Regents present budget to legislature
By Deborah Kilman

The state Board of Regents presented Wednesday its $39.4 million increase in spending over the next two years - the largest increase in military spending in state history - as part of Washington's recommendations to the legislature. The recommendation, said Weinberger, should come to Congress through the president's revised federal budget

Internships offer taste of Washington

By Dame McFarlin

The U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Resources Inventory is one of many internships available to students interested in political science. The agency is one of the few that offer paid internships, and internships in the political science department.

The program provides opportunities for undergraduate and graduate students to gain hands-on experience in the field of political science. Students can work on a variety of projects, including policy analysis, research, and writing. The program is open to students of all majors, as long as they are enrolled in a degree program in political science.

Students interested in the program should contact their university's political science department for more information. The program typically requires a minimum of 15-20 hours per week and lasts for 10 weeks. Students are paid a stipend of $12.50 per hour, with the opportunity for extension at the end of the program.

Of church and state

A California father has gone to court in an attempt to require the state to give him his son's religious textbooks on the Bible. The move is based on a recent California Supreme Court decision that the state is not allowed to require religious instruction in public schools.

The father, who is a member of the Jehovah's Witnesses, argues that his children have been forced to attend a public school that teaches the Bible as a religious text. The court ruled that this violates the constitutional separation of church and state.

The decision has sparked a debate about the role of religion in public education, with some parents and religious groups arguing that faith-based education is necessary for a well-rounded education.

In response to the court's decision, the state has announced plans to provide religious textbooks to students who request them, allowing parents to choose the books that best align with their beliefs.

Weed-control plan

When county residents recently met with the Johnson County Board of Supervisors to discuss the problem of weed eradication, the sentiment was mixed. Some residents asked for the practice of spraying weeds along county roads to be ended. County resident Don Spencer, for example, claimed that the herbicides used by the county are carcinogenic. "I know myself," he said. "I was a chemical engineer before I retired, and I know that these chemicals can be harmful." However, others defended the practice, citing the need to control weeds that could interfere with agricultural production or cause other problems.

The board eventually voted to continue the weed-control program, with some members expressing concern about the potential for health risks associated with herbicide use.

Letters

Coverage of Poland

The editor,

I would like to clear up a few points that were raised in your recent coverage of Poland. I believe your report was based on incomplete information.

Firstly, the Polish government has not imposed a ban on foreign workers. The measures announced were aimed at ensuring that workers coming into Poland were adequately protected.

Secondly, although prices have increased, this is largely due to the recent devaluation of the Polish zloty. The government has taken steps to address the issue and is working to stabilize the currency.

Lastly, I would like to clarify that the Polish government is committed to upholding democratic principles and protecting human rights.

Yours sincerely,

[Name]

Editor's note:

The Polish government has been facing challenges in recent months, including political instability and economic difficulties. The government has taken steps to address these issues, including increasing prices to help fund social programs.

Haig clarifies Salvadoran policy

"The entire objectives of El Salvador are in return to stability that country through the government that this country support," said White House press secretary Larry Speakes. He added, "It is our hope that the government that is in control of El Salvador will continue to support the Nixon administration." The administration planned no response.

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., said it should tell adversaries, "There is no reason to think that it's anything more than an isolated event."

Clark

"We must begin now. We no longer have the leverage of a policy which to correct years of neglect. The margins for error are slim. The stakes are high. Anybody who touches the President's armaments program is going to be in a lot of trouble."

The page numbers mentioned in the text are not consistent, indicating that the text may have been extracted from a paginated document but without the page numbers. The text appears to be discussing a policy related to El Salvador, with references to military support and strategic decisions. The excerpt highlights the importance of maintaining stability through consistent support and the potential consequences of any changes in policy. It also touches on the administration's stance and the considerations for future actions.
High energy costs: fuel interest in stoves

By Ruth Delaney

The price of wood burning stoves has increased in the last decade and continues to be a topic of interest.

"I've seen a lot of interest in wood burning stoves over the past few years," said Eric Linderman, a member of the Des Moines Wood Burning Stove Club. "There's a lot of talk about the high cost of fuel and how wood burning stoves can help save money in the long run.

My name is Al Smith, and I'm a long-time owner of a wood burning stove. I've been using it for years and I can honestly say it's been a great investment. It's a lot cheaper than fuel oil or electricity, and it's also a lot more comfortable.

In fact, I've even been able to sell wood burning stoves to my friends and family. They've all been interested in the idea of using wood as a fuel source, and they've all been happy with their purchases.

But it's not just me who's sold on wood burning stoves. There are a lot of people out there who are interested in the idea of using wood as a fuel source. It's a great way to save money and it's also a good way to reduce your carbon footprint.

If you're interested in learning more about wood burning stoves, I would recommend checking out the Des Moines Wood Burning Stove Club. They have a lot of information and resources available, and they're always happy to help people who are interested in learning more about wood burning stoves.

In the end, it's really up to you whether or not you want to invest in a wood burning stove. But if you're looking for a way to save money and reduce your carbon footprint, it's definitely worth considering.

Pig Earth combines forms to tell tale of French peasants

By Kenneth Berger

John Berger has raised the discourse of literary form to the heights of an academic pursuit. Whether we like it or not, Pig Earth is a part of the intellectual matrix of our time. Whether we like it or not, the discussion of how language is used in Pig Earth is as much a part of the book as the content of the book.

Books

Pig Earth is a measured appreciation of Jean Loiseau’s life, love to the ground. John Berger combines emotion, reason and passion to interpret the lives of 20th century French peasants. The preciseness from many angles, Berger’s use of the language of the peasants, Berger’s use of first hand testimonies, Berger’s use of second hand testimonies, Berger’s use of first hand and second hand testimonies.

"King Stag" won't ever be the same

By Judith Green
Ad/Entertainment Editor

The King Stag story we are about to tell isn't for some one who is in a rush to Sunday night. The story is slow, its performance is pale. what tonight is will Saturday's is Friday's story.

All this in a world, for the King Stag, deeply adapted from a script by the 300 century Italian master Carlo Goldoni by Princeton Professor Royston, plastics in his direction and a company of 14
in an improvised play.

In its opening scene, before the audience had a chance to understand what it was they were in for, a king of a very much the spirit of the original. We have the King's story, not his speech.

BOYSTER, an experienced professional director working on a character in Bardog, one of the theater executives, is trying to find the king of his kingdom storyExecute. The parrot (Beth Jones) is really an enchanted guardian, protector of the tangerine colored magician, guardian of the tangerine - colored magical animals complicate the royal courtship, but not to the extreme of the original.

According to the company's publicist, Jamie Stag, designed by James Smead, the open air productions are not a scripted play.

The King Stag is extremely suitable for children, who will find it a better plot for their imagination.

The open air productions are appropriate for students, for the open air productions are not, the story takes place in a bird's eye view of the details of the story. The open air productions are suitable for the audience.

The King Stag is one of the few to have a working on a purpose the play is to be a happy ending. The King Stag is one of the few plays where the audience is not automatically renewed.

In the beginning... the methods of the original:
The Stag, is an improvised play.

The company's overall improvisation is as it should be, for it is a lime-honored theatrical success. The King Stag is one of the few plays where the audience is not automatically renewed.

When the heat's on, Kettenacker sizzles

By Mike Kaer

The mark of excellence in an athlete is not only in her or his ability to perform well and win often. There is another quality which separates the mark of excellence in an athlete and the mere, occasional winner. That attribute is winning when the pressure is on. The University of Iowa's Karen Kettenacker has that.
ACC selects all-stars

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Virginia's John Salley, Florida State's Keith Hamilton, and Loyola's Dean Meminger were named first team All-America basketball players Monday, the NCAA announced. The voting for the all-ACC basketball team was announced Monday.

Salley, a 6-7, 230-pound forward, led Virginia to the NCAA championship game. He was named the most outstanding player of the tournament.

Hamilton, a 6-5, 240-pound guard, led Florida State to a 22-6 record and a trip to the NCAA tournament.
