U.S. will step up aid to Salvador

WASHINGTON (CFS) - Five- star admirals have arrived in El Salvador, bringing to $1 billion of U.S. military payment to oil-producing nations of the world.

In addition to the State Department and congressional leaders, the admirals are accompanied by several hundred American military specialists.

The admirals will train the Nicaragua special forces, the same forces that are now in El Salvador.

The admirals are expected to stay in El Salvador until the end of the year.

Student aid cutbacks

Higher education was not left unscathed when President Ronald Ronald A. Reagan invoked budget cuts to control government spending. Although these are preliminary raids, the president’s proposals for fiscal year 1982 would significantly reduce federal aid for higher education.

Reagan’s figures are not directly comparable to former Presi- dice Carter’s proposals because of different economic assumptions and budgetary calculations. Nevertheless, Reagan would provide less federal aid for colleges and university students.

Limiting student eligibility

Hard hit by the Reagan plan are two of higher education’s most important federal aid programs—Pell Grants, properly known as Federal Educational Opportunity Grants, and Guaranteed Student Loans.

At the University, Pell Grants provide $15.5 million to approximately 3,200 students. Reagan has requested $12.4 million for fiscal 1982, compared to Carter’s $15.5 million. To allow for the reductions, the formula for determining a student’s financial need would be revised.

Reagan’s proposals for this program would create hardship for middle-income families who do not have enough money to provide for their children’s education, but are denied access to cash in need of financial assistance. The cut would be more acceptable if Reagan’s recommendations left other ways for middle-income parents to afford to send their children to college.

The largest funding cut would be for the Guaranteed Student Loan program. Reagan has requested $130 million, compared to Carter’s $225.5 million proposal. This drastic reduction—a-approximately $95 million or ten percent of the estimated for fiscal year 1981—would mean a delay in providing at least one of the following: a further, an eligibility limitation based upon need, possibly followed by a ceiling on family income, could be imposed. Second, the government could end its practice of paying interest on loans when students are still in school. Third, the president could increase the interest rates from 5 percent to market rates.

There are several problems with these proposals. The eligibility limitation—which combined with that of Pell Grants—would drastically limit the availability of aid for students from middle-income families. At the University, more than 8,000 students were processed this year; approximately 80 percent of the applicants come from families with an income of more than $5,000. Given an income ceiling in the Eligibility Office, which John M. Steuer, director of financial aid, believes is the most likely device to trim aid in this area, the number of families with incomes above $5,000 would be drastically reduced.

It is not known how many students will be left without any source of aid. Financial need forms have not been kept because the need has not been a requirement for receiving a GSF. But evidence of the other cuts suggest that there would be some difficulty in assessing a student’s eligibility under the Reagan program.

By ending the postponement of interest payments while students are in school, the government would lose some educational leverage. This contrasts Reagan’s plan to provide federal aid only to those truly need. If there is a change in this aspect of the program, Reagan should consider an eligibility requirement that would allow only those students whose income is below a certain level to receive educational assistance. This could reduce some of the pressure on low-income students.

There also has been talk of requiring students to begin paying interest on their outstanding debt as soon as they enter college. Needless to say, many students would still be embarrassed.'

Reagan’s plans to place the student burden on educational institutions, could result in drastic cuts in future years, especially for those who might be cut off by the current program. Moreover, there are many more people who would be understood by such a plan. Similarly, although Reagan has requested that educational institutions limit their students to one-third of the average student body, a recent comparison of these estimates at one college has been overestimated. It is infeasible, however, that the president’s proposals would restrict such a ratio.

Legislative proposals to offset reductions

One of the most controversial measures—tuition tax credits—will be requested later. While appropriate as an addition to past have long recognized the value of education by establishing a policy of free tuition, it should be a right. Society and the government

Students who are denied educational opportunities by federal high school at the University have been receiving educational leverage, because the House is working well. Students in this society have already experienced situations toward welfare

Watt: Let private interests search public land for strategic minerals

By R. E. Allen

WASHINGTON—Interior Secretary James Watt pressed Thursday to encourage private companies to search public lands for strategic minerals, saying his department is no longer prepared to protect the nation's mineral resources.

"We must allow the private sector the opportunity to explore the mineral potential in public lands," said, planning to oppose a 17-year policy of permitting federal exploration in wilderness areas.

Watt foresaw a future situation where "the mineral resources in which this country is not interested would be sold to foreign countries, and the fifth estate of the nation's resources would be owned by foreign governments."-Interior

The most important of the minerals needed by the steel and aluminum industries for domestic policy-are no worse than white Republicans, the crowd of-people-who-hung on his every word in the crowd of-have seen him. They are not trying to be heroic.

"We think the public land system is the best answer to the problem of national defense."-Interior

We seek protection for the right to religious freedom under the First Amendment. The real issue is the quality of education in the schools. The real issue is the quality of the lives of the children. The real issue is the lives of the women. The real issue is the lives of the men. The real issue is the lives of the children.-Interior

Another federal fiscal budget must be presented to the district from missing the share of the energy project, he said. Watt, who has been an energy expert, said the project could save the state $10 million a year.

"I don't think we will be doing anything alike in this time with the energy grant program, because of budget cuts," Palen said.

FEDERAL ENERGY grants are available for projects in the construction of energy conservation measures, said Jim French, a regional coordinator for the Iowa Energy System.

"It would be impossible for one area to supply all the needs of the community," he said.

Iowa Senate budget cuts may affect welfare programs

By Bob Nathan

DES MOINES — The Iowa Senate voted Monday to cut $1.1 million from this year's budget, including a welfare program for children, at unsatisfactory schools. Other cuts approved by the Senate for the next fiscal year were not available at press time.

The cuts approved by the Senate were intended to reduce spending on state programs. Many of the cuts were recommended by the Senate's Appropriations Committee.

The cuts include a $1.1 million reduction in the state's welfare program for children at unsatisfactory schools. The program was created in 1981 to help local communities provide educational services to children who are chronically absent from school.

The cuts also include a $550,000 reduction in the state's education program for children with special needs. The program is intended to provide special education services to children who have been diagnosed with disabilities.

The cuts also include a $400,000 reduction in the state's education program for children with hearing impairments. The program is intended to provide educational services to children who are deaf or hard of hearing.

The cuts also include a $250,000 reduction in the state's education program for children with visual impairments. The program is intended to provide educational services to children who are blind or have low vision.

The cuts also include a $250,000 reduction in the state's education program for children with physical disabilities. The program is intended to provide educational services to children who have a physical disability.

The cuts also include a $250,000 reduction in the state's education program for children with emotional or behavioral disorders. The program is intended to provide educational services to children who have a serious emotional or behavioral disorder.

The cuts also include a $250,000 reduction in the state's education program for children with developmental disabilities. The program is intended to provide educational services to children who have a developmental disability.

The cuts also include a $250,000 reduction in the state's education program for children with multiple disabilities. The program is intended to provide educational services to children who have multiple disabilities.

The cuts also include a $250,000 reduction in the state's education program for children with speech and language impairments. The program is intended to provide educational services to children who have a speech and language impairment.

The cuts also include a $250,000 reduction in the state's education program for children with mild disabilities. The program is intended to provide educational services to children who have a mild disability.

CAC condemns negative check-off plan

By Elizabeth Flemming

The Collegiate American Council, a group of student leaders, is warning against a possible check-off plan that could affect their students. The council, which is affiliated with the National Collegiate Athletics Association, is concerned about the potential for a negative check-off system that could reduce funding for student organizations. They are urging the state Legislature to consider the impact of such a system before implementing it.

UNION RESPONSES

The Iowa State Senate and House of Representatives have both responded to the council's concerns. The Senate has passed a resolution expressing its opposition to the negative check-off plan. The House has also passed a similar resolution. Both resolutions emphasize the importance of student representation in the decision-making process and the potential negative impact of a negative check-off system on student organizations.

State legislators try to live on welfare

(Des Moines, Iowa) - State legislators are trying to live on welfare to show the difficulty of doing so. They are participating in a program that allows them to receive welfare benefits for a period of time, in an effort to better understand the challenges faced by those who rely on such assistance.

Democrats protest El Salvador aid

(Washington, D.C.) - Senate Democrats are protesting the proposed aid package for El Salvador. They argue that the assistance is unnecessary and that it may be used to support a repressive regime.

THE WINNER
OF THE DRAKE-BRAG game will get the Motion of the West's Southern Ohio game Thursday in the second round but Ortegel is concentrating on Thursday's game.

"Let's face it," Ortegel said, "this team has a lot of talent.

The home court advantage will allow Lloyd, embattled "Buck Magic," to get an edge since the team's two previous tests, Bradley and Evansville State, are both located on the road.

"I think we've been playing better," he said. "The Bearcats are a very good group." he said. "They are a great team, and they know how to play.

Winning this game will be very important for us,
"Ortegel said.

The Bulldogs, 6-9 in the conference and 16-8 overall, are one of the highest-scoring teams in the conference.

The Bulldogs have scored an average of 56 points per game this season.

The Bulldogs' defense has been the key to their success, as they have allowed only 43 points per game on average.

The Bulldogs will look to continue their winning streak as they face the 6-9 Bears in Thursday's game.

Wrestlers smash marks; top Big Ten

By Jay Christenson

It's a record-breaking wrestling season managed to smash more records than even one's expectations. Big Ten title in Madison, Wis. Wednesday night.Daemon Lewis (148-pounds) earned the conference title in a 10-1 decision over Maryland's Lauren. He won by tying the title match at 7-7 in the final round. He had close to a 5-3 lead at one point in the final round, but Lewis would rally to record the pin at 6-1. Lewis's effort marked his second straight Big Ten title and his third in a row.

Preschoolers flip over Iowa gymnastics course

By Stephen Mace

They may not be future Olympians, but they are having fun.\n
Enrollment is one of the major objectives of the University of Iowa preschool gymnastics program. (UI)\n
Besides using the skills and abilities children have as they are enrolled, the program also helps to develop their self-confidence and body awareness skills as integral parts of the class.\n
More than 100 boys and girls, ages 3 through 6, attend the dance course twice a week at the Field House North Gym.

Lori, a kindergarten graduate, has been involved in gymnastics for seven years. She is the school's private instructor and was responsible for ensuring that all children are engaged in the program.

"I LOVE gymnastics and really enjoy working with kids," said Lori. "I get a lot of joy from being able to show them that they can do something that is difficult but FUN!"\n
Many of the children's parents are UI faculty and staff members. UI preschool athletic director, Dan Galyt, said that the program helps to build self-esteem and self-confidence in these young athletes.

Children are taught striking and tumbling, flips and turns, and other basic gymnastic skills. Many of the children's routines are equally challenging. One mother said that her daughter enjoyed the program because she had fun.

Another mother added, "It is fabulous to watch your child perform in front of the class all the time!" \n
A mother added, "It is nothing to be ashamed about!"\n
GEORGE TARR, 18-year-old Iowa, said that he was so enthusiastic about his routines that he could not stop talking about it at home.

According to Tarr, having fun and making new friends are most important to him.

"I am also learning new skills all the time," he added.

Another student, who is also enrolled in gymnastics, said that he enjoys learning new skills and being part of a team.

"I have been enjoying learning new skills and being part of a team," he said.

TARR: "I love the children in this class. They are so much fun!"\n
How will this affect the children in later life?\n
Experts are divided on the long-term effects of participating in preschool gymnastics. Some say that it helps children develop a love for physical activity, enhances coordination, and improves self-esteem. Others believe that it is too early to determine if there are any long-term benefits to participating in preschool gymnastics.

Iowa swim team takes stock in Brask

By R. Forrest Woodard

The Iowa Hawkeyes swimming and diving team recently took part in a meet in Brask, Minn. The Hawkeyes finished third in the meet, with 214 points, and the University of Minnesota won with 272 points. The Hawkeyes had a solid performance, but the top team was not as strong as expected.
