Transit funds needed

The proposed $2.3 million increase in state aid to local transit systems must be approved.

The Iowa Transportation Commission has proposed that $2.3 million be allocated to local transit systems for maintenance and improvements. The request will now be considered by Gov. Robert Ray. If approved, it will go to the legislature.

According to Ian MacGillivray, director of the Iowa Department of Transportation planning and research division, "If the funding is not approved, some of the systems will have to raise fares, go out of business, cut services or increases (local) taxes.

The Iowa City and Coralville transit systems do not need the funding as desperately as other systems around the state, according to local transit officials. Still, the local bus systems have fallen on hard times. Coralville Transit is badly understaffed, and Manager Peter Allen says the system "could use anything we can get.

In April, the Iowa City system was forced to raise fares from 35 to 50 cents. For many Iowa City residents and UI students who depend on public transportation, the 44 percent increase in the price of a ride is largely unaffordable, according to local transit officials.

It is a difficult time to catechize local transit systems; funding for local transit systems should be approved without delay.

A muddy campaign

The presidential campaign is getting muddier. President Jimmy Carter's latest campaign rhetoric indicates that he has sunk to the lowest depths of fear and hate he accused Ronald Reagan of using just a few weeks ago.

Having a speech in Minneapolis on Monday, Carter said the election will determine "whether or not this America will be unified, or if this battle between the forces of good and evil, the battle between black from white, from Christianty, from North from South, from the Orient and the Occident, from the north and south will be won."

This is a profligate statement, and it is disturbing because Carter said it on television. It has been reported that the president's communications staff was prepared to release the statement as a handout, butiba transit systems in the mass of cost and rapid use of private vehicles. Even the news that the war on drugs and inflation remained a reality in the world of oil supplies, it was generally agreed that conserva- tion efforts must be increased.

The energy crunch has prompted greater use of public transportation and mass transit than ever before. In July, Iowa City saw a significant increase in ridership. The Iowa City public transit service was approved by the Iowa legislature.

Officials: Room N-98 ‘non-event’

By Craig Goodwin

The University Affairs Office here announced Wednesday that an unpublished seminar was held in the room. According to an official with the office, the seminar was held to discuss the possibility of converting the room into a conference room.

The seminar was attended by members of the Faculty Senate, the Campus Planning and Development Committee, and representatives from the Office of the Vice President for Administration. The purpose of the seminar was to assess the feasibility of converting the room into a conference room, which would require the installation of new lighting, audiovisual equipment, and seating arrangements.

A representative from the Office of the Vice President for Administration noted that the room has served as a lecture hall in the past but has not been used for this purpose in recent years.

He added that the university is considering options for the room, including converting it into a conference room to accommodate larger meetings and events. The representative also mentioned that the university is seeking feedback from the faculty and students to determine the best use of the room.

Registration:
Pick up registration forms at the Student Activities Center, 1st Floor, LMU. Registration deadline: Oct. 25.

For further information contact the Homecoming Council at (513) 230-7217 extension 18.

E. H. Lee, 6th-year senior, said that the seminar was a good opportunity for faculty and students to discuss the potential uses of the room.

Lee added that he has attended seminars in the room in the past and believes that it could be a valuable resource for the university.

The seminar concluded with a vote to recommend converting the room into a conference room. The recommendation will be sent to the Board of Trustees for approval.

Leaders in the effort to call a state constitutional convention Wednesday announced formation of a group of teachers to support their effort — a day before the state’s education agency announced its opposition to the convention.

The Illinois Education Association, the largest teachers’ union in Illinois, announced Wednesday it will campaign against the convention, an issue that has been a political lightning rod for years.

But the teachers are not the only ones concerned about the convention. Many teachers worry that the state’s education funding formula could be altered, leading to more inequalities in funding among schools.

The teachers’ union announced it will hold rallies and forums in the weeks leading up to the convention, which is set to be held in November.

In the meantime, teachers across the state are continuing to organize and speak out against the convention.

Baking requirements such as shoot down the reactor's rate and report the findings and planned course of action back to the regulatory agency by Dec. NRC spokesman Joe Gilleland said the move was necessary because of the problem at Browns Ferry and that reactor's rate was increased by the fact that there are a large number of GE reactors similar to the unit, located at TVA's huge facility about 80 miles from Athens. He added, however, none of the utilities would be required to take their reactors offline while they awaited installation of the new safeguards.

TVAs said the move was prompted to be an accident at TVA's huge Browns Ferry nuclear plant in Athens. SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) - A pronounced facial scar resulted in no effect on how much he was paid, even a researcher of California State University at Sacramento.

Robert Mogul, a professor of business administration, based his conclusion on a study of a group of payments to professional football players.

"My image and regardless of sport, players from other race are rewarded equally for athletic performance," Mogul said Friday.

He said his judgment performance in the name of professional quarterbacks, and in the case of basketball, guards and running backs, generally point averages, team goals, free throws, rebounds, assists and steals per minute, and field goal and free percentage.

"In most standards, black basketball players perform better than whites, although the differences are not significantly large. On the average, blacks are also paid more, but not significantly," he said in research on baseball players.

Mogul said, "There is no evidence that race and war against black athletes," although he "may be more negatively affected with higher concentrations of blacks in the method and few numbers of black players."

Mogul said he also found no racial discrimination against black football players although he acknowledged the probable existence of racial discrimination in other forms.
