K.C. hotel inspectors may have taken cash

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) - The IRS is investigating reports that city building inspectors took money from foremen during construction of the Hyatt Regency Hotel, where two skywalks collapsed and killed 111 people, the Kansas City Times reported

The Times, in a copyright story, said "one reliable source" had confirmed the IRS Criminal Investigation Division was probing reports that inspectors took the money and failed to report it as income.

George Warmuth, IRS investigations group manager, refused officially to confirm or deny any IRS investigation, but he acknowledged that he and another IRS agent were studying city records in connection with the Hyatt disaster - copies of contracts, payments to subcontractors and general financial records.

EXPERTS WERE no closer to announcing an official reason for the collapse of the skywalks into the hotel lobby, but numerous theories were being advanced. Several dealt with changes in the suspension of the skywalks after the designs were drawn and with the way the two 65,000-pound bridges were anchored to side walls. Some engineers blamed a change in suspension rods for the disaster.

Some citizens were clamoring for more extensive government inspection of such elevated suspension designs both during the planning and construccupational Safety and Health Administration said it would open its records kept during construction of the plush hotel from Oct. 25, 1979, to Sept.

CITY OFFICIALS, architects, engineers and attorneys continued to inspect the disaster scene. Remains of the massive, 32-ton skybridges that had graced the five-story atrium-lobby were removed early in the day.

The IRS apparently became involved when a man told the Kansas City Times that last year he had witnessed Hyatt construction foremen giving money to city inspectors. Gary Blaurock, a cement-testing firm employee hospitalized for a leg infection, refused to take calls about claims he made in the Times' story.

The Times reported that during a four-month period. Blaurock said he saw foremen at the construction site give money to city inspectors he could not identify. Blaurock claimed the men were city inspectors because they said they were and because they wore hard hats with the city's emblem and iden-

But William Turner, the city's inspection superintendent, said he had received no reports that city inspectors took money. He said his inspectors wear the hard hats available at construction sites and do not wear iden-

Warmuth at the IRS said during an mpromptu conversation, "We may not able to uncover anything for six months to two years. When you're talking about a $50 million hotel, well, there's quite a lot to look into."

Economy worsens in second quarter

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The economy, which perked along smartly early this year, took a sharp turn for the worse from April through June, the government reported Wednesday. But the White House rejected suggestions a recession is at hand

The Commerce Department reported that declining sales in the second quarter pulled the gross national product down by 1.9 percent - a huge swing from the 8.6 percent growth rate from January through March.

The generally dismal figures did have a few bright spots. While the economy was shrinking, the inflation rate dropped to 6 percent, its lowest level in three years by a GNP-based comparison. And the national rate of savings increased to 5.3 percent in the second quarter, up .7 percent from the

I.C. Management Advisory Panel to make reorganization proposals

By Michael Leon

The Iowa City Management Advisory Panel gets little attention, but the panel has initiated reduced water rate increase proposals, housing inspections by city fire fighters, and will soon make recommendations on reorganization of the city's public works department.

The panel was created in May as an advisory body to the city staff. "We're kind of a sounding board between the city staff and the City Council," panel chairman Byron R. Ross said. Ross is a certified public accountant, and said the panel includes appointed members from the UI and Iowa City's business community.

Ross said the panel is divided into subcommittees that consider issues assigned by the city manager and report to the panel. The panel then sends a recommendation to the Iowa City Council and City Manager

Public debate needed

A major part of the Reagan plan to restructure the domestic budget and to reshape the relationship between state and federal government is the reduction or elimination of categorical grants and the substitution of block grants.

That means that blocks of money are turned back to the states with few or no directions on how the money is to be spent. There are two major problems with that approach: the money often goes to areas which do not need the money, and even when the money goes to locales which need aid the money is not always spent on programs to help the poor. Rather, the money is often spent on "luxury" programs for the more powerful middle class.

The categorical grant was developed in response to those abuses. Congress believed that the money should go to the most needy — to those with no effective power base — and to programs which benefited the community as a whole.

Now a study done by the National Urban League and released Tuesday shows that although only a fraction of the disadvantaged are reached by government programs, those that are reached do benefit from the programs. For example, of the blacks that had been poor at any time from 1967 to 1975, only one-tenth remained poor for the entire nine years.

The conventional wisdom now is that government anti-poverty programs have not worked, but a number of economists - such as Sar Levitan - have also completed studies which dispute that

The Reagan effort to undo the social programs of the past 40 years is not based on the effectiveness of those programs: it is based on a philosophical rejection of them. Whereas much public opposition comes from the mistaken idea that the programs have not worked and that much of the cost of them comes from government bureaucracy.

For example, a recent Roper poll asked 2,003 Americans how much of each $100 of Social Security taxes went for administrative costs. The median response was $52.10. In fact the cost is $1.30. Moreover, the conventional wisdom is that the federal bureaucracy is growing rapidly. It is not. But state, local and business bureaucracies are growing rapidly.

Before Reagan and the Congress dismantle the social programs and convert categorical grants to block grants, a public debate, using facts not suppositions, would be to the public good.

Watt should resign

A growing chorus of voices now is calling for the resignation of James Watt as Secretary of the Interior, and if President Reagan is as blessed with political savvy as his supporters claim, he will heed the advice and ask Watt to step down.

At the heart of the criticism is Watt's brief but controversial record as interior secretary. This includes weakening federal strip mining controls, cutting back protection of endangered species, slashing the budgets for resource programs and attempting to block previously approved parkland purchases, abolishing the Water Resources Council and issuing gas and oil leases in designated wilderness areas.

But equally disturbing are Watt's zealous pro-development attitudes, his arrogance and his contempt for anyone who opposes his policies. His response to a question about protecting natural resources for future generations was not reassuring either. He replied that he did "not know how many future generations we can count on before the Lord returns."

The list of those calling on Watt to resign now includes not only traditionally liberal conservation groups such as the Sierra Club, but western business people and ranchers, former Secretary of the Interior Cecil Andrus and the National Wildlife Federation, which is the largest, most conservative and most Republican environmental organization in the country.

President Reagan will soon realize, if he does not already, that such broadly-based opposition to the Secretary of the Interior is a political liability to his administration, and that it would be to everyone's advantage to replace Watt.

But more than that, the president should realize that public opinion polls indicate that the public wants an interior secretary who represents a truly balanced perspective, and who will uphold, not dismantle, laws that protect the environment.

Draft resistance is service to country; draft dodging is selfish

During the late 1960s and early '70s folksinger Phil Ochs found he had to explain to his audiences that his song "Draft Dodger Rag" was not meant to extol the virtues of dodging the draft. Instead, he would say, it was a putdown of those who placed self-interest first, those without the moral spunk to resist or the courage to fight.

The song, which had gained national attention from a Smothers Brothers peformance on their ill-fated TV show in 1968, had somehow come to be identified with the draft resistance movement, which was, fortunately, based on sentiments radically different from those expressed in the song.

Even now, vestiges of this erroneous identification of draft dodger and draft resister pop up. In The Daily Iowan (June 24), columnist Ken Harper said 'good for him' after mentioning that someone had been a draft dodger.

IT SHOULDN'T BE "good for him." The draft dodgers were only looking for the easiest way out of a horrible situation — for themselves only. They didn't care who else might have to go, who might die - as long as it wasn't them. They took no moral stand, tried in no way to change that heinous system, the draft.

The draft resisters were different. Some went to jail for their beliefs, or fled their homeland (something harder than it sounds), or lived as I did, checking the mail daily for that letter inviting one to a pre-induction physical (where the first overt act of resistance would take place), living thus, without plans for the future, for years,

Many resisters could have been draft dodgers, had they so chosen. I remember, for example, a tension-filled meeting with my own draft board, where I explained why I refused concientious objector status, which discriminated, I said, against those not from a "peace church" but whose personal pacifist beliefs were easily as strong as my own Quaker-bred ideals. I explained why I would not take a student deferment - that, I said, discriminated against the poor, and against those not inclined or equipped for college. Others had similar meetings, made similar choices.

BUT THAT'S NOT, as Arlo Guthrie said in "Alice's Restaurant," what I really want to talk about. I want to talk about the draft, about why it is a lousy idea, and about the idiotic argument that it might get rid of a "racist" military

Let's take that last, first. Face it: no matter what's done, no matter the method employed for gathering cannon fodder, the rank and file of the armed forces is going to come from the poorer segment of society.

And in our society minority groups make up a disproportionate chunk of the poor. The draft won't change the composition of the military, especially when several hundred of the very rich, sitting in Washington, will have to agree before any new draft system can be instituted.

And you can bet they'll look after their own, first. (Question: How many sons of congressmen died in Vietnam?

WHY IS THE draft a lousy idea? Well, ours is represented as a government "for the people," not the other way around. We, the people, make the government, make our own freedoms. When we start thinking we "owe" for them, we've lost them. Conscription gives a government too much control over its population for too long, and makes people too used to too much government involvement in their lives.

KRUI offers the better alternative

While we all have some obligation to our fellow people, there's absolutely no reason to think serving in the armed forces fulfills this obligation. Serving in the army is not serving people.

America's massive military machine has only one purpose these days: self-perpetuation. The myth of communist expansionism and aggressive military sophistication has been shown over and over again to be just that: a myth used by Pentagon brass to get bigger budgets, bigger planes, tanks and bombs. No more are these planes, tanks, and bombs adding to our protection, if they ever did.

AND ARMIES, especially conscripted armies, tend to get used. Ours was used in Vietnam, in a war that from the start promised no real gain for the peo-Southeast Asia. There was, certainly, you hit the smart button and it wipes no service there, only tragedy and a long, bitter legacy still with us.

Service to mankind starts, must start, within the individual. When someone begins to look out, just a little bit, for another, they begin to serve. When the other responds, with a little outreach of her or his own, that service has grown. It's this we need, a growing interaction and cooperation of individuals, if America is going to be strong, to be finally protected.

Armies can never protect a nation. Only people can.

So remember, when they ask you to step forward at the induction center next year, or the year after, the words of Arlo Guthrie asked us to sing, a long time ago: 'You can get anything you want/At

Grandview Court owners: settlement saves time, money; doesn't say they were wrong

By Jackie Baylor

Owners of a University Heights apartment complex said they made an $18,000 rent subsidy settlement with the tenants to save time and money, not because they were wrong.

The Grandview Court Apartment Tenants' Association in June filed to prevent the complex's new owners from raising the rent and to prohibit the former owner from terminating the leases as a result of selling the complex. They reached agreement Tuesday night with the new owners - the partnership of Gene Kroeger, David Tigges and John Roffman — association president Barb Nilausen said Roffman said, "We are not admitting that we are wrong. The only reason we settled is because it's the lesser of evils.

He said it would have cost several thousand dollars in court fees to prove the new owners were right.

"IF THE TENANTS had been liable for the legal fees, we would have pressed it to the max," Roffman

Tigges said the settlement was a fair compromise between the two parties. "I'm glad to have it done."

Kroeger said he felt the settlement was 'something we had to do. We felt it was better to negotiate rather than go through the hassle and the cost. We felt we were right and that we would come

The suits were sparked when former owner George Nagle notified tenants in June he was selling the complex and their leases would be terminated under a clause in the their contracts.

The association dropped the lawsuit against the owners of the complex in exchange for the $18,000 in rent credits, Nilausen said.

"THE MONEY WILL be divided among the remaining tenants that are still here at this point."

The partnership notified tenants in early June that new leases will be issued Aug. 1 and that monthly rent would increase an average of $75 per month. New rent rates were set at $260 for one-bedroom apartments, $320 for two-bedroom apartments and $200 for efficiency apartments.

"We are not sure of how many people are staying until all of the leases are signed," she said. "From what I understand it (the $30 to $35) will last for a full year (Aug. 1 to July 31).

"We are worried about the elderly here and the low income (tenants)," Nilausen said. "We are interested in helping them out."

MARY SPAIGHT, association steering committee member, said the new landlords have agreed to allow the older residents to live at the complex without leases. Tenants are still seeking unspecified damages from the former owner, George Nagle, for tenants who moved from the complex because of a lease termination notice, she said. Nilausen said she hoped the settlement with the new owners would serve some purpose, although she said tenants were not out to set a precedent. 'We are all facing an economic crunch. If tenants

Republicans devise remap plan

Republican leaders said Wednesday they are drawing reapportionment maps just in case the Iowa Legislature wants redistricting advice on short notice during its special session next

Democrats accused the GOP of getting ready to scuttle the final proposal from the Legislative Service Bureau so the majority party can draw congressional and legislative districts that benefit Republicans.

Lary Belman, former UI professor, local Red Cross executive director

By Scott Sonner

Increasing awareness of the many services American Red Cross provides in the county is the goal of the new executive director for the Johnson County Chapter of the American Red Cross.

Lary Belman, 42-year-old former UI assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, and former head of the Mass Communications Sequence, said he is determined to make sure the Johnson County Red Cross has the tools necessary to fulfill the community's needs. The first step is to tell the public what Red Cross does, he

"My job as director is to act as a spokesman," Belman said. He said this task is related to his communication background and effective skills in that area will be very helpful.

Belman said he is trying to obtain an overall picture of the needs of Red Cross in Johnson County. To accomplish this, he is asking volunteers, community leaders and the public how American Red Cross can better serve them

BELMAN HAS taken the job at a time Johnson County Red Cross is in need of funding. The board has discontinued its 20year fund-raising alliance with Johnson County United Way. Spokespersons from both United Way and Red Cross said the decision was based on United Way's inability to supply Red Cross with the $29,000 it requested

Funding from United Way will not run out until December, Belman said. He said he has not made plans for next year's funding.

"I'd like to better understand the organization and its needs before I get involved in fundraising. I have some theoretical ideas, but I need some direct experience," he said.

Despite the financial uncertainty,

Belman is hopeful Red Cross will be able to expand it's Johnson County services next year. One idea is to expand the Red Cross swimming program to include the handicapped and elderly.

RED CROSS services are broken into the areas of emergency relief, community instruction (including cardiopulmonary resuscitation and swimming instruction), collection and distribution of blood, and liaison service between military personnel and their families.

Red Cross depends heavily on volunteers. Belman said. Thelma Hottle, a full-time volunteer, has been acting director of Johnson County American Red Cross since JoAnn Leifeste resigned in December for health reasons.

Belman said the good will and dedication of people like Hottle provide the people of Johnson County with Red Cross services. He said while volunteers can provide teaching services, they need equipment with which to teach.

Belman is confident the people of Johnson County will respond to Red Cross' needs by donating their time as well as finances.

"I'm really energized by this opportunity. It's an exciting job in a marvelous community," Belman said. "It's not like selling a product you know is going to break down ... this is selling something that helps

'New right' political committee lists House members opposing tax cuts

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A controversial 'new right' political committee announced Wednesday it will launch a half-million dollar campaign against 13 Democratic House members next week because they oppose President Reagan's tax cuts.

A fourteenth member, Rep. Philip Sharp, D-Ind., also was on the target list of the National Conservative Political Action Committee until he told them he is undecided on the tax cuts. He will be added to the list if he votes against them. The chairman, Terry Dolan, of the committee known as Nikpac told a news conference that radio and newspaper ads, and a direct mail campaign against the 13 will be started Monday

HE SAID his group is launching the campaign because its polls show "the people want the Reagan tax cuts and they are inclined to vote against those politicians who are trying to block it."

"The congressmen we are focusing on have two choices: They can support the president's bill or they can face the prospects of defeat in November 1982 by failing to represent the wishes and needs of their constituents," he said.

Those targeted were Reps. George that Sharp was undecided.

Brown, D-Calif., Ray Kogovsek, D-Colo., William Ratchford, D-Conn., Paul Simon, D-Ill., Neal Smith, D-Iowa, Jamie Whitten, D-Miss., James Florio, D-N.J., Thomas Downey, D-N.Y., Stanley Lundine, D-N.Y., Stephen Neal, D-N.C., Robert Edgar, D-Pa., Thomas Foley, D-Wash., and Les Aspin, D-Wisc.

DOLAN SAID they were chosen because the 13 are congressmen from vulnerable districts who oppose Reagan's tax cuts. He said his group called all those on the list earlier in the day to confirm their opposition to the cuts, and in that process found

The organ was implanted late Monday.

LAWSON WAS RUSHED to Children's Memorial Hospital from his home early Monday to receive a kidney from Brown's body. Brown committed suicide after being raped Saturday in Dallas. Brown, 18, left her mother a suicide note saying she was sorry, but she had "nothing she could not describe how much it will mean to the family to have the new kidney for her 11th grade son.

She said she realized the pain the Brown family must be going through. "I'd just like them to feel that her death was not in vain, because it's going to be helping a child," Lawson said. She said the kidney transplant was the second for her son, who has suffered from a degenerative kidney disease for years.

Not a safe 'place to grow'

A photograph of this sunflower was published in The Daily Iowan July 20. Two days later the sewer hole where the flower was growing was cleaned out and the flower was removed. Workers at the site said they were unaware of the original photo and apologized for cutting off the flower. "We didn't mean to be villains," said city employee Tim Parris. The plant, minus the flower, was pulled up and will be replanted in a safer "place to grow."

Shakespeare festival an ambitious effort

By Eric Grevstad

Doing Shakespeare is not easy, and doing three Shakespeare plays in repertory for five weeks in a tank town northeast of Dubuque is ambitious. But the Wisconsin Shakespeare Festival, founded by Thomas Collins and enjoying its fifth season at the University of Wisconsin at Platteville, is establishing itself pretty well.

It's still very much a local production. Collins, directing Othello this year, and The Comedy of Errors director Thomas Goltry, are both theater professors at Wisconsin-Platteville. Michael Duncan, guest director of Love's Labour's Lost and guest actor as Othello, is a Platteville graduate now working for a Milwaukee theater.

THE FESTIVAL has, however, attracted outside talent. Several members of the 1981 company are from the Goodman School of Drama in Chicago. James Harbour, playing Iago, joins the Goodman faculty this fall. Other actors come from Temple University and the University of Washington, from Kansas City, California and Connecticut. Various Platteville personnel work backstage at Doudna Hall, an auditorium roughly comparable to the illinois Room at the Union.

What's onstage, judging from the Othello viewed Saturday night, is conservative, competent Shakespeare. Director Collins has cut about 480 lines from the text and keeps the action moving briskly (almost too briskly in the first half). He also allows himself no showy indulgences or strange interpretations. Goltry contributes an imitation Globe Theater set and Wendy Collins has designed handsome traditional costumes.

not yet 30. His Othello is proud and regal, but not the riveting, commanding figure we anticipate. (Othello is a vicious role to play. Everyone expects Paul Robeson.) Duncan's rages are credible but not terrifying. His quieter moments, though - his brooding or sorrowful speeches - are

As Desdemona, Glenna Forde often seems dazed and on the verge of tears fine and appropriate in the last half, but weird in her joyful early scenes with Othello. Unfortunately, Forde is older than Duncan and looks it. In her nightgown for the bedroom scene, she might have made a good Gertrude to his Hamlet.

lago is almost always overplayed. James Harbour resists temptation, deliberately throwing away his wickedest lines and making Iago less a monster than one of the guys. Since Harbour avoids emotion in the usual mustache-twirling mode, it was odd to see him near tears for his fleeting allusions to his wife's suspected cheating.

STILL, HARBOUR'S lago was the night's best performance, and more than a match for his foils, Roderigo (John Cutler) and Cassio (Mark McConnell), who are not bad actors but certainly young ones. Ten or 15 years difference in age makes a sizable difference in stage presence. The Platteville company, making the transition from student to semi-professional, will have to deal with that problem.

And they will. They're doing shows nightly, except Mondays, and a Saturday matinee through Aug. 8, and they've scheduled three plays for July 2 through Aug. 7 in 1982. These people

No drummer, at least in terms of pop stardom, has ever really made the big time. Buddy Rich gets on the Carson show now and then, Ringo Starr had a couple of post-Beatle Top-40 hits and Buddy Miles has played "Them Changes" a couple of million times, hundreds of covers done previously. but none has ever reached the stature of, say, Peter Frampton.

Fleetwood's album

has drummer's hex

Mick Fleetwood is one of the more famous drummers around these days. mostly because of Fleetwood Mac, a group that has sold more albums than just about anyone. But Fleetwood lacks the pin-up sort of fame that today's pop stars seemingly gear their entire existences toward.

There seems to be something about the character of drummers that makes them fun to listen to and watch, but not good to have fronting a band.

SO FLEETWOOD goes to Ghana with a few post-Mac buddles to do an album featuring African rhythms. He fulfills every rock drummer's dream of going back into the primordial morass - Africa contains the roots of rock and roll and just about every other American musical form - by taking a trip to Africa and hearing the frantic, uninhibited and commercially unencumbered rhythms. When Fleetwood comes back from Africa with his record, The Visitor, RCA puts his name across the top of it in big, khaki-green letters. But one must ask just how much Mick Fleetwood's album this is. He didn't write any of the music. He only co-produced the album and didn't sing any of the songs. Even his drumming takes a secondary role

As it turns out, Mick Fleetwood is sort of the driving force/figurehead of the whole project.

FLEETWOOD'S MOTIVATION for the top of the charts.

the journey seems carelessly forgotten. There is too much use of African instruments in conventional arrangements of typical pop numbers — a terrible version of "Not Fade Away," for example, adds nothing to any of the

"Not Fade Away," which may just be the best rock song ever, is the perfect example of why this album fails. A rock standard which was, in its time, the first great break from the repetitive rock/blues pattern and heavily dependent on a solid rhythm section. What better number for use of African percussion bands?

Fleetwood, instead of jazzing things up and using the musical talent he had assembled, puts together just one more throwaway version of Buddy Holly's

There are points, however, where the album succeeds.

THERE ARE A couple of songs, notably the title track, that feature the African musicians and certain Western additions with wonderful results. Fleetwood even put together a couple of pop-flavored ballads that are kind of

It is not possible to understand an artist's creative motivations in situations like this. Mick Fleetwood is not going to stop by and explain what he was thinking while producing a particular

So we are left to decide for ourselves with only the work itself for evidence. And what this work looks like is a serious, if flawed, attempt on the part of Fleetwood and his buddies to acknowledge a nearly unrecognized musical influence. It is pleasant, in its way, but it's doubtful it'll break the drummer's hex and send Fleetwood to

Solid silver

penny found GALVESTON, Texas

(UPI) - Lannie "Tootie" Martorell has a freak, solid silver penny accidentally made at a U.S. mint and it may be worth a lot more than one cent as a collector's item. But she can wait to find out how much.

"A penny could never change me," she says. "It's still a penny."

The piece is a penny print stamped on a silver coin blank the Denver mint once used to make coins for the nation of Nepal. Most accidental strikings are destroyed. This one somehow got into circulation.

When Martorell found the coin in 1975, she thought it was lucky but not a potential bonanza. Galveston County coin dealer E.E. "Sarge" White said the coin is not listed in the "red book" of coin dealers and therefore its value depends on "supply, demand, oddity and what the market will bear."

It could be worth a lot, but White said there was no way of knowing the value until it was examined by the American Numismatic Association in Colorado Springs,

The agent gave her a "receipt for contraband" and said his agency was looking for the aluminum experimental coins.

Martorell heard no more from the government until the agent returned the coin in March 1977 and gave her written notice she owned one genuine silver 1975-D one-cent coin inadvertently struck on a Martorell says she is not about to send the coin evaluation. She says the Numismatic Association should send someone to go to the bank with her, in a safe deposit box. When Martorell noticed the coin in her purse, she thought it had been dipped in mercury to make it a shiny novelty. Silvercolored, mercury-coated pennies were being cir-

Former All-American new swim coach

A second male coach was added to the Iowa women's athletic department when Peter Kennedy, a former All-American swimmer, was hired to fill the position vacated by Deborah Woodside April 21.

Just as Iowa Track Coach Jerry Hassard has been very successful coaching women, Kennedy has also established himself as a leader in the field. At Brenau College, a women's in-stitution in Gainesville, Ga., Kennedy directed the program from its infancy in 1974 to third-place finishes in the 1977 and 1978 Association for Inter-

In his four seasons as Brenau coach, Kennedy compiled a dual meet record of 38-7. He also produced 16 All-Americans as Brenau dominated the Georgia state meet yearly.

BEFORE COACHING at Brenau, Kennedy headed the men's programs at University of Maryland Eastern Shore and Capital University (Bexley, Ohio). He was an assistant coach at Ohio State in 1972 when the Buckeyes finished third in the conference and ninth in the nation.

The father of four will be moving from Gastonia, N.C., where Kennedy collegiate Athletics for Women divi-sion II championships. has been a physical education from the School of Health, Physical specialist for elementary schools. He Education and Recreation at Ohio also coached the Amateur Athletic Union swimming team there.

In addition, Kennedy coached AAU teams in Waterbury, Conn., Toledo, Ohio, and Los Angeles. In over 15 years of AAU coaching he has developed several Olympians and national AAU champions.

But the 45-year-old swimming enthusiast brings more to the Hawkeyes than just his coaching credentials. Kennedy also has extensive knowledge in the field of physical

"I feel extremely excited to return to the Big Ten," Kennedy said. "I'm really looking forward to the challenge of the competition. And besides, I know some of the Big Ten coaches.'

Last season the Hawks finished ninth in the conference. At the 1980 Big Ten meet Iowa was eighth.

Due to the coaching change, no new swimmers have signed with the Hawks for next season. But Kennedy, detercellar, has already been recruiting a little on his own.

"I've been contacting friends from Kennedy said. "I'm trying to recruit if I can, but I don't know how successful I'll be. It may just be too late."

WHILE KENNEDY acknowledges there are good swimmers in Cedar Rapids and the Quad Cities, he did say he was interested in foreign athletes.

"I certainly wouldn't turn my back on foreign recruits," Kennedy said. "I would move in that direction if

Secret meeting doesn't improve strike outlook

By Don Cronin

WASHINGTON - Even a secret face-to-face meeting Wednesday afternoon of baseball strike negotiators and members of the owners' Player Relations Committee failed to initiate any action to halt the 41-day work stop-

Secretary of Labor Raymond J. Donovan continued his attempts to keep the negotiators out of the media limelight, moving the meeting from the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service to the Personnel Management Office seven blocks away in Northwest Washington.

THE TWO SIDES, both abiding by the news blackout Donovan requested Monday evening, are scheduled to meet again at 8:30 a.m. Thursday at the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service building.

Federal Mediator Kenneth Moffett told reporters about the first direct meeting between the players and the ee after it had broken-up as a news blackout con-

"We just felt that by moving the likelihood that anyone would tense up." said Moffett, who sat in on the meeting along with Nancy Bruff, acting federal counsel. "The Secretary was present for the meeting, which lasted about an hour-and-a-half, and will be back tomorrow (Thursday).' Commissioner Bowie Kuhn is in Washington, but did not attend any of Wednesday's sessions.

CONTINUING TO keep the sides apart are the two major issues - compensation for free agents and credit toward pensions for time lost due to the

Each side met separately for five hours earlier Wednesday, but there was no face-to-face meeting other than the 90-minute meeting with the players' committee.

Before the Wednesday afternoon meeting, Griffith told UPI he saw little progress and disagreed with a rumor circulated Tuesday that a settlement

"From what I learn, it (the situation) does not lead me to believe that's true (a settlement)." Griffith said.

Scheuerman, the voice, new face on lowa telecasts

By Jay Christensen

Former Iowa Head Basketball Coach Sharm Scheuerman has agreed to serve as analyst for KWWL, a Waterloo television station, which bought exclusive broadcast rights for Scheuerman, an Iowa City realtor, compiled a 38-46 record in six years as Iowa coach. His decision to leave WHO for KWWL left no hard feelings.

'My association with Jim Zabel at WHO has been great," Scheuerman said. "We had a great relationship. I was under an unwritten contract at WHO. They understand. It will be hard

WHO Sports Director Jim Zabel, who broadcasted with Scheuerman, felt much the same.

"One sides loss is another's gain," Zabel said. "He's been with us for 15 years. We're sorry to lose him. We certainly wish Sharm well. But I'm sure we're going to come up with another excellent person.'
