraded by the experience, like victims of a con game. A couple said they were afraid of CARP, and did not want to be alone with the members.

The community can protect itself from Moonies by publicizing their activities. People who have unpleasant experiences should not hesitate to report the incidents to the police. Citizens should not have to tolerate harassment.

Energy use decline

For more than 25 years, Iowans increased their use of electricity the way they drove their cars: as if there were no tomorrow. However, there are indications that the trend toward large annual increases in gas and electrical consumption may be over.

The state road use tax fund, financed by a tax on gasoline, is used for highway construction and maintenance. Because Iowa motorists are purchasing less gasoline, the fund is decreasing and this has the state Department of Transportation scrambling to determine its priorities for the coming years.

The tax fund has not kept up with high construction costs and consequently the state has not contributed funds to as many new projects as the highway chiefs would like. And maintenance of Iowa's roads is at an all-time low. With depleted revenues, highway officials are going to have to exercise restraint in their five-year plans for road projects.

Not only has there been a decrease in gasoline purchases, but for the first time in almost 35 years, Iowans have reversed the trend of a 7 percent yearly increase in electricity usage.

From February 1979 to February 1980, Iowans' use of electricity increased by only 0.4 of 1 percent. Contributing to this smaller increase is the decline of residential consumption which, for the first time in more than 45 years, decreased by 2.5 percent.

The reduction is causing the state's utilities to reconsider plans for constructing new electrical generating plants, and openings of plants already under construction are being delayed. The companies don't want to put capital into projects that may not produce a good return on their investments.

So the glorious days of "concrete mania" and "Reddy Kilowatt" may be over. Iowans are voluntarily cutting back their consumption of energy and forcing re-evaluation of plans to cater to the increases that highway and utility officials had not only promoted, but come to consider traditional.

The Iranian crisis, higher energy costs, fear of nuclear energy proliferation and the growing awareness of limited resources have all contributed to a wiser use of energy by the state's citizens. Programs promoting continued — and greater — energy conservation, are now needed to see that the recent trend becomes the tradition.

Honorable act by Vance

What a refreshing thing is any, even a single, honorable act in Washington. When I heard of Secretary Vance's resignation, I thought of a tale Alistair Cooke tells about Adlai Stevenson. When Stevenson heard that the Kennedy White House had used him, while lying to him, in the Bay of Pigs affair, he went to his friend Cooke for comfort.

Cooke did not realize that Stevenson had been peddling lies to the U.N. When he heard the truth, he naturally thought of comforting parallels — of the way other men had resigned with honor and preserved their countrymen's esteem.

For a while the two men talked at cross purposes, till Cooke realized, with dismay, that Stevenson had not even considered resigning — the only thing Cooke had, instinctively, considered. Stevenson still had hopes of rising in the Kennedy administration. He rationalized that he would be unable to influence policy if he resigned. It is the old siren tune of ambition, always playing in Washington, and almost always heeded.

ACTUALLY, of course, Stevenson was a dupe of the Kennedys from the outset, and his willingness to be pushed around just lowered the president's already low opinion of him. He waddled out the rest of his life, a feckless and pathetic figure, one too feeble to protest when he was dishonored before the world.

The sort who stay on because they have a chance of "working inside" for their views are usually kept on as a cover and excuse for implementing the opposite views. Stevenson's role, from the outset, was as a sop to dovish types while Kennedy practiced his macho politics of confrontation and counterinsurgency. While Stevenson stayed on to work for his goals, his mere presence placed those goals farther off.

Vance clearly saw what Stevenson could not face. While President Carter used Vance as a figurehead of caution and stability, he was working behind that facade on a reckless foray that put release of the hostages farther off from our abilities. Vance's resignation, submitted before the raid, tells us it is not simply Monday-morning-quarterbacking to think the raid was doomed. If Vance saw that beforehand, then other people could have, and should have.

OBVIOUSLY there were chances that the raid would fail. It did fail. And that failure leads to new guarding procedures for the hostages; to possible exposure of friendly elements in Iran; to a tip-off on our views of Iranian vulnerability; to allied mistrust of our assurance that economic sanctions are important; to increased resistance if any further military acts are proposed.

Vance, we can presume, knew one of the basic political truths that Carter neglects: If you go against the king, be sure to kill him. That is not "soft" doctrine, or excessive caution, but the basic dogma of hard-nosed realists. If an act like this raid fails, it makes everything immeasurably worse. So don't do it till the chances of failure are all but nil. Anything else is rash and irresponsible, and a man of honor should not make his person a screen to protect such recklessness. Vance wouldn't. Bravo, Vance!

Sad to see HEC demise

To the editor:

I read with much sadness and dismay the article in a recent DI about the abolishment of Hancher Entertainment Commission and its replacement with yet another acronymic organization.

HEC was formed sometime in the spring of 1973 by a motley crew, including David Kragoskow and myself and later, John Gallo. We worked hard, were lucky and HEC was a viable, important programming organization. Under the expert leadership of John Gallo, it reached new horizons, not only quantitatively but qualitatively as well.

What Student Senate has failed to realize that what happened to HEC is part of a never ending cycle. An organization has a couple of hot years, those people graduate, a new bunch takes over, loses a lot of money presenting the esoteric or wasting its money. And so on, ad infinitum.

When I graduated from the UI in 1975, after serving as director of both HEC and the Commission for University Entertainment, I suggested to certain UI administrators that someone be hired to be a full-time advisor and coordinator for HEC and CUE. Obviously, this fell upon deaf ears, but the suggestion is just as valid today as it was then. When senate starts selecting people to be on the new Student Commission on Programming and Entertainment, do they know what it takes to put on a show? Do they realize that it takes more than an interest in music and a desire for a couple of backstage passes to be an integral part of a committee such as this? And who are they going to choose to do the booking?

I have just finished a stint of almost four years with a major concert promoter, and the standard joke in the live entertainment business is that colleges pay too much for performers and don't know how to put on a show properly. Sad, but true.

What senate is doing is trying to maintain control over a programming organization about which they have no conception. The live entertainment business is a lot rougher than it has ever been, and I hope that the person that is picked as director of this new commission has the time, energy and intensity to handle it.

I hope some of this makes sense, but I feel that I speak for those of us who have been involved with HEC and CUE over the years in saying that it is saddening to see something you gave birth to and built up and sweated blood over be wiped away because some two-bit, student politicians think they can do it better. I wish all of you a lot of luck, because you will need it.

Unfolding

To the editor:

I have been following the unfolding of "The Glenn Damato Story" for some time now. While I find Damato's reasoning for the most part flawed, I must commend him for one thing: Through his persistence he has stimulated a lot of debate on the question of energy sources, and I hope that the ongoing discussion here in the DI is merely the tip of the iceberg. There are many energy options available, but they all take time to put into action; thus the sooner a consensus exists on which options to take, the better.

For my part, I do not flatly rule out any option. Each of them has defects as well as advantages. I believe that the proper solution is one which encompasses all options, each in its proper role. Too many people seem to feel that there must be a single answer. It's going to take some time to educate those people. This is why I oppose Damato's tunnel-vision advocacy of nuclear power. But, as Voltaire is supposed to have said, "I disapprove of what you say, sir, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Hang in there, Glenn.

Jazz

To the editor:
Johnson County Landmark, the top

jazz band at the UI, has won the two biggest collegiate jazz festivals in the country, but still they get little to no recognition.

The band won the Notre Dame festival this year and the Quinpiac Jazz Festival in Connecticut for the last two years. JCL has won every festival that they have appeared at without any backing from the UI or media. Why can't the DI at least write a short article in support of JCL and the jazz program at the UI?

Dan Yoder, the director of the jazz department, has built a top-notch program in less than three years, and is the catalyst behind the band's success. He deserves support and recognition. JCL includes Bob Thompson, Jamey Williamson, Mike Sutherland, Keith Elias, Dave Tyree, Bret Zvacek, Joe Blaha, Mark Wilkerson, Chuck Comella, Dave Tippet, Ed Sareth, Dave Scott, Steve Stickney, Bill Rowley, John Shiflet, Tom Lyons, Mike Tamoglia, Scott Madden, and Ed Goeke. They deserve support and recognition.

A little help from the media would strengthen the jazz department and show that the Hawkeyes are national champs in yet another area.

Weather

To the editor:

We feel that something should be done about the disgusting way in which the weather is reported in this paper. It is in very poor taste to imitate a serious and tragic problem like the Iran hostage situation. It is no joking matter. We feel that the hostages deserve our support and compassion not this poor attempt at humor. There are many humorous ways in which to report the weather, but this is not one of them.

Third World women

Lucille Mathurin Muir, the Secretary-General of the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, will keynote a UI-sponsored symposium titled "The Impact of Development on Third World Women" on Tuesday, May 6, at 2:30 p.m. in Hancher Auditorium.

Why a symposium to focus on the effects of development on women? Aren't the effects of development much the same for women as they are for men? The fact is that "development" has a significantly different effect on women in developing nations than it does on men, and we have only recently begun to uncover what some of those differences are.

To discuss this topic we must dismiss the assumption that "development" has provided benefits for the majority of citizens in developing nations. The process of "development" has been, in reality, a process of dis-development. In these nations, increases in "development," as measured by gross national product, have been accompanied by increasing inequality reflected in higher unemployment rates and in greater absolute poverty.

THESE CHANGES have affected women far more adversely than they have men, for a diversity of complex reasons that cannot be reasonably addressed in a brief column, but which include as limited examples: The imposition of the western assumption that men are the primary economic support of their households; the migration of males seeking employment to mining camps, to urban areas, and to other countries as well; and the destruction of arable land as a result of the application of inappropriate technologies.

A recent United Nations report describes the inequitable status of women worldwide. Although women constitute one-half of the world's population and one-third of its formal labor force, they perform two-thirds of its work hours, yet earn one-tenth of its income and own only one-hundredth of its land. In developing nations the situation for women is even gloomier.

In those parts of the world where subsistence agriculture is the main form of production (most of Africa or Asia), women traditionally perform between 60 and 80 percent of the labor. Yet, as land becomes consolidated in larger farms through "development" efforts that produce cash crops for export to cities and other countries, women are left with smaller land parcels on which they must sustain their families. With diminished land resources, the men from these areas migrate to areas where they have greater hopes of seeking employment, leaving the women alone to raise their families.

IN THESE countries, on the average, over 30 percent of all families are headed by single women. In many countries (the Caribbean, Central America, Botswana, and areas within developing nations for instance), 50 percent of all households are headed by women. The process of "development" has disrupted traditional family structures and left women with few economic or political resources with which to sustain themselves and their children. Consequently, malnourishment is a growing problem in these countries.

In Latin America, where in some nations the unofficial unemployment statistics run as high as 57 percent, the situation for women is not much better. Women do not engage in agricultural production in significant numbers because there are insufficient jobs on the food-exporting plantations.

Here, primarily women migrate to cities where the principal forms of employment available to them are domestic service and prostitution. In many of these nations, prostitution is the major means of support for women.

Unlike the developed world, problems in these nations go far beyond discrimination in education, employment, and the law, although these issues are certainly of real concern.

LUCILLE MAIR will expand on these issues and discuss ways to avert a further decline in the situations of women and their children who are indeed the "poorest of the poor." The symposium offers the Iowa City community a unique opportunity to learn more of this important topic. In addition to Mair's talk there will be a panel on "Women in Development: What are the Issues?" at 10:30 a.m. in the Union Indiana Room, a luncheon at Hancher Auditorium preceding Mair's talk and a reception following the talk at the home of President and Mrs. Boyd.

Life of the big top inspires musician

By WINSTON BARCLAY
Features Editor

There's an attraction to the music and the atmosphere that has a hold on me. I put the show together to do it again; to hear the music again.

—Tony Greiner

It all started because Tony Greiner was homesick for the circus. He had played trombone in circus bands for three seasons — two with a "big" show, the Carson-Barnes Circus — before he came to graduate school at the UI. So he decided to organize a program of circus music and recruited colleagues from the music school to play it. "I got some really excellent players together," he says, "I couldn't believe they'd really all do it."

But the program that will be presented at 8:30 tonight in the Music Building Band Room has turned out to be a lot of things Greiner didn't envision. First, a trombonist offered to play a solo. Then someone suggested that an hour of just circus music might get boring, so Greiner started thinking about Stephen Foster.

"STEPHEN FOSTER wrote quite a bit of music that's not vocal music," Greiner says. "It's instrumental music that's written with the idea to be played in the family — you know, Mom and Pop and sister Betty. So we're doing one of those for two violins and piano. It's very, very rustic. It was originally written for two flutes and three guitars, but we couldn't find the original music for it."

Pretty soon he was adding piano rags, a tap dancer, jugglers, a tuba solo, a fire eater, a harmonium to accompany a vocal quartet, free pop-corn — and now the show is being billed as "Popular Entertainment of the 19th Century." Greiner is "conductor" of the extravaganza, though he downplays the importance of that role: "With this kind of music, it's so fast you just sort of shoot the gun and off they go."

Similar to this evening's program, Greiner's circus career began almost offhandedly. While attending undergraduate school in Virginia, he was looking for a summer job and, as a lark, mentioned to a friend who had played in a small circus that it might be interesting to play in a circus band. When the friend heard of an opening in another circus, he offered Greiner's name.

GREINER CALLS that first gig "amateurish," but it roused his interest in the circus. He began subscribing to a circus trade magazine and answered an ad from Carson-Barnes.

When his call was returned, he was subjected to what he calls "the hardest audition of my life": "About 11 o'clock one night the phone rings and this long distance voice only a pay phone can convey says, 'This is Charlie Stevenson; I'm up in Alberta. I understand you want to play with the circus.' I said, 'Yes sir, that's right.' He goes, 'Well, do you know what the life is like?' And I go, 'Yeah.' 'Can you read music?' 'Yup.' 'Can you be here on Tuesday?' So I caught the Greyhound and joined them in North Dakota."

Greiner played with the Carson-Barnes band for two seasons in brass bands ranging from five to eight pieces and has, he says, a "hundred million" stories about circus people and circus life — stories he tells with great affection and gusto. He tells, for example, about a man in his late 60s who had been playing in circus bands for 20 years. "Vince was always real quiet; sort of kept to himself," he says. "His conversation was limited to sports, circus acts and old-time band music. You couldn't get him to talk about anything else. We were all just shooting the breeze and somehow the conversation rolled around to philosophy. And all of a sudden Vince just popped up and said, 'I know all about this,' and filled out this box from under his bunk and it's pulled with philosophy books. All of a sudden all sorts of strange things about the guy were unravelled."

OR HE TELLS about when the hippo truck he was driving broke down at a way station in rural Mississippi. "Boy, the lady got on the horn. 'Oh, there's a hippopotamus here!' And I was there all day while the mechanics were working on it and people drove 30 miles to see the hippopotamus." When the hippo's skin began to dry out after several hours without water to lounge in, the local fire department turned out to fill its tank from the water truck.

But Greiner says the kind of fascination he and the hippo found in rural Mississippi is uncommon these days. Mass entertainment, with its special effects and amazing stunts, is killing the circus. He tells of the old-timers reminiscing about the days when Ringling Brothers has 125 double-length railroad cars and 1,000 employees. The biggest tent show now, he says, may have 125 employees.

AND IT'S clear that for Greiner the decline of the circus and its lifestyle is poignant. It is a remnant of the kind of social continuity and cohesion that has become rare in modern culture. "Somebody who's born in the circus stays in it," he says. "It's kind of comforting in a way because a kid, from day one, knows who he is. You don't get any of this identity crisis stuff. He is a circus performer. The circus will take care of its own and you know that when you're 65 somebody's not going to kick you out and you're going to live on social security. If you stay with it, it stays with you. If you're 88 years old and you can do nothing else, they'll have you sitting at the door taking tickets."

If Greiner found circus life so appealing, what is he doing in graduate school at the UI? He says that last winter, while he was doing booking for the circus, he had a chance to reflect on his prospects: "I had to admit to myself that as much fun as it was, it's a dead end for a musician." So he came to the UI in an attempt to make it in what he reluctantly calls "legitimate" music. But if he doesn't make it, well...

Tonight's program is free and open to the public.

Raitt brings expanded style to UI Hancher experience

By DAVE ALBERT
Special To The Daily Iowan

Bonnie Raitt at Hancher, take two. Some 20 months ago was take one, but that never came off and we missed a chance to see her and Muddy Waters. Since her last scheduled appearance here, Raitt has gone through some changes — political as well as stylistic — and a two-pronged effort to get through to a wider audience.

She has gained notoriety for her participation in the Musicians United for Safe Energy concerts in New York last year. Raitt is a founding member of MUSE and has been trying to carry the standards of rational energy use and generation to the public, voicing concern for the quality of life in store for future generations.

At the same time, Raitt has sought to expand her listening audience by widening the range of her musical style. Her last LP was produced by Peter Asher, who produces such monster acts as Taylor and Linda Ronstadt. The collaboration did not prove that fruitful, however, as The Glow sank from sight with only a few ripples on the national charts.

NEVERTHELESS, Raitt hardly suffers from a limited following. She consistently fills the small halls and college auditoriums she plays. While she has never had a single that reached the top 30 nationally, some of her tunes, such as "Give It Up" or the remake of Del Shannon's "Runaway," have gotten substantial airplay.

Bonnie Raitt has showbiz in her blood. Her father is John Raitt, a Broadway musical performer with shows such as Oklahoma and Carousel under his belt, and her mother is a musician as well, so Raitt's involvement with music has been lifelong. She emerged on the East Coast, playing clubs in the Boston area, where she met her manager, Dick Waterman. At the time, Waterman managed a number of the remaining genuine blues acts of both the delta and Chicago traditions, and this connection exposed Raitt to the work of Howlin' Wolf, Junior Wells, Buddy Guy, Son House, Mississippi John Hurt and Sipppie Wallace.

SHE PLAYED her first gigs with acoustic guitar, but as her career progressed she began to play electric bottleneck slide. With each successive album, Raitt expanded her musical ambitions, showcasing tunes by aspiring songwriters such as Jackson Browne, Eric Kaz, J.D. Souther, Bill Payne and John Prine. And she began to record more R&B, a genre for which her husky tenor seems perfectly suited.

Her performances are reputed to be rousing affairs, strongly laced with rock 'n' roll, blues and R&B. Her touring band, which includes guitarist Will McFarland and the ever-present Freebo on bass, is known as an exceptionally tight unit that can make songs they have played a thousand times sound new and exciting.

This evening's concert, however, has its sober aspects. According to sources involved in promoting local concerts, this could be the last rock show to grace the Hancher stage. The recent demise of HEC has led some to speculate that the future of rock at the UI could depend on the availability of the new sports arena. Who, what and where seem to be the big questions about the new programming group, SCOPE. So this may be your last chance to rock out at Hancher.

A bronze bust of Vilhjalmur Stefansson, a UI alumnus who pioneered exploration of the arctic region, was unveiled at the UI Art Building Saturday morning.

The unveiling by Stefansson's widow, Evelyn Stefansson Nef, was part of the two-day Vilhjalmur Stefansson Centennial Symposium that began Friday night. Participants in the symposium, which also included arctic films and slides and technical presentations, came from all over the United States and Canada and as far away as Oxford, England to honor the explorer.

The bronze replica of a 1931 original by the late Emanuel Otto Hahn of Canada will cost approximately $1,500. About $1,200 has been raised for the purchase, and G. Edgar Folk Jr., a UI physiology professor and a member of the Stefansson Centennial Committee, is continuing fund-raising efforts.

STEFANSSON, who grew up in the region that is now North Dakota, received a bachelor of arts degree from the UI in 1903 and went on to become "perhaps the greatest North American polar explorer of the past 100 years," according to Col. Robert Latimer of Plainfield, N.J., a member of the centennial committee who helped the UI obtain the sculpture.

Latimer, a 1940 graduate of the UI, said he feels the many great alumni have been forgotten. Stefansson's 100th birthday anniversary on Nov. 3, 1979, passed without acknowledgement by the UI, he said, although the explorer was honored in other countries and at other U.S. institutions, such as Dartmouth College where Stefansson served as an arctic consultant for many years.

LATIMER SAID Stefansson is not well-known in the United States because his exploration of the Canadian Arctic region received little recognition here.

About 50 people attended the unveiling ceremony Saturday in which Stefansson was honored by UI officials, colleagues and others interested in arctic exploration.

Stefansson's five-year history making marathon north of the Arctic Circle is the longest expedition on record, according to Duane Priestersbach, UI vice president for educational development and research.

Priestersbach said Stefansson received nine honorary degrees including a law degree from the UI in 1922. Many important advances by the UI since the turn of the century have been "inspired by the vigorous pioneering tone" set by people such as Stefansson, he said.

DAVID C. NUTT of Dartmouth College said Stefansson pioneered "a state of mind — a view of the arctic as a friendly place which replaced the hostile view that prevailed."

According to his friend Thomas Anderson of Minneapolis, Stefansson envisioned transpolar air travel and submarine travel in the Polar Sea. Anderson characterized Stefansson as the "great debunker."

Severely criticized at the time, Stefansson's "wild claims" became realities that he helped pioneer, Anderson said.

"An excellent speaker and an accomplished debater, Stefansson believed the truth is often stranger than fiction," Anderson said.

Girl, 8, is presumed drowned

An eight-year-old girl was presumed drowned at the Coralville Reservoir at about 5 p.m. Sunday, authorities said.

Johnson County Sheriff Gary Hughes said the girl, whose name is being withheld, and her six-year-old brother were playing in the water at the reservoir beach when both children hit a drop-off and went under. Two witnesses managed to save the boy, he said.

At press time, sheriff's officers and divers were still searching the water surrounding the beach. Hughes said the search would be resumed this morning.

The county has not officially opened the beach for the summer; consequently there were no lifeguards on duty Sunday.

The level of water in the reservoir is lower this time of year, Hughes said, exposing parts of the beach that would normally be underwater and bringing the beach's drop-off much closer to the water's edge. Hughes said there are several deep holes at the drop-off, which is 25 to 35 feet deep, and that the child's body may be trapped in one of the holes.

Iran to return commando bodies

two weeks later, the poll idea is good. If they lay claim to figures (on) everybody in the school, it's good."

In the fifth grade essays students were asked to describe a picture of a balloon on top of a house. There was a change in guidelines concerning the use of the word 'balloon.' At first, said one scoring supervisor, a student had to say balloon at some point in order to get anything higher than a 0 on the 0-4 grading scale. Later, a student could score as high as a 3 without using the word, so long as a balloon is inferred.

A scorer said that acceptable reasons for preference of the driver's education program also varied. "We started getting all these hypothetical situations involving drivers' education.

So they said later, 'We're not taking them, they're too personal.' And then I was sitting there and someone across the table had gone to a table leader about it and he said, 'Fabrication shows elaboration.'"

There was also confusion as to what to do if a student used the word 'I,' according to several sources. "At first we didn't count off for the use of 'I' as long as they used a non-personal argument. Then we were told no, that we should count off for first person. Then later it was okay." The penalty for use of 'I' disturbed several scorers who noted that 'you' was used repeatedly in the question.

TOWNSEND, who recently visited

DataScore after conclusion of the scoring, denied that use of 'I' ever brought a score down. "The question demands a first-person response," she said, adding that she looked through a stack of papers at DataScore and never saw a penalty for use of 'I.'

According to scorers, supervisors and clerks on the project, only a handful of the tests were rescored to maintain any unity in the scoring procedures.

Scorers also said that there was pressure to produce agreement that would indicate overall understanding of the guidelines. Each paper was to be scored at least twice, first by a scorer who then covered the score with a black tab and then by another scorer who was not to know what the first score was.

IF THERE WAS disagreement between the two, a resolver then decided which score was appropriate. But many scorers learned that the first score could be ascertained by lifting the tab or holding the paper to the light and say they were sometimes encouraged by supervisors to look at the first score.

Several workers on the project indicated that project supervisors sought an agreement rate of 90 percent, meaning that in nine of 10 cases the first scores and second scores would be identical. But some resolvers have said that it was common to receive stacks of essays where one-third to one-half of the papers or more received differing scores.

Those workers who looked at first scores or in other ways violated the scoring procedure say they did so partly because the test seemed to have no validity anyway. Other scorers point out that though there were problems in the procedure, many stuck to the rules.

"I'M NOT SAYING the test was all that great or that the question was all that great. And I saw problems between ETS devising the question and Westinghouse scoring, but I think the scorers as a whole scored according to what they were given and did it well," said table leader Kathy Fait.

She said that if scorers did look under the tab at the first score, it was because they were grading a borderline paper and were unsure what score it deserved.

disciplinary action, including the possibility of dismissal."

HOPKINS SAID an "in-house investigation would lead to more questions than it will clean up."

The union also opposes shift reassignments, as proposed by Berlin, as a means of ending the alleged threats and breaking the verbal and social boycott imposed against Eaton by fellow firefighters on her shift, Hopkins said.

Along with directing Fire Chief

Robert Keating to explore a reassignment of shifts, Berlin said Eaton's firefighting equipment will be inspected and protected.

Hopkins said the allegations of threats should be resolved rather than establishing a policy of making shift transfers as a method of solving conflicts.

Hopkins said some firefighters feel resentment towards Eaton, but it is less resentment than some department members feel towards the council, city administrators and the news media.

Spirits

funded by the McDonald's Corporation, for "the best play about the black experience in America." Brenda Faye Collie, a member-on-leave of the UI Playwrights Workshop interning with the Negro Ensemble Company in New York, took first place ($2,500 to her and $750 to the Department of Speech and Dramatic Art) for Silent Octaves.

OVER 200 of the UI's Washington-area alumni attended the opening performance and the post-awards reception, hosted by the UI Foundation and the Alumni Association in one of the Center's rooftop reception halls. William Shanhouse, retired UI vice president, and Livingston Biddle, chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, also attended. (The paperwork involved in coordinating the eatables and drinkables is another story in itself: Hancher Circle director Larry Eckholt received the Center's commitment to food, drink and attendant personnel in the form of a multi-page contract specifying details down to toothpicks and ice cubes.)

The Washington Post dispensed with individual reviews this year and did only a post-Festival wrap-up. The Star's critic, Zofia Smardz, was brief and non-committal about Spirits, calling it a "low-proof play...the closest you might ever come to a theatrical primal scream." Spirits biggest problem, "for all the fine writing, some excellent character distillation (get it?) and a taut maturity throughout," she said, "is that it leaves you with the sneaking suspicion that in the end it's really only theater." She praised the acting, however, as "near-professional caliber."

BY CONTRAST, Stan Wojewodski, director of Baltimore's Center Stage, treated the Spirits company as equals in his thoroughly professional critique, in which he discussed forthrightly his assessment of the script's problems. "I am confused by the play," he said. "Who is the protagonist? In some ways you've made up your mind about who the people are before you've allowed them to live. I don't think you're being a good parent yet to the play." He commended the play for its credibility, however: "I felt from the beginning that we were meeting real people."

Wojewodski praised Spirits' production excellence: "Extraordinary design solutions, far beyond the usual for student designers...extraordinarily well-done acting," he said. "It's wonderful that you have in your department the ability to create plays, to give life to something new. Nice for the designers not to have to ransack the library for others' conceptions, in order to avoid duplicating them — nice for the actresses to create roles, to have a sense of the scale of their contribution to the play."

Hawks win fourth straight dual

By DAN O'CONNOR
Staff Writer

The Iowa women's tennis team scored victories over two "states" Saturday — Iowa State and its own state of mind.

Both were formidable opponents, and the "dual" win leaves the Hawks on the upswing this week as they begin preparations for the regional tournament.

Iowa's 7-2 win over the Cyclones at the Library Courts was its fourth straight dual win and putting the dual meet record at 5-5 since spring break. The success against the lack of mental sharpness, which had been a problem at the Big Ten tourney, will likely give the Hawks renewed confidence after their ninth-place Big Ten finish.

"Our play improved mentally as a team," Coach Cathy Ballard said.

"Some members of our team have been sick or had personal problems and it's hard to concentrate and forget about that."

BALLARD's netters were pushed to mental and physical limits in several matches by the Cyclones, who played better than the score might indicate. Karen Kettenacker and Ruth Kilgour suffered losses in singles for the Hawks.

One of the brightest notes was the play of No. 2 Laura Lagen, who disposed of Karin Zalesky in straight sets, 6-1, 6-2. Lagen, after a horrendous start this spring, has won six of nine singles matches since the beginning of April.

Zalesky was content to play a baseline game, and that is one thing opponents should not do against Lagen. "Laura has been very consistent on the baseline," Ballard said. "She was hitting deep groundstrokes to get her opponent out of position and the running (Zalesky) had to do took its toll."

A SIMILAR strategy was used by No. 4 Kelly Harding, who scored a 5-7, 6-3, 6-3 verdict over Kemi Gustafson. From the baseline, Harding put the ball in every conceivable spot on the court and simply ran Gustafson down.

Ann McKay (No. 5) scored a 6-4, 7-5 win over Brenda Thomas and Karen Kalsulas (No. 6) came from behind to beat Julie Dankle, 0-6, 6-2, 6-4. "It would have been very easy for Karen to give up after losing the first set, but she kept her concentration," Ballard said.

Less fortunate were No. 1 Kettenacker and No. 3 Kilgour. Kettenacker lost in three sets (6-7, 6-3, 7-5) to Kim Wishard, who she beat easily when the teams met last fall.

Kettenacker squeaked by with the first set, but Wishard, a junior from Chambersburg, Pa., had great control of her shots and fished Kettenacker. "Karen didn't play really smart," Ballard said. "She was not moving well and she was playing defensively. Wishard was dinking her and lobbing very effectively."

KILGOUR WAS also the victim of effective shot control. Patti Paone downed Ruth with a minimum of difficulty, 7-5, 6-1.

The Hawks nailed down the win, though, by sweeping the doubles. Kettenacker and Kilgour got revenge at No. 1, beating Wishard and Paone, 6-4, 7-6. Kalsulas and Lagen stopped Gustafson and Thomas, 6-2, 6-1.

Injuries plague runners

By HEIDI McNEIL
Staff Writer

The Iowa men's track team's luck has seemed to have gone from bad to worse.

Despite blazing to first place in 12 of 16 events in Saturday's non-scoring dual with Northwestern, Iowa's success was overshadowed by the addition of Craig Stanowski to the increasing injury list.

Stanowski's knee gave out before competition began and had to have an immobilizer placed on it. Stanowski joins star sprinter Dennis Mosley, who continues to nurse a muscle pull on the sidelines.

"Our luck just seems to be going that way," Coach Ted Wheeler lamented. "I feel like there's a cloud over our head or something. We'll just have to wait until this crisis of injuries is over and continue working carefully."

WILLIAM McCalister did a good job, however, on overlooking the injury situation with wins in the 200- and 400-meter dash and lending a hand in the first-place finish earned by the 400 relay team.

"McCalister ran especially well," Wheeler said. "But he has done that 99 percent of the time this year."

McCalister raced to a 22.3-second clocking in the 200 and 47.6 in the 400 with Cletus Howard, Brian Quarles and Charles Jones joining McCalister on the relay for a 42.2 time.

Jones sped to first in the 100 (11.2) and was runner-up to McCalister in the 200 (22.8).

Ed Gilpin grabbed the top spot in the 110 high hurdles (15.4) with Mike Means taking second (15.5). Canadian Rob Sametz continued his success in the 3,000 steeplechase with a 9:44.0 clocking for first.

IN THE 800 and 1,500 special invitational races, former captain Jim Docherty secured both crowns. Docherty, who now runs for the Chicago Track Club, finished the 800 in 1:52.7 and the 1,500 in 3:47.9.

Joe Paul took first for the collegiate entries in the 1,500 in 3:53.7 with Canadians Murray Nelson and Glenn Dupont finished one-two, respectively, in the 800. Walter Herzog, a native of Switzerland, added further international flavor to the 800 race with a fifth-place showing overall.

In the field events, Pat O'Connor grabbed first with a 50-foot-1 throw and Dave Cobb took the long jump with a 21-2¼ leap. Andy Knoedel went 6-6 for the high jump crown while Steve Brewer was the only pole vaulter to make the 14-6 height.

The Iowa men will travel to Minnesota this weekend to compete in an open meet.

Iowa softball team loses three on trip

The Iowa softball team had difficulty in putting a "complete" game together during this weekend's road trip to Southwest Missouri State and came back with a 1-3 record.

The Hawkeye women began the weekend against St. Louis University and dropped a 5-2 decision. Pitcher Jayne Brinkman, who took the loss, didn't allow an earned run but Iowa committed five errors and could not capitalize on 10 hits. First-baseman Mary Baker went 2-for-3 at the plate to lead Iowa hitters in that contest. Brinkman helped her own cause by going 2-for-2.

In Iowa's second contest Saturday, the Iowa women lost to host Southwest Missouri State in a low-scoring 1-0 affair. Shortstop Linette Wieland got Iowa's only hit in the sixth ining and turned in a sparkling defensive performance.

Junior Cindy Carney pitched an outstanding game and allowed only one run in the third. However, that run in the pitching duel led to Iowa's loss.

Coach Jane Hagedorn's club came back Sunday morning to win its only game on the trip, a 5-1 victory over St. Louis. Carney pitched another brilliant game in allowing only one run and six hits. Iowa capitalized on three costly St. Louis errors to score one run in the third, one in the fourth and three in the final inning.

The four-game series ended on a sour note Sunday afternoon when the Hawkeyes fell to Southwest Missouri again, 4-0.

Iowa fell to 7-21 on the season and will face Western Illinois Tuesday.

Golfers in second

In their best showing of the season the Iowa Hawkeyes were in second place after the first round of the Wisconsin Golf Invitational Sunday, ahead of six other Big Ten squads.

The surprise in Iowa's shuffled line-up is sophomore Gregg Winkel, who fired a 69 to lead the Hawks. Winkel was only one stroke behind tournament leader Rocky Miller of Ohio State.

The Buckeyes are in first place with 362, followed by Iowa with 371. Only seven strokes separate Iowa from seventh-place Michigan State after the first round of play.

Dave Rummels also turned in one of his better performances of the season, shooting a 71 for a one-under-par. Senior Tom Loudon remained consistent for the Hawks by firing a 76, while Brian Elders recorded a 77 and Scott Howe shot 78.

The 36-hole tournament will continue today at the Cherokee Golf Course in Madison, Wis.

Women golfers slip from second in league meet

By SHARI ROAN
Associate Sports Editor

Iowa women's golf Coach Diane Thomason had been saying all week that her golfers could take second in the Big Ten Championship Friday and Saturday in Columbus, Ohio.

But when the Hawkeyes found themselves in second place behind champion Ohio State after the first 18 holes, several of the golfers had confessions.

"I think they really surprised themselves," Thomason said. "Elena (Callas) told me she really didn't think we could get second. I told them going in that there was no reason we couldn't finish in second."

Despite the convincing first round, the Iowa golfers still aren't believers after finishing third in the nine-team tournament Saturday. "We're pleased with third," Thomason admitted, "but not when we were looking at second."

Led by Callas' 74 and Sonya Stalberger's 75 on Friday, the Hawkeyes put together a fine team score of 316 on the Buckeyes' Scarlet golf course to take a four-shot lead over Michigan for second place after the first round. However, the Hawks, plagued all season by inconsistency, were unable to combine two good days, shooting a mediocre 334 the closing day.

AFTER LEADING the field by 14 shots, defending champion Ohio State found the incentive to shoot even better Saturday, firing team scores of 302 and 292 (594) to retain the crown by a stunning 51-stroke margin. The rounds were records on the Scarlet course while the Buckeyes' golfers swept the top six positions for individual medalist honors.

Ohio State's Rosie Jones took top honors by carding an even-par 72-72 (144) while teammate Cathy Cooke placed second at 149.

Thus, the real contest was for the remaining places. Michigan State pulled down fourth place (328) after the first round firing 317 for the second place overall (645). Iowa was third at 650 while Michigan fell to fourth at 659. Indiana finished fifth (660) with Minnesota sixth (664), Purdue seventh (675), Wisconsin eighth (677) and Illinois ninth (689).

For Iowa, Callas managed a tie for sixth-place medalist despite falling to an 83 after her opening 74 (157). Stalberger slid to an 85 (160) but tied for 11th-place medalist. Cathy Hockin fired 85-79 (164) for Iowa while Cathy Conway shot 86-87 (173). Mianne Mitchell carded 86-88 (174) and Becky Bagford combined rounds of 82-95 (177).

"Elena and Sonya really played super the first day," Thomason praised. "They shot 73 and 74 in the practice round."

"Becky Bagford really helped us a lot with her 82 Friday," she added. "And Cathy helped us a lot with the 79 the second day."

Hawkeyes upset Big Ten opponent

By CLAUDIA RAYMOND
Staff Writer

"It was a good upset," Coach John Winnie said after the men's tennis teams slipped by Northwestern, 5-4, Saturday to win its last Big Ten dual meet of the season.

The victory for Iowa came in the No. 2 doubles match. The Hawkeye duo of Jim Carney and Dave Maurer pulled Iowa out of the tie-breaker, overpowering Joey Rosenberg and Steve Qyamme, 5-7, 7-6, 7-6.

"They were the last match out on the courts," Winnie said. "It was four-all and they won the fifth match for us."

In other doubles competition, No. 1 Tom Holtmann and Matt Smith fell to the Wildcats' Paul Wei and Mike Balkin 6-2, 7-5. The No. 3 team of Greg Anderson and Dan Rustin also suffered a defeat 7-6, 7-4, by Bill Schafer and Tom O'Flynn.

Upsetting Northwestern in four of six singles matches, the Hawks picked up three straight victories from the No. 2, No. 3 and No. 4 players before No. 6 Rustin closed out the singles contest with a 6-4, 7-5 win over Tom Benezra.

No. 2 SMITH won his sixth straight singles match by out-matching Balkin, 6-7, 6-4, 7-6, and Anderson gained a comeback victory from Rosenberg, 4-6, 6-3, 7-5. At No. 4, Eric Pepping is recovering well from an ankle injury, defeating Schaefer, 6-1, 6-7, 6-3, and Rustin beat Benezra.

No. 1 Holtmann and No. 5 Tim Jacobson were defeated in singles play. Holtmann lasted three sets with Wei before losing, 4-6, 6-2, 7-5. Jacobson was beat by Quammer, 6-3, 6-1.

The victory over the Wildcats upped Iowa's streak to three, bringing its record to 4-6 in the Big Ten and 10-12 overall.

Lakers win first

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (UPI) — Los Angeles Coach Paul Westhead, a former Shakespearean professor, compared the first game of the NBA championship series to the opera.

"When you announce Carmen, Carmen is what you get," he said.

Carmen in Sunday's opening game was Kareem Abdul-

Jabbar, who scored 33 points, grabbed 14 rebounds and blocked 6 shots in the Lakers' 109-102 victory over the Philadelphia 76ers. Game 2 is scheduled for Wednesday night at the Forum.

Twin-bill sweep keeps Hawks in race

The Daily Iowan/N. Maxwell Haynes
Iowa second baseman Tony Burley (4) and right fielder Paul Zach get tangled up in the outfield during the second game of Saturday's doubleheader with Northwestern. Zach hung on to the ball for the out and the Hawks hung on for a twin-bill sweep.

By HOWIE BEARDSLEY
Staff Writer

Talk leading up to Saturday's Big Ten action on the Iowa diamond was that of a slugfest between the Hawkeyes and Northwestern. After all, the doubleheader clash found an Iowa team with an impressive .300 batting average up against a bunch of Wildcats with a respectable .277 pace.

Well, that kind of information had the makings for a dandy day of baseball. That is, of course, if the pitchers go along with such a game plan.

Saturday, the men on the hill wanted no part in such talk as the Hawks stayed in the midst of the conference race with a 2-1, 6-5 sweep.

Iowa will now begin preparations for this weekend's road test at Wisconsin and Minnesota sporting a 25-12 record and a 7-3 league mark behind frontrunner Michigan (9-1) and the Gophers (10-2).

IN ALL HONESTY, both the Hawkeyes and Northwestern (16-16, 3-7) did, indeed, have their fair share of base hits on a sunny afternoon that found a swirling wind playing constant tricks on balls hit to the outfield. Iowa scattered 11 hits during the nightcap and accounted for 16 on the day. The Wildcats totaled 13.

But the hit that will be most remembered was nothing more than a bloop single on the part of Iowa third baseman Ed Garton in the bottom of the ninth of the second contest. A run-scoring hit that, although looking like a lame duck in right field, destroyed a classic pitching duel between Steve Rooks and Northwestern's Mike Sjoerdsma and kept Coach Duane Banks' club in the thick of the title chase.

"I told them (the Iowa players) after the game that we have to start winning them easier than that or I'll have to get a pacemaker," Banks said. "We spent the entire day hitting the ball hard but hitting it right at somebody. And can you believe that the winning hit turns out to be a blooper?"

"But it's two wins," he added. "And we'll take them any way we can."

The Hawks used Dave Hoeksema's double to right field and John Hoyman's run-scoring single to left for a short-lived 1-0 lead in the nightcap. Northwestern, on a

Steve Bogan single to left, tied the score in the second before taking a 3-1 advantage in a rocky fourth frame for Iowa starter Jeff Green and Rooks.

THE WILDCAT UPRISING began with Tom Tucci reaching first with a walk and Brett Carver being hit by a Green fastball. Bogan then followed with a base on balls call to send Green to the dugout and allowing Doug Blake's bases loaded fielder's choice to send Tucci home with a run.

Rooks, in relief, finally bailed the Hawks out of the inning but not until a wild pitch helped Carver home for Northwestern's two-run margin.

"After the fourth, we were forced to play catchup the rest of the way," Banks said. "When we were down by two, I thought we might as well pack up the bags. But our guys just wouldn't quit."

Oddly enough, it might have been the keen eyes of Banks that got Iowa into extra innings while salvaging Saturday's sweep. In the fourth, Banks shot out of the dugout citing cather's interference by Carver. Home plate umpire Bob Virbeck agreed with the argument and signaled Tim Gassman to first. Center fielder Lance Platz then delivered a single to right to cut the deficit to 3-2.

Iowa appeared to gain its second wind in the sixth when Ed Garton's single up the middle and Gassman's single to left was followed by Platz' fielder's choice and a 3-3 deadlock. Northwestern, however, used consecutive line drive singles by Jon Osborne and Mark Zimmerman to gain a 5-3 verdict going into the Hawkeyes' half of the seventh.

THE IOWA COMEBACK began with Hoeksema singling to right and designated hitter Ed Lash sending a double to the right-field corner to put the score at 5-4. Paul Zach's sacrifice fly to right was responsible for the 5-5 standoff after regulation play.

In the ninth, following an eighth inning that found the Hawks leaving the bases full, Hoyman singled to right and reached second on Zach's sacrifice bunt before Garton lofted his blooper to right to end the contest.

Rooks was responsible for five of the Wildcats' eight hits after working 5 1-3 innings. The senior from Cedar Rapids recorded one strikeout en route to his initial win of the season without a loss. Sjoerdsma was saddled with his third defeat against a pair of wins after going the distance with two strikeouts and six walks.

In the opener, Lash's first-inning single to right scoring Tony Burley and Hoyman's run-scoring single to left in the third was all that was needed for Iowa and pitcher Tom Mullen. The Davenport junior gave way to five hits while notching two strikeouts and a walk to run his record to 4-1.

A sixth-place showing in the Big Ten isn't usually something to celebrate, but Iowa Women's Track Coach Jerry Hassard didn't let it bother him. In fact, he went on a canoeing trip Sunday after returning from the league outdoor meet at Minnesota late Saturday night.

But placings can certainly be deceptive when 11 points were all that separated third place from sixth. And the Hawks racked up 10 more points than in last year's fourth-place finish.

"I was really happy with the team," Hassard said. "The sixth place we got doesn't look that great on paper but it was really tough competition and our team really stayed in it."

"You can't really look at the final team placings in a meet where the scoring is so close like this," he added. "You have to look at intangibles like the competition we were up against and the personal performances."

WISCONSIN captured the crown easily in tallying 157 2-3 points with Michigan State finishing runner-up with 90. The Badgers' win completed a season sweep on the league running crowns with previous cross country and indoor championships.

Ohio State (73), Indiana (66 1-3), Purdue (66) and Iowa (62) packed the middle followed by Michigan (48), Illinois (32), Minnesota (23) and Northwestern (1).

Chris Davenport highlighted the Iowa effort with a third-place showing in the 400-meter hurdles. The freshman's 60.57-second finish (electronic timing) easily met national standards for both the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women and Amateur Athletic Union meets slated for later this month.

Diane Steinhart (61.97) was fifth in that race with Michele DeJarnatt (62.40) finishing seventh. Steinhart also grabbed fourth in the 100 hurdles with a 14.86 time.

KAY STORMO repeated her 1979 effort with another runner-up finish in the 800 in 2:10.59. The sophomore went on to anchor the two-mile relay squad in 2:09.2 for second. Rose Drapcho, Sue Marshall and Julie Williams were part of that effort.

Terri Soldan set a new Iowa record in the discus with a 134-foot-8½ toss for third. Maureen Abel accounted for another third with an 18-2 leap in the long jump behind Wisconsin's Pat Johnson and Illinois' Becky Kaiser, who are No. 1 and 2 in the nation.

Clara Simon earned third in the javelin with a 134-3 throw.

The mile relay of Steinhart, DeJarnatt, Davenport and Stormo blazed to third in 3:52.51 with the 440 relay of Colleen Gaupp, Mary Knoblauch, Abel and Diane Emmons racing to fourth in 47.72.

Gaupp sped to fifth in the 200 (25.12) and sixth in the 100 (12.16) while Marshall took sixth in the 1,500 (4:36.60). Hassard said he considered these three events to be the toughest of the meet and believed the Iowa runners did well to place as high as they did.

Bev Boddicker repeated her fifth-place showing from last year in the 10,000 with a 37:29.6 time.

Joan Crawford and Sterling Hayden in
JOHNNY GUITAR (1954)

Nicholas Ray's perverse Freudian Western sometimes borders on parody, but its unrelenting intensity gives our laughter a nervous edge. Sterling Hayden is the anonymous gunslinger. Joan Crawford - the war between love and pride eating her insides out - is the courageous saloon-keeper, and Mercedes McCambridge (who dubbed the Devil's voice for The Exorcist) is the stereotypical hysterical female. Ernest Borgnine adds an extra touch of sleaze. (110 min.) Color. Mon. 7:00, Tues. 8:30.

THE POWER AND THE GLORY (1933)

Spencer Tracy, in one of his first major roles, stars as a track walker who becomes a railroad tycoon. Paramount production head Jesse Lasky called Preston Sturges' initial venture into screenwriting "the most perfect script I'd ever seen." The studio even coined a new term - "narratage" - for the flashback structure that would later provide a model for the construction of Citizen Kane. Also starring Colleen Moore and Ralph Morgan. Directed by William K. Howard with cinematography by the young James Wong Howe. (76 min.) B & W. Mon. 9:00, Tues. 7:00

It's too bad that the "black shirts" couldn't have been playing Indiana Saturday rather than the "white shirts."

Iowa Football Coach Hayden Fry will be a very happy man if his team comes out on top against the Hoosiers in this fall's opener by the same 48-7 decision as his No. 1 unit earned in Saturday's annual spring game. An opening win would certainly avenge the stunning 30-26 upset Indiana pulled in Iowa City last fall in the last 58 seconds of the game.

Indiana Coach Lee Corso isn't about to grant Fry an easy win this fall but he did admit that the Hawks' spring finale was very convincing.

"I'm certainly impressed with the caliber of talent that the coaching staff has built up here," the Hoosier said during halftime as he took a break from scouting. "They seem to be very well-drilled and well-disciplined."

"I can see that they can be a definite contender in the top two or three teams in the league," Corso added. "There's no question in my mind."

THE HAWKS rightfully earned the Hoosier coach's praise as the No. 1 squad rushed for 240 yards with Dean McKillip accounting for 82 yards and three touchdowns. Sophomores Dwayne Williams and Jeff Brown continued to battle for Dennis Mosley's tailback position with the twosome combining for 142 yards. Williams, who rushed for 72, nipped Brown by two yards.

"Brown has really come on this spring," Fry praised. "And we've made progress with the running backs but there's still no one established the position. It's obvious that a lot of the guys coming in next fall will have a chance. I'm looking forward to seeing how some of these young men can break up a game."

Considering the game as a whole, it looks like the Hawks have a good chance to enjoy their first winning season since 1961. But Fry was a bit baffled at the lopsided score.

"It's obvious that there's a tremendous drop off between the No. 1 and 2 units," Fry moaned. "And that really bothers me. It shouldn't be that way. We're just weak on depth and we'll be that way for two to three years until we are able to recruit our type of player."

"But then maybe our number ones are awfully that good," Fry continued. "They did the necessary bread and butter things consistently today."

THE BLACK SHIRTS took the lead with a one-yard scoring drive by McKillip ending a 19-play, 80-yard march with 5 minutes, 1 second remaining in the first quarter. Reggie Roby kicked his first of three extra point attempts as the first string took an initial lead.

The No. 2 unit retaliated with 15 seconds left, however, as Pete Gales hit Nate Person for a 54-yard touchdown pass. Lon Olejniczak's extra point attempt knotted the game, 7-7.

In the second quarter the Ones took command once again with Williams plunging in on a six-yard pass from Phil Suess and Roby's kick giving the No. 1 group the lead for good.

McKillip scored on another one-yard run in the second quarter and repeated that act in the third. Gales took over Suess' role in the fourth quarter and quickly ran in a touchdown of his own with 5:13 left. Thirteen seconds later, Bobby Stoops got in on the scoring spree and intercepted a Tom Grogan pass for a 28-yard run. Lou Burke then recovered a fumble in the end zone with 1:40 remaining to ice the No. 1 unit's victory. Scott Shilling finished off the scoring with his third successful extra point kick to seal a 48-7 win.

EVEN THOUGH Suess only completed 10 passes of 21 Saturday, Fry still tabbed him as the top quarterback this spring based on consistency. He added, however, that Gales and Gordy Bohannon proved that they are both capable of taking over the No. 1 position in the fall.

The 20,000-plus crowd was only shown 25 percent of the offensive strategy and one defensive set.

"What can you look for in a spring game anyway?" Fry asked afterwards. "It's like taking a bath with a rain coat on. You're only going through the motions."

Iowa fans will just have to wait until that Indiana matchup Sept. 13 in Bloomington.
