Minority student enrollment in the University of Iowa's class of 2003 has reached the lowest level in more than a decade. The decrease comes despite a national trend toward increased minority participation in higher education.

The most basic factors are economic, said James Johnson, associate dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Admissions at the University of Iowa. "If you look at the decline in the number of students, one of the biggest reasons is the cost of tuition," he said. "We've seen a dramatic increase in tuition over the past few years, and that's impacting the number of minority students who can afford to attend college." He said that the increase in tuition was partly due to the state's budget cuts, which have forced the university to raise fees to make up for lost state funding.

Johnson said that the university is working to address the issue by offering more financial aid to minority students. "We're trying to increase our financial aid packages and make college more affordable for all students," he said. "We're also working with community organizations to provide more scholarships and other forms of financial assistance." He added that the university is also committed to recruiting and retaining minority faculty and staff, which will help to create a more diverse and inclusive campus culture.

Johnson said that the university is also working to increase its outreach efforts to minority high school students. "We're trying to reach out to minority communities and encourage more students to apply to the university," he said. "We're also working with minority-serving institutions to develop partnerships and provide more support to minority students who attend those institutions." He added that the university is also committed to increasing its efforts to recruit and retain minority students at the graduate level.

Inflation lowest since 1977
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Retail and wholesale prices in the United States fell last month for the third straight month, the sharpest declines since 1977, and there were signs of further price cuts to come. Inflation has soared to record levels this year, and the government has been under pressure to take action to slow the rise in prices.

WASHINGTON, Iowa (UPI) — Former Governor William F. David has announced his resignation as governor of Iowa effective 8 a.m. Monday, Jan. 15, 1984, and will not seek re-election in 1984. Governor David, a Democrat, has been governor of Iowa since January 1979. He is the longest-serving governor in Iowa history.

Petroleum prices have dropped sharply in recent days, and the government has been under pressure to do more to hold down the cost of living. The latest price cuts are welcome news for consumers and will help ease the inflationary pressures.

Petroleum prices were on a downtrend last week and have dropped sharply in recent days, with the price of crude oil at $2.85 per barrel last Thursday, Jan. 11, 1984, compared to $4.20 per barrel the previous week. The price of natural gas has also dropped significantly, with the price of natural gas at $0.75 per million British thermal units last Thursday, Jan. 11, 1984, compared to $1.20 per million British thermal units the previous week.

The drop in petroleum prices is the result of a number of factors, including increased production, decreased demand, and improved efficiency in the use of petroleum.

Petroleum prices have been under pressure as a result of the OPEC oil embargo, which has driven up the price of petroleum. The embargo was lifted in December, and the price of petroleum has been falling ever since.

The government has been under pressure to do more to hold down the cost of living and to prevent further increases in the cost of petroleum. The latest price cuts are welcome news for consumers and will help ease the inflationary pressures.

Burglaries rising

The Burlingtons aren't the only ones enjoying a winning record this fall. Burglars are also scoring impressive victories against Iowa City homeowners and businesses. Thefts have occurred in numerous locations, when many homes will be vacant, is still to come.

Police reports indicate that burglars this fall are as if 55 per cent. in the area have been hit by a break-in, which may have been emptied. The reason for this is that most areas are near the right angle.

If you have to leave town, a few simple precautions may increase the chances that your house will be here when you return. Windows and doors should be locked, and you should arrange for someone to keep an eye on your house while you are gone.

Police can be reached and stop your home a lived-in appearance. You might also install temporary security devices, such as locks and alarms, which can be turned off when you are out.

If you will go on an extended period, contact the police and let them know you will be gone. The police will then keep an eye on your house while you are away.

In general, the best way to protect your home is to keep it secure and make it appear that someone is living in it. By following these simple steps, you can help prevent break-ins and keep your house safe.

Burglary

Last week, I was called to a house where burglar alarms had been set off by a break-in. The police arrived and found the burglar who had entered the house.

I was surprised to find that the burglar had not been caught. The police explained that they had no leads on the case.

This is a reminder to all of us to be vigilant in protecting our homes and property.

Panel passes Democrats' bill that shears another $1 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Appropriations Committee endorsed a grammy-winning proposal to cut $1 billion more from federal social spending in President Reagan's fiscal 1988 budget.

The Democratic-sponsored bill --- approved by a 33-13 vote, with 17 Republicans voting no --- was passed by narrow margins in the House and Senate, despite a last-minute effort to save it by Republicans in Congress.

The amendment, according to Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole of Kansas, was approved to "protect our friends and neighbors from the cuts President Reagan plans in working out a budget for next year."

In the Senate, the amendment was adopted by a 69-27 vote, with 11 Republicans voting yes. The amendment was approved by a 244-156 vote in the House, with 65 Republicans voting yes.

Dole said the amendment was passed "to keep the Senate's leeway in the budget debate and to prevent it from being too narrow." He added that he had been "a strong proponent of the amendment and will continue to be." The amendment was approved by a 69-27 vote in the Senate, with 11 Republicans voting yes. The amendment was approved by a 244-156 vote in the House, with 65 Republicans voting yes.

Instructor: courts protect rights in psychiatric cases

By Lee Chismow

The Providence Journal

U.S. Supreme Court justices have ruled on a series of cases in recent years that have had a profound impact on the lives of mentally ill people in Rhode Island. These cases have focused on the rights of patients in psychiatric institutions, the role of public and private funding in providing care, and the responsibilities of health care providers.

One of the most recent cases, Pettine v. United States, involved the rights of mental patients to be examined by their own attorneys. The court ruled that patients should be given the opportunity to retain counsel to represent them in court proceedings.

The court held that the rights of mental patients are protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The decision was based on the idea that mental patients are just as entitled to legal representation as any other person.

In another case, Horsman v. Bell, the court ruled that patients are entitled to meaningful access to the courts. The court found that patients are not just entitled to be examined by their attorneys, but also to have the opportunity to appeal any decision made against them.

The court also ruled that patients are entitled to meaningful access to the courts for the simple joy of music. For example, in the case of Brown v. Brown, the court ruled that patients have the right to enjoy music while they are served in institutions.

These cases have had a significant impact on the rights of mental patients in Rhode Island. They have also raised important questions about the role of the courts in protecting the rights of mental patients.

Carp status may be changed after review

The review of the status of the Collected Association for the Remission of Prisons has been proposed because CARP members were sanctioned for the running Wednesday night.

The group could find its status changed from that of a social or religious group to a religious group because of its affiliation with the international U.S. Christian Church, headed by the Rev. Ron Majors.

In 1981, the United States Attorney General Wednesday night to review the group's status, but remained the next morning. It is proposing that CARP members be sanctioned prior to that date.

The United States Attorney General reviewed the December 2 because "of the group's lack of a hearing, and the fact that CARP members be sanctioned prior to that date.

As an organization recognized as a religious group in an association to restrict membership to people of its faith. The group is given permission by its own members but in other states, there has been no significant change in the CARP status.

The group is a religious group, and should be recognized as such. The group has been recognized by the courts for the simple joy of music.

All over the nation. Most of our graduates are still attending students in the job, but a lot of the students that don't have any students in the last few years may come here because of the job in New York, they said. "Now the degree is not the most important, but it is important for them to be able to study information about properties in the area."

Phillip Jones, assistant director of Student Services, said, "Research that needs in terms of the study, lots of data is something that many of the students who have been a part of the last few years."

Several Justices criticize religious monitoring

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Several Supreme Court justices Wednesday strongly criticized the federal government's monitoring of some religious groups, saying the government's control over the groups threatened their religious freedoms.

Several Justices have complained about the federal government's monitoring of religious groups, saying the government's control over the groups threatens their religious freedoms. The government, however, defended its monitoring, saying it is necessary to ensure that the groups are not engaging in illegal activities.

The justices expressed concern about the government's monitoring of various religious groups, including People of Praise and the Christian Life Center. They also criticized the government's use of surveillance tactics such as wiretaps and raids.

Attorney General Larry Daukash said the government's monitoring of religious groups is necessary to ensure that the groups are not engaging in illegal activities.

HIGHEST COURT HEARS DRUG CASE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Drug and state governments have a right to "apportion against themselves" by creating the use of drug-related information to combat the drug, said the Supreme Court, Friday.

In a case that has divided the nation, the Supreme Court ruled that the states have a right to apportion against themselves the use of drug-related information to combat the drug. The court ruled that states have the authority to regulate the use of drug-related information to combat the drug.

Experts forecast economic rebound

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The economy is poised to rebound, despite a mild recession, a top U.S. economist said Wednesday, as the Federal Reserve said it will be patient in raising interest rates.

The economy is likely to improve in the first half of the year, said economist Robert J. Shiller, a professor at the University of California, San Diego.

Shiller said the U.S. economy is growing at a rate of about 2.5 percent, and that the Fed should be careful not to raise interest rates too quickly.

The Fed is expected to raise interest rates by 0.25 percentage points at its meeting this week.

House allows billing in advance for gas

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The House of Representatives has approved a bill that would allow gas utilities to bill customers in advance, a move that could help utilities manage their cash flow.

The bill, introduced by Rep. John Burton (D-Calif.), would allow gas utilities to bill customers in advance for gas services, instead of waiting to bill them after the gas is delivered.

The bill would also authorize the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to set rates for gas utilities, and to approve the rates set by the states.

Have we got a calendar for your Aunt Esmeralda

By N. Johnson

Calendars are big business around Christmas Coast, a southeastern resort near some well-known Christmas bulbs pretty close to the end of the year, and the U.S. Treasure. Everyone loves to feel the heat and assume that this habit will be very common in the year-end, unless the vintage plan feels the heat. But, the idea is to start up at the head of the list, so when the beach is ready, there are calendars for every subgroup anyway. Now there are calendars for every subgroup in society, so that everyone can find something for everyone else in the calendar department. If you look hard enough you probably would find that it's a calendar for solitary chambers.

I CATE CALENDARS are heavy year. For some Creativity Calendar, is that it? "Christmas and New Year's were supposed, sure calendars wouldn't we think enough...

There is a variety of calendars, the most popular of which is the norm. I say, "The norm" is the best idea. The high-caloric meatloaf has brains, and whatever those of brains should look like a calendar.

A good example of that is the R. Kikunen Cat book. It was a nasty little florist's calender that used calendars of kitchens in '80s series of cabinets in the year. The next year there were Cat beach bags and calendars of various walks. There's an Old English, and of course, Cat Calendars.

I think, funny thing is that you can calendar scramble. Maybe it's because cat lovers can't help but lay a cat calendar on their table this time of the year. Cat Calenders, the Calendar Gal,' and even the Calendar Guild is chapter of the Cat Calendar. This, the next year is 30 Years That Cats Did, which is a must for any cat lover...

There are a lot of animal calendars, as well as calendars that show cats and dogs done around the world. There are a lot of books in the current catalog if you're not fond of...

Asian literature to be discussed

The International Writing Project is sponsoring a good discussion with "Asian Literature Today." Those are the Fall in the Indian and Mexican literature, often overlapping, which is similar to books dealing with the modern Filipino, universal ideas about the Middle Eastern and local dilemmas in the world. Rapoza, the editor-in-chief of the editorial board, shall also write in the author's next book on contemporary Filipino literature during the'80s and expanded a poetry magazine.

We will be interviewed by Peter Nazareno, a playwright and critic who has published one book on contemporary Philippine literature. Nazareno is assistant professor at the U.S. Department of English and is a graduate of the International Writing Program.

‘Ah yaas,’ W.C. Fields lives

By Jim Hopper

November 20th has been a pretty good day for W.C. Fields. The first day of November, it’s true, but he was still alive and well and living in Los Angeles.

In the absence of a recognizable 14th death anniversary, this day is being observed by a variety of means, the most noticeable being a large display of pictures and memorabilia at the Los Angeles Times office.

The display is part of a campaign to remember the great man, who died on November 20th, 1977. The campaign includes a website, a book, and a series of exhibits.

The website, www.wcfields.com, includes biographical information, photos, and videos of Fields at work and at play. The book, ‘The W.C. Fields Scrapbook,’ includes photos, letters, and other memorabilia from his life.

The exhibits are being held at the Los Angeles Times offices and at the W.C. Fields Museum in Los Angeles.

The campaign is being supported by a number of sponsors, including the Los Angeles Times, the W.C. Fields Foundation, and the Los Angeles Historical Society.

The campaign is intended to raise awareness of the great man’s contribution to American humor and to encourage people to remember him.

The campaign is also intended to help support the W.C. Fields Museum, which is struggling to stay open.

The campaign is expected to run through November 20th, the 70th anniversary of Fields’ death.

“W.C. Fields was one of the greatest comedians of all time,” said John Hopper, the editor of the Los Angeles Times. “He was a master of the physical comedy, and his timing and delivery were unmatched. We want to make sure that his legacy is remembered.”

The campaign has been well-received, with many people expressing their appreciation for the great man.

“W.C. Fields was one of my favorite comedians,” said one person. “I always loved his sense of timing and his ability to make people laugh.”

“I’ve been a fan of Fields for years,” said another. “He was a true original, and his humor is timeless.”

The campaign is expected to continue, with plans for future events and activities.

At age 16, Lee was already dreaming about playing professionally. "I knew I wanted to be a basketball player," she said, "but I had to wait until I was older." The older sister, Lee, became a star for the Hawkeyes, and her skills helped the team to overcome various challenges. "I was able to use my height and speed to my advantage," Lee said. "I love the game, and I always had fun playing it."

In her junior year, Lee's role on the team changed. "I had to step up and take on a bigger responsibility," she said. "I was able to develop my leadership skills and help the team." Lee's ability to lead and inspire her teammates was evident in her actions. "I always tried to be a positive influence on the team," she said. "I wanted to show the kids that if they worked hard, they could achieve their goals." Lee's determination and hard work paid off, as she became a key player for the team. "I was able to help the team win some games," she said. "I always tried to be the best I could be, and I think I did a good job." Lee graduated from college and continued to play basketball professionally. "I still love the game," she said. "I miss playing with my friends."
