Regents present budget to legislature

By Scott Kilman

SPRING

DES MOINES - Capital requests, the one bright spot for the UI in its proposed 1981-83 budget, were scrutinized by legislators Wednesday during the first round of budget hearings on new construction.

The state Board of Regents presented its $84.6 million capital improvements budget for 1981-83 to the Joint Subcommittee on Education - a request that includes the demolition and replacement of the UI Old Armory with a new $6.3 million Communications Building and a new $5.6 million Theater Addition.

The regent's requests cover construction and remodeling at the three state universities, the Iowa School for the Deaf and the Iowa Braille and Sight Saving School

The regents also are asking for $3.4 million to remodel the UI Chemistry-Botany Building, $21.2 million to build a new UI law complex, $1.4 million to construct a road on the west side of the campus for access to the UI Hospitals and $2 million to correct fire hazards at

THE REGENTS have said they are optimistic legislators will follow Gov. obert Ray's Jan. 29 recommendation that the capital projects be funded by

"We are very grateful for the governor's recommendation. We have every hope that the legislature will agree with that after their thoughtful consideration," said Mary Louise

Petersen, regents' president. Ray's bonding proposal would allow the regents to pay for the construction projects without straining the state's ight treasury, she said

The proposal would cost the state $100,000 in 1981-82 and $1 million in 1982-83, but would generate $58.1 million for new construction. Petersen

Ray's recommendation, however, excludes $39.4 million requested by the board for construction and remodeling at the regents' institutions. The governor did not recommend funding for a new UI law center.

UI PRESIDENT Willard Boyd said the state's 10-year record of appropriating funds for only $5.9 million of the UI's total $131 million in construction costs "places us at the bottom of the Big Ten and the bottom of the 11-state (Midwest) area. Even Midwestern schools which are less than half our size have received higher capital appropriations."

He added, "This is a great record of self-help" but in the next biennum, "we must now look to you for the capital appropriations needed to replace and remodel the unsafe and woefully inadequate Old Armory, the law building and the Chemistry-Botany Building," he told lawmakers.

Boyd said the regents' first priority for new buildings is to replace the "old, Old Armory." Classrooms and laboratories in the 75-year-old "unsafe and seriously inadequate structure" are crowded, the basement often is flooded in the spring.

The UI's second priority is to build a new law school in University Heights. The present building does not have enough space for study and research by the law faculty and the college's 600

A third UI priority is to remodel the 58-year-old Chemistry-Botany

Military asks $32.6 billion budget hike

By Richard C. Gross

WASHINGTON - The Pentagon appealed to Congress Wednesday for a $32.6 billion increase in defense spending over the next two years - the biggest increase in military spending Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said the money was needed because of a "year of neglect by President Carter.'

He appeared before the Senate Armed Services Committee seeking the highest peacetime defense budget in U.S. history for 1982 in order to pursue President Reagan's policy of preserving peace through strength, he said.

MORE SHIPS, planes and tanks, and $11.5 billion worth of increased combat readiness are necessary to project American armed might to the defense of Western interests worldwide, particularly in the Persian Gulf region which Weinberger described as "the umbilical cord of the industrialized free world.

'That area, Southwest Asia and the gulf, is and will be the fulcrum of contention for the forseeable future," the defense secretary said.

To support a U.S. presence in the region, the Pentagon earmarked $81 million in construction projects, in-cluding harbor dredging at Mombasa, Kenya; building at Berbera Point, Somalia, and upgrading the air base on the Indian Ocean island of Diego Gar-

Inherent in Weinberger's revision of the Carter administration's defense budgets for fiscal years 1981 and 1982 is a toughened global policy designed to get U.S. power to potential centers of conflict without stretching resources too thinly.

NAVY SECRETARY John Lehman Tuesday said naval strategy is being changed to protect U.S. interests worldwide.

The Pentagon added $6.8 billion to the fiscal 1981 budget and $25.8 billion to the budget for fiscal 1982, bringing it to $222.2 billion - the highest peacetime outlay for defense in U.S. history. Carter's budget for fiscal 1982 beginning Oct. 1 was $196.4 billion.

The total defense increase was $38.1 billion, but Weinberger forecast savings of $5.5 billion through cuts in marginal experimental programs, travel and consultation fees, and office

Half the savings would come from lowering this year's estimated rate of inflation from Carter's projected 10.4 percent to 10 percent.

Weinberger told reporters earlier that he will ask for more mon Reagan administration's projected inflation rate proves to be higher than predicted.

"THE PRESIDENT has determined that our defense budget must be increased if we are to preserve peace and freedom," Weinberger told the Senate panel. "If we continue at anything like the levels of expenditure of the recent past, by the middle of the '80s we will clearly be second in military power to the Soviet Union, with all of the consequences that would See Defense, page 6

Sporer big winner in LASA elections

By Elizabeth Flansburg

The Liberal Arts Student Associations officers elections drew 262 students to the polls Wednesday, in a landslide victory for presidential candidate Michael Sporer.

But the election will be contested because of "shady doings," said two write-in candidates, Keith Perry and Steve Bissell, who ran for president and vice president, respectively.

Perry received 44 votes, and Bissell received 27.

Sporer, who was formerly vice president, said he would like to curtail the 'animosity between certain people in the group" and "fill the (LASA) body again." Sporer received 156 votes, and his opponent, David Craven, received Brinkhuis, who has served as a LASA member, said, "There aren't really things to do in the College of Liberal Arts...it's kind of hard to invite 13,000 people to a picnic," but "it's a good hard-working group." Brinkhuis, who was unopposed in the vice presidential race except for the write-in candidate, received 174 votes.

PERRY, a former LASA member, said he and Bissell will challenge the election because of "illegal campaign practices and harassing voters at the A written complaint by UI student Marlette Larsen states that she was at first denied a chance to vote because her name was not listed in the university telephone directory.

"They did not know where this rule came from, and referred me to the Elections Board, which has no jurisdiction over LASA elections. My student ID was not sufficient eligibility for voting," the signed complaint said.

Larsen was later allowed to vote. Liberal arts students are the only eligible voters for LASA elections. Poll workers used the student directory to confirm which college voters belonged See LASA, page 6

Clark assails Reagan policies

By Rochelle Bozman

Americans should expect a nuclear arms race with the Soviet Union, and there is little hope for world peace during the Reagan administration, foreign policy expert and former Iowa Sen. Dick Clark said Wednesday.

President Ronald Reagan's "fascination and excitement" with military spending and his hard-line stand with the Soviet Union will cause an arms race because neither side will be able to back away from their tough stands, Clark said.

He pointed to Reagan's statements that a weapons build-up is essential to arms control. Clark also referred to the president's refusal to discuss arms control until Soviet world behavior improves.

"It seems to me that this will absolutely guarantee that there will never be a negotiation if we have to wait until we are satisfied with the Soviets' behavior," Clark said.

THE MX mobile missle project, which has found new life under the Reagan administration, will be the cause of the arms race and will do little to insure U.S. security, Clark said, and would cost five or six times more than the most expensive weapon system ever built. "If SALT II is not passed, the MX will surely generate a nuclear arms race the likes of which the world has never seen before.

The Armenian Secret Army promptly claimed responsibility. The Turkish government accused France of not taking precautions to prevent such attacks.

Hotel wants retro-insurance

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Attempts by owners of the MGM Grand Hotel to buy retroactive liability insurance for last year's fatal fire could set a dangerous precedent, the National Insurance Consumer Organization said Wednesday.

The move could delay settlement, it said, because insurers' profits are dependent on deferring claims.

The MGM Grand faces claims of up to $1 billion but carried only $30 million in liability insurance. The owners want $170 million in retroactive liability insurance for a reported premium of $37.5 million.

The sidewalk on the north side of Old Capitol Center is too narrow to handle the number of pedestrians using it, Iowa City acting Public Works Director Michael Kucharzak said Wednesday.

Internships offer taste of Washington

By Diane McEvoy

Aspiring politicians can get an early taste of life in Washington by participating in a olitical internship program offered through the UI political science department.

Students can earn academic credit working as interns for governmental agencies. political lobby groups or Congressmen in Washington, D.C., said James Murray, UI political science professor and coordinator of

The internships are arranged by the Washington Center for Learning Alternatives, an organization that "sets up internships for schools, like the University of lowa, without the time or money" to do it themselves, Murray said.

At the end of the term, interns are required to write papers for Murray explaining how the internship increased their understanding of the political process. Student interns earn six hours of political science credit and nine elective credit hours for their work, Murray

TWO UI students who participated in the program last semester found that the program also gives young politicians an advantage in the job market.

Students Ken Morris and Daryl Hofland both plan to return to Washington this summer. Hofland hopes to find a permanent job, and Morris will accept one of the offers he received because of the internship.

"I'm behind it 100 percent," Hofland said of the program.

Morris, who worked in Rep. Charles Grassley's, R-Iowa, office, said that the workday on Capitol Hill is long.

Although the workday was supposed to last about eight hours "it seemed like the whole day started at 4 or 4:30", Morris said. "Phones would start ringing, constituents would start coming in and out, Congress would be getting out and we'd end up staying

BUT THE experience is something Morris said he values: "The best part of it was that it was during an election. You get a different view of what's going on.'

Morris said the internship involved "a lot of legwork" in addition to writing letters to constituents, working with press secretaries and writing speeches.

Hofland, who interned in Sen. Roger Jespen's, R-Iowa, office, said he values the 'behind-the-scenes' look at politics his internship gave him. "You just get so much more of an inside track.'

Part of Hofland's "inside track" was the insight he gained into how much support a politician's spouse provides. Hofland said Jepsen's wife stopped in at her husband's office almost every day. "I respect her very much for what she has to say. She's a very impressive lady, to say the least."

Hofland said he left for work at about 7 a.m. and arrived at Jepsen's office an hour later. After a long day in the office, "it was almost a draining situation to ride the bus

Hofland said he spent much of his time compiling a "briefing book" containing Jepsen's views on various legislative issues

Even though they worked long hours, Morris and Hofland said they plan to con-tinue careers in politics and believe that their experiences will give them a competitive edge in the job market when they

Senate to consider support of PIRG negative check-off

By Jackie Baylor

A resolution to support the negative check-off funding plan proposed by the UI chapter of the Iowa Public Interest Research Group will be considered tonight by the UI Student Senate.

Sens. Scott Kiser and Sarah Pang submitted the resolution Feb. 24 supporting the negative check-off "as a good and viable alternative to mandatory student fees at a time when state allocations are shrinking, while demands on those funds simultaneously

Under the proposed negative check-off plan, students would mark a box on a fee card if they do not want to contribute $3 to Iowa PIRG. Members say the $3 would be refundable at any time during the

Sens. Tim Dickson, Niel Ritchie and Sheldon Schur introduced a resolution last week to oppose the negative check-off plan, saying that it "relies on apathy and deception to gain support from the otherwise unwilling."

BOTH RESOLUTIONS were withdrawn at last week's senate meeting, pending a possible public

"I think the opposing resolution would have been defeated last week," Pang said. "We withdrew the resolutions to give people a chance to have dialogue outside the forum and also to see if there would be a

But so far, no one has offered to sponsor the Pang said she is "confident" the resolution will ass. "The (Iowa PIRG) drive is going well. The ma-ority of the students support it, so I think we will pass it." she said.

Iowa PIRG executive Director Jim Schwab said Wednesday that the group has obtained about 4,000 signatures from students in support of the plan. The group plans to get signatures from a majority of UI students — at least 12,500.

DICKSON SAID he is not sure the resolution in favor of the negative check-off will pass, and that it is "within the realm to bring up the opposing one

"If they (Iowa PIRG) would show they are a viable group they may get more support," Dickson said. "We do support Iowa PIRG, but not its unfair funding systemi.

The negative check-off plan has already been condemned by four student organizations. The UI Liberal Arts Student Association, the Associated Student Engineers, the Collegiate Associations Council and the Associated Residence Halls have all condemned the plan.

Stolen wheelchair may be in river

A $300 wheelchair stolen from UI student Rose Perino Feb. 12 may not be found until temperatures turn warm enough for someone to take a plunge into the Iowa River near the Hancher footbridge.

Perino's wheelchair was stolen from the Burge Dining Hall while Perino was eating supper. She has borrowed another wheelchair until either the stolen chair is found or until she gets a new one.

Campus Security Sgt. Dan Hogan said he recieved a call Feb. 18 that three men had been seen pushing the wheelchair down a ramp by the UI's North Hall. "The wheelchair was last seen going down the ramp in the direction of the footbridge," Hogan said.

In recent years, the UI Honors Program has been less than adequate in giving students a chance to excel in their major area of study. A long-needed revitalization program should be implemented to improve this program.

The College of Liberal Arts Honors Review Committee, which has been evaluating the Honors Program since last November, recently submitted a report to the college's policy committee. This evaluation is long overdue. The last extensive review was conducted in 1958, and the program is showing signs of stagnation.

One problem the committee found is that the standards for admittance to the program are too low. This is a valid point; the standards for acceptance into the program must be high if it is to have any meaning. Currently, students with a 3.0 grade point can take part in the program. The committee suggests that this be raised to 3.2. Similarly, freshmen must now score at least 28 on the ACT exam to get into the program. This mark would be raised to 29 to make entrance more challenging.

Other aspects of the program must be revised to attract students; many of the 950 students who qualify for honors do not take part in honors activities and courses. Unfortunately, honors classes are often taught as regular courses, providing little incentive for the students who seek special instruction. At the same time, other students avoid honors classes because they fear the grading will be too strict.

The review committee would attempt to solve these problems by requiring honors classes to use the same grading standard as other classes, and by making additional honors sections, as well as graduate-level courses, available to honors students. These proposals will help clarify what the honors program entails and attract more students.

The Honors House itself needs refurbishment. Funds should be made available for simple remodeling. According to the review committee, the library is inadequate, the furnishings are poor and more newpapers and magazines are needed. For the Honors Program to be successful, the house must provide better facilities for study.

Changes in the Honors Program are long overdue, and the review committee has provided reasonable ways to overcome some of the problems. The College of Liberal Arts should move quickly to improve this program.

Of church and state

A California father has gone to court in an attempt to require the state to teach the biblical doctrine of creation in school science classes. Kelly Segraves asserts that his children have been deprived of their religious rights because only the theory of evolution is taught in the classes.

Part of the confusion seems to stem from a misunderstanding of the word "theory." When scientists use the phrase "theory of evolution," they do not mean supposition or guess; they refer to systematically organized knowledge.

The role of the state in protecting religious freedom has also been misunderstood. The First Amendment to the Constitution bans establishment of a state religion and the preference of one religion over another. It does not require the state to support Creationism, the belief that the world was created by God in six days, is the doctrine of one group of Christians. Creationists believe that the world has existed for only 10,000 years, rather than the millions of years that scientists believe it to be.

If the state were to teach creationism in schools, it would be promoting the doctrine of one religious group - and showing preference of one religion over another. The role of the state is to protect the right of Segraves to teach his children to believe in creationism; it is not the role of the state to teach that religious doctrine for him.

Attempting to break down the wall between the state and the church endangers the rights of people of all religious faiths. The state of California is right to resist teaching creationism, and the court should support its position.

Weed-control plan

When county residents recently met with the Johnson County Board of Supervisors to discuss the problem of weed eradication, the debate was heated. Some residents asked that the practice of spraying weeds along county roads be ended. County resident Don Spencer, for example, claimed that the herbicide used by the county is carcinogenic. Solon resident William Pappas said that in addition to harming plants on his property, the spraying caused three neighborhood children to have swollen faces.

The Iowa Code states that the Board of Supervisors must destroy noxious weeds on primary roads. According to County Engineer O.J. Gode, weeds block the sunlight needed to melt snow and ice on the roads. And a report by an Iowa State University weedcontrol specialist states that Weedone 170, the herbicide used by the county, is less toxic than aspirin when diluted for spraying.

Nevertheless, the supervisors should consider the concerns of county residents and try to reach a acceptable compromise. If the spraying must be continued, it should be done selectively and with greater care. The county should also consider cutting weeds near populated areas or in areas where spraying might endanger wildlife and beneficial plants.

Reagan's pitch for state support

WASHINGTON - Seldom has a federal administration courted the nation's governors the way President Ronald Reagan & Co. recently pitched political woo at the winter meeting of the National Governors' Association.

In addition to a 90-minute business visit to the White House and dinner with the Reagans, the governors were called on by a platoon of Cabinet members and White House aides who told them, in effect, that the Reagan economic program will be their dream come true — at a price, of course.

The dream of the governors, as recited at their conferences for years and years, has been the establishment what they like to call "a new federalism" - meaning a much more substantial federal-state partnership, with the feds turning back to the states an entire range of functions.

THE GOVERNORS, to be sure, want not only the functions but also the tax money to pay for them. In recent years, however, the trend has been for Washington to enact programs, require their implementation by the states and give money to the states to carry them out - but with strings attached.

The strings are the work of members of Congress and of past administrations of both parties who have been concerned that the services and money will not go to the people for whom they are intended unless specific directions are sent along with the cash. The result has been a panoply of "categorical" grants for everything from education to health care — funds to the states earmarked for a specific purpose.

What the Reagan administration is now proposing, and what the governors have been pleading for in recent years, is to consolidate these earmarked grants into a relatively few larger "block" grants with no strings attached. The approach would permit governors to assess the educational, health or whatever other broad needs for which a block grant was made, and then allocate the federal funds as they

DAVID STOCKMAN, the Reagan budget director, serenaded the governors the other day by telling them he thinks it "might be the time to break the umbilical cord" and let them handle the brunt of aid to the nation's needy because they're "just as wise and compassionate" as federal bureaucrats

All this sounded ginger-peachy — except for the fact that Stockman at the same time was giving the governors the bad news about budget slashes severely affecting the states. In other words, the Reagan administration is offering a bigger dose of "the new federalism," but also a healthy taste of fiscal castor oil.

Some of the governors, such as Democrat Brendan Byrne of New Jersey, think they're being snookered and that the bottom line is that his state, and others, will get less federal money for all the fancy talk. But the fact is Reagan is only calling the governors on their old refrain: Just give us the money and we'll do it better and

INSTEAD OF having a pack of outraged state executives squawking about budget cuts, the Reagan approach has the governors pleading for more flexibility in si ending the money they do get — and getting assurances they will have it, provided Congress goes along. Clearly, the heavy wooing is an effort by the White House to corral an important political constituency to help sell the approach to Congress, which has been the father of many categorical grants. The governors, of course, aren't happy about the cuts in state aid, but they were able to read the election returns on Nov. 4 as well as anybody cuts at their own political peril at home and so most are satisfied with the proposal to have more leeway on spending the federal money that's left after the ax falls.

Some are taking heart, too, at the possibility that Reagan may act on another favorite idea of theirs. That is the notion of using the federal taxing power to raise taxes for the states. Stockman told the governors the administration is thinking about raising the federal gasoline tax a penny or two and giving some of it to the states to pay for non-interstate highway work that until now has been financed by Uncle Sam - but would not be under the Reagan plan.

Reagan and other Republicans have long complained about the inefficiency of requiring tax money "to make the round trip to Washington and back' with some of it creamed off for administrative costs. The possible gas tax slice given directly to the states is only a "concept" now, Stockman said, but even premature discussion of it was another tranquilizer for the nation's governors as they brace for the Reagan budget ax on state aid programs.

'End doesn't justify means' of seeking fees

I am disturbed by the attempt of the Iowa Public Interest Research Group to gain approval for a negative checkoff funding plan. It is appalling to see a group that is dedicated to consumer advocacy seeking to raise its funding on a system that would profit from students' - consumers' - lack of information, apathy or ability to be deceived.

Iowa PIRG argues that this system would require the students to make conscious decisions about funding. This is true in some cases, but it also takes advantage of the failure of students to make a conscious choice. The present system of optional fees already requires a conscious choice by students, while it does not punish those who are uninformed of the fact that they are making a decision. Iowa PIRG would be more in keeping with its ideals if it spent more of an effort informing students of its value to the student body and its need for financial support rather than depending on the students' apathy or misunderstanding.

Perhaps the efforts that Iowa PIRG supporters are making to get some 12,000 signatures would be more productive if they also tried to get these people to contribute a $3 optional fee to their group. This would almost equal the $40,000 they hope to gain from negative check-off and no one would suffer hardship from their actions. Perhaps even more disturbing is the whole idea of "the ends justifying the means," which this attempt seems to promote. While I greatly respect what Iowa PIRG does, I do not believe that simply because it is a noble cause (the group is) justified in deceiving the people whose interests it is supposed to

Coverage of Poland

To the editor:

I would like to clear up a few points that were erroneous in a recent editorial, "New Hope in Poland" (DI,

Prime ministers in Poland are nominated, not elected. Solidarity is not a labor union; it is a federation of independent labor unions. Rakowski's first name is Mieczyslaw, not Miecyslaw. His being "reformminded" may be the writer's own, perhaps too hasty conjecture. ... The ruling Polish United Workers' Party is a communist party, but there is no Peter Novack Polish Communist Party of that name with capital letters.

Which brings me to a cartoon you published on Feb. 12. The Solidarity leader Lech Walesa was pictured there, with the party secretary Kania, as one of the two stone-hewn figures towering over small, shabby and hungry Poles queing for bread and totally uninterested in the two political bosses' conflicts. The idea thus conveyed was irresponsible, to put it mildy. One of the indisputable truths about Poland is that Walesa is an authentic and honest people's leader who has come out of the bread lines and always represents them to the fullest extent. .

The way you cover what is happening in Poland is little short of scandalous. You do not realize, perhaps, that last year's Polish crisis may be one of the major events in the history of our century; and one much more influencing the fate of the United States, and that of Iowa, than Bijou program riots, Reagan's election, current sports events, the hostages'

Do such standards of competence and attitudes reflect the political interest and consciousness of DI readers or that of your editorial staff? I wonder.

Freedom of choice

To the editor:

I think the best example of people feeling threatened by art is the series of events in the early 1950s that culminated in the House Un-American Activities Committee combing Hollywood for Communists and a Senate subcommittee implying that the comic book industry was a hotbed of perverts. The McCarthy-era zealots hysterically insisted that they were not advocating censorship.

With history's lesson of the smallmindedness of such attempts, it seems astounding that today in an educated community like Iowa City, there are those who doggedly insist on conducting a witch hunt with the Bijou! film series

Everyone realizes that theater owners, television networks, libraries, etc., bring to the public some ideas that they don't agree with. I don't like violent and exploitative films, but my response is to not attend those films. I certainly don't presume to tell the public that if I don't like them, nobody can be exposed to them.

But a union representative who helped spearhead the employee-ownership option said Tuesday it's too early to tell if the measure will work.

"We knew if we didn't go with this plan, we were going out on our fannies," said Chuck Mueller of the United Food and Commercial Workers Local 46. "We might anyway, but at least it's worth a try." But, he said "the workers are getting a good grasp on the thing," and are learning to what extent they can run the company.

Before each stockholders' meeting, employees meet to decide how their controlling block of shareholder votes will be cast, he said. Each employee is allowed one vote at the workers' meetings, regardless of how many shares of stock each owns.

DESPITE their effective control of the company, the workers have not met with success in getting the board of directors to act on some employee demands. The employee-appointed board members are 'independent thinkers," Mueller said. 'They're not willing to take Lyle Taylor's (the union president) and my recommendations often enough.

Mueller said that eventually union leaders may ask employees to exert more pressure on the board of directors at stockholders meetings.

So far, the biggest worker demand has been to replace Rath's chief executive officer, Emmet McGuire. Mueller said the board and union recently "got a new guy lined up" for the position. Employees blame McGuire for investment decisions that brought the company close to

BECAUSE the employees have not replaced the company's top executives, "the same old executives are still screwing the workers," Mueller said. Once a new chief executive officer is chosen, Mueller said the union expects improved management attitudes and a number of personnel changes. If changes do not come, "We'll can the new guy," he added.

Employee control of Rath will place union leaders in some peculiar situations, Mueller said.

Someone once asked what the union will do when bargaining time comes. I remember what Lyle said: 'We'll set up a mirror in front of us and bargain with that.

"The union has to look out for that individual guy, to make sure he doesn't get run over in the stampede," Mueller said. "Like I tell the guys, 'What are you going to do with your 500 shares in three million? Go down to the stockholders meeting and vote yourself a raise?"

FULLY TWO-THIRDS of the increase - or $22.6 billion - went for the purchase of new weapons, with $4.2 billion earmarked for a revitalized shipbuilding program that includes taking the battleships New Jersey and Iowa and the aircraft carrier Oriskany out of mothballs.

The World War II battleships would be upgraded for 1980s warfare with the addition of Tomahawk cruise missiles that could take the place of carrier aircraft to support amphibious lands. The Oriskany would be outfitted with older A-4 Skyhawk fighter-bombers now in storage.

Only $749.5 million was set aside for a sixth nuclear carrier - the fifth in the Nimitz Class. The bulk of the $3.7 billion - not including the cost of the carrier's 90-plus planes - needed to build the 91,000-ton behemoth by 1989 was to come in fiscal 1983.

Clark

Clark said that while the project is feasible "at a cost," he questioned the need or practicality. "The MX will certainly not provide protection if SALT II is not ratified," Clark said.

As long as there is no SALT, there is no limit on how many missiles the Soviet Union can build, he

Clark also commented on a plan to take the battleship USS Iowa out of mothballs and add it to the

The renovation would cost "a cool half-billion dollars," he said. "I'm not sure how we earned this distinction ... At least we have the consolation of knowing that the denial of foodstamps and school lunches and Medicare and college loans and so forth will be spent in our name."

Clark also questioned Reagan's campaign promises to end registration for the draft and end the grain embargo armed forces will be fulfilled. My guess is that it will be fulfilled the same manner as his promise to end the grain embargo.

"I personally have great doubts that candidate Reagan's promise not to draft young people into the Continued from page 1

Clark also criticized Reagan's policies on human rights and Third World nations. "The president has made it quite clear that he does not intend to follow the Carter policy," he said.

"He argues that an emphasis on human rights is counter-productive and that our struggle for survival with the Soviet Union should certainly take precedence over human rights issues. Thus we will not pressure a dictator who violates the most basic human rights of his citizens if he is anti-Soviet," Clark said.

He added said that U.S. "venturism in El Salvador" is a "perfect example of when Cold War politics takes precedence" over human rights

Candidates needed to obtain 25 signatures from arts students before their names could appear on the ballot. Perry and Bissell said that because of inadequate election advertising, they were forced to run a write-in campaign.

The election was not advertised properly by LASA members, Bissell said, it "just appeared magically." In the past, LASA held its elections on the same date as UI Student Senate elections. The

High energy costs fuel interest in stoves

THE SHALL PROPERTY SET . THE TOWN SHALL THE

Many families no longer sit around the fireplace to keep warm on cold winter nights. Wood burning stoves are in. Judy Sullivan, energy specialist at the Hawkeye Area Community Action Program in Cedar Rapids, said the stoves are gaining popularity rapidly. "Our purpose is to provide energy information so the public can make informed decisions. We are concerned that people recognize safety aspects and that they don't make poor investments," she said.

A wood burning stove uses wood as fuel to heat part or all of a house and can also be used for cooking. Sullivan said countless varieties of stoves are available. Some resemble furnaces, others resemble Ben Franklin stoves with glass plating, and some copy the old fashioned black cast iron models for a return to the rustic pioneer days.

SULLIVAN SAID wood burning stoves are not difficult to operate. "Mainly, you put the wood in and start the fire," she said. "You've got to remember that there are hidden costs and you must be prepared to maintain he stove if you are thinking seriously of buying one. Also, some people don't realize that the installation costs usually run about as much as the stove. on the average around $400.

"Wood burning stoves themselves can range anywhere from $800 to $900 for an expensive version to a fairly cheap one for $150," she added.

The cost of wood is an important consideration in the purchase of a wood burning stove, Sullivan said. "Last year one cord of wood was $75. A week ago a man came in who heated his home through the winter season with seven cords of wood," she said. A cord is a 4-foot high stack of wood boards 4 feet wide and 8 feet long.

IT IS necessary to remain aware of the safety techniques and codes involved with wood burning stoves, Sul-

"With some policies you have to let your insurance agent know about your stove in case you would have a fire caused by it. Some cities, including Cedar Rapids, also require permits,

"This generation is not used to wood burning stoves," she continued, "so more accidents occur unnecessarily.

such as small children sticking small fingers in the stove, gas sticking to the chimney and chimney fires caused by creosote, which is a tar in wood with a flammable residue.'

Sullivan said the Iowa City Fire Prevention Bureau suggests having wood stove chimneys cleaned periodically by a professional chimney sweep. She also said stove owners should always close the damper rather than using water to extinguish the fire.

THE PROUD owners of wood burning stoves have different opinions concerning their stoves. Eric Linderman, a UI student from Iowa City, said his family's wood burning stove was installed about one and one-half years ago. "The wood burning stove is cheap compared to natural gas and electric heating," Linderman said. "Our fuel cost was cut in half.'

He said he enjoys standing in front of the stove after taking a shower, and added that his mother cooks food on the

'Mom likes it alot." Linderman said. "You can cook anything by putting a pan on the steel part." He said the wood burning stove promoted a somewhat cozy atmosphere. "It is by the dining room table and the family eats dinner by it."

CAROL CHRISTIANSON, an Iowa City homemaker, is excited about her woodburning stove, but stresses that the stoves require plenty of wood. "We're lucky in that we have access to wood. My husband's sister owns a wooded area and the family makes recration out of rampaging through the woods armed with chain saws to cut up red elm trees."

The Christiansons are trying to heat the entire main floor of their home with the family's two wood burning stoves. Christianson said problems include expensive wood and the time it takes to tend the stove. "On cold days I sometimes check the stove every 45 minutes," she explained.

Jerry Husby, owner of Ralston Creek Stove and Tool Inc., where wood burning stoves are sold, said the stoves are excellent investments. "I honestly don't believe I've had an unhappy customer," he said.

Sullivan suggested that persons interested in wood burning stoves check with local stove stores, the community zoning commission or HACAP in Cedar and said, "Just give me $20." The clerk made no move.

"Can I take a bag of chips?" the robber finally

'Pig Earth' combines forms to tell tale of French peasants Panasonic just slightly ahead of our time

Special to The Daily Iowan

Pig Earth by John Berger. Pantheon, 1980.

Pig Earth is a measured appreciation of lives lived close to the ground. John Berger combines essay, anecdote, story and poem to investigate the lives of 20th century French peasants. The picture comes from many angles, and Berger's use of the various forms asks the reader to become aware of how peasants function, both in terms of the local village and the national economy.

Berger absorbed the material for Pig Earth by living and working in a small French village for five years. The book is the first of a planned trilogy, Into Their Labors, whose title comes from a passage in the Gospel of John: "Others have labored and ye are entering into their labors.'

THE MATERIAL in the first installment is unlike any American book on working or on a community's way of life; no taped interviews a la Studs Terkel nor oral history-documentary as in Amoskeag nor the elegiac photojournalism of Let Us Now Praise Famous Men. Neither is it kin to the fictional portraits of Sherwood Anderson's Winesburg, Ohio. Nevertheless, it gives the reader villagers to see and stories to hear: In village gossip, "each story allows everyone to define himself.'

What distinguishes the life of a village is that it is also a living portrait of itself; a communal portrait, in that everyone is portrayed and everyone portrays. As with the carvings on the capitals in a Romanesque church, there is an identity of spirit between what is shown and how it is shown - as if the portrayed were also the carvers. Every village's portrait of itself is conducted, however, not out of stone, but out of words, spoken and remembered; out of opinions, stories, eye-witness reports, legends, comments and hearsay. And it is a continuous portrait: work on it never stops.

The most poignant story, "The Value of Money," tells of a father determined to live by the old ways as his sons abandon them — and him — for futures in earth behind it." John Berger has not.

the city. He says of his daily labors in the apple orchards, "Working is a way of preserving the knowledge my sons are losing." One son exploits that knowledge by turning an habitual expression of his grandmother's - "Water washes everything except sin" — into a sales pitch for the soap he peddles.

BERGER HAS filled Pig Earth with "earned perceptions" (to use Kenneth Burke's phrase), whether in the form of stories or the poetry compressed in a peasant's vision. The woman who will not name calves she and her husband intend to sell or slaughter remarks, "There is nothing sadder than a death, and nothing forgotten more quickly." The farm hand looking for a lost cow on a cold night tries to remember the sound of cowbells in winter, "the season of disappearances": "At night they sound like stars clinking.

Berger's "historical afterword" is a precis of peasant culture that analyzes its distinctive ethos, its unique values, its inevitable uprooting and dispersal. He dismisses the stereotyped notion of the anachronistic peasant most people hold.

THE WRITING in this book unites all Berger's roles; reporter, poet, novelist and critic. G., an experimental novel published in 1968, is currently in print in the United States. The Success and Failure of Picasso and About Looking validate his reputation as an art critic. Ways of Seeing was originally a BBC television series (Berger was one of five collaborators) that explored the relationship of art to advertising and image-making. Five years ago, Berger wrote The Seventh Man, a non-fiction work about migrant workers in Europe.

The peasant way of life, Berger points out, is largely unknown in the United States: Given the absence of an entrenched feudal tradition, it never really took hold here. It is being bulldozed out of Europe: As the old orchard grower comments when one son buys him a tractor, "The world has left the Parker's Presley profits probed

The King Stag you will see tonight won't be the same one I saw in dress rehearsal Tuesday night. Nor will Friday's performance be quite what tonight's is; nor will Saturday's be Friday's, nor...

All this is as it should be, for The King Stag, freely adapted from a script by the 18th century Italian dramatist Carlo Gozzi by director Frances Royster, playwright Sandy Dietrick and a company of 14 actors, is an improvised play.

The King Stag is an Italian fairy tale that became a commedia dell'arte scenario in the 16th century. Two centuries later, in an attempt to preserve the fast-disappearing commedia tradition, Gozzi turned it into a formal play. The adaptation is very much in the spirit of the original: "We have used Gozzi's scenario but not his script," Royster explained.

ROYSTER, AN experienced professional director working on a doctorate in theater, met the play in a theater history class. "I fell in love with the story," she said. "I began reading it and got halfway through the opening scene before I realized that the principal character was a parrot. Then I did a complete

The parrot (Beth Jones) is really an enchanted magician, guardian of the tangerine-colored Kingdom of Serendip (designed by Jamie Smead). Its king, Deramo (Dave Arneson), is trying to find himself a queen, with the less-than-helpful assistance of his evil minister, Tartaglia of the red hand (Steve Muetterties). Mistaken identities and magical animals complicate the royal courtship, but the ending is unequivocally happy.

IMPROVISATION IS a time-honored theatrical technique, the basis of many an acting class. Royster decided on an improvised approach to The King Stag Theater because her largely undergraduate company had lit-tle confidence in its own creative potential. "It's a different way of doing things than is ordinarily done here," she said, "and it requires of actors different things than a scripted play does."

For one thing, she explained, the actor must know his or her character in order to invent convincing speech and movements. For another, the actor must know the character's function within the story what he or she must accomplish in each scene. This prevents the improvised actions from getting out of hand: When one's dramatic mission is accomplished, one's time on stage is up.

THIS PRODUCTION, then, is "the company's understanding of the story," Royster said. "The play is about the company as well." The dialogue is often genuinely funny (the actors are agreeably surprised when they produce something witty) and the stumblings surprisingly few. The company's overall intoxication with the limitless possibilities of theater is infectious. The pace falters at times, but the enthusiasm, never

The King Stag is eminently suitable for children, but adults will find it neither puerile nor saccharine. The song spoofs are exercises in sophistication to please the alert ear. And if nothing else amuses you, there's always the animal life. "I do hope at least one bat comes to the performance," Royster said, referring to the Old Armory's resident colony. "They've put this much work into the show; they deserve to be on stage.'

The King Stag is at 8 p.m. tonight through Saturday and 3 p.m. Sunday in the Old Armory Studio Theater. A special performance for elementary school children is scheduled for 10 a.m. Monday.

Karen Kettenacker eyes the ball for a serve during a tennis team practice.

When the heat's on, Kettenacker sizzles

By Mike Kent

The mark of excellence in an athlete is not only in his or her ability to perform well and win often. There is another quality which separates the 'good' athletes from the 'outstanding' ones.

That attribute is winning when the 'pressure' is on. Iowa tennis player Karen Kettenacker has earned this

In two and a half years playing tennis for the Hawkeyes, Kettenacker has compiled a 59-19 record in singles competition. But the story isn't about how many wins Iowa's No. 1 women's tennis player has amassed in her collegiate career.

The Vancouver, British Columbia native has gained a reputation of being especially tough when the heat is on. In collegiate singles competition, Kettenacker is 12-2 in matches which required play of a third and deciding set. Four of those matches were decided via tiebreakers. Kettenacker walked away victorious on three of those occa-

tiebreaker, it's a crucial situation," she said. "A lot of people change their styles in a tiebreaker - which is fine. But one of the differences with me is I'll play my cards right and then come many of her opponents hold back in these instances. "They feel they're going to win the tiebreaker by just getting the ball back. Most women I play aren't as aggressive as I am."

Iowa Coach Cathy Ballard agreed: "Her basic style of play is 'on the move.' Karen is an aggressive, attacking-type player, and if she uses that, she'll end the point quickly."

Kettenacker figures she might as well go for broke in the "sudden death" situations. "I think to myself, 'You can win this tiebreaker and be one step closer to the match or you (can lose and) play another set.' "
WINNING A tiebreaker doesn't just take a player closer to victory. "If you win a tiebreaker, you have a big advantage," Kettenacker said. "It's such a psychological edge on the next set." 'She can handle anything put before her," Ballard said. "Karen gets her share of points and games no matter whom she plays.'

And the junior usually winds up playing the best an opposing team can offer as Kettenacker has been Iowa's No. 1 singles player since she was a freshman. In fact, she has been in the No. 1 spot since her first year in high

"I like to think I give out 100 percent on every point," Kettenacker said. And, judging by her records, one can't doubt her word.

Swimmers seek Big Ten title

Associate Sports Editor

Finally, it was time to shave. And shave they did.

The razors were out last night at the Hilton Hotel in Milwaukee, Wis. No doubt the drains will be clogged for days.

You see, Milwaukee's Schroeder YMCA is the site of the 1981 Big Ten Swimming and Diving Championship. And while the meet begins today and will conclude Saturday, last night's shaving was the culmination of tapering for programs such as the Iowa men's team.

All beards, arms, legs, chests and even a few heads are hairless by now. The next matter at hand is shaving seconds off the swimmers' times. That's what this is all about, isn't it?

ALL SEASON the Hawkeyes have directed their goals toward the Big Tens. Well, the wait is over.

Of course, Indiana is the pre-meet favorite. After all, the Hoosiers have won the last 20 Big Ten cham-But the Hawks are right up there with the champions. Even Indiana's veteran coach, Doc Councilman, acknowledged the Hoosiers face their biggest challenge in recent years by the up-and-coming Iowa swim team. "We'll have to swim very well,"

Councilman said. "If we swim poorly and Iowa swims well, Iowa will win. If we both swim well, I think we should win.' Iowa Coach Glenn Patton said the odds are six to four the Hoosiers will repeat as champions, but the Hawks are confident in betting on themselves

'We're really healthy," Patton said. "Everyone is looking forward to swimming rested. I know we're the 200 butterfly. Both swimmers ready. I'm just not sure if we're have a "very good chance" to win

IN ORDER FOR Iowa to upend Indiana, the Hawks must score in every event. Last season Iowa failed to score in 19 events, while 38 of 44 Indiana entries recorded points.

Iowa earned final spots in 20 races vent. compared to 22 for the Hoosiers last year. But the difference was in the consolation finals, with Indiana qualifying 16 to Iowa's three.

It appears team depth will tell the story one more time - not just the superstars

But the Hawks boast a few heroes, and Big Ten individual titles are in sight for several team members.

Iowa returns two Big Ten champions in Tom Roemer and Charlie Roberts. Roemer was tops in the 200yard backstroke, while Roberts won their second straight title, according to Patton.

IOWA'S GRAEME Brewer has to be a favorite in the 200 free. The Australian was a bronze medalist at the 1980 Olympics in the 200-meter e-

Ron McKeon, another Olympian from Austrialia, should be a high scorer for Iowa in the distance free races. McKeon has the fastest conference time in the 1,000 and is second to defending champion Chuck Sharpe of Indiana in the 500.

Iowa's James Lorys should be right up there with McKeon as a scorer in the distance races.

The 100 free will be a strong event for the Hawks. Bent Brask, Matt Wood and freshman Bryan Farris See Big Tens, page 10

Hawks bent on breaking Spartan hex

And you thought Bloomington's Assembly Hall was hexed.

The only place in the Big Ten that Iowa Head Coach Lute Olson has not seen his Hawkeyes win is the Jenison Field House in East Lansing, Mich. No one likes to use the word 'iinx' but it seems too suitable for the situation.

The No. 6 Hawks, however, have yet to let a little jinx get the best of them. Entering this season, Iowa had never beaten Bobby Knight's Hoosiers on their home court. But the Hawks changed that record this season, beating Indiana before a frenzied Hoosier crowd - and without the use of good luck charms or magic potions.

SO WHAT'S wrong with breaking another jinx in the same season? Absolutely nothing, according to Olson.

"Our main concern, of course, is never having won there since I've been here," he said. "But that doesn't mean we haven't played well there, because we have

"I just think we have never gone in there with as much talent as we have now and with as much riding on the line as we do now. Our players like to play under pressure and I think they're going to play one of their best games at Michigan State. We have a lot of confidence right now.

On the line, of course, is a Big Ten title. Should Iowa beat the Spartans Thursday night, the Hawks would be assured of at least a tie for the conference crown. Iowa leads the league with a 13-3 record. No. 13 Indiana, 12-4, and No. 17 Illinois, 11-5, are in second and third, respectively. The Hoosiers and Illini clash in Champaign tonight.

THE LAST TIME Iowa was triumphant in East Lansing was 1972, winning 102-98. That game was marred by a delay in which about 100 black students marched onto the main court Probable Line-ups during the national anthem. Refusing to leave, the students were finally given the public address system 40 minutes later. At that time grievances were aired against the university and then the group peaceably left the play-

Although the Spartans (6-10) are buried at eighth in the Big Ten rankings, they've been known to pull off an upset or two. Michigan State, predicted to "finish 11th in the Big Ten" by Coach Jud Heathcote in the preseason, has knocked off one-time contenders Purdue, Michigan and Ohio State.

"Our problem we have to deal withis obvious — (Jay) Vincent," Olson said. "But we'll let him have his points if we win the game as we did here earlier." The 6-foot-8 Vincent had 36 points for the Spartans when the two teams met Jan. 10 in Iowa City, but the Hawks pulled out a 65-57 victory.

KEVIN SMITH, 6-2 guard, also should give the Hawks trouble, according to Olson. Steve Waite will defend Vincent and Kevin Boyle will guard Smith.

The Hawks had a few problems against the Spartans' zone last time around. But Olson believes his team is better prepared for tonight's battle.

"Their zone has given everyone trouble," he said. "But we're more ready to do it (penetrate their zone) than when we played them before."

Gales wins slam dunk contest

the top three finishers

Pete Gales may be a quarterback for the Iowa football team, but Tuesday night he showed some members of the Iowa basketball team what slamdunking is all about.

Gales easily won the intramural slam dunk contest, sponsored by Oxford Beverage Co., the area Schlitz distributor

There were 11 entrants. Each contestant tried five dunks, with one repeat allowed on a miss. Three of the dunks were mandatory - a one-hander from the top of the key, a two-hander from the same spot and a one- or two-handed reverse from anywhere. The entrants were given free rein on their other two

FOUR JUDGES — Iowa basketball players Steve Carfino, Mike Heller, Mark Gannon and Jon Darsee - scored each dunk. The high and low scores were dropped on each attempt.

Gales, who finished third in last year's competition, won with 88.6 points. Tod Asmussen was runner-up with 71.6 and Randy Hodson was third

Ron Hardwick was fourth with 67.9

both his first try and repeat. Had he made it, he definitely would have placed, which would have meant a trophy and a Schlitz jacket, given to

Gales said he tried to use "finesse" on his reverse dunk and "intensity" on the others. "For my optionals I used an alley-oop pass from Mike Heller on the first one," he said. "And on the second, I was just looking to throw it down

CARFINO SEEMED impressed by the jammers. "All the contestants were dunking pretty hard," he said. "Gales got up good and threw it down Tuesday's "Coors Game of the Week" was a social fraternity playoff game. Fifth-ranked Sigma Chi beat Phi Gamma Delta, 43-24. Mark Schenkelberg led Sigma Chi

with 16 points, scoring all but two of those in the second half. John Halverson had 10 for Sigma Chi. Schenkelberg and Halverson controled board play in the first half as Sigma Chi ran up a 17-6 halftime lead. Phi Gamma Delta failed to threaten in the second half, giving Sigma Chi an easy win.
