SCHREUDER is named ‘DI’ editor

By Daily Iowan

Valerie Schreuder is named editor of the Daily Iowan, the university’s newspaper. She replaces outgoing editor Cindy Schreuder, who was named senior editor of the Daily Iowan earlier this month.

Schreuder, a junior English major at the University of Iowa, has been involved in journalism since she was in high school. She has worked as a reporter and editor for various newspapers and magazines, including the Daily Iowan, where she has served as a staff writer, assistant editor, and assistant arts editor.

“I am honored to be named editor of the Daily Iowan,” Schreuder said. “This is a great opportunity for me to continue my work in journalism and to help shape the future of the Daily Iowan.”

A native of Des Moines, Iowa, Schreuder was named executive director of the Iowa Public Radio Group in 1980. She is responsible for overseeing the group’s operations and ensuring its financial sustainability.

“I am excited to be named editor of the Daily Iowan,” Schreuder said. “This is a great opportunity for me to continue my work in journalism and to help shape the future of the Daily Iowan.”

Comfort: elderly must learn to fight society's prejudice

By Mary Rechter

Senior citizens have to live their lives in the failure to adopt the social prejudices against them, said Dr. Robert K. Zane, professor of geriatrics at the University of Illinois College of Medicine. "There is the issue of self-esteem, and the issue of the aging process," he said. "But there are also the social prejudices against the elderly." Comfort came to the University College of Pharmacy in 1974 as a way to help these older people who feel they need help in their daily lives. "They've been wronged by society often," Zane said, "and cannot be applied to the elderly in any other way." Zane said that society often thinks of all senior citizens as being senile, but he said senility is a normal part of aging. "We don't turn into a zombie just because we're old," he said. "Seniors don't have the mental ability to continue working beyond the age of 65."

"People are more likely to be successful in the future if they have been successful in the past," Zane said. "The social prejudices against the elderly are just as strong today as they were 10 years ago. The social prejudices against the elderly continue to exist, even though we have made great strides in the care of the elderly in the last decade."

"Freezing" student aid

The Ronald Reagan administration has announced a temporary freeze on the processing of Pell Grant applications for the next month. According to Education Secretary Terrel Bell, processing of the grants (formerly called Basic Educational Opportunity Grants) was halted because the administration is awaiting Congress' response to plans that would make low-income families pay a small percentage of their income toward college expenses.

Bell called for the freeze "very temporarily" because Congress' reply to the proposed changes in Pell Grant regulations must be made within 30 days.

The administration appears to present a two-fold problem. Its proposed changes in Pell Grant regulation should be opposed because they would place an even greater burden on low-income families struggling with educational costs. But if Congress does not act, the Reagan administration will probably continue the freeze until it passes through changes in the program.

Meanwhile, the applications of all students eligible for the Pell Grant must be processed.

The Reagan administration's plan is unfair; it would reduce the amount of financial aid available to low-income students - students who benefit the most from the Pell Grant program.

The threat of a freeze of processing applications compounds the wrong.

Challenge to senate

The Student Senate elections held Tuesday turned into a sweep for the "Progressive" party, which won 11 of the 15 seats. Students have demonstrated their support for the party's priorities and shown their desire to be involved in actions that can bring about positive changes in student government.

More than 5,000 students cast votes in the election, making it the largest vote total since 1973. Student leaders have to begin to realize the important role student government will play during this time of financial crisis.

The Progressive party's landslide victory indicates students' acceptance of university issues that directly affect them. The proposed negative check-off funding plan for the Iowa Public Interest Research Group - which the Progressive slate opposed - was defeated by a 2-1 margin.

Progressive leaders emphasized that they work to ensure that services to students, such as financial aid and counseling, are targets of the new senate. This practical approach serves to help what students want to hear: students want effective and experienced student leaders to work with UI administrators and the Iowa Legislature.

The senate must work in activity that need, although this must be done without losing sight of broader issues, such as movements for the liberation of the Third World.

Within a few days, the Progressive slate called for the election of a new slate of student senate leaders. It will face a difficult task of replacing some of the talented leaders who won the last elections.

The new Progressive slate needs a strong team of student administrators. The new senate must be strengthened with a faculty for student discussion.

The senate has a lot to do ahead of them. Their success in representing their constituents and their ability to correct the challenge the student body has faced.

No authority

Two strong anti-abortion forces in Congress, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Rep. Charles Percy, R-Ill., have renewed their efforts to make abortion illegal under any circumstances.

In contrast to proposed constitutional amendments to end abortion in America, the Helms-Percy proposals have been met with widespread opposition.

The administration's agenda, which includes a proposed constitutional amendment to end abortion, has been approved by both houses of Congress and now awaits the signature of the President. The bill is expected to be passed by the Senate in the next few days.

If such a bill passes, all abortion - even those to save the pregnancy or the life of the mother - would be illegal. It would give more power to the birth-control and gynecologists, and the information society would be destroyed. Because it is believed, birth-control mechanisms can be used after conception, there would be an end to abortion.

But, if, as expected, it will not only ban abortion but also the two of the most widely used and effective methods of birth control, the administration's agenda will fail. At the same time, the administration's agenda is forced to jump on the bandwagon of the anti-abortion movement.

The bill, if passed, would also make it illegal to distribute or to sell any form of birth control or contraception. This would interfere with the availability of these services and would be a violation of international law.

If a bill passes, all abortion - even those to save the pregnancy or the life of the mother - would be illegal. It would give more power to the birth-control and gynecologists, and the information society would be destroyed.

The turmoils of Northern Ireland

By Chris FCColel

The professions in Northern Ireland

Guest opinion

Northern Ireland, which is 30 percent Catholic and 70 percent Protestant, seems to be moving toward political solutions, which is喜力.

DESPITE continuing attacks, the Catholic Church manages to keep its faith and on and are being considered. Protestant leaders and voters are starting to frame issues. These issues also must have a Protestant voice to work with.

The administration's actions present a two-fold problem. Its involvement in the political process will prevent them from being able to make the political changes necessary to bring about a peaceful solution to the religious conflict in the region. The administration's actions must be done without losing sight of broader issues, such as the amount of financial aid available to low-income students - especially the industrialized nations that have been affected by the conflict.

A federal judge wrapped around him as a choreographer as well? Besides dull, tin-eared.

The Arts/Entertainment Editor principal Bruce Marks to become its director John Farrow to the supporting members of his large cast, reaches much of the power and mood of the piece; balance was missing, however. The film is from the French original selected by the, famous, F. Scott Fitzgerald. The film was a great success, as was its original theatrical run. The Boston Globe described the film as "remarkable," and it won the Oscar for Best Picture.

The EXCELLENT pocket history of the American Novel, An End to Endlessness, is a triumph of a gentle and serious, smaller scale. The film is a touching portrayal of a character's journey, and it offers insights into the human condition.

"Cuckoo's Nest is the triumph of a great, social critic, Fiedler is the author of more than 25 books, including Ramparts, the Quarterly Review of Literature. He currently teaches at the University of California, Berkeley."

"Cuckoo's Nest" is the blackmarket version, not the release. The film's narrative is a bit too close to reality, but it offers a powerful critique of institutionalized mental health care.

"Evil DEAD" is a classic since publication in 1962, but it has also been remade several times since then. The film's mythology is still very much alive.

Panel offers $35 billion budget cut

By Valerie D. Plame -
United Press International

WASHINGTON - Senate budget writers approved spending cuts of more than $35 billion Wednesday. But the Senate Appropriations Committee also extended earlier agreements to provide at least $8 billion in emergency funds. The cuts were approved in a 13-5 vote following a debate that lasted more than 24 hours. The committee also voted to clarify a Senate-passed measure that would give the administration authority to spend the money in a package to be sent to the House later this week.

Four Republicans also joined Democrats in voting for $1 billion because the House had already approved $8 billion. The final bill includes $1 billion for the 1992-93 fiscal year and $1 billion for the 1993-94 fiscal year.

The Senate approved the bill by a vote of 48-48, with 48 senators voting for the bill. The measure was approved by the House earlier this week.

Don't drive.

The temperatures are rising, the ground is drying, and a new season has arrived for the Iowa softball team.

So let's take up the gloves, there's a fresh onion in the box seat. The winds of spring blow and suddenly Iowa is a different ball game.

The current team is led by junior Kris Champagne, a three-and-six-mile runner, who recorded a time of 25:42.6 in the women's race at Grinnell. Champagne has been a consistent performer for the Cyclones, and her performance is essential as they prepare for the upcoming season.

Champagne is not the only strong performer on the team. Leading the men in the 6.7-mile race was Rick Scupham, who clocked in at 34:24.5.

And when the Hawks have been working out, they've been taking their softball skills to the next level. The team spent the off-season focusing on improving their hitting and defense.
