Incoming freshmen preparing for UI

By Ann Teepie
Staff Writer

The greatest fear among UI's incoming freshmen is moving away from home — and not having a home to move into when they arrive in Iowa City this fall. Parents and prospective students attending the first orientation session July 6-7 voiced these concerns most frequently.

Doris and Robert Petersen of Rockford, Ill., said their 18-year-old daughter is worried there will not be enough room in the residence halls for her.

"She's very concerned about housing. She doesn't know where she's going to live yet," said Bob Petersen.

The UI administration announced this summer approximately 1,200 incoming freshmen, upperclassmen and transfer students are on waiting lists for fall residence hall housing assignments.

"I think one of my daughter's biggest fears is moving away from home," said Marilyn Novack of Park Ridge, Ill., a Chicago suburb.

The new freshmen said they are nervous about adjusting to Iowa City's "big-city" or "small-town" atmosphere — depending on their experiences.

NOVACK IS confident her daughter will like life in the "small town" of Iowa City.

But Steve Fenton said he is anxious to live in the "big city." Fenton, 18, is from Batavia, Iowa, population 500.

Although he admits the UI social scene is "a little scary," Fenton said he is "looking forward to getting away" from the small town. "I think my mom is probably more worried about it than I am," he said.

Orientation counselor Pearl Cheng said the 18 prospective students she supervised this week asked questions about "things that we take for granted."

Some of the questions Cheng received on unsigned slips of paper at the beginning of the session include:

- Is the dorm food good?
- Can we pass out of physical education?
- Do we get The Daily Iowan sent to our rooms?
- Can we decorate our dorm rooms?

"THEY COME TO me for a lot of value judgments that they can make on their own," Cheng said. "They really want to lean on someone who's been through all this."

A bulk of the academic or "value" questions prospective students have been asking Cheng concern the difficulty of certain classes and whether she thinks they will be able to do well in them. Cheng is not allowed to answer these questions directly because she is employed as a non-partisan counselor.

Learning to read the UI coursebook and building a schedule for the fall semester occupied the approximately 500 incoming students.

Summer registrants meet class crunch

By Rochelle Bozman
Staff Writer

The crunch caused by soaring enrollment and a dwindling budget will be felt by freshmen orientation students struggling to get into classes in the closing days of summer registration.

Space will be available for all students who have been admitted, but this space may not be in the courses they want, according to Sherwood Tuttle, associate dean of Liberal Arts.

Course sections for freshman classes are filling up fast and this will create problems for students who register in August, said Emil Rinderspacher, orientation director. But he said there is no problem at this time.

"If you are a student registering on the 24th of August you would probably say 'yes they're closing too fast,'" Tuttle said.

THE NUMBER of freshmen admitted to the UI is up to 4,931 from the 4,226 admitted a year ago. Last year 3,326 of those admitted registered, an increase over the 2,775 in the fall 1979. Of the nearly 5,000 admitted for fall 1981, 3,400 have reserved a place in an orientation session.

The 3,400 orientation reservations show an increase over the 2,850 who attended sessions a year ago.

One reason classes are closing is that 1,605 more students registered in the spring, during the regular registration period. W.A. Cox, UI registrar, said 14,981 students preregistered during the spring of 1981 compared with 13,376 in 1980.

The number of transfer students admitted has also increased to 1,561 from 1,390 last year and more admissions are expected because a fourth of all transfer students are admitted in July and August, said John Moore, director of admissions. Transfer student admission is high in the late summer because transcripts from other colleges often are not received until then.

TUTTLE SAID the UI central administration has pushed to ensure an adequate number of essential courses such as rhetoric, mathematics, and chemistry core courses are provided.

"If a student has to have chem there is no substitute. If a student has to have western civ there are alternative historical-cultural cores," Tuttle said. Although the class situation will be tight, Tuttle said, "We are coping."

Tuttle said the problem lies with selection of majors since the pre-professional programs are filling fast and some are already at capacity.

"There will be some kind of a place somewhere. There will be a spot somewhere for those who want to learn something," he said.

Tuttle said if students are willing to take "less popular" classes and go into "under-used" majors, room will be made for all students.

"RHETORIC AND physical education classes will fill up, but if students are willing to take different P.E. classes and take classes at certain hours, then they will get in," Tuttle said.

Wilbers resigns UI advising post

By Jackie Baylor
Staff Writer

Steve Wilbers, director of the UI Undergraduate Advising Center, announced Wednesday that he will leave the center he helped create to accept a "terrific job offer" at the University of Minnesota.

Wilbers will leave in August to become director of Student Academic Support Services at Minnesota. He said the new job is in the same area of administration as his UI position, but Minnesota's staff is larger, and the office serves more students than the UI center.

Edith Ennis, Wilbers' unofficial assistant, will become acting director of the advising center in August.

"It's a higher level management position," Wilbers said. "I will have the opportunity to do more things."

Wilbers said the department he will be joining at the University of Minnesota is on the "verge of a major reorganization" and he was chosen for the job because "I had a record of being an innovator with a creative mind."

"I've been setting things up all along."

WILBERS SAID he wants to broaden his experience so if he should ever return to the UI he would be "more valuable."

He said he leaves the UI with "deep regret."

"I would be happy to spend the rest of my life here. There is a sense of community. But, I just couldn't turn down the job offer."

Wilbers said he was nominated for the job at the University of Minnesota by someone in the UI administration.

He said the salary will be much higher than his salary from the UI, but "if it was not a good job I wouldn't be leaving for the salary."

Mary Jo Small, UI assistant vice president of finance and university services, said Wilbers' recently increased salary is approximately $26,000.

Wilbers said he was hired in January 1979 to set up the undergraduate advising program. He said the program has worked well. "The staff is most capable and hard working. The advisers are genuinely concerned and committed. The kids are really helped."

HE SAID HE is not leaving his position at the UI because of budget cuts the UI will be facing next fall or because of the increased enrollment which could cause serious overcrowding in the classrooms.

"I had higher expectations of what I could do on campus," Wilbers said. "I had hoped to do more. I've already seen how much I can do with a little. Now I want to manage a fully-funded program."

"I would like to stay and help students through the problems," he said. "I don't want to leave a difficult situation."

Wilbers said he is still "very committed to the (UI) program. I hope the advising center will continue to develop. I'm very pleased that the quality of undergraduate advising has increased."

He said he told his staff Wednesday afternoon that "anytime you set up a program, you work for the day you can be replaced with new ideas and a new perspective, but I didn't know it would come so soon."

Small said the Undergraduate Advising Center was designed to assist undergraduate students who have not declared a major. Students were previously advised by faculty members who were not trained as counselors or advisers.

United Way hopes information will increase UI staff donations

By Scott Sonner
Staff Writer

The decision to allow United Way to provide UI employees information about its programs could give the Iowa City social service agency a needed financial boost.

Mary Ann Volm, Johnson County United Way director, said the UI's 9,000 full- and half-time employees make it Iowa City's largest employer. Donations from university workers could help the United Way obtain from the private sector the increased funding it is being forced to pursue, she said.

A university regulation prohibiting solicitation of employees or students on UI property has kept United Way from approaching UI employees. The UI has not changed its stand on direct solicitation, but has agreed to allow United Way to provide employees with information about its programs. A committee is considering ways information can be distributed.

THE UI HAS lagged behind other universities in United Way participation. A 1980 United Way study shows 7 percent of UI employees participated in United Way donations, the least of all Big Ten schools. The University of Wisconsin had the second lowest participation rate at 18 percent.

UI employees who give to United Way, however, are among the most generous in the conference. The average UI gift is $87.50, second only to Wisconsin at $89.49.

Volm said the UI showing is dramatically influenced by the UI's position as the only Big Ten school which does not allow solicitation.

Volm said she is thankful to be allowed into the UI. She said United Way will distribute its information any way administrators ask. "We will accommodate any organization that will let us in."

Briefly

More violence in Britain

MANCHESTER, England (UPI) — More than 1,000 youths attacked a police station late Wednesday and other gangs looted and torched stores in a sixth straight night of street warfare despite an appeal by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Manchester Police Chief James Anderton said the "huge" number of rioters of both black and white youths mounted "simultaneous and apparently well-coordinated attacks" that lasted for four hours into the early morning Thursday.

King can evict former lover

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Billie Jean King's former lover, Marilyn Barnett, lost a bid Wednesday to remain in a Malibu beach house she says the tennis star promised her during their love affair.

Superior Court Judge Leon Savitch denied Barnett's request for an injunction that would have kept King and her husband, Larry King, from evicting the tennis star's former lover from the house.

Herbicide found in water

DUNCANNON, Pa. (UPI) — The state Department of Environmental Resources Wednesday identified a gray powder dumped into a reservoir that provides water to more than 2,000 people in Perry County as a herbicide known as 2,4-D.

Water in the reservoir had a herbicide concentration of about 600 parts per billion, but the substance's toxicity to humans was undetermined.

Law protects reporter notes

ALBANY, N.Y. (UPI) — Gov. Hugh Carey Wednesday signed a bill to extend protection of reporters' notes and sources from prosecutors and defense attorneys.

To eliminate any motive for judges or lawyers trying to subpoena reporters' notes or film, the bill provides that any information gathered by a journalist shall be inadmissible in a hearing before any government body.

Toxic shock affects men too

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A public health expert says toxic shock syndrome — linked to the deaths of 87 women who used tampons — is turning up in men with common infections and is more widespread than first believed.

Dr. Shirley Fannin, of the state Department of Health Services said people of any age with such diverse conditions as an infected toe or sore throat or boils are now seen as possibly having different versions of toxic shock syndrome.

Too little for interstates

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congressional researcher Henry Eschwege said Wednesday he has serious doubts the administration will set aside enough money to complete the interstate highway system.

The $28 billion set aside to complete the interstate system within 10 years would be adequate with an inflation rate below 5 percent, "which seems quite unlikely," he said.

Wildlife refuges on 'hit lists'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Administration officials, although denying they have a "hit list" of federal wildlife refuges destined for state control, acknowledged Wednesday they are gathering information that could make the transfers possible.

But Defenders of Wildlife, an environmental group, said several "hit lists" exist. It distributed to reporters copies of the memorandums.

Death definition considered

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A presidential commission meets Thursday to consider recommending that states adopt a uniform law saying that death happens when the heart and lungs or the entire brain irreversibly stop functioning.

In a story called "Wiederaenders receives probation" (DI, July 8) it was reported that UI Student Senate President Tim Dickson said off-campus Sen. Carl Wiederaenders "has been a very hard-working senator." Actually, Dickson said that he thought the judge who sentenced Wiederaenders to one year of probation on a charge of third-degree arson probably thought Wiederaenders was a hard-working senator. The DI regrets the error.

Twenty hurt as brakes fail, bus rolls over on Hwy. 6

By Jennifer Shafer
Staff Writer

Twenty persons were injured Tuesday in a bus accident on Highway 6 two miles west of West Liberty.

The bus carrying drivers for detassling crews of Pioneer Seed Co., Downy, Iowa, was driven by Joseph Sobaski, 20, of 31 Bedford Court. The bus was traveling north on Muscatine County Road X-34, approaching the intersection of Highway 6 when the accident occurred shortly before 4 p.m., Iowa state troopers said Wednesday.

Sobaski told troopers the bus brakes failed. The bus slid down a steep embankment and rolled onto its top, troopers said.

Five passengers were hospitalized overnight and 15 others were treated for minor injuries and released.

Jim Walker, spokesman for Pioneer Seed, said the bus was recently inspected for safety.

WILLIAM HUTCHESON, 19, North Liberty, said the group was on its way back from work Tuesday when the accident happened.

"We were going about 40 mph when the driver yelled 'Brakes out,'" he said. "I put my hands on the seat in front of me and hung on."

Hutcheson said he may have gone into shock or suffered a slight concussion. "The next thing I remember is when the bus was stopped. Most people were off the bus and somebody yelled at me to get out."

He said passengers climbed out the windows after the bus came to rest. Troopers and an ambulance arrived in 5-10 minutes, he said.

"I guess I didn't get hurt that bad because I was on the near side," Hutcheson said. "Some of the others on the far side had farther to fall."

Passengers Mary Wood and Tom Leaverton, both 20, and Corri Cozine, 19, all of Iowa City, were listed in good condition at UI Hospitals Wednesday. Holly Morton, 28, and Shelly Severson, 17, both of West Liberty, were listed in fair condition.

TREATED AT Mercy Hospital and released with minor injuries were Hutcheson; Lynn Porter, 17, Nichols; Josie Chateauvert, 21, Iowa City; Sharon Comer and David Rayner, both 17, of Lone Tree.

Treated at UI Hospitals and released with minor injuries were Diane Lodge and Scott Vetter, both 19, and Kelly Frankhauser, 18, all of West Liberty; Vicky Elliott, 19, Tammy Snitselaar, 17, Kamala Spencer, 18, all of West Branch; Tammy Otten, 23, Julie Peters, 18, Michelle Gensing, 27, and Robyn Churchill, 20, all of Iowa City.

State troopers said no charges have been filed and the incident is under investigation.

Defendants to be tried separately

By Val Roskens
Staff Writer

Two men charged in early May with second-degree sexual abuse of a 14-year-old female shall be tried separately according to a ruling Wednesday in Johnson County District Court.

According to court records: William Patrick Baltas of Mason City, Iowa, filed a "motion for severance" which was granted by Sixth Judicial District Judge Ansel J. Chapman.

Baltas, along with Edward Franklin Vaughan of Jefferson, Iowa, is charged with sexually abusing a Sioux City, Iowa, female May 7 in the vicinity of Westlawn residence hall.

BALTAS' TRIAL is scheduled for July 20 — the trial date previously set for both. Vaughan's trial has been rescheduled for Aug. 3.

Baltas also filed for a motion to dismiss the case and for psychological testing of the girl, who identified both men as her assailants. Both motions were overruled by the court.

A hearing on the motion to suppress, which Baltas also filed, is set for July 14. The Assistant Johnson County Attorney Kevin B. Struve has filed a resistance to the motion.

The girl had reported to police that "she was sexually abused." She was examined by a gynecologist at UI Hospitals and "her claim was verified." She gave a description of the men who were located and "positively identified by the victim."

Courts

Also in District Court Wednesday, a North Liberty man filed a suit against a man and a woman who owe him more than $38,000 for a Coralville property they bought in 1977.

According to the suit, Reggie H. Eckhoff claims: Michael D. Hess and Nancy L. Hess have "defaulted" in paying off a promissory note for property known as "Big Slide" in Coralville.

In April a "Warranty Deed conveying the property" to Randy's Fine Home Carpets, Inc., was "recorded in the Johnson County Recorder's office" and the Hesses have, "despite repeated demands, failed to pay Plaintiff the unpaid principal balance and accrued interest due."

Eckhoff is asking for $38,036.69 plus interest and court costs against the Hesses. He is also asking that a "Writ of Attachment" be issued freezing any of the money obtained from the sale of the property until the court rules.

Firefighters to do inspections too

By Michael Leon
Staff Writer

Iowa City firefighters will add housing inspections to their other duties, but the fire chief does not think the work will delay them from reaching fires.

"I envision the inspections being performed in-service," said Iowa City Fire Chief Robert Keating. "but I don't think the men will ever be more than one minute away from the best position to reach a fire."

A new plan calls for firefighters to conduct inspections previously made by housing inspectors. Both groups will now inspect residential rental units for violation of fire and housing codes.

Keating said the inspections will probably be performed by officers driving a fully-equipped fire truck and maintaining radio contact with the station. If a fire is reported, the station will relay the call and firefighters will travel to the fire from the inspection site.

"WE PERFORM our commercial inspections that way, and half the time the officers are in a better position to respond than if they were at the station," Keating said. Iowa City firefighters now conduct fire inspections of only commercial buildings.

Keating said he plans to keep firefighters from Iowa City's three stations within their station's area so they will be closer to fires they would respond to.

The details of the plan have not been worked out and Keating doesn't know when inspections will begin. "I'll be meeting with the head of the housing inspection department and (City Manager) Neal Berlin to work this thing out," he said.

Keating said he is not aware what the inspection workload will be, but said he will make sure firefighters are still adequately trained.

"WITH SOME of the men out inspecting it could be hard to have enough for training sessions," he said, "and you have to practice some of those skills or you get rusty. But I'm going to preserve enough training time to maintain adequate fire suppression skills," he said.

Keating said the 48 Iowa City firefighters must be trained to conduct housing inspections and the city's two housing inspectors must be trained in fire inspection procedures.

No inspection training plans have been completed, Keating said. "Training the city inspectors shouldn't be hard," he said. "In a way they're already making fire inspections." Housing inspectors now check residential units for fire extinguishers, smoke alarms, fire doors and fire escapes, Keating said.

Iowa City Firefighter's Union President Hathan Hopkins refused to comment on the possibility that firefighters were unhappy about conducting inspections. Keating said the idea had been discussed for a long time and firefighters were resigned to it.

"The City Council basically made the decision to have the firefighters inspect when they reduced the (housing inspection) staff," City Manager Neal Berlin said. He said the economy of replacing those inspectors was a major factor in the council's decision.

Mischief: An intoxicated male was reported causing a disturbance at Mayflower Apartments, 1110 N. Dubuque St., Tuesday at about 4 a.m. Iowa City Police Department records state: the subject was reported running down the apartment halls and yelling out the windows.

Theodore Timothy Twigg, 528C Mayflower Apartments, was charged with criminal mischief, public intoxication, interference with official acts and disorderly conduct in connection with the incident.

Earlier that morning, around 1 a.m., a possible breaking and entry was reported at the Mayflower. The apartment complex game room was reportedly broken into and the ceiling tiles were pulled down. No other damage was reported.

Oglevie charge dismissal request denied

ROCKFORD, Ill. (UPI) — A Winnebago County circuit court judge Wednesday denied two defense attorney motions — one to dismiss charges and one requesting a jury — and continued an extradition hearing for the alleged "trigger man" in a 1979 West Branch, Iowa, murder.

Judge Robert Gill scheduled the next hearing for Andrew Jon Oglevie, 23, of Rockford, Ill., July 15 at 9 a.m.

Oglevie was arrested June 23 in the April 1979 shooting death of Ady Jensen at Jensen's parents West Branch farmhouse and is expected to face first-degree murder charges in Iowa.

Judge Gill said prosecutors must furnish information in response to a pre-trial discovery filed by Oglevie's attorney listing 21 requests at next Wednesday's hearing.

Authorities say Oglevie is being held at Rockford City Jail on "a charge of hold for Iowa."

Commission okays pay phone price hike

DES MOINES (UPI) — Northwestern Bell customers will be paying an additional 10 cents for pay telephone calls beginning Jan. 1 under a rate proposal approved Wednesday by the Iowa Commerce Commission.

The 20-cent charge will affect about 13,000 pay phones owned by Northwestern Bell in Iowa. The commission unanimously approved the 10-cent increase.

Bob Holetz, the commission's executive secretary, said Commerce Commission staff and phone company officials were directed to draw an estimate of the amount of revenue the increase would produce.

The increase would be offset by a slight reduction in residential telephone rates, so the pay phone rate hike should not increase the company's overall revenues, Holetz said.

Cropland loss

Imagine a strip of land a half-mile wide, stretching from New York to California. This unusual piece of real estate would total about a million acres, and would thus be equal to the amount of U.S. cropland lost to development each year.

The voracious appetites for land of urban planners, highway commissioners and private developers will, if allowed to continue much longer, seriously overburden not only the nation's cropland, but the U.S. economy and the world food market as well.

Last year the United States exported over $40 billion worth of food. While this amount represents a bright spot in America's balance of trade picture, it also represents sixty percent of all the food imported by other countries.

If U.S. farmers' capacity to produce food takes a turn downward, we will have to find some other way to pay for the oil, raw materials and finished products necessary to maintain our standard of living. Also, a tremendous strain will be put on what exports there are, as the bulk of the world's population increase in the next twenty years will come in countries that are already net importers of food. Intense competition for food resources will only exacerbate international tensions.

In Iowa, roughly 25 to 30 thousand acres of cropland are currently being converted to non-agricultural uses each year. These losses are partially offset by the draining of marshes and the clearing of timberland, which are then converted to cropland.

But this trend only amounts to trading prime farmland for marginal lands that are unable to sustain the high yields that are expected of today's farmers. And the conversion of timberland to cropland presents another set of problems. Forests are needed not only for the wood but also to replace oxygen in the atmosphere.

It should be noted that the current figures represent a significant decrease from those of the early 1970s, when as many as 50 thousand acres of Iowa farmland were lost each year. The change can be attributed to a number of factors, including tougher zoning laws in some counties, the general slowing down of the economy, and increased public awareness.

Conversion of cropland is not a major problem in Johnson County. The 85.5 acres lost in 1980, while not insignificant, ranks below state and national averages. Recent development in this county has come mainly at the expense of such marginal lands as mentioned above, with the zoning commission taking a tighter rein on cropland than was the case in past years. Still, it is to be hoped that the issue of cropland protection will be specifically addressed when the county's long-awaited comprehensive plan is unveiled.

This nation's cropland is a vital resource that must be protected. Current efforts in Johnson County and the state to slow the loss of farmland are a good beginning, but much more needs to be done, particularly nationwide. Any long-term solution of the problem will have to include coordinated planning at all levels of government, and such planning must give preference to future needs over short-term economic advantages.

But perhaps what is needed most right now is an awareness on the public's part that the soil is as important to our national security as all the missiles we might build or all the oil we might stockpile.

Women's wages

To suggest that I get paid less for this editorial because it deals with a different subject than that written today by my male counterpart would be ridiculous. But, that is exactly the practice that is followed by municipalities around the country.

Workers in San Jose are on strike, demanding equal pay for women doing comparable work to men. The concept of equal pay for equal work is undeniable. Equal pay for comparable work should be met with the same acceptance.

To say that a lifestyle editor, traditionally a woman's position, and a sports editor, traditionally a man's job, be paid at different rates is clearly outdated. It is also clearly unfair.

The reasons for such practices are for the most part economic. When women earn 59 cents for every dollar earned by men, somebody is making a profit. When women with college degrees earn less than men who are high school dropouts, somebody is making a profit.

The San Jose City Council has not met the union demands with serious offers. Union officials estimated the cost of correcting sex-based pay inequities at $3.2 million during the next four years.

The council's latest offer, however, is a 6 percent raise each year for two years for all workers and an additional $1.45 million to be used solely to correct pay inequities for women.

To even suggest that male workers receive raises before the women's salaries are made equitable shows a refusal to accept the simple fact that comparable work should receive the same pay. Wage increases should be limited to women doing comparable work — but getting paid less than men — until the salaries are equal.

It is time for the "feminist capital of the world" — as Mayor Janet Gray Hayes is fond of calling it — to deal realistically with women's wages and set an example for other municipalities to follow.

That is also a lesson that could be learned here at the UI, where a secretary I earns $8,396 and must have either a college degree or a year of experience, and a maintenance repair person I earns $9,059 and only has to be able to read and write and follow instructions.

The last of the middle-aged anchormen

I doubt it'll get much coverage. Walter Cronkite stepped down last March, amid praise and eulogies enough for a king's abdication, and the media don't like to repeat themselves. They also don't want to give too much space to one network; there'll be a hundred stories about Fred Silverman's failure and resignation. But John Chancellor is retiring as the anchorman of

Eric Grevstad

NBC Nightly News, and I think someone should write him a fan letter. I would have liked to see Chancellor have a year or so to himself after Cronkite's retirement; he deserved some time as the last of the middle-aged generation, and he could handle the competition with one hand. But NBC had picked up Roger Mudd after Dan Rather got the CBS job, and they couldn't just keep him on ice.

To put both men on the air, the network made Mudd chief Washington correspondent — Chancellor introduces Mudd, who introduces the Washington reporters. It's an awkward, bidding-time arrangement, and perhaps it looked rather obvious. Anyway, NBC's new anchors will be Mudd and Tom Brokaw — the Bland and Blow-dried Report. Chancellor is going to do commentary.

I HAVE ALWAYS liked NBC News. Chancellor spent most of his career fighting the legend of Walter Cronkite, and will now take on the legend of Eric Seaverid — the two solemn pillars that made "CBS News" a synonym for "unbearably serious." Cronkite was famous for weeping during the space shots; Seaverid did his best to look like Zeus and seemed to be reading from stone tablets.

Dan Rather, in the CBS tradition, has been serious under pressure lately; he looked a bit nervous during his first weeks as anchor, and spent half the coverage of the Reagan/Brady and Pope John Paul shootings calling for moments of silence.

Unrestrained solemnity is hard to combat. ABC has lunged the other way, with Star Wars graphics and rugby-scrum anchor teams; if CBS correspondents intone the news, ABC's play keep-away with it. In prime time, ABC brings you Geraldo Rivera, the Mike Wallace of the lightweight ("Item! So and so. Item! Such and such. Elvis' doctor was unavailable to ABC News for comment.") and Barbara Walters letting John Derek speak for Bo.

NBC, ON THE other hand, does a serious job without taking itself too seriously. The network has always hired excellent people who don't quite fit into standard slots — Garrick Utley, Jack Perkins — and, more important, let them act human while they work. At the '80 conventions, Chancellor and Brinkley sipped coffee, put their feet on the balcony rail and made the best of a bad situation. When silly things happened, they weren't afraid to laugh.

Seaverid was stentorian; Harry Reasoner's brief try at commentary was composed of labored joke-cracking. Chancellor is a relaxed, witty man — he's always seemed happier the few times I've seen him in shirtsleeves — and also one of the few on-camera personalities who can write. One reason I like him is a neat, casual article about city grocery stores he did for The New York Times. At NBC, he's "Principal Reporter and Writer," and should be the best commentator in years.

The other reason I like John Chancellor is that he's the only real person in TV news. I've never seen another anchorman have a coughing fit. Chancellor's had some that were so bad he had to break for a commercial.

Status of UI women faculty and administrators improving slowly

This is the last of two articles.

By Classie Hoyle

As one of the first public universities in the United States to admit women as students, the UI has a long-established principle of providing women with access to education. In the last fifteen years, many women have sought the educational credentials that would help them take advantage of the broader career opportunities becoming open to women.

This has been reflected in enrollment figures at the UI. In comparing statistics over just a five-year span, 1975-1980, enrollment of undergraduate women in Business Administration, for example, increased from 17 percent to 35 percent, enrollment of women in Dentistry increased from 7 percent to 14 percent, and enrollment of women in Engineering increased from 6 percent to 19 percent.

At the graduate level, enrollment of women in Business Administration during the same five-year span increased from 11 percent to 24 percent, in Dentistry from 8 percent to 27 percent, and in Engineering from 3 percent to 8 percent. Enrollment of women in the College of Medicine increased from 5 percent to 25 percent.

THE PATTERN of employment for women at the UI, prior to the 1970s, was similar to that on other major campuses. With the greater availability of qualified women, the federal pressure to improve women's access to employment in academia, and, most importantly, determination on the part of UI leadership, the percentage of women appointed to the faculty and to administrative positions has indeed risen in the last decade.

In general, though, the numbers, ranks, and salaries of women employed in higher education has been considerably lower than expected on the basis of available qualified women. Women have been a "statistical rarity" and, as such, have had to spend more time proving their competence. There have been deep-seated feelings about the role of women in our society and about the very propriety of women competing as equals with men for tenure-level academic appointments or top administrative posts.

AT THE UI, women comprised 12 percent of the tenure-track faculty in 1972. The proportion of women with tenure-track appointments among the faculty of 1,489 in October 1980 had risen to 15.9 percent.

Traditionally, women have been appointed to junior level, non-tenure-track or visiting professor positions in a higher proportion than to tenure-track positions; these appointments do not imply equality with qualified men. On many campuses, the proportion of women in these non-tenure-track positions has increased much more rapidly in the last decade than the proportion

Board of contributors

Classie Hoyle

It may be indicative of the level of change necessary, however, that more than one-third of our academic units have no women faculty at all. Twelve percent of the UI academic units not only have all-male faculty but are, as well, in the Arts and Humanities, Education, or Social Sciences — fields in which many women who earned doctorate degrees have been available.

The number of executive and administrative positions at the UI is much smaller than the number of faculty, and the proportion of women in this group of 148 employees (which includes the president, vice presidents, directors, and deans, among others) was 19 percent in 1980. This compares very favorably with the proportion of qualified women available nationwide and is indicative of support for equality of women at the highest levels of administration.

AMONG THE 3,076 professional and scientific employees at the university the overall proportion of women has been greater than 50 percent. However, women have been under-represented in the positions with the higher levels of responsibilities and salaries. During 1978-79 27 percent of the 432 professional and scientific employees at the higher salary scales were women; during 1980-81 29 percent of the 528 employees at this level were women.

The Affirmative Action Office has been actively working with the academic community for nearly a decade to broaden recruitment practices and to change prejudicial attitudes. The trends toward increasing proportions of women appointed as tenure-track faculty, to administrative posts, and to higher-level professional and scientific positions can be expected to continue as public advertisement on a broad scale of available positions attracts highly qualified women as candidates.

ALONG WITH THE changes in recruitment and appointment procedures, changes in attitudes are essential. A firm moral commitment toward accepting qualified women as candidates on an equal footing with other applicants is the basis of progressive change. As President Willard Boyd said in March 1973, "This University is committed to Affirmative Action and Equal Employment Opportunity not because of external pressure but because we believe in it."

Many people must share in the challenge of spreading new definitions of women's career potential throughout this academic community with its thousands of employees. Equality for women has long been overdue in institutions for higher education. Yet, if we are to make the best use of our national pool of talented people, it is a requirement for the future.

Classie Hoyle is UI Director of Affirmative Action.

SAN JOSE, Calif. (UPI) — Municipal workers, striking for higher salaries, Wednesday ridiculed the city council's decision to ignore their demands for a 10 percent raise.

A proposal by the city of San Jose to spend $1.45 million over the next three years adjusting female employees' salaries upward toward those of men was shouted down Tuesday night by a vote of the city council. The strikers agreed to a 10 percent raise but a vote from the dominated city council endorsed a contract containing a warning that would be fired if they did not return to work.

Rental price increases expected

By Cherann Davidson
Staff Writer

Local apartment dwellers can expect to pay more for living space next fall, but the extent of the increase varies throughout Iowa City, according to local housing officials.

"We don't hear from everybody" who receives a rent increase so it is difficult to estimate city-wide rent prices, said Harry Barum, UI Protective Association for Tenants director.

The vacancy rate of Iowa City residents in the past has been approximately less than 1 percent which is "very low" Barum said. About 55 percent of Iowa City's population live in rental properties, he said. This situation creates inflated rent prices, Barum said.

Rent in Iowa City is "probably high" compared to other communities, because the area "has such a high demand with the student population," said Jim Hencin, Community Development Block Grant program coordinator.

APARTMENT PRICES have a "snowballing" effect because housing is in great demand and new construction is costly, Hencin said. Building costs are passed on to the apartment dweller through rent, he said.

Hencin said there are no local rent-control laws, so landlords have no restrictions on the rent they can charge.

Bruce Michaels, coordinator of the UI Campus Information Center which oversees the Housing Clearinghouse, said the clearinghouse conducted a survey in May of about 100 apartment complexes and people who list apartments or rooms with the clearinghouse.

Average monthly prices among those listings at the clearinghouse for rooms and apartments as of May 1 were:

- Efficiency apartments — $140-$250, average price, $190.
- One bedroom apartments — $160-$400, average price, $225.
- Two bedroom apartments — $185-$500, average price, $325.
- Three bedroom apartments — $245-$675, average price, $410.
- Rooms — $75-$140, average price, $120.

Michaels said about 10 of approximately 100 landlords of those complexes contacted for the survey said they were going to raise rent in August or September.

THE CLEARINGHOUSE, on the first floor of the Union, will publish a new list of apartment complexes and prices in August, he said.

People started looking for apartments for fall in April — earlier than in past years, he said. "Normally it is at this time (of the year)" people start looking for apartments, but the clearinghouse has had a steady clientele since April, he said.

The clearinghouse contacts persons who have listed rental properties in the past in order to have a selection of prices and properties, Michaels said. To obtain a current average price range of apartment prices, one could look at the listings in the books, but that would be only a small sample of area rent fees, he said.

Oral Majority leaders want to debate Jepsen

DES MOINES (UPI) — Two gay rights activists, in an effort to lure Iowans to the newly-formed group Oral Majority, Wednesday challenged Sen. Roger Jepsen, R-Iowa, to a debate over the merit of allowing alternative lifestyles.

"We challenge Jepsen to debate on this issue, and also on his ridiculous opposition to President Reagan's Supreme Court nomination, which we must support," they said.

Bob Kunst, Oral Majority executive director, and Jonathan Susskind, Oral Majority co-director, accused Jepsen of being in alliance with the Rev. Jerry Falwell, founder of the ultra-conservative group Moral Majority. Both Jepsen and Falwell want to deny personal freedoms, they charged.

SUSSKIND and Kunst are on a 7-day, 40-city trip around the U.S. to set up a network of Oral Majority chapters. They said a chapter should be formed in Des Moines and other major Iowa cities. They also are asking for $100 contributions from interested persons, organizations and companies.

Three goals of the Oral Majority, the men said, are to gain freedom of information and choice, eliminate all victimless crimes such as prostitution and homosexuality and to promote alternative lifestyles.

"Jepsen's sexual insecurity and emotional uncertainty must be so great that he must lash out at others with his narrow-minded, reactionary bill," Kunst said. "He and his religious extremist chavistic cohorts are not the only human beings who know what's best for raising a family..."

San Jose city workers ignore firing threat

SAN JOSE, Calif. (UPI) — Municipal workers, striking for unisex salaries, Wednesday ridiculed what they called "an empty threat" to fire them if they did not return to work Monday.

A proposal by the city of San Jose to spend $1.45 million over the next two years adjusting female employee's salaries upward toward those of men was shouted down Tuesday night at a rally of local 101 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

The offer also included a 6 percent pay increase this year and another 6 percent next year for all workers.

The strikers agreed to press the strike despite a vote from the female-dominated city council endorsing a letter containing a warning that strikers would be fired if they did not return to work Monday morning or on their next scheduled shift after that.

UNION BUSINESS agent Prudence Saathaug called the warning "an empty threat."

City officials and those from the union disagreed about how many of the city's 2,000 employees were on strike in the three-day walkout that began at midnight Sunday.

There were about 350 people on the picket lines and Saathaug said at least twice that many workers stayed home. City officials said the number was much lower.

Most affected by the walkout were the city's libraries where seven of the nine branches were forced to close.

Police and fire protection, garbage pickup and sewage treatment all remained unaffected by the strike.

New herpes treatment found

BOSTON (UPI) — A new drug has proven successful in treating herpes, a virus that causes painful, aggravating cold sores around the mouth and lesions in the genital area in millions of Americans, a study released Wednesday said.

The study, conducted on a small test group at Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore, could be a milestone in eventually helping herpes sufferers find relief, researchers said.

"We think this is the first compelling demonstration that a drug can prevent the development of herpes simplex in bone marrow transplant recipients," said Dr. Rein Saral, principal author of the study published in the New England Journal of Medicine.

CBS on top of latest ratings

NEW YORK (UPI) — CBS, ABC and NBC again finished in that order in the Nielsen television ratings for the week ending July 5 announced today with re-runs in nearly all the top spots.

CBS had a 13.7 Nielsen score for the week, ABC 12.6 and NBC 10.8.

ABC, however, had the top three individual shows — "Three's Company," "Too Close for Comfort," and the only original in the top 20 shows, "20-20." CBS took fourth and fifth with "60 Minutes" and "MASH," ABC sixth with "Hart to Hart," CBS seventh and eighth with "House Calls" and "Trapper John," ABC ninth with "Laverne and Shirley," and NBC's only show in the top 10 was No. 10, "Diff'rent Strokes."

The CBS special "Lights! Action! Africa!" was 23rd and Walter Cronkite's "Universe" on CBS 48th among the other few originals.

Watergate witness teaching at the UI

By T. Johnson Staff Writer

People talk about getting in on the ground floors of various enterprises — business, technology, fads — but it is very seldom that one actually meets a person who was around when something major was beginning.

Stephen Temmer was in on the advent of the tape-recording boom and the development of a workable videodisc. He was there when stereo tape recording blasted off in this country.

Born in Vienna, Temmer studied piano, violin, composition and conducting. He sang in the Vienna Boys Choir.

"I was supposed to be a musician," he said. "All the best musical education was lavished upon me. If I had stayed in Vienna, I would have become a musician, but Hitler didn't want us there."

The Nazis chased his family out of Austria to Yugoslavia. Eventually, they came to the United States.

"MY ATTENTION turned to things technical, but always connected with music. I always stayed in a straddled position between music and engineering."

Years of experience in developing new recording techniques turned Temmer into an expert on recording as a whole. The FBI used Temmer as a technical adviser to offer expert testimony and analysis in court cases.

"I made it a very firm rule never to appear for one side or the other," Temmer said. Which was all very nice, until Watergate.

"When the Watergate thing came up, apparently (Special Prosecutor) Archibald Cox asked the FBI for somebody and they came up with my name. I got called one night to come on down tomorrow morning at 8 o'clock. We'll pay your airfare and we need your help."

That was the beginning of a long, strange journey, with the pro-Nixon factions of the Justice Department working against the anti-Nixon factions. The prosecution side informed Temmer that his phone had been bugged by the pro-Nixonites.

"I HAD TO BE very careful what I said over the phone," Temmer recalled. "They would have done anything to discredit me."

Through the paranoia, which included the investigation of wiretaps and feeding computers with obituaries to see whether a pattern of deaths was emerging, Temmer worked his way into the heart of the investigation, the legendary 18½-minute gap in one of the Nixon tapes.

"I was the first to hear the 18½ minutes in Judge Sirica's chambers and the first to get my hands on the equipment that had both recorded all the things in the White House and the machine that was supposedly the culprit in the erasure."

"When I went there I was really gung ho about pulling out all the stops and getting rid of that S.O.B. But I certainly changed my mind about things in general and specifically about the fragility of institutions. Everyone was proceeding carefully. They were all professionals and this was just another case, and I think that comes through."

Stephen Temmer, a guest lecturer in audio recording, operates the Neve mixing console in the Music School recording studios.

if an interesting one."

NOW TEMMER IS an acoustics adviser at New York's Lincoln Center. He is on the UI campus as a guest lecturer for the seminar in audio recording offered through the music school.

Temmer will be offering a lecture and demonstration of great moments in recording history at 8 p.m. Friday in Clapp Recital Hall.

Included will be the first known stereo recording — Beethoven's Concerto No. 5 in E Flat Major — which was recorded during the bombing of Berlin in 1944. Also featured will be Mozart's "Musical Joke," which is not available on record, and rare recordings of Toscanini during rehearsals.

James Garner as 'Marlowe' fails to do justice to Chandler's writing

By Craig Wyrick Staff Writer

Twenty years passed after The Brasher Doubloon (1947) before private eye Philip Marlowe was brought back to the screen in Marlowe (1969). That's a lot of water under the bridge.

Raymond Chandler died in 1959, the same year "Philip Marlowe" became a TV series. Two years before that, he wrote, "To accept a mediocre form and make something like literature out of it is in itself rather an accomplishment. They tell me — I don't say this on my own information — that hundreds of writers today are making some sort of living from the mystery story because I made it respectable and even dignified. But, hell, what else can you do when you write?"

Chandler truly changed the detective novel in both style and respectability. Perhaps he came along at a time when critics were ready to recognize the hard-boiled detective novel as a true American art form. But his style was different, more detached and tougher than those that had come before, and influenced all those that followed.

THE TV SHOW, however, was not successful, and it was another 10 years before Marlowe's character made another appearance in a film. Writer Sterling Silliphant had to do without Chandler's help.

Based on Chandler's The Little Sister, the film only takes the outer shell of the story, discarding most of the other Chandler conventions for the 1960s setting. Chandler himself didn't like the original story, saying it was "the only book of mine I have actively disliked. It was written in a bad mood and I think that comes through." James Garner plays Marlowe, and this is the first big step away from Chandler. Garner hands in a rather charming performance, but as Marlowe would say, "I'm not selling my charm." Garner's character is like Jim Rockford from "The Rockford Files." The appearance of Carroll O'Connor as a cop only reinforces the television-style direction of Paul Bogart.

Bruce Lee and Rita Moreno make brief appearances, with their roles limited by the TV-size material.

Not judged as a Chandler film, Marlowe would make a fine episode of "The Rockford Files." But it doesn't do justice to Chandler. For that, it was another four years before Robert Altman's Marlowe tribute in The Long Goodbye.

Rating — ★★★

Marlowe, the sixth film in the Chandler series, is at the Bijou tonight at 7.

Three claim 'Raiders' story theirs

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — An archeologist and two business partners filed a $100 million suit Wednesday against the makers of the smash movie hit Raiders of the Lost Ark, claiming they illegally lifted material from a copyrighted work.

The Superior Court suit was filed by archeologist Robert Lawrence Kuhn, former Worldwide Church of God Treasurer Stanley Rader and Henry Cornwall. Named in the suit were director Steven Spielberg, producer George Lucas, Paramount Pictures and the talent agency of International Creative Management.

Kuhn and Rader claim Raiders of the Lost Ark is based on Kuhn's copyrighted work, "Ark," which he submitted to the ICM talent agency. ICM formerly represented Spielberg and Lucas, who made millions with his Empire Strikes Back.

"THEY ARE CLAIMING this film is going to gross to $1 billion," Rader said. "I read an article by Mr. Lucas recently titled 'The Empire Pays Off.' I suspect in this case the 'Empire' should pay off the people who invested so much time and energy in this project."

Lucas' attorney, Thomas Pollock, called the charges ridiculous.

"Every time you have a successful movie, there'll be people who come forward who claim it's theirs. As far as I'm concerned, they're insects coming out of the woodwork," he said.

Raiders of the Lost Ark, one of the summer's biggest moneymakers, grossed $50 million in its first month of release.

Kuhn claims he began his project more than 10 years ago. He says it was a fictionalized account of the 20th century discovery of the holy lost Ark of the Covenant and its power. Kuhn claims he made deals with Rader and Cornwall to share the profits for their help in promoting the project.

Kuhn, Rader and Cornwall claim they submitted their copyrighted work to International Creative Management and that the agency later made it available to Spielberg and Lucas.

The Red Stallion was packed Tuesday night. The parking lot was overflowing; the woman at the door was taking cover charges as fast as she could.

There were all types in the crowd: men and women, young, old, nicely dressed and hot off the truck. A scratchy, lo-fi recording introduced the entertainment.

"Welcome to the challenge of the '80s ... mud wrestling as you've never seen it before ... sanctioned by the American Mud Wrestling Association."

In the center of the hollowed-out cube that is the Red Stallion, a ring — they bought a professional 16-foot model with optional sponge-rubber retaining walls — covers the dance floor. The ring floor is coated with mud, the retaining walls with plastic.

It's all very business-like and legitimate, because this is professional mud wrestling. This is All-Star Wrestling meets hog wallow, all designed for easy transport so as not to cut into the profits.

THE EMCEE trots around in front of the ring. The recording introduces him as somebody from somewhere. He climbs into the ring without regard for the plastic-ease shine on his rental-model patent leathers.

He wears one of those polyester wash-'em-at-home tuxedos and invites the crowd to feel that the mud is real. This, of course, inspires a couple of the more vociferous fans to throw a few globs of mud at him, which he of course smears around into great, black zebra stripes.

"This is an audience participation sport," he shouts into the microphone. "This is your chance to make a total ass of yourself."

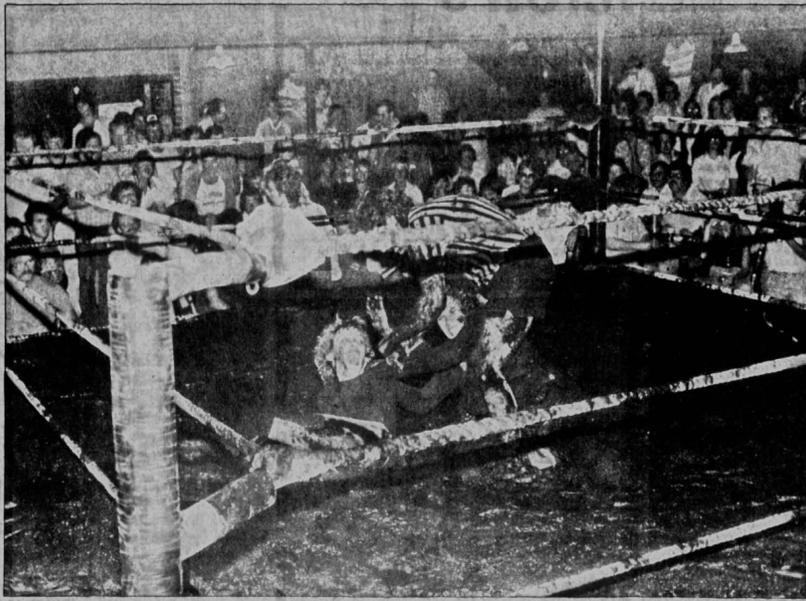

Court nomination boon to film

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Paramount Studio executives were jubilant Wednesday over the nomination of Judge Sandra D. O'Connor to the Supreme Court.

The film company plans to release a new movie this fall, First Saturday In October, based on the first woman appointed to the high court, starring Jill Clayburgh in a role that may fall to Judge O'Connor in real life.

"This is fantastic," producer Paul Heller said. "We're three feet off the ground. Of course we had no idea that anything like this would happen at the very time we planned to release the picture."

Heller said the film company had been debating releasing the picture in October or early next year. "Now we will release the picture in October for sure," he said.

An American Mud Wrestling Association referee tries to regulate the action Tuesday night.

The emcee introduces the four professionals. They trot out in little satin gym trunks and tank tops. The tank tops say "Wrestler" across the bosom, but the emcee introduces them as The Hustlers. The women strut their stuff, shaking their breasts and lewdly puckering up. A fan in the first row takes a bite at the largest of the women. She smiles and sort of taps him away.

ALL OF THIS happens without a trace of eroticism, even with the skimpy outfits. There is something pathetic about human beings who slap each other around in a pit of mud for the enjoyment of others.

A guy on the back stairs — a nice-looking guy dressed from top to bottom in clean denim — taps his friend and says, "I hope she slaughters that bitch; she looks just like my wife."

When the pageantry is finally over, when the wrestling actually begins, it gets sadder and sadder. The fans love every minute of it. They throw mud at each other between rounds and swirl beer. They jump up and down and try to get their friends to join one of the grudge matches scheduled for later in the night.

A grand old time, to be sure, if one doesn't mind the side thoughts about why a woman would become a professional mud wrestler. A terrific show, even if imitation violence has been substituted for any sort of cheap sexual thrill.

There is no bump and grind. There really isn't any sex to it at all — and the crowd still goes wild.

Body found in muddy creek; father awaits identification

TYLER, Texas (UPI) — A nearly blind father waited Wednesday for medical experts to determine whether a muddy body pulled from a winding creek was his 11-year-old kidnapped daughter whose hazel eyes were his windows on the world.

The body was retrieved from a clump of bushes in the creek late Tuesday but could not be identified without medical and dental tests in Dallas, 100 miles away. Officials said identification of the body was expected today.

The body was found by a fisherman five miles from the home of Gene McRoy, face down and covered with mud in shallow water. It was spotted only hours after McCroy had tearfully begged for the return of his missing daughter Trisha and an anonymous donor had posted a $50,000 reward.

A NEIGHBOR, Chester Owen, said he feared the girl's father would "explode" if he learned Trisha was dead.

"She really helped take care of her daddy," Owen said. "And I don't know what will become of him without her. He is just going to explode."

McRoy, the 36-year-old father of three children, was a bricklayer until retinosis pigmentosa began taking his sight 11 years ago. He can see nothing at night now and has only 10 percent of his day vision.

"When I first found out about it (the disease), I thought I would kill myself," McRoy said. "But Trisha made all the difference for me. I love all three of my children, but I'll always hold a certain spot for her."

The young girl, who had shoulder-length brown hair and hazel eyes, had just finished fifth grade and was a straight A student.

POLICE SAID the girl disappeared late Friday or early Saturday while she slept on the couch in the family's living room. Her parents, sleeping in a nearby bedroom, heard nothing.

Sheriff J.B. Smith said the body appeared to be that of a "young female," but refused further comment.

Officials were cautious because another Tyler girl, Sharon Irving, 14, has been missing since she disappeared June 26 while on vacation in Galveston with her parents.

At a news conference before the body was found, McRoy said his daughter was "like another hand" to him. Because he cannot see at night, she would help feed the animals on their farm, guide him through the house and do whatever she could for him, he said.

"I just hope whoever got her will return her safely," McRoy said. "I know she is scared; I'm scared. I know I'll get her back because I got the good Lord helping me."

La. Legislature votes to give equal time to origin theories

BATON ROUGE, La. (UPI) — The Louisiana Legislature Wednesday approved and sent to the governor a bill requiring schools that teach evolution to give equal time to the theory of creationism.

The Senate voted 26-12 in favor of the measure, which passed the House Monday, but Gov. Dave Treen has refused to say if he will sign it.

If the measure becomes law, Louisiana would become the second state in the nation to mandate equal treatment of evolution and creationism, which theorizes that man was placed on Earth by a supreme being.

Earlier this year the Arkansas Legislature passed a similar law, which will go into effect in September 1982. The American Civil Liberties Union, clergymen and others have filed suit to challenge that measure's constitutionality.

"EVOLUTION is no more than a fairy tale about a frog that turned into a prince, but that is what we are teaching our children in school today," Sen. Bill Keith, the lay Baptist preacher who sponsored the measure, told his colleagues.

"We compel our children to go to school, then when they get there, we compel them to be taught that they come from monkeys."

Sen. Sydney Nelson, who has led the opposition to Keith's bill, quoted from Carl Sagan's book Cosmos in defending evolution and decrying creationism as veiled religion.

"Periodically, we have attempts by people who interpret the Bible literally to change science," Nelson said. "(The measure is) trying to have taught in our public schools the theory that is based upon the first book of Genesis."

Other opponents said creationism belonged in the home or church, not in public schools.

Faulty nuclear reactors reported

CHICAGO (UPI) — Fourteen nuclear reactors around the country have unexpectedly brittle reactor vessels that could crack and lead to a "serious accident" unless they are fixed, a spokesman for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission said Wednesday.

"Radiation over a period of time gradually causes brittling of a reactor vessel," the 8-inch thick protective metal shields surrounding the reactors, said Jan Strasma, a spokesman for the regional NRC office in Glen Ellyn, west of Chicago.

Radioactive steam could escape into the atmosphere if the metal shields around the pressurized water reactors become cracked.

Strasma said the 14 are among 44 pressurized water reactors in the country and are between 4 and 20 years old.

"IT'S BEEN known since the plants were built that radiation caused brittling," he said. "For that reason all plants have samples of the vessel material mounted inside the reactor that are periodically removed to be tested."

"At least in some of the plants, the brittling is happening faster than anticipated."

Strasma said, however, no emergency exists.

"It's not a problem of immediate concern but rather of long range," he said. "We see no need for these plants to be shut down immediately to deal with the problem but measures have to be taken in the next year."

SLIDE PRESENTATIONS and fact sheets are being considered as ways of getting information out, said Committee Chairman Robert Hogg, professor of Statistics. Giving short presentations in lounges during coffee breaks is another possibility. "We're trying to do the work in very short presentations... like a three-minute meeting," he said.

Hogg said he is aware UI faculty and staff have "not responded too well to United Way in the past." He said this is probably due to the fact United Way was not allowed to solicit. Hogg directed a UI United Way drive during the early 1960s when direct solicitation of employees was permitted. No figures are available but Hogg said the drive went "reasonably well."

Committee members and UI officials have considered objections that pressure may be applied for money donations. "We are trying to find a way to get information out while still protecting the rights of individuals," said committee member Mary Jo Small, assistant vice president for Finance and University Services.

CHARLES SWISHER, president of the UI Staff Council when it voted not to change its policy on direct solicitation, said there is fear people could be pressured by United Way. "There's a concern that if an individual in a particular department was sold on it (United Way) really strong, there might be some pressure on others... It would at least create an awkward situation."

Ron Allen, president of the Faculty Senate, said there had been concern the United Way may have used coercion in drives when direct solicitation was allowed. "I don't know to what extent that occurred, but it was articulated as a real concern at the meetings," he said.

Volm is aware of the concerns. "They are afraid we'll be coercive and we won't. Nobody involved with United Way would do that... I'm entirely opposed to it and wouldn't allow it." Johnson County United Way is autonomous, she said. "If there were any arms twisted in other towns, it's not going to happen here. And if it happened 20 years ago it's not going to happen now."

"WE DON'T want a penny of money given through coercion. I can't stress that enough. We want them to give because they want to give," she said. Volm said United Way volunteers would conduct the informational presentations. Volunteers might include some university employees but the chances of someone working in his or her own department would be very small, she said.

Allen said he thinks all United Way people "are honorable and would avoid coercion," but he thinks pressures could still exist.

United Way's decision to approach the UI stemmed from the conclusion they had raised as many donations as possible under the soliciting regulation, said Tom Baldrige, United Way worker.

Last year's university drive was conducted through mailings but Volm said these proved to be unsuccessful. "Letters are the very worst way to raise money... they end up in the wastebasket," she said. Volm is hopeful providing information will spur UI employees to donate on their own. "This is not a community without compassion. They give for a worthy cause."

An increase in UI donations for this year's drive could go a long way toward combating reduced state and federal money to Johnson County social programs, Volm said. "We are very grateful to be given this opportunity."

may have problems later since programs such as computer science, business and journalism are moving to cap enrollments. When students cannot get accepted into a school, Tuttle said their options are the same as they always have been. The options are to go to another college, not go to college or go into another field.

"There are careers out there that don't require a degree," Tuttle said. "You can insure insurance. You can go into journalism or business or banking without a degree."

"JUST BECAUSE you have a degree that doesn't mean the world is standing there waiting with a big high-paying job either," he said. Rinderspacher said there will be room for all students who register during the summer orientation sessions. "I think it looks real good for July. We will definitely close some classes, but I think we can handle it through July," he said.

"There will be some problems in August," Rinderspacher said. He said he does not know how extensive those problems will be.

"There may be a few people who will say, 'I can't get what I want. I'm going home,'" Tuttle said. "But if students are flexible enough then we can work something out."

freshmen most of the two-day session.

"These kids are really concerned about overloading themselves and grouping classes together so they can study," Cheng said.

Studying was billed as top priority by many of the students attending orientation. "Partying" followed closely as a second occupation.

"A STRAIGHT 4.0 and admission to the College of Engineering," are Fenton's goals for his freshman year.

"I plan to be in honors courses this fall," said Frank Svejda, Missouri Valley, Iowa, Svejda, state of Iowa scholar and valedictorian of his class of 40, plans to major in computer science.

Michele Whitfield, 17, Rock Island, Ill., hasn't chosen a major but is "looking forward to the parties."

The UI "kind of has a reputation of being a party city," Whitfield said.

But parents need not worry, because Iowa City "isn't considered 'sin city' or anything like that anymore," Whitfield said. Lynn Gnage, 18, Wolcott, N.Y., chose UI because she heard it has "a good running program." She plans to participate in cross country and track while deciding on a major.

"HOPEFULLY, after my freshman year I'll know what I want to do for a job," Gnage said. Until then, she said she looks forward to the "independence" of being in college.

Independence and eligibility are synonymous for Fenton who said he plans to come to the UI with no strings attached to hometown sweethearts.

"I've got unlimited visitation on my floor in Hillcrest," Fenton said. "What have I got to worry about?"

Once the incoming freshmen are registered "a big part of their worries are over," Cheng said.

The only real concern they have afterward seems to be whether everything will be in order when they return in the fall, she said.

"I've been doing a lot of repeating" and even more reassuring, Cheng said. "Hopefully, I'm guiding them in the right direction. At least I feel like I'm helping to ease some of the pain."

Kuhn's comments unauthorized by club owners

By Peter Finney Jr.
United Press International

NEW YORK — Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's comments that baseball was in dire economic straits were unauthorized by the owners' bargaining committee, the owners' chief negotiator testified Wednesday.

Ray Grebey, director of the owners' Player Relations Committee, said Kuhn was speaking only for himself when he stated in December, 1980, that exorbitant owners' financial records.

Asked why he was the only authorized person to comment on labor issues, Grebey said "I consider this to be very normal. Unless you're going to have anarchy and chaos you need a single spokesman. You're not supposed to bring your entire membership to the bargaining table and have a free-for-all."

GREBEY, THE first witness for the owners before the National Labor Relations Board which is hearing a charge of unfair labor practices against the owners, testified that increased compensation for free agents never was designed to deflate player salaries.

"It was not our objective to do damage in any form to free agency," Grebey said. "Free agency is here to stay. We stated unequivocally there was no intent or desire to attack, directly or indirectly, the level of salaries of free agents."

He was testy under cross-examination, at one point asking a players' attorney to "get your hand out of your mouth" in order to hear a question.

He denied that compensation was an economic issue because it would effect "at most 12 ball players a year," not enough to be significant.

THAT LIMIT of 12 was offered by the owners July 4 in the last negotiating session with both sides. The players rejected it.

Grebey said owners favored increased compensation to help restore competitive balance and to help a team fill a hole left by the loss of a quality player.

He supported his argument about player salaries by using the examples of three trades involving top-notch players — Rod Carew and Fred Lynn of the California Angels and Vida Blue of the San Francisco Giants.

In all three deals, the superstar went to another team in exchange for at least three players. Despite that, Grebey said, Carew, Blue and Lynn each signed generous contracts with their new clubs, demonstrating that salaries were not lowered by such moves.

Grebey also told the hearing of a comment made by California Angels executive vice president Buzzie Bavasi about signing free agents. Grebey quoted Bavasi as telling him, "I don't care what I have to give up or who leaves. I'll do anything I have to do to get a player I want and I'll pay him anything he wants."

Stokes matures into top Ohio prep

By Jay Christensen
Sports Editor

When Greg Stokes quit ninth grade basketball in Hamilton, Ohio, he never dreamed of scholarships. But that was more than four years ago.

Today the same Stokes has honors like 'Ohio High School Player of the Year' and 'Parade Magazine All-America' surrounding his name. And, yes, Stokes has a scholarship too.

The 6-foot-10 left-hander shunned offers from Cincinnati, Michigan and Miami (Ohio), to come to the cornfields of Iowa. "Everybody gave me the line about ending up in the cornfield," Stokes said. "I just asked, 'Have you ever been there?' No, they couldn't say anything."

BUT MAKING decisions hasn't been Stokes' toughest job. "I quit my ninth grade team because I thought I should be playing more," Stokes said. "The next summer I went out and worked my hardest. I didn't even think scholarship till my junior year. I really started to develop."

By the time his senior season started, the coaches were taking notice. His play improved and so did the number of scouts in the stands.

After Stokes inked with the Hawkeyes, Iowa Head Coach Lute Olson remarked, "Greg has improved more in one season than any high school player I've ever seen. He is developing fast and has the potential to be a great player."

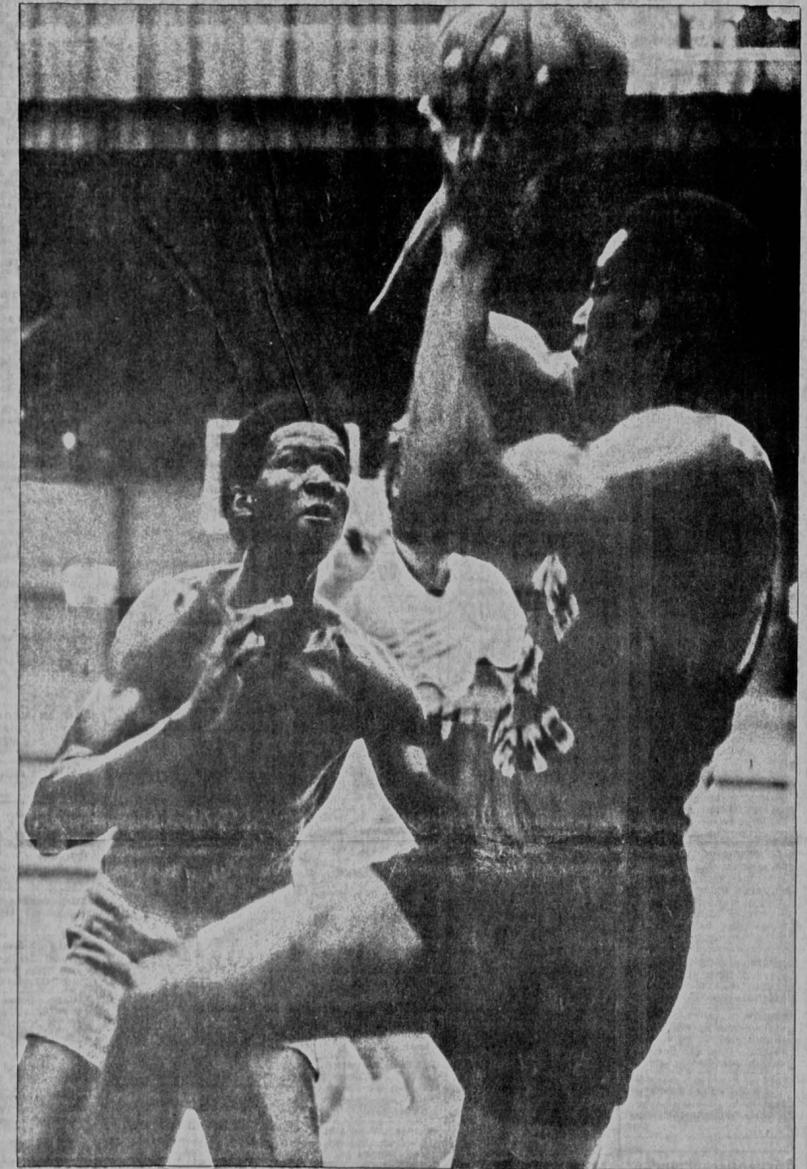

His senior statistics were impressive. Stokes averaged 24.4 points, 15.2 rebounds and 5.3 blocked shots a game in leading his team to a 25-1 record. Some observers said he was the best basketball player to attend Hamilton. That includes Kevin Grevey, now a guard for the Washington Bullets

"THREE YEARS ago I was a lazy sophomore," Stokes said. "My junior and senior years I started to shape up. I had the potential to develop."

Recruiting season shortly followed and the patience of Stokes was tested.

"Iowa didn't put any pressure on me. They didn't call everyday. They didn't pressure me or tell me to hurry up and sign."

made a wise choice. But he likely knows he did. He's a member of the National Honor Society.

"I just take them as they come. I know the media push will be coming. It's not like I'm ready, it just comes.

And when it comes I won't let it affect me.

"I had three bad games all last season," Stokes said. "It didn't shoot me down. The media stayed with me. I hope they do the same here."

Stokes is spending part of his summer in Iowa City preparing for school. On July 15th, he will go home for two days. Then it's off to New York to join Iowa teammates Mike Payne and Steve Carfino in a prep Olympic camp. Not bad considering Stokes quit ninth grade basketball.

UI gets $772,800 cancer grant

By Cherann Davidson
Staff Writer

A $772,800 grant awarded to Cancer Center will finance research, benefit clinical work and enhance the university's chances for additional grants, UI Hospital officials said Thursday.

As recipient of a National Cancer Institute grant, the facility is designated as one of about 70 national cancer centers, said Dr. Richard L. DeWitt, director of the center.

The grant is primarily for research but will also aid clinical work at UI Hospitals, said Cliff Elgin, deputy director of UI Hospitals.

Receiving the award "improves climate" for attracting more research grants to the UI, said Dr. J. Rosazza, director of the Division of Medical Chemistry and Nuclear Products for the College of Pharmacy.

IT IS AN "exciting thing" recognized as a national cancer center, said Dr. Elgin. The grant is a "boost" to the UI faculty recruitment because it will attract other researchers, he said.

"It encourages further excellent research at the university," he said.

The UI Cancer Center will receive $257,600 a year for the next three years to finance services and equipment for the approximate 100 UI faculty members involved in cancer research. The facility will have a reapplying grant and national cancer center status after the three-year period, said Thomas Kisker, director of the Division of Pediatric Hematology.

Researchers will have an opportunity to pool knowledge in their expertise by utilizing any of the services provided by the DeWitt center.

GRANT money will be used to purchase the center, located in the UI Medical Laboratories building, to house a culture laboratory, and a data management and analysis facility. A unit to study the effect of radiation treatment on cancerous tissue and an administrative team to aid research will also be added to the center.

The application for the grant was submitted to the National Cancer Institute about nine months ago, was reviewed by scientists "from all over the world," DeWitt said. A team of scientists visited the center to evaluate services, he said.

"We hope that this (grant) will encourage related activities. We're very pleased and we hope to contribute something to the national cancer program," DeWitt said.

ROSAZZA said the award recognizes "the excellence and effort" of researchers already involved in the study.

The research is a "campus-wide effort" involving scientists from departments including zoology, chemistry, and micro-biology, he said. "Discoveries in our area are broadened" to other areas of research, Kisker said.

As an example, other researchers could use the UI computer that aids local physicians in the treatment of children, he said.
