Variety of groups give aid to needy

By Jennifer Shafer
Staff Writer

This is the first of a three-part series on poverty in Johnson County. The first article explores who is eligible for the several sources of aid from the government and local charities.

Jean Harden, a local resident, was out of work and unable to pay all of her bills earlier this year.

A former breast-cancer patient, Harden fell behind on payments for a special drug she must take each day to help prevent the cancer from recurring.

The local drugstore that supplied the drug demanded payment and refused to sell the drug on credit, Harden said she thought her situation was hopeless, but the United Way of Johnson County got her out of the bind by paying her drug bill.

"I was to the bottom of the barrel," Harden said. "I didn't know where else to go."

ALTHOUGH HARDEN now works at a local cleaners and can pay her own expenses, she remembers when she did not have the money to pay her living costs. "There have been times when I've had to make a choice between my medicine, gas for my car and food."

Harden is not alone. Many of the poor in Johnson County face the short-term problems of joblessness and unexpected costs.

Others face more permanent problems. According to a 1977 study prepared by the Johnson County Regional Planning Commission, 45.2 percent of the Johnson County residents (not including students in residence halls) who do not live with relatives have incomes below the poverty level — a yearly income figure based on family size, age of the household's breadwinner and whether the home is in a rural area or within city limits.

In addition, 7.5 percent of all families in the county have incomes below the poverty level.

FOR MOST of those near or below the poverty level, a variety of federal assistance programs, such as Aid to Families with Dependent Children and food stamps, are available.

But there are the poor who do not meet federal eligibility requirements and depend on local charities or county assistance. Although their situations are different, many of the problems these people face are similar — and are seen daily by human service organizations.

Martial law declared in Poland

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — Lech Walesa, the leader of Poland's outlawed Solidarity union, was reported arrested late Sunday following declaration of martial law, the sealing of Polish borders and suspension of civil liberties.

The government denied Walesa's arrest, which was reported by East Germany's official news agency ADN out of East Berlin. Because of a curfew and communications blackout, the arrest could not be independently confirmed.

Soldiers carrying rifles with fixed bayonets and machine guns patrolled the streets of Poland's major cities. Tanks and armored personnel carriers blocked major intersections and searched cars. Officials banned the sale of gasoline to private automobile owners as Poland's borders were sealed.

A communications blackout, including the cutting off of telephone lines inside the country, remained in effect since late Saturday.

Walesa flew from Gdansk to Warsaw before dawn Sunday for talks with Communist Union Minister Stanislaw Ciosek. Deputy Prime Minister Mieczyslaw Rakowski and possibly a meeting with Prime Minister Jaruzelski, government spokesman Jerzy Urban said at a pre-curfew evening news conference.

AT DAWN, Jaruzelski ordered that those not showing up for work Monday in key industries, in defiance of martial law, be executed.

The government crackdown came hours after Solidarity's 107-member ruling body, including Walesa, called late Saturday for a referendum on whether Communists should continue to rule Poland and for a review of the country's East Bloc ties.

They also called for a national day of protest Thursday and threatened a general strike if the government banned workers' rights to strike.

Riot police raided Solidarity headquarters just after midnight and arrested about 1,000 people nationwide — many of them officials of the now-banned union and other dissidents, as well as officials in the former communist regime.

THERE WAS no sign of Soviet troops, and the Kremlin staunchly denied its forces were involved in the crackdown.

Jaruzelski said he decided with a "heavy heart" to set up and head the "Army Council of National Salvation," which will run Poland until "law reigns supreme again."

Austrian police arrest a Polish refugee Sunday after he had joined other demonstrators protesting the imposition of martial law and the arrest of some Solidarity Union leaders, reportedly including union chief Lech Walesa. A communications blackout is in effect in the Poland.

I.C. has role if nuclear accident occurs

By Molly Miller
Staff Writer

Despite extensive government regulations, any of the following situations could occur:

• A single one-megaton nuclear weapon could be detonated over the nuclear reactor at the Duane Arnold Energy plant near Palo, Iowa, resulting in 50 square miles of total destruction from blast and fire. All unprotected people within 600 square miles would be killed. Deadly radioactive contamination would spread over a 4,000 square-mile area. There would be "no place to hide," according to the Union of Concerned Scientists.

• Through a slight miscalculation, one of the valves in a nuclear reactor could fail to open. The control rods would jam, causing a complete meltdown in the reactor and releasing large amounts of radioactive materials. All of the employees inside the plant would die.

People just outside the plant would suffer from radioactive sickness and die within a few days. Evacuation would be imperative, but many people would be exposed to the contamination before they could reach safety.

• The driver of a semi-truck loaded with nuclear waste from an eastern energy company could have an accident along Interstate 80 in Iowa. The truck's cargo — drums of radioactive waste — could be spilled along the highway. The entire area would be contaminated — clothes, people, grass, dirt and livestock. If the material were powdered or granulated, the wind would make contamination more widespread.

If a nuclear accident occurs, Johnson County — and more specifically Iowa City — has a particular role to play in civil defense procedures.

Iowa City would act as the host for possibly thousands of evacuees from Cedar Rapids and surrounding townships, said Pat McCarney, director of the Johnson County Civil Defense office.

"THE NUMBER of public buildings here makes Iowa City a logical place for all those people," he said.

If there is an accident at the Duane Arnold plant, officials at Iowa Electric contact state agencies and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. If the situation is extreme, the governor orders evacuation of the area up to 10 miles surrounding the reactor.

Local agencies such as the Red Cross, the UI, and the police, sheriff and fire departments in Johnson County act as back-up for state officials, McCarney said.

"We support the pros," he said. "Johnson County is a contact point only. (All responsibility) goes back to the state and federal level."

McCarney said, however, that plant leaks are the least of his nuclear worries. Transportation of radioactive waste along I-80 concerns the former Iowa City police officer more than anything, he said.

COMMERCIAL energy plants are responsible for their own waste. Two years ago the state Department of Environmental Quality began requiring commercial companies to give prior notice to the Iowa Department of Transportation before transporting dangerous material within the state, said Jim Schwab, former state director of the Iowa Public Interest Research Group.

McCarney said local agencies, such as his own, are not informed about the amount of waste transported across the county.

"Nobody knows how much is going across now," he said.

Richard Bartell, senior Nuclear Civil Protection Planner for the State Office of Disaster Services, said that compared with the ramifications of nuclear war, nuclear plant fallout is "a wart on a flea's back."

The immediate effects of low-level radiation leaks are minimal, he said.

"Our detecting equipment won't even pick up plant leaks — except in a nuclear explosion," Bartell said.

Steve Krafcsin discusses Iowa-UNI game action with Paul Morech on KCJJ.

Krafcsin moves from baseline to sideline — radio announcing

By Mike Kent
Staff Writer

Former Iowa basketball star Steve Krafcsin has moved from the baseline to the sideline with his new job as a radio announcer.

Krafcsin, a former member of the Hawks, is now behind the microphone doing color commentary for radio station KCJJ in Iowa City.

"Special K" is working during Iowa men's games and Iowa City Regina High School games. Krafcsin can also be heard during Iowa women's games; his first such broadcast was Saturday night.

While some Iowa sports fans may find it difficult to imagine Krafcsin doing something other than playing basketball, there are some who believe the 6-foot-10 Chicago native will become a big hit over the airwaves.

"I think his background in the sport, combined with his natural fluidity as far as conversing is concerned, makes him a potential natural for the business," said Kent Braverman, KCJJ's station president.

THE IDEA for Krafcsin's on-the-air job was discussed not long after he failed to make the professional basketball cut. Krafcsin, who earned his bachelor's degree in recreational therapy in May, was a fifth-round draft pick of the NBA's Atlanta Hawks in June, but was released after his tryout.

"I have a very good friend in town who is a friend of Steve's," Braverman said. "We happened to be chatting one night and I asked where Steve was after his tryout. I was told he was back in town and I said, 'I wonder if he'd be interested in doing some play-by-play work with me?'"

"The person I was talking to, Sue Ogesen, said, 'I sure think he would.' So she got in contact with Steve and I said to Steve, 'I've got this idea.' And he said, 'I'd really like to do that.' So away we went."

KRAFCSIN SAID reporting a basketball game is a new venture for him. As a commentator, "I look at all five positions and see what they're doing wrong and try to figure little things out, like mental mistakes, maturity or

Pressure on Libya reported

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — The Soviet Union may have pressured Libyan dictator Col. Moammar Khadafy into allowing the Soviet navy to use Libyan seaports, a newspaper reported Sunday.

The Bulletin, quoting from "classified intelligence documents" in a copyright story, said Khadafy in turn has stepped up arms purchases from the Soviet Union.

Detroit trade firm probed

DETROIT (UPI) — A Detroit company is under investigation for allegedly trying to sell arms and other military equipment to Libya, it was reported Sunday.

Quoting government sources, the Detroit News said the Near East Trade and Development Co. has contacted more than 100 American firms, inquiring about military items to sell to Libya, Syria and other Middle East nations. Since 1979, the company has made dozens of inquiries about buying military equipment, the News said.

Spacewalk to fix satellite

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Space shuttle astronauts are tentatively set to walk in space to repair a crippled sun-watching satellite in December 1983, and the space agency is thinking of scheduling a practice spacewalk earlier that year.

The bold operation would be the first to demonstrate that the shuttle can not only launch satellites but also retrieve them and even conduct repairs in orbit on multi-million dollar spacecraft.

Reagan nuclear card lost

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Following the March 30 shooting of President Reagan, the FBI had possession of a secret personal code card the president needed to verify his nuclear strike orders in military emergencies, it was reported Sunday.

The Washington Post reported the FBI's action sparked a dispute between the agency and the president's military aides, which was not settled until Attorney General William French Smith ordered FBI agents to keep the card.

Cuts hurting Coast Guard

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Coast Guard is facing a "steady deterioration" and administration budget cuts will further impede the service, a congressional panel says.

The Coast Guard subcommittee of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee said Coast Guard resources "are not currently sufficient in quality or quantity to cope with the variety of responsibilities placed upon the agency by law."

Big Apple garbage rotting

NEW YORK (UPI) — Rats are feasting on it at "sidewalk cafeterias." A Manhattan restaurant is wrapping it with Christmas ribbons. Tourists are posing for pictures in front of mounds of it.

It is garbage and the Big Apple is buried in it. More than 90,000 tons of uncollected garbage have piled up in mounds up to 10 feet high in the 13th day of a strike by private sanitation workers.

Cyclone kills 104 in India

NEW DELHI, India (UPI) — At least 104 people were killed in a cyclone that raged across the coast of Bangladesh and northeastern India last week, officials said Sunday.

More than 100,000 people were left homeless when the cyclone's 90-mph winds destroyed their huts.

Council considers priority of city improvement needs

By Cherann Davidson
Staff Writer

The Iowa City Council will discuss funding priorities for the city's Capital Improvements Program and consider the bidding procedure for the sale of the old city library at today's informal council meeting.

The council will consider specific items on the Capital Improvements Program budget for fiscal 1983 through fiscal 1987, including street, bridge and sewer repairs, and transit and pollution control improvements.

According to a Dec. 4 memo from City Manager Neal Berlin outlining proposed capital improvement expenditures, the 51 projects are placed in one of two categories based on priority. "Priority A represents projects which should be scheduled for completion in the year designated, and priority B projects probably will have to be further postponed or abandoned," the memo states.

AMONG THE criteria for priority A projects are:

- Reducing the use of general obligation bonds for many city projects "because of an adverse market." General obligation bonds have been selling at rates of over 11 percent, the memo states.
- Locating other sources of funding, such as the city's public housing land acquisition with Community Development Block Grant funds, other than using general obligation bonds or general operating revenue.
- Repairing a deteriorated structure.
- Completing a project that has already been approved or is in conjunction with another project.
- Some of the projects slated for top priority are:
 - A new wastewater treatment facility, including a new plant and completion of a southeast interceptor sewer. The project depends on receiving 75 percent of the funding from the federal government. Estimated cost — $59,073,437, funded through federal aid, state aid and general obligation bonds.
 - Land acquisition for additional public housing facilities for low- and moderate-income residents. Estimated cost — $225,000, funded through CDBG funds.

● Completion of the North Branch Detention Structure — part of the city's flood control plan for Ralston Creek. The estimated cost of the project skyrocketed from $75,000 to an estimated $1.3 million. Construction of a northeast trunk sewer in Hickory Hill Park received priority because it is in conjunction with the North Branch Detention Structure. Estimated cost for the detention structure — $1,344,000, funded through general obligation bonds and CDBG funds.

● Purchase of wheelchair vans to meet federal requirements of accessibility for the handicapped. Estimated cost — $43,520, funded through federal aid, state aid and operating revenue.

● Replacement of the bridge on Camp Cardinal Road over Clear Creek because of severe deterioration. Estimated cost — $290,000, funded through general obligation bonds.

● Rehabilitation of the Burlington Street bridge. Estimated cost — $1,106,000, funded through general obligation bonds.

THE COUNCIL WILL also consider an evaluation by city planner Andrea Hauer concerning the market value of the old public library site and its surrounding parking lot.

Hauer recommended in a memo Thursday that a minimum bid price for the library building be $155,000. The minimum bid price and lease rates for the adjacent parking lot will be given to the council at a later date, the memo stated.

If the old library is placed on the National Register of Historic Places, property owners could be eligible for federal funds for "preservation purposes" and tax advantages, according to the memo.

Prospective developers would have to meet certain criteria established by the city for "increasing the tax base and encouraging downtown revitalization," the memo said, including retail stores, restaurants and high-density residential uses.

Spirits of holidays keep officials busy

Christmas spirits were flowing in Iowa City this weekend as local law enforcement officials were kept busy by numerous alcohol-related incidents.

According to Iowa City Police Department records, two people were charged with public intoxication, two were charged with OVI, one man was charged with criminal mischief and one person was charged with criminal trespass.

Additionally, police received 12 noise complaints, six complaints of intoxicated people causing problems, two requests to remove subjects from local bars, three reports of fights and two reports that jackets were stolen from downtown bars.

Burglary: Campus security records showed that burglars made off with four bottles of liquor after breaking into the Union Triangle Club sometime late Friday or early Saturday.

Thefts: Thieves took Christmas decorations from several area residents this weekend. Police received six reports of stolen ornaments, ranging from lights and decorative candles to a pine tree that was chopped down.

Accidents: Fourteen vehicles wound up in the ditches of Johnson County roads this weekend as snowy, wet weather made driving conditions hazardous.

'Mothering' helps at registration

By Mary Schuver

Mary Hausler, one of 25 part-time terminal operators at the UI registration center and mother of two UI students, said she liked to kid students who waited 30-40 minutes in line last week to register for classes for the 1982 spring semester.

"I say, 'You haven't been there long enough to send out for pizza, have you?' and they laugh and say 'Oh, no. I like to mother them,'" she said. "We all sort of mother them. We really do," said Joyce Sanders, another operator who works at the center in Calvin Hall.

During the 12-day registration period, more than 18,000 UI students registered at the center — 1,500 students more than registered during the early registration period last semester, according to Jerald Dallam, associate registrar with the UI Registrar's Office.

DALLAM SAID Friday the long lines at the center occurred partly because students were allowed to drop and add courses and change course sections for the last one and one-half hours of each registration day. In past registration periods, a week was set aside after the regular registration period for students to drop or add courses.

By Thursday afternoon, the center had received 289 drop slips, 659 add slips and 214 change of section slips, Dallam said.

Despite the long lines, terminal operators gave each student special attention.

Hausler said, "We are told, 'Take the time with each student. Don't feel you have to rush because there's a line there.' Some students feel rushed, but we just tell them to calm down."

"It's a busy time, but we don't feel pressured."

JEAN LAWRENCE, administrative assistant with the Registrar's Office, said the terminal operators hired for the registration period have to meet clerical qualifications as set by UI Personnel Services. Out of about 35 applicants interviewed, 25 workers were hired and are re-appointed each year for the registration period, Lawrence said.

"For some reason — it just turned out this way — most of the people (working at the center) have older children of their own," Lawrence said. Because of this, workers seem "motherly" to registering students, and students react favorably "when they (terminal operators) ask them to get a special permission signature."

Janet Moore, another terminal operator, said, "When we send them for signatures of instructors, they go,

"Ohhh, but they go and get it." "We didn't find any that were indignant about it," Hausler said.

SANDERS SAID, "Students are very polite. So few get upset (if courses or sections are closed) they're not worth mentioning."

Students were "courteous and said thank you" after they registered, Hausler said.

Jane Omann, the center's supervisor, said she was "really amazed, too, that the students take it (the closed courses) so well. There's nothing we can do, and maybe they just realize that."

Operators adjusted students' schedules to cope with closed courses. But Omann said one student was hesitant about a course scheduled for noon that was to replace a course that had closed. "He said, 'It's okay with me, but my mother will be upset' because she wanted him home for lunch."

More than 1,200 to receive UI degrees

More than 1,200 degree candidates will gather at 10 a.m. Dec. 19 in Hancher Auditorium for the UI winter graduation ceremonies.

D.C. Priestestersbach, acting UI president, will deliver the graduation address and confer degrees. Thomas Woodard, who will receive a bachelor of science degree from the College of Liberal Arts, will address the audience on behalf of the students.

Robert F. Ray, dean of the UI Division of Continuing Education, will introduce each of the graduation participants.

Union officials treat employees to a buffet

Union staff members enjoyed a soup, salad and sandwich buffet during a Union Christmas party sponsored by the Union administration.

Union administrators prepared and served all of the food and will pick up the tab for any food that was not covered by the allowance for meals for Union Food Service employees.

"The manager of food service, Greg Black, is adding up the cost of the food they served and he will subtract from that the allowance they have for feeding employees that particular meal and then the difference the managers will pay," said Philip Hubbard, UI vice president for Student Services.

THE ADMINISTRATORS who prepared the food and will pick up the check for the party Thursday are: Jean Kendall, director of Union Services and Campus Programs; Mary Burmeister, assistant to the Union director; Bruce Michaels, Union operations manager; Rich Templeton, Union business manager; Kevin Taylor, coordinator of Campus Programs and Student Activities and Greg Black, coordinator of Union Food Service.

"Our intention was to give a Christmas party for the employees as sort of a gift from the managers to the employees," Kendall said.

Kendall said she does not know how many people were served at the party, but about 400 employees were invited.

"We just did what Greg told us to do, since he has prepared that much food at one time before and we haven't," Burmeister said Sunday.

KENDALL, Taylor, Black and Michaels did most of the work because Burmeister and Templeton had prior commitments, Burmeister said.

"We had more fun at the party than we did preparing the food, but I couldn't be there most of the time, because I had out-of-town guests," Burmeister said. "It was all a lot of fun."

Michaels said it took about four hours to make the meal for the employees. "It was a lot harder work than I thought it would be ... but it was fun. "It was gratifying. I think it really meant something to the employees since they knew the managers did do all the preparations themselves," Michaels said.

Iowa CARD organizers said Saturday's protest was part of a nationwide push last week to show opposition to the resumption and continuation of draft registration.

Couple files malpractice suit charging doctor with negligence

A Linn County couple filed a malpractice suit Friday in Johnson County Court, claiming a Johnson County doctor was negligent in the woman's care.

According to court records, Mary F. Baltes and Larry L. Baltes of Lisbon, Iowa, are asking for damages in an amount to be determined by the court, from Dr. Philip A. McLaughlin, who cared for Mary Baltes while she was pregnant in late 1979.

The suit states that Baltes consulted with McLaughlin on Dec. 16, 1979, after her amniotic sac ruptured. According to the suit, she was told to remain at home. On Dec. 18, 1979, Baltes "became ill and finally insisted she be admitted to Mercy Hospital," she was admitted that day.

"Shortly after admission it was determined (Baltes) was suffering from an infection," the suit continues. After Baltes gave birth, she "suffered severe septicemia, septic shock and numerous other physical problems including renal failure and respiratory distress."

THE SUIT claims McLaughlin was negligent in his diagnosis and treatment of Baltes, and that because of his negligence, Baltes has incurred medical and hospital expenses, endured pain and suffering and has sustained a loss of earnings.

Larry Baltes claims his wife's illness has caused him to be "deprived of the normal companionship, society and services of his wife."

Also in District Court: A North Liberty man pleaded guilty Friday to possession of marijuana with intent to manufacture.

According to court records, Michael Raymond Cooper, RR 2, North Liberty, Iowa, is charged with having a quantity of "marijuana plants" in his possession with intent to manufacture.

A police officer discovered the plants growing near Cooper's residence, records state.

Sentencing is set for Jan. 14, 1982, at 1:15 p.m.

Waterloo youth charged in death of 1-year-old

WATERLOO, Iowa (UPI) — Police have charged a 16-year-old male with voluntary manslaughter in the weekend death of a 1-year-old boy who reportedly fell down a flight of stairs.

Authorities withheld the identity of the juvenile, who was being held in city jail Saturday night. Officials said it probably will not be known before Monday whether the youth will be prosecuted as a juvenile or an adult.

The child, Jose Pacheco, of Waterloo, died early Saturday in a Waterloo hospital.

Police Lt. Wayne Hoing said the child was reported missing by his parents, Jose Pacheco and Lorene Jacobson. An investigation revealed the boy had been left at a babysitter's home in the care of a 16-year-old boy.

Officials said the baby apparently fell down a flight of stairs in the home, and said the death was under investigation. A police captain said chest injuries appeared to be the cause of death and that an autopsy would be held.

training. Professors will also be hampered to temper their "publish-or-perish" maxim which may help to guarantee tenure but often obfuscates their larger mission: a well-rounded student.

We must make every effort to foster informed debate on impending choices between guns and butter, increased industrial production and clean air, active government and libertarianism.

While the 70s saw colleges increasingly bend to society's demands, the '80s require them to provide direction. As the Carnegie report concludes, the academic community must not only "prepare the young for productive careers, but ... enable them to live lives of dignity and purpose ... and merely ... increase participation at the polls, but ... help shape a citizenry that can weigh decisions wisely and more effectively promote the public good."

This mandate may seem optimistic at first: making American youth feel part of the process might not be possible. But any movement towards a more informed populace will be better than the rut of ignorance and the vicious cycle of indifference that are currently leading us nowhere.

rooms that are either icy cold or burning hot? In Carrier, there's no such thing as a normal temperature. when the heat is on one can open a window but after a few seconds it's freezing. The heaters seem to be uncontrollable: they have one knob that turns the heat on and off, but it seems the heaters have a mind of their own. Waking up in the night either sweating or freezing gets very aggravating.

Another critical problem is the noisy plumbing. The pipes in the rooms make so much racket it could wake the dead. The noises come and go and seem to last for hours at a time, making studying and sleeping impossible.

These problems are very disrupting. Why should a student have to be bothered with unreliable heating and loud plumbing? We have enough problems such as studying, tests and grades. We are paying quite enough for these rooms and shouldn't have to put up with this annoyance.

Tight state and federal funding may close local daycare centers

By Lee Chiavetta
Special to The Daily Iowan

Some Johnson County daycare centers may close and the quality of surviving day cares decline if federal budget cuts are as large as anticipated and if suspension of federal daycare regulations sets a precedent for the state, according to John E. Kramer, county social service daycare consultant.

Federal aid for the child care of low income families has been provided by Title XX of the Social Security Act. Federal cuts have resulted in less money to the state agencies handling Title XX money, but ramifications of these cuts for local levels are not yet certain.

There are no final drafts yet on the amount of federal money Iowa will lose, but a fall report by the Iowa Department of Social Services projected a loss of almost $5 million for Title XX clients in Iowa, according to Larry Jackson, director of the Iowa Division of Field Operations.

The anticipated federal budget reduction could reduce or end family services to 13,000 Iowa households, Jackson said.

"HOWEVER," he said, "that doesn't take into consideration what the state may choose to do. Everything's in a state of flux right now. Anything's possible."

In Johnson County, centers supported by Title XX include Iowa City's Head Start Preschool Center, Friendship Day Care Center, Melrose Day Care Center, Brookland Woods Day Care Center, Coralville's Coral Day Care Center and Solon's Play and Learn Early Childhood Center.

Kramer, who approves state licenses for preschools and daycare centers in Johnson, Washington and Iowa counties, said that even if these day cares survive the federal budget cuts, their programs may still suffer.

"Anytime budget comes in conflict with program and budget becomes more important for survival, then program suffers," Kramer said.

CHILD CARE CENTERS enable parents to work and get off government welfare rolls, he said. But eliminating the centers will force low-income parents to stay home to care for their children instead of holding a job.

These low-income parents would be forced back on welfare, Kramer said.

Vicki Sedivec, an employee at Kelley Cleaners and parent of a 5-year-old girl enrolled at Iowa City's Head Start Preschool, said if her eligibility or the program are discontinued, the effect would be "real nasty. I definitely cannot afford a full-time babysitter. I would probably be better off just on ADC (Aid to Dependent Children) and staying home with my child until she starts elementary school."

Sedivec's daughter has attended Head Start for two years, and without it, "she wouldn't be as advanced as she is," Sedivec said.

IOWA CITY had two Head Start Preschools before one was forced to close last year due to budget cuts levied by the Carter administration. The one remaining has not yet been notified how budget cuts may affect it.

But Iowa City Head Start Director Diane Krumbholz said cuts may seriously affect the quality of care for children.

The local Head Start program probably will not close, but she said she suspects eligibility requirements will be tightened to admit fewer people.

The Reagan administration's policy of reducing child care programs for low-income families such as Head Start will generate a less educated, blue-collar work force, Kramer said.

Schools such as Head Start are based on the premise that by preparing disadvantaged children to compete effectively in public school with their more advantaged middle-class peers, the children of the poor could have an equal opportunity with other children to succeed in school, get jobs, and help break the poverty-welfare cycle and its related social problems.

THE WIDELY accepted notion that education of children before age five can overcome the social and educational effects of poverty during the first years in public schools has been documented in studies since the 1960s.

Out of those studies came Project Head Start in the summer of 1965, and it has served over 7.5 million children since, according to a 1981 report by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Head Start — a comprehensive program encompassing day care, education, nutrition and parental involvement — was funded and operated by the federal government and became the central component of then-President Johnson's "War on Poverty." According to a Department of Health and Human Services publication, repeated educational evaluations of Head Start "graduates", including recent tests of long-term effects, indicate that preschool education can improve cognitive and social development as well as school performance.

THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT may also deal a second indirect blow against child care programs through suspension of its daycare regulations.

Suspension of federal regulations will not directly affect Iowa day cares because the state already supervises all day cares whether they receive federal funds or not.

The chapter in the Iowa Code which regulates daycare providers in the state is based on those suspended federal rules and is comparable in its stringency, except in the rules governing staff-to-child ratios, in which Iowa's rules are slightly less stringent.

But if the states decide to go along with the recent trend of "getting government off the backs of people," states might economize by waiving their requirements for daycare centers, Kramer said.

THE FEDERAL daycare regulations were written over a four-year period and were planned to replace standards in effect since 1968. The new regulations were scheduled to become effective Oct. 1, 1980, but they were postponed until July 1, 1981, after the Senate Finance Committee decided the suspension would save the taxpayers $22 million.

According to a publication of the Department of Health and Human Services, the purpose of the new regulations was to ensure that children in Title XX-supported centers were cared for in safe, healthy environments, which promoted normal development.

The regulations controlled group size, ratio of staff to children, staff training, parent involvement, activities and nutrition. Also included were provisions for meeting the needs of handicapped and multi-talented children.

In July, Health and Human Services again postponed the regulations until Jan. 2, 1982. The Federal Register reported that the department wished "to avoid imposing potentially costly implementation burdens and to allow further review of the regulations by the department."

Iowa reservoirs lowered

ROCK ISLAND, Ill. (UPI) — Three federal reservoirs in Iowa are being lowered slightly to "normal conservation" levels, said the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

Coralville Lake, near Iowa City, will be lowered three feet. Pools will be lowered two feet at Saylorville Lake, near Des Moines, and Lake Red Rock, near Pella and Knoxville.

Regina students gain lessons on handicaps

Students will be walking and wheeling through the halls of Regina High School today and Tuesday in blindfolds, leg casts and wheelchairs.

The Regina student body is sponsoring two handicap awareness days and selecting students to "experience" a handicap for one day to promote the International Year of the Handicapped.

Julie Shapcott, a junior at Regina and co-chair of the project, said the event will begin today with an assembly explaining what it is to be handicapped. There will also be films on the problems of the handicapped, and a handicapped person will speak to the students.

SHAPCOTT said there will be one or two representatives from grades 7-12 who will be "handicapped" for a day. She said that on Tuesday, the representatives will tell the rest of the student body what their experiences were and what sorts of problems they faced.

Beth Jansen, project co-chair and a Regina junior, said many of the students who will be handicapped for a day are either athletes or people who are very physically active. This will show the marked contrast between being able to run around on a football field or basketball court and being confined to a wheelchair.

Jansen said students will be blind and mute, confined to wheelchairs, wear leg and arm casts or be on crutches for a day.

She added that the students decided to have a handicap awareness day to "recognize the handicapped in the community" and to promote the International Year of the Handicapped designated by the United Nations.

Farmer to run for Evans' seat

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa (UPI) — Tama County farmer Gary Lamb, a Democrat, announced Sunday that he will run for the 3rd District congressional seat held by Cooper Evans, a Republican.

Lamb, 44, of Chelsea, said that by the end of last year, the American farmer had less purchasing power than he has had in the last 50 years. He said government needs to "restore a profit for agriculture." Lamb is president of the American Agriculture Movement of Iowa and is past president of the Tama County Cattlemen's Association.

Democrat Lynn Cutler of Waterloo has organized a campaign committee for a second run for the 3rd District seat but has not formally announced her candidacy.

Texas Instruments Learning Center
Texas Instruments bringing new dimensions to learning.

New family of talking learning aids adds the excitement of electronics to learning basics.

Texas Instruments is providing a whole new look at learning the basics with this remarkable new family of talking learning aids. Speak & Spell, Speak & Read, and Speak & Math use space-age electronics and actual talking voices — not recordings — to help your child master the basics of reading, spelling and arithmetic.

They're not toys — and they're not calculators. They are genuine learning aids that supplement the fundamentals your child is learning in school. And, like patient, private tutors, they can help your child improve his skills or develop new ones... at his own speed, at his own level, on his own or with friends.

The magic is in TI's breakthrough technology called Solid State Speech. These talking learning aids actually speak to your child in a friendly, human voice — to praise him when answers are right, encourage him when answers are wrong, and always challenge him to go on to the next question.

Texas Instruments' electronic wizardry makes the learning fun, too, with fast-paced, challenging games and activities. Best of all, TI's talking learning aids will grow with your child — or your family — with optional plug-in modules for Speak & Spell and Speak & Read that expand their capabilities to help your child from pre-school through junior high. And Speak & Math, complete in one unit, offers thousands of math problems in three levels of difficulty to serve your child's needs from grades 1 through 6.

Add a new dimension of learning to your child's world with one of the members of the talking learning aids family from Texas Instruments: Speak & Spell, $69.75. Speak & Read $69.75 and Speak & Math, $69.75.

Private investors to renovate

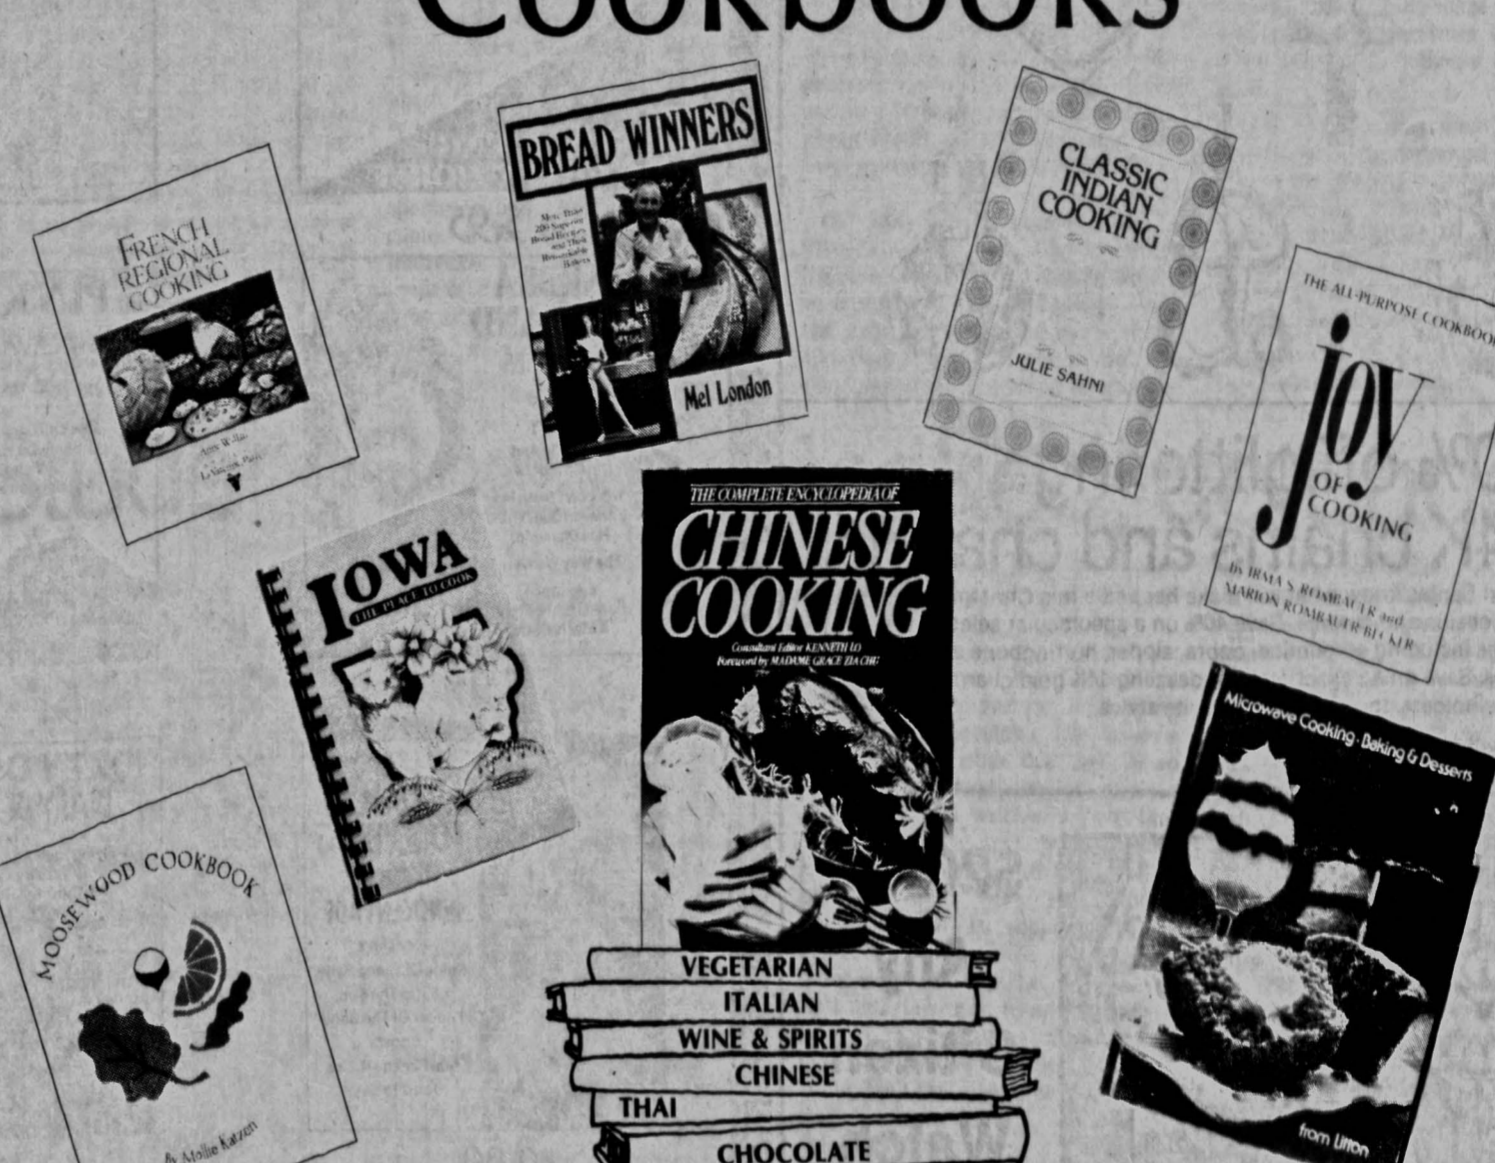

NEW YORK (UPI) — Ellis Island, the Gateway to America for millions of hopeful immigrants, will be restored under a plan asking private developers to "adopt" crumbling buildings of historic island.

More than 12 million immigrants entering the United States from 1892 to 1954 passed through the 27 1/2-acre island in New York Harbor. But in recent years, neglect, vandalism and lack of money have reduced the island to 35 crumbling buildings and memories.

The National Parks Service, which maintains the island, hopes to revitalize Ellis through a multimillion-dollar plan under which private developers would be permitted to build for commercial development in exchange for their agreement to renovate the structures.

The private developers will be invited to submit proposals this week.

Diversity of dance
shown by students

By Marcia Butzel
Staff Writer

With a salvo of varied, interesting works, last Thursday and Friday's student dance concert in the Space Place brought this semester's campus dance activity to an accomplished finish. By creating a showcase for ongoing student work, the Space Place concerts deliver a diversity of dance forms in a public but informal setting.

From a good roost on the gym's bleachers, this local fan got a good look at Scottish dances, a classic and a contemporary pas de deux, personal and ritual dance memories — and a punk number I'd see over and over for the kick it supplied.

The second half of the concert proved the stronger, both for its greater inventiveness and its compatibility of choreographic design with performer technique. Douglas Wood's carefully-wrought "Two Lines Oblique" was dance at its most thoroughly reasoned and movement at its most seriously probed. Placing and shifting the dance couple like twin beams of a Calder mobile, Wood's choreography and the Charles Ives' score made the interaction seem both casual and coolly precise. Linking, mirroring, turning wrist over wrist, the duet (well danced by Wood and the gracious Susan Dickson) had a subtle, dual effect of geometric charting and athletic sparring.

WATCHING Mark McCusker's "Dirty Back Road," strangely mesmerized by its T-shirted thugs, I recalled other instances in the relatively new history of all-male theater dance. Might these be the younger brothers of Grease's body shop sequence, gone punk for the 1980s? Although there could be a line of inheritance running between McCusker's piece and current conventions for men's routines on Broadway or in the film musical, this work guns it on its own, quite apart from Travolta or Fosse influences.

The work's music, by the B-52s, was strategic for creating an atmospheric punk menace and for foregrounding the dance elements. The song's rhythmic line kept the piece tight and wired, with the dancers pulsing down on the floor as if it were a circuit board and they the relays of electric current. The melody, an eerie brainwash of high-pitched, blitzed crooning, allowed dance dynamics to take full precedence over musical ones.

IN THE FIRST part of the program, dancer Nancy Skye and piper Dawn Huntsinger recreated a Scottish sword dance and the Highland Fling with drill precision and display. Samantha Boyd took over some similar leaps and capers in her subsequent Irish jig.

Linda Early and Douglas Wood performed a classical pas de deux, choreographed by Early to an ambitious chunk of Rachmaninoff. Perhaps because she tried to fill every musical turn and punctuation with steps (and difficult ones at that, like the finger turns and the lift-draws), the work was at times cluttered and her execution shaky. Moments more successful for Early's attractive lyrical style came in the pauses and extensions between steps, and the nice double-leg wrap around Wood towards the end.

LAGER ENSEMBLE groups and quasi-narrative forms were used by Pauline Reilly for her "Three Scenes from Childhood" and by Laurie Sanda for the final "Ceremonies." Reilly's piece was fun, and the dancers obviously enjoyed it, yet the introduction of the woman in black and some of the endings within the work were inconclusive.

"Ceremonies" was rich with associations. It recalled Oshima's flashback film of the same name, the Japanese tea ceremony and Xu Shuying's Chinese dance teaching at the UI. Yet Michael Zerang's music has no explicit affiliation with East or West, and the interpersonal relations between the four "celebrants" can be taken melodramatically or poetically in this open, original work.

A woman pours tea at a low table, sets out four cups and arranges places. But her three guests draw back and the woman drinks alone. With studied method, she sips from each cup, the simple tasks becoming charged and enigmatic — a sort of brewing of the imaginary relations that the dance will imply. Kathryn Smith's performance was intriguing, especially her subtlety of touch in the last sequence of "plac-ing" the others.

Private investors asked to renovate Ellis Island

NEW YORK (UPI) — Ellis Island, the Gateway to America for millions of hopeful immigrants, will be restored under a plan asking private developers to "adopt" crumbling buildings on the historic island.

More than 12 million immigrants entering the United States from 1892 to 1954 passed through the 27 1/2-acre island in New York Harbor. But in recent years, neglect, vandalism and a lack of money have reduced the island to 35 crumbling buildings and memories.

The National Parks Service, which maintains the island, hopes to revitalize Ellis through a multimillion-dollar plan under which private developers would be permitted to buy buildings for commercial development in exchange for their agreement to renovate the structures.

The private developers will be invited to submit proposals this week for the purchase and renovation of the buildings.

PARKS OFFICIALS plan to preserve the flavor and history of the island by retaining the graffiti, poetry and other writings left on the walls by immigrants who passed through Ellis.

It is estimated that upwards of 100 million Americans have ancestors who stopped at the island.

Developers will be required to renovate the buildings in a manner consistent with the island's spirit and history.

The plan relies heavily on private investment because federal funds for restoration are unavailable.

The island has been a national park since 1965, but with a yearly appropriation of less than $2 million for Ellis, the Parks Service has no money for a major restoration, which may cost up to $200 million.

'Buddy Buddy' behind the times

By Roxanne T. Mueller
Arts/Entertainment Editor

Ten years ago, Buddy Buddy might have been a funny movie. Nowadays, it has the faint, musty smell of a museum piece with tired jokes about sex institutes, California-speak and manic-depressives.

A couple of years ago, the movie Serial started out much the same way, satirizing issues that had long since been absorbed into the culture. The difference was that Serial had an energy that Buddy Buddy sorely lacks. The former film presented lunatic after lunatic at a relentless pace. Buddy Buddy depends on its stars to create momentum, but there's only so much even the talents of Walter Matthau and Jack Lemmon can bring to a lame script.

Veteran screenwriter-director Billy Wilder seems to have just discovered things like hippies. After Matthau, as a professional hit man, is coerced into taking a 1960s-type couple to the hospital so the woman can deliver a baby, the bearded father offers everybody joints to celebrate the birth. The pregnant pause (no pun intended) after his pronouncement weighs on the screen like a ton of rocks.

LEMMON PLAYS a censor for CBS who has lost his wife (Paula Prentiss) to the head of the Institute for Sexual Fulfillment. How the distinguished German actor Klaus Kinski was persuaded to play the hip sex doctor is cause for wonderment, since he shows no flair for comedy and his scenes are given embarrassing short shrift. Where's Werner Herzog when you need him?

Lemmon's character is suicidal over his wife's desertion and meets up with Matthau first at a filling station and later at a California hotel. Lemmon is there to kill himself while Matthau sets up to bump off a squealer for the mob.

Obvious rear projections in the car-driving scenes cheapen the film. Matthau and Lemmon struggle bravely with the material. They've worked together enough to let the other have the spotlight when a potential laugh is in the offing. Still, seeing Lemmon sprawled out on the floor tied to a chair isn't so much funny as it is a regression to the kind of slapstick long relegated to the archives of comedy. If you can't put a fresh dab of imagination on something, why bother?

Oakdale inmates welcome visit of exerdance teachers

By Roxanne T. Mueller
Arts/Entertainment Editor

Dancer Mary Lea Leitch could not have had a more attentive group. The 20 or so inmates of Oakdale Hospital were putting their macho images on the line by joining Leitch's "exerdance" program last Friday afternoon.

The men, along with about 80 others, are in the maximum security hospital to undergo psychiatric testing and counseling resulting from serious brushes with the law. Many of them function on only a fourth grade literacy level, and most, according to one of the physicians who works there, are convicted rapists.

Leitch, a slight Sandy Duncan look-alike who runs Dance Studios I and II in Iowa City, was there with Valerie Feit. Feit was off to the side of Oakdale's clean, carpeted gymnasium floor warming up. The New York-based professional dancer would later take the men through a few more exercises and then perform a snippet of a concert program she will present in full at 8 p.m. today and Tuesday at the dance studio.

LEITCH, a former dance therapist at UI Hospitals, has worked with prisoners in the past. "They need exercise so badly," she explained, "but there's really nobody to lead them." Except for a visit last spring, Leitch had not been in the hospital for nearly six years. She remembered how appreciative the men were to those who took the time to reach out.

"The last time I was here, they really ate the class up," Leitch said. "There was even a man in leg irons but he participated anyway. They're so nice — they'll talk to you and thank you a thousand times for coming."

Leitch's naturally exuberant manner put everyone at ease. "Be prepared to get sweaty," she cautioned the men before plunging into a full hour of strenuous exercise.

"You're going to hate her," promised Ann Iverson, Oakdale's equally outgoing activities director, who was dressed in sweat pants, a MASH T-shirt and ready to go herself.

Feit's travels expose others to the experience of dance

By Roxanne T. Mueller
Arts/Entertainment Editor

Twenty-five-year-old Valerie Feit has crowded a lifetime of dance into a few short years. Born in South Africa, she moved with her parents to America while still a child and went to New York — on her own — at 13 to study dance.

At that point, she had already been dancing for seven years, and by the age of 15, she was a full-time professional. Over the last decade, Feit has danced with both the Alvin Ailey and Eliot Feld companies.

For the last three years, she's worked as a freelancer, traveling throughout Europe, Africa and America conducting dance workshops and performing. When she gets back to New York, she continues her own studies with Melissa Hayden, who herself achieved fame with George Balanchine.

Feit describes herself as a "contemporary" dancer. "I'm too classically oriented to call myself a modern dancer," she said. Her travels take her into mostly rural areas, areas where previous exposure

EXERDANCE, as Leitch explained, is a total body workout that combines elements of martial arts, dance and breathing exercises. As she told the inmates, exerdance would help them immensely should they be sent to "the hole."

As the stretching exercises gave way to near contortions of the body, both groans and giggles escaped from the men whose balance and grace were, like anyone not used to regular workouts, awkward at best. When Leitch held the upper part of her body perfectly parallel to the floor, the imitators were lucky to simulate 45-degree angles. One man merely looked at her and shook his head. Another tried to sneak away, but Leitch called him back. She complemented another inmate on his "beautiful arch."

When Leitch announced it was time for some martial arts exercises, a few of the men immediately got into Bondian poses. Appropriate music blared on the record player, and one inmate rocked in motion through the entire exercise.

Her part of the program completed, Leitch introduced Feit to the group, who demonstrated classical dance steps. While the men may not have realized it, their grand leaps across the floor approximated a choreographic tryout. "Leap through the air," Feit encouraged, "but don't look down."

THE RESULTING "grand jetes" across an imaginary stream wouldn't leave George Balanchine grasping for superlatives, but for the men, it was the culmination of an experience that genuinely moved them.

By the time Feit began her performance, the bleachers were full. Most of the other inmates had come to watch. As both Leitch and Feit admitted later, they felt a definite sexual tension between themselves and the inmates. By afternoon's end, however, it was clear that their professionalism, artistry and caring were what had won the inmates over. The prolonged applause and standing ovation given Feit at the end of her performance were sincere.

As the inmates moved out of the gymnasium, one of them spoke for all. "You're beautiful," he called out. "Thank you."

to-dance has either been minimal or nonexistent.

"IT'S A VERY different experience," Feit said. "You get much more directly involved with people. In a company, you just don't get to meet the audience that much, but when you're in a classroom setting, the students can see you're not some perfect person on a pedestal. They see me sweating and working just as hard as they are."

Feit's repertoire consists of both self-choreographed works and dances created for her by others. "I try and dance the works of young, talented choreographers so they can get some exposure. It helps them when their dances are performed by a professional. I feel that with all of Reagan's budget cuts in the arts, my generation is getting passed by, so anything I can do for them, I do."

Feit will perform solo dances in a program called "One Step Beyond," accompanied by Iowa City classical guitarist Joe Mattingly, at 8 p.m. today and Tuesday in the Barefoot Theater, located in Dance Studios I and II, 325 E. Washington St.

Soloists, chorus, trumpets sparkle in Bach Oratorio

By Jeanne Goche
Special to The Daily Iowan

It's possible to get through the Christmas season without a live Bach music performance, but the UI Symphony Orchestra and Bach Chorus didn't force the community to go without one this year.

Last week, the groups performed the Bach Christmas Oratorio — a collection of six church cantatas originally performed separately — in Hancher Auditorium.

The soloists were the more notable features in the generally fine performance. Contralto Jocelyn Reiter sang with a deep warmth, her technique easy and unobtrusive. Soprano Sharon Bennett sang effortlessly, with particularly smooth lines. Her most intriguing piece was the aria in the fourth cantata. The work featured a second soprano that echoed Bennett. Together, their phrasing was lovely, and the accompanying instrumentalists flattered them by performing with control and vigorous intimacy.

BASS SINGER Albert Gammon's interpretation of his role was somber and the singing itself confident. As the evangelist, tenor Michael Ketcherside was featured often and performed consistently well.

Only five of the six cantatas were performed because of the length of the work. The first two made up the first half of the program and in this, the orchestra had occasional problems achieving the subtle rhythmic drive Bach's music requires. The problem generally occurred only in the slower, softer sections, such as the cello and bassoon lines in the tenor aria of the second cantata. Lack of rhythmic vigor in the strings also seemed to be a problem in the alto aria of the same cantata. The attempt at fine lines and grace bordered on mush. Phrases were weak and directionless. The rhythm problem never occurred in the livelier sections and seldom in the second half of the program.

THE CHORUS presented itself with vigor and drive, no matter what the mood of the section. It was especially convincing in the first parts of the third cantata which opened the second half of the program. The complex vocal lines were always vital and full.

The first half of the program gave a taste of excellent trumpet work, but the best was yet to come in the final cantata. The technique, style and lines of the high trumpet parts were simply exquisite. The floating trills, singing phrases, confidence and stamina all marked fine musical achievement. The trumpet section shone, but it was a matter of shining in musicality for the section never stuck out, obnoxiously or otherwise, from the other music around it.

The French horns were featured in a demanding role in the fourth cantata. They too did a generally fine job. Though appropriately delicate and musical, they did not have quite the confidence on entrances and intonation as did the trumpets.

The closing recitative and chorale brought together all the better features of the evening's performance — the four singers in a quartet, the singing trumpet, controlled strings and a rhythmically dynamic chorus.

Saint's skeleton recovered

VENICE, Italy (UPI) — Police Sunday recovered the skeleton of Santa Lucia — stolen from the San Geremia church on the Venice Grand Canal Nov. 7 — and returned the bones to the patriarch of Venice.

Venice police magistrate Ildio Clifone told a news conference that a squad patrol found the bones of the third-century saint in a plastic sack in a hunting lodge near Venice shortly before dawn.

Police arrested Gianfranco Tiozzo, 28, at his home in Marcon, a village about 10 miles north of Venice, as a suspect in the theft.

Clifone said Tiozzo was known to police as a local criminal, suspected of involvement in the recent kidnapping and murder of a restaurant owner.

THE PARISH priest of San Geremia and a honeymoon couple who were in the church at the time of the theft identified Tiozzo as one of the two robbers from police photographic files, the magistrate said.

He said police were still looking for a second suspect.

Clifone said police found the hiding place after shadowing Tiozzo for several weeks. No ransom was paid for the return of the saint's bones.

Santa Lucia, venerated by Roman Catholics as the patroness of eyesight, died at the age of 20 in Siracusa, Sicily, at the end of the third century.

The skeleton was recovered on the very day of the church calendar — Dec. 13 — set aside as Santa Lucia's feast day.

Singers, dancers make up for designs, staging of 'Stravinsky'

NEW YORK (UPI) — Musicians, singers and dancers dominated the Dec. 3 opening night of the Metropolitan Opera's new triple bill, Stravinsky.

Stravinsky, which will have eight performances through Jan. 2, comprises the Met premieres of the ballet The Rites of Spring (Le Sacre du Printemps), the opera-oratorio Oedipus Rex, and a new production of the short opera The Nightingale (Le Rossignol).

The Rites of Spring, danced by the Met's own opera ballet company to choreography by Jean-Pierre Bonnefous, is a case of kittens pretending to be tigers. About the only things in its favor are a couple of brief mass groupings, a symbolic tug of war, and a scene in which the Chosen One is passed from hand to hand over the heads of the celebrants.

The Nightingale starts off magnificently, with ballet stars Natalia Makarova and Anthony Dowell making their Met debuts, dancing the Nightingale and Fisherman to the choreography of Frederick Ashton.

In Oedipus Rex, the orchestra under James Levine, and the singing — Richard Cassilly's chilling Oedipus; Tatiana Troyanos' Jocasta and the 60-voice male chorus — generated all the power that lacked in Rites of Spring. But the Cocteau-inspired production — the singers in evening dress and masks, the decor in huge abstract patches of primary color — merely shows that this is one way in which Oedipus Rex cannot be produced satisfactorily.

"The intelligence services are following developments very carefully. It will be most interesting to see what will develop Monday when, under martial law, the workers are supposed to return to their factories."

The White House official said the special crisis management team headed by Vice President George Bush, has not been convened, but would not say whether Reagan might call the National Security Council together.

THE FOCUS of potential trouble is the possibility of intervention by the Soviet Union. But it appeared the night arrests of Solidarity leaders and the imposition of martial law were carried out without Soviet assistance.

Some observers, including former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, saw a Soviet hand behind the crackdown. But Chairman Charles Percy of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee suggested the independent union may have "tempted fate" by pressing for a referendum on dismantling the communist state.

The absence of a direct link between Moscow and the crackdown seemed muddy American options. Over nearly a year and a half of confrontation between the Warsaw government and Solidarity, U.S. officials have spoken out strongly against any outside meddling in Polish affairs.

The State Department put together a special working group to review the situation, and a department official said Sunday afternoon that officials were "continuing to monitor" developments. The group set up in the area where officials kept watch on Polish developments for more than a year.

ALTHOUGH ALL communication between Poland and the West had been cut, the official said Washington was "in touch" with the U.S. Embassy.

"The intelligence services are following developments very carefully. It will be most interesting to see what will develop Monday when, under martial law, the workers are supposed to return to their factories."

The White House official said the special crisis management team, headed by Vice President George Bush, has not been convened, but he would not say whether Reagan might call the National Security Council together.

THE FOCUS of potential trouble was the possibility of intervention by the Soviet Union. But it appeared the mid-night arrests of Solidarity leaders and the imposition of martial law were carried out without Soviet assistance.

Some observers, including former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, saw a Soviet hand behind the crackdown. But Chairman Charles Percy of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee suggested the independent union may have "tempted fate" by pressing for a referendum on dismantling the communist state.

The absence of a direct link between Moscow and the crackdown seemed to muddy American options. Over nearly a year and a half of confrontation between the Warsaw government and Solidarity, U.S. officials have spoken out strongly against any outside meddling in Polish affairs.

The State Department put together a special working group to review the situation, and a department official said Sunday afternoon that officials were "continuing to monitor" developments. The group set up in the same area where officials kept watch on Iranian developments for more than a year.

ALTHOUGH ALL communications between Poland and the West had been cut, the official said Washington was "in touch" with the U.S. Embassy in Warsaw, but she refused to elaborate.

Haig, speaking to reporters in Brussels, Belgium, said American officials in Warsaw had been assured that there will be "no return to the situation which existed in Poland prior to August 1980," when Solidarity emerged as a powerful force after strikes in the northern port city of Gdansk.

But whether the reforms will continue, the secretary said, "remains to be seen."

Asked if he saw any direct Soviet involvement in the crackdown, Haig said, "It is clear that the stridency of Soviet statements in recent days about the Solidarity movement has increased quite noticeably."

Kissinger said the latest twist in Poland "is a showdown" designed "to crush Solidarity (and) if the Poles can't do it, the Soviets will do it."

"I don't think this would have happened without Soviet pressure, without 30 Soviet divisions on their borders," Kissinger said during an interview on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley."

Percy, questioned on NBC's "Meet the Press," stressed the view that "this is an internal matter," and said the United States has "received adequate assurances... that the reforms have been won" and there would not be a rollback.

While the Illinois Republican said Polish authorities "overreacted" in declaring martial law, he said, "Possibly Solidarity somewhat tempted fate... by resolutions yesterday that would call for a referendum of the people" on setting up a non-communist government.

"That is a fairly dramatic step in the democratic process—we do not run our government by referendum," he said.

signs of fatigue.

"Down there (as a player), I mostly worry about what I have to do. I look at the strengths and weaknesses of my opponent and things that I can take advantage of. Here, I'm looking to try and see what I can tell the fans, little things that they wouldn't normally know."

Since joining the KCJJ team, Krafcsin has improved with each game. Braverman said, "Every game that he does for KCJJ, he absolutely gets better and improves every time."

As a radio announcer, Krafcsin relies on his basketball prowess because he has had practically no training in the broadcasting field. "I haven't had that much journalistic background," Krafcsin said. "So I have to ask the questions I would ask off the street."

"IF I SAW Kenny Arnold today, I'd say, 'Kenny, I know what's going on with your problem. Are you trying too hard?' And I try to weed it out from a journalistic standpoint. Or maybe people don't realize that he's had a hard time with a class. So I try to get back to where my knowledge can take it a step further."

Krafcsin still has his sights set on playing professional basketball. Currently, there are two semi-pro teams in the Continental League which are negotiating a possible trade with the Atlantic City, N.J., franchise that holds the rights to Krafcsin.

But should Krafcsin not get an opportunity to play professional basketball, a permanent career in sports broadcasting is a possibility. "It's worked out really well for me so far," Krafcsin said. "I've enjoyed it more than I thought I would. It's just like playing out there. I really get involved, but then again, I have to stay calm."

"This is my first year doing it and I'd like to stick with it for a while."

Braverman said, "I think if Steve wanted to branch off and go into the field (broadcasting), he definitely has the potential to be a professional in it."

Poverty

"We have many isolated cases of people who don't have enough to eat," said Mary Ann Volm, executive director of United Way.

And social service agency workers for the county and other charities say increasing numbers of people need emergency help.

The amount of money United Way has given to the poor in vouchers like the one Harden received has climbed from $2,867 for all vouchers given during 1980 to more than $5,000 for the first five months of 1981, Volm said. Vouchers are used for basic necessities and awarded only after all other sources of aid are exhausted.

UNITED WAY generally serves what Volm calls the "working poor"—people who have jobs but whose incomes often don't meet their needs. She said the working poor may be faced with more problems than the "hard-core poor," who do not have jobs but who are eligible for government aid.

Kay Hull, who administers the county's General Assistance program through the Johnson County Department of Social Services, said an increasing number of working poor are applying for government aid for which they are not eligible.

"A lot have gone into debt way over their heads or need someone to go through their budget with them and help them budget," Hull said. "But with the economy getting the way it is there are probably some people who are not getting their real needs met and who aren't getting help."

Hull said the county can provide the eligible poor with three months of monetary assistance for rent, food, medical and other special needs. She said most people use the county aid while they are waiting for federal assistance.

BUT SHE SAID the county cannot help persons whose income exceeds $189 a month for a single-member household or $395 a month for a four-member family. These people are referred to the United Way, the Crisis Center or local churches.

The Crisis Center maintains a food bank with donations from local churches. Kay Duncan, the center's director, said the food bank provides short-term assistance to the unemployed until they can find a job or get other help.

She said 54 percent of the people the food bank serves are eligible for government assistance and are waiting for the assistance to come through.

"But sometimes we provide assistance to people who have worked for years and their wages are not keeping up with the cost of living," Duncan said. "A car repair or a medical expense can cause a real drain on a person's financial ability to meet basic needs."

ALTHOUGH THE program is organized to provide one-time assistance, Duncan said the center has made exceptions for people on fixed incomes or for emergencies.

Duncan said the demand for the bank's services has increased in the past year. In the first nine months of this year, 435 households received food, a 16 percent increase over last year, she said.

When opportunities for aid from the county and other charities have been exhausted, local churches may be of help. Rev. Robert Welsh of the First Christian Church said, "We don't try to be a social service, but we try to work with Johnson County Social Services to meet needs where people fall between the cracks."

Rev. Roy Wingate of the Gloria Dei Lutheran Church said he sees people who request financial help two or three times each week. "People come in because they've exhausted all other resources and they turn to the church," Wingate said.

Nuclear

CHILDREN and young people are hurt most by fallout because "it may be 20 years down the line before they get cancer from it," he said. Older people probably will not live long enough to develop cancer and the elderly are the safest, he said.

"The legislature has not taken a stand on the right or wrong or safety or unsafety of nuclear plants," he said. "You never know how things will go, but we must have the mechanisms to deal with it," he said.

Henry Boccella, Plants and Preparedness officer for the Office of Disaster Services, said most people living in the neighborhood of nuclear reactors are not concerned about possible accidents.

Boccella conducts public hearings throughout the state to educate residents about what they should do in case of an accident. The meetings are well-publicized and held at night so day-workers have a chance to attend, he said.

HOWEVER, "Only two people showed up in Cedar Rapids," Boccella said.

Boccella said he does not know why residents are not concerned.

"Perhaps they feel the government has a good handle on it. They assume the government will take care of them entirely when something happens," he said.

Iowa's Anderson on, once off bench

By Mike Kent Staff Writer

Bobby Hansen's game-high 21 points gave fans plenty to cheer about in Iowa's 84-53 romp over Northern Iowa Saturday.

And deservedly so. Anderson wound up as the game's second leading scorer, pumping in 7-for-10 attempts from the field and 3-for-3 from the free-throw line for 17 points.

A 6-FOOT-7 sophomore from Madison, Wis., Anderson entered the game in the first half when Iowa was beginning to widen its margin over Northern Iowa. At halftime, Anderson's statistics looked liked they belonged to an All-American.

"I think he (Anderson) ended up with a plus 29 on the (performance) chart, which was second to Bobby Hansen's plus 33," Olson said.

Anderson was glad to oblige when Olson gave him the chance. "I thought overall it was pretty good," Anderson said. "I shouldn't have missed those three shots, but I thought I did pretty good on the offensive boards, getting to where the ball was going, and just anticipating my teammates when they're going to shoot the ball."

EACH TIME ANDERSON put the ball through the hoop the crowd responded with a rousing cheer. But Anderson's intensity during the game made it difficult for him to notice the noise.

Anderson's three perfect free-throw attempts against the Panthers kept a personal streak alive. From the line, Anderson is 11-for-11 this year. And since he made good on all nine chances in his freshman year, Anderson has yet to miss a free throw after 20 attempts during his Iowa career.

But despite Saturday's fine performance, Anderson still believes he has a long way to go. "I have to get some more legs into the shot, but that's because I haven't been playing that much. It just comes with experience."

If Saturday's overall display is indicative of what is yet to come, Craig Anderson won't have to worry about acquiring experience.

Saturday after suffering a bruised shin during the Iowa State game. That left room on the court for sophomore Steve Carfino, who was Iowa's third leading scorer with nine points.

"When we put him in the second time he really did a good job," Olson said of Carfino. "He pushed the ball, made things happen and was ready to shoot the ball when he got it."

If Olson's game plan works, Saturday's playing time for his freshmen and sophomores could be the key to a successful tournament at the Kettle Classic in Houston, Texas.

A team Olson claims will be the best Iowa has played this season.

Bowl win for Texas A&M

SHREVEPORT, La. (UPI) — It has not been the easiest of seasons for Texas A&M Coach Tom Wilson, but at least it ended on a pleasant note.

Wilson's job seemed to be lost just a few weeks before the end of the regular season, but he was given a reprieve by the school's president.

His team celebrated that fact last Saturday night in the opening bowl game of the holiday season, dominating the contest from the second quarter on and knocking off Oklahoma State, 33-16, in the Independence Bowl.

Two touchdown passes from Gary Kubiak to sophomore Jimmy Williams in the second quarter — one of 50 yards and another of 38 — broke open the game.

Both the Cowboys and Aggies finished their seasons with 7 records.

"We had the momentum to start the game," said Oklahoma State Coach Jimmy Johnson. "But after those two long passes we could never get back in it."

"We're disappointed, but we have come further this season than anybody thought we would. And we have 95 percent of these guys back next year."

Eagles — to whom they lost in last year's NFC title game.

Tampa Bay, Detroit and Green Bay are all tied atop the NFC Central with 8-7 records, but the Packers, who beat New Orleans 35-7 Sunday, cannot earn the division title, only a wild card spot.

SAN FRANCISCO, which beat Houston 28-6 Sunday, has long clinched the NFC West title and Atlanta, 7-7, plays Los Angeles on the road tonight.

Lynn Dickey tied a Green Bay single-game record with five touchdown passes to spark the Packers' rout of the Saints. The Packers capitalized on six New Orleans turnovers en route to their sixth victory in the last seven games.

Joe Theismann threw for 339 yards and two touchdowns and scored himself on an eight-yard run as the Redskins kept their longshot playoff chances alive by handing the Colts their 14th straight loss.

Defensive end George Martin's 20-yard fumble return for a touchdown helped the Giants remain in strong contention for a wild card spot by ending St. Louis' four-game winning streak and eliminating the Cardinals from the possibility of post-season play.

Ricky Patton, Earl Cooper and Dwight Clark each had touchdowns during a 7-minute, 22-second span of the third quarter to snap a scoreless tie and lead the 49ers past the Oilers.

Vince Evans connected on 14-for-30 passes for three touchdowns, including a pair of scoring tosses to Ricky Watts, pacing the Bears over the Raiders in a rain-soaked game.

Iowa gymnasts finish third in Houston all-around meet

By Steve Batterson
Staff Writer

The Iowa men's gymnastics team got its act together this weekend, finishing third in the Husky All-Around Invitational at Houston Baptist University.

The Hawkeyes scored a 160.55, nearly eight points higher than they did at the Oklahoma All-Around Invitational a month ago. Following a somewhat disappointing showing at the Windy City Invitational last weekend, Iowa Coach Tom Dunn was very pleased with his team's performance. "We had four really solid performances out of our all-around men," Dunn said. "All four of them were in the top 12 finishers."

Iowa's Kelly Crumley took seventh in the all-around with a 53.85, fourth in the floor exercise and the horizontal bar. Junior Brett Garland took fourth on the pommel horse and finished in eighth in the all-around standings with a 53.4. He was followed by Aaron BreMiller in 10th place with a 52.45 and Paul Goedecke with a 52.35, good for 12th place.

Originally, meet organizers had planned to count all four scores, but when one of the teams couldn't enter a full four-man team, they changed the structure of the meet so only the top three scores on each event would count. If all four scores would have counted, Iowa would have taken second place. "That's pleasing to know," Dunn said. "It shows that with the depth we have we can do well. If you would have added six other guys (to put Iowa at the dual meet 10-man limit) we would have scored a 268 or 269 and that is very good."

The meet was only the third time out for Garland and the first of the year for BreMiller. Both have been recovering from injuries.

Hawks win, but lose Banach

By Jay Christensen
Sports Editor

Iowa's wrestling team kept its season record perfect defeating two California teams over the weekend. But the victories may have been costly to the squad as heavyweight Lou Banach suffered an injury.

Friday the Hawkeyes edged California-Bakersfield, 24-18. Saturday night, the Hawks topped Cal Poly, 37-9.

But in the Bakersfield meet, heavyweight Banach was lost for an undetermined amount of time. He suffered a left ankle sprain in a match with Rogelio Herrera.

BANACH SUFFERED THE injury with under 2 minutes left in his match. He continued to wrestle, beating the 265-pound Herrera, 20-18.

Bakersfield proved to be Iowa's toughest test of the young season. The Roadrunners led going into the 177-pound match, 16-11. But Iowa's Ed Banach pinned Ray Mann of Bakersfield in 1:32 to give the Hawkeyes a 17-16 advantage.

The Hawks' 190-pounder, Pete Bush, scored a 19-8 decision over Mark Loomis to give Iowa a 21-16 lead. Heavyweight Banach then defeated Herrera.

If Banach would have forfeited, it would have meant six points for Bakersfield and a 22-21 Roadrunner win.

"Lou shot in for a takedown and got all his weight caught on one leg," said Iowa Assistant Coach Chuck Yagla. "He lost his balance resulting in the sprained ankle."

Banach was held out of competition in the Cal Poly dual, and the Hawks forfeited the heavyweight

McEnroe leads Davis Cup win

CINCINNATI (UPI) — A determined John McEnroe, repeatedly flinging his fist in the air during the decisive fifth set, posted a 7-5, 5-7, 6-3, 3-6, 6-3 victory over Jose-Luis Clerc Sunday to assure the United States the Davis Cup championship over Argentina.

With the score tied at one game each in the final set, McEnroe began making the gesture after each winning point and won three straight games to jump into a commanding 4-1 lead.

After winning the final point of the four-hour marathon match, McEnroe leaped the net to shake hands with Clerc. McEnroe then ran across the court and jumped into the arms of U.S. team captain Arthur Ashe.

THEN, IN A final show of jubilation, McEnroe threw a tennis ball as high and as far as he could and the fans responded with wild cheers.

During the match, McEnroe heaved a ball into the crowd in disgust, bringing him a formal "admonition" from the umpire.

Tankers drop close decision as Cyclones post 75-74 win

By Melissa Isaacson Staff Writer

A much improved Iowa women's swim team was barely edged by Iowa State Saturday afternoon at the Field House, as the Cyclones defeated the Hawkeyes by the smallest of margins, 75-74.

"We swam so darn well, there's no way I can be disappointed," Iowa Coach Peter Kennedy said.

The total performance Kennedy refers to is indeed impressive. The Hawkeyes broke pool, school and meet records all afternoon.

THE HAWKEYES' downfall Saturday? "We can't win a meet without winning any relays," Kennedy explained.

The Hawks finished first and second in the 50-yard freestyle, with Donna Strilich and Liz MacBride turning in times of 24:81 and 24:84 respectively.

IN THE 400 freestyle relay, the last event of the day, Iowa State outclassed the Hawkeyes with a time of 3:36.96, well ahead of the team of Marshall, Vaccaro, MacBride and Lisa Smith in 3:56.76.

medley saw Kris Peterson finish first, setting a meet and pool record as well as a personal best in the process, with a time of 4:43.18.

After pulling the upset in the 50 freestyle, the remaining individual freestyle events were dominated by the Cyclones.

IN THE 500 freestyle, King and Kirkland finished second and third with times of 5:06.68 and 5:12.70, respectively.

The Cyclones took first in both backstroke events, but the Hawks finished second and third in the 50 backstroke.

The Hawks dominated the butterfly events, taking two first-place and one second-place finish.

The Hawks finished first in both breaststroke events, also gaining valuable points with a second and a third-place finish.

Bowers took first place on the one-meter board with a score of 161.45. The closest diver was Cyclone MaryAnn Eadie with a score of 157.25.

Michelle Thomas came in second at 1:04.24. The 400 freestyle relay, the last event of the day, Iowa State outclassed the Hawkeyes with a time of 3:36.96.

McMullen unhappy with play in Hawks' weekend losses

Saturday, McMullen juggled Iowa's starting lineup for the Illinois game. But the 19th-ranked Illini stopped the Hawkeyes, 76-51.

Fifth-rated Hawks claw UNI, 84-53

By H. Forrest Woolard
Assistant Sports Editor

It was another Iowa basketball victory, but besides that, the Hawkeyes' 84-53 rout over the Northern Iowa Saturday was significant because it allowed court time for everyone.

"We got a lot of playing time for a lot of guys and that was very, very good," Iowa Head Coach Lute Olson said. "That's really the only value that it served for us today."

The Hawkeye-Panther match-up ended a three-game series between the two teams, with Iowa winning each of the encounters. While many state sports fans have supported the continuation of the in-state contest, it looks like Saturday was the last time the two teams will meet for awhile.

AND FROM ALL indications of the game's first six minutes, the Panthers were well aware of this factor. Northern Iowa sunk three baskets before the Hawks could even get on the scoreboard.

Olson didn't hesitate to go to his bench, and with depth players such as freshmen Greg Stokes and Todd Berkenpas, along with sophomore Craig Anderson, the Hawks took control of the game after six-and-a-half minutes of play.

Following a goaltending call on a short shot by Stokes, the game was tied at 8-8. The freshman's free throw proved to be the point that gave the Hawks the game lead for good.

Whether it was Hawks' tenacious defense, or the Panthers' ice box shooting, Northern Iowa failed to score a bucket from the 15:46 mark until 10:40 remained on the clock in the first half. By then, the Hawks put 18 points on the board, and finally began to demonstrate their talents which have earned them the No. 5 ranking in the country by United Press International.

BOB HANSEN LED all scorers in the game, sinking 21 points for the Hawks. That total is a career high in NCAA competition for the sophomore from Des Moines, surpassing his 18 point performance against Michigan State last season.

Another Hawkeye who turned in a career high was Anderson. His 17 points broke the 12-point mark established against Detroit in his freshman season.

If you're one of those Hawkeye fans who is always concerned about next season, Saturday's line-up was probably close to what should be expected in upcoming years. Olson was afforded the opportunity to use his two-foot-11 freshmen at the same time. With Stokes handling the center responsibilities, Michael Payne was free to experiment in one of the forward positions. The two freshmen combined for 14 points and 13 rebounds.

Cincinnati beats Steelers for AFC Central crown

By United Press International

Stash away those calculators. The National Football League's complicated playoff possibilities simplified considerably in the 15th weekend Sunday with two more division champions being crowned and two AFC East teams becoming assured of at least a wild card playoff berth.

The Cincinnati Bengals, the surprise team of the AFC, clinched their first Central Division title since 1973 with a 17-10 triumph in Pittsburgh that eliminated the Steelers from post-season play for the second straight year. Ken Anderson passed for 215 yards and two touchdowns as the Bengals improved to 11-4, the best record in the conference.

THE STEELERS, 8-7, who have had to play most of their last two games with second-year pro Mark Malone at quarterback in place of the injured

Terry Bradshaw, made a valiant fourth-quarter comeback bid but fell short.

In the AFC East, Miami and Buffalo both won to clinch wild card berths and the two clubs will meet Saturday in the Orange Bowl to decide the division championship. Miami, 10-4-1, turned a botched Kansas City punt into a one-yard touchdown run by rookie Andra Franklin in eliminating the slumping Chiefs, who led the AFC West with a 6-2 record at the halfway point of the regular season.

Buffalo, 10-5, got 153 yards rushing from Joe Cribbs to beat New England 19-10 and set up Saturday's showdown in Miami. The Patriots, 2-13, suffered their eighth straight loss.

The New York Jets, 9-5-1, who edged Cleveland 14-13 on Saturday, cannot win the division title, but a victory at home over Green Bay next Sunday will guarantee the Jets' first playoff spot since 1969.

San Diego, 9-6, stayed alive for both an AFC West title and a wild card spot with a dramatic 24-23 triumph over Tampa Bay that deprived the Buccaneers of a chance to clinch the NFC Central crown. Rolf Benirschke's 29-yard field goal with 45 seconds left, set up by Woodrow Lowe's interception, kept San Diego a game behind Denver, 10-5, which beat Seattle 23-13. Craig Morton threw one touchdown pass and set a Broncos' single-season passing yardage record.

DENVER FINISHES the regular season in Chicago Sunday, while the Chargers will play host to Oakland next Monday night. The Raiders, who lost to Chicago 23-6 Sunday, have already been eliminated from playoff competition one season after winning the Super Bowl.

In the NFC East, Dallas, 12-3, clinched its fifth division title in six years with a 21-10 triumph over crumbling Philadelphia, which lost its fourth straight to drop to 9-6. The Eagles can still ensure themselves a wild card playoff spot with a victory at home against St. Louis Sunday. The Giants beat the Cardinals 20-10, and Washington ripped Baltimore 38-14 to stay alive for wild card berths.

Danny White tossed a pair of touchdown passes, and Dennis Thurman notched a club-record three interceptions to highlight the Cowboys' second victory of the season over the

Badgers fall to Tennessee in Garden State Bowl

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (UPI) — Tennessee quarterback Steve Alatorre spent Sunday afternoon in paradise.

"It's a quarterback's paradise to have receivers with the speed our guys have," said Alatorre, who completed 24-for-42 passes for 315 yards and one touchdown to lead the Volunteers to a 28-21 victory over Wisconsin in the Garden State Bowl. Alatorre also ran six yards for the deciding score.

"You know you can throw the ball and those guys can break it any time."

"THOSE GUYS" are Anthony Hancock and Willie Gault. The speedy wide receivers, who hold the world record in the 440-meter shuttle hurdles relay, had the Wisconsin defenders clutching at air all day.

Hancock caught 11 passes for 196 yards, including a 43-yard touchdown reception in the second quarter, to break the Garden State Bowl record for catches and yardage. Gault, who tied an NCAA mark last season by returning three kickoffs for touchdowns, ran one back 87 yards in the first period Sunday at Giants Stadium to put the Volunteers ahead to stay, 10-7.

"We've never seen speed like that," said Wisconsin Coach Dave McClain.

"That's awesome speed. We knew they had it but didn't think they would be able to do what they did."

HANCOCK, WHO CAUGHT just 32 passes during the regular season, tried to explain his success against the Badgers' secondary, which included All-American safety Matt Vandenberg.

"They let us get to the outside and when we did the strong safety had to cover us all alone," he said. "I don't think they expected us to throw as much as we did. My touchdown came on a post pattern. The cornerback came up and I ran right past him."

Alatorre went 14-for-25 for 194 yards in the first half to earn MVP honors. The senior set Garden State Bowl marks for passing yardage, breaking the record of 268 yards set by Arizona State's Mark Malone in 1978, and also established a record for passing attempts, previously held by California's Rich Campbell at 39.

How did it all begin?

While the first Rose Bowl football game was played in 1902, it was an addition to the annual Tournament of Roses parade. The parade, which dates back to 1890, was to be a showcase for sunny California. By Diane McEvoy..... page 5

What's it going to cost?

The Rose Bowl game will take in more than $6 million. The University of Iowa may receive as much as $200,000 for the Hawkeyes' appearance in Pasadena, Calif. It will cost about $815,000 to send the Hawks to the game, but the game's receipts will cover the expense. By Betsy Anderson..... page 6

1981 in review

With big wins over four bowl-bound teams — Nebraska, UCLA, Michigan and Wisconsin — the Hawkeyes were nicknamed the "giant killers." With losses to intrastate rival Iowa State and Big Ten rivals Illinois and Minnesota, some thought the Hawks might even miss a winning season. Fry is key to Iowa's turnaround

By Jay Christensen
Sports Editor

Maybe John Hayden Fry, the man who brought "scratch where it itches," to the University of Iowa, came here three years ago because he had one more itch to scratch. Whatever the reason, Iowa's head football coach has turned a losing football program around.

Fry is a crafty veteran of the game of major college football. He lives, breathes, eats and thinks football. He's played the game, earning all-state honors at Odessa High School in Texas and competing at Baylor University. For 20 years, he's been a college head coach.

He is one of the few remaining college coaches who has lost more than 100 games. But his ability to win the big games — something Fry's teams have been able to do for 20 years — have kept him in the coaching business. At Southern Methodist University in Dallas, Texas, where Fry was head coach for 11 years, Mustang fans remember him for winning the Southwest Conference title.

Others recall that he produced three winning seasons in 11 years as head coach at SMU. In football-mad Texas, that's not good. At football-starved Iowa, it is wonderful.

"HE IS a driven person," said Willard Boyd, former University of Iowa president and now head of the Field Museum of Natural History in Chicago. "It was obvious to me he has great administrative talents. It takes a lot of blood, sweat and tears."

John Porche, head athletic trainer at North Texas State, calls Fry: "The best Saturday coach I've seen. I have nothing but good things to say about him. He hired me, and I was his only trainer at North Texas."

Former Baylor Sports Information Director Dub King said: "He's always had a great football mind. I have been and always will be a Hayden Fry man."

Iowa football coach Hayden Fry and Washington football coach Don James get together for the first time since the Hawkeyes and Huskies won in their respective divisions and gained a berth in the 1982 Rose Bowl. The Hawkeyes will represent the Big Ten and the Huskies will represent the Pacific Ten.

Others don't particularly care for Fry's tactics as a coach. "He's not on top of the world down here," said Harless Wade, a writer for the Dallas Morning News. "Too many people know him. He once locked me out of stadium for a week."

But Fry is used to calling the signals. In Odessa, where his father was a butcher and his mother took tickets at a picture show, Fry quarterbacked his high school team to the state championship. He attended Baylor from 1946-50, again playing quarterback, but sat on the bench most of his four years.

AFTER EARNING a degree in psychology from Baylor in 1951, Fry returned to Odessa as a backfield coach — a job he held two years. He was then drafted into the Marines during the Korean War and spent two years overseas. While overseas, Fry completed nine hours of college credit in psychology at Tokyo University.

After a discharge from the armed forces, Fry returned to Odessa High School in 1956, serving as head coach for three years. In those three years, his team intercepted more passes than his opponents completed.

Don James — quiet but effective

By Melissa Isaacson
Staff Writer

Carol James, wife of Washington Head Coach Don James, believes one saying sums up her husband's philosophy of life: "Isn't it wonderful what can be accomplished, when no one cares who gets the credit?"

Carol said it was inspired by James' close friend — Iowa Athletic Director Bump Elliott — and now hangs in the Washington Huskies' locker room.

James, in his seventh season as Husky head coach, has a 47-22 win-loss record at Washington. His teams have always finished in the upper division of the Pac-10 and he has brought his team to a bowl game three out of the last four years. He has been named National Coach of the Year, in 1977; West Coast Coach of the Year, in 1980; District IX Coach of the Year, in 1980; and has twice been named conference Coach of the Year, in 1974 and 1980.

Following a successful prep career at Washington High School in Massillon, Ohio, (where former Iowa Head Football Coach Bob Commings coached 10 years later), and a college career at the University of Miami in Florida, James served as a second lieutenant in the Army. He then enrolled at Kansas and coached the freshman football team while pursuing his master's degree.

JAMES RETURNED to Miami to coach prep basketball and football before beginning his college coaching career as an assistant head coach and defensive coordinator at Florida State. Seven years later James moved on to Michigan, and two years later to Colorado, serving as defensive coordinator at both schools.

James accepted his first head coaching position at Kent State, remaining there for four seasons. That led to the position of Washington head coach, which he accepted in December 1974.

According to James, "organized" is probably the word most frequently used to describe him. As a coach, a Woody Hayes he's not. "You have to have some toughness to coach a football team, but I'm certainly not hard-nosed," he said. "I've never laid a hand on a player and I don't believe in swearing at them either."

Carol James couldn't agree more. "Don is very quiet and low-key in everything, especially when it comes to himself. He doesn't have much of an ego. Some coaches have to have the limelight but he doesn't."

AND JAMES is not one for big locker room pep talks, either. "Like Lee Trevino once said, 'If you haven't brought it with you, you're not going to get it now.' I don't worry about motivating my players unless it's against a team we are really supposed to beat. Against Iowa in the Rose Bowl, we'll just follow our game plan."

Carol James said she will not take her third New Year's trip to Pasadena for granted. "Five years ago, when we went for the first time, it was the biggest thrill in my life. Going to the game I actually had tears in my eyes, because all of our years together (they have been married nearly 30 years), Don and I have dreamed of what we'd like to do in life. On the way to the game, I said, 'My goodness, here we are, doing something we have always dreamed about.' How many people really have that happen to them?"

"The first time you go there's something special about it, but it's still special. It's the Super Bowl of college football. It's a happening."

SHE DESCRIBED her husband's job as a "family affair." Their son-in-law, Jeff Woodruff, coaches the Husky tight ends. "Our children are really involved in it. They help to recruit."

"I get to know the players very well," she said. "Every player we've ever recruited, we've had to our home. I love those boys like they're my own sons. Don loves to see them developing and becoming a real plus to the community."

And on New Year's Eve, when Don has tucked all of his players safely into bed, he'll celebrate his 49th birthday. "We always have a party somewhere. We never know where it's going to be, though," Carol said. "It's fun, but he's so worried about the game at that point, we really don't do that much celebrating."

"Every year I get about 10 to 15 cakes," Don said. "Things are so hectic that day though, that I'm usually anxious to go to bed." Carol added, "Last year, we got a cake that was absolutely huge. We took it down and let the players eat it."

"Don just loves what he's doing because once he stops loving it, he'll get out."

Carol James wouldn't have it any other way.

The 'granddaddy' of bowl games

By Diane McEvoy
Assistant Metro Editor

When Iowa played in its first Rose Bowl game in 1957, students could write home to tell Mom and Dad about their adventures for the price of a three-cent, first-class stamp.

In fact, many things were different then. Tickets cost $5.50 — $6.50 for a box seat. A room at the Hotel Stillwell cost $6 per night.

The Rose Bowl festivities, which had their beginnings in 1890, weren't always the spectacular sporting celebration they are today. Football did not become an annual part of the celebration until 1916. And it wasn't dubbed the "Rose Bowl" until 1922.

During the 1889-1890 winter, two Pasadena men were discussing the harsh weather in other parts of the country and decided to hold a celebration, the Tournament of Roses, in honor of their area's sunshine, citrus and blossoms, according to Rose Bowl Football since 1902 by Herb Michelson and Dave Newhouse.

THE FIRST celebration attracted more than 4,000 Pasadena citizens to a local park. The tournament featured a parade of horses and carriages decorated with flowers. A marching band was added to the parade in 1891. Women first rode in the parade in 1892 and in 1894 reviewing stands were built.

In 1895 the Valley Hunt Club, the original sponsors of the event, turned responsibility for the growing celebration over to the newly-created Tournament of Roses Association.

The association, which now has headquarters on the Wrigley Estate donated to the city of Pasadena in 1960 by the gum magnate, maintains a Rose Bowl Hall of Fame.

After Michigan beat Stanford 49-0 in the celebration's first football game in 1902, chariot races replaced football games. Football returned to stay in 1916.

IN 1916 the first bathing beauties, clad in black bloomer suits, participated in the parade. Television first broadcast the parade — in black and white — in 1947; color gave life to the roses in a 1954 broadcast.

The Rose Bowl is known as the granddaddy of all bowl games for good reason — it was the first. The Orange and Sugar Bowls both began in 1935.

The Sun Bowl started in 1936, followed by the Cotton Bowl in 1937. Other bowl game beginnings include: Gator Bowl in 1946, Tangerine Bowl in 1947, Liberty and Astro-Bluebonnet Bowls in 1959, Peach Bowl in 1969 and Fiesta Bowl in 1972.

The Rose Bowl game has weathered some tough times, but always stays afloat, literally. A torrential downpour in late December 1933 threatened to cancel the 1934 game.

Former President Herbert Hoover, originally from Iowa, refused an umbrella offered him and sat watching the Jan. 1, 1934, parade in a green slicker, according to author Joe Hendrickson in The Tournament of Roses. Four bands failed to show up for the parade and some rode the parade route in buses. Most of them played "It Ain't Gonna Rain No More."

THE SKIES DUMPED 12 inches of rain on Pasadena during that storm. City fire trucks worked a full day to pump the water from the Rose Bowl field. One report claimed 2 million gallons were pumped from the field. The decision to hold the game was not made until just a few hours before kickoff time.

It rained again in Pasadena on Jan. 1, 1942, and the game was originally canceled; not because of the weather, but because of war. The Japanese had attacked Pearl Harbor just 25 days earlier. Rumors that Japanese submarines were planning to shell the coasts of California and Oregon prompted Lieutenant Colonel John Lesesne DeWitt to ask California Governor Culbert Olson to cancel the game.

Olson complied with DeWitt's request but the people of Corvallis, Ore., didn't like the idea. Oregon State College in Corvallis had just won its first Rose Bowl berth and was looking forward to its match against Duke University.

Percy Locey, Oregon State's persistent athletic director, hated to see his team lose its big chance, so he called Duke's football coach and the two teams reached an agreement to play the first transposed Rose Bowl on Duke's home turf at Durham, N.C. The official cancellation of the game had lasted about 24 hours.

But the home turf advantage didn't seem to help Duke; Oregon State won the game 20-16.

Fry

three critical games — to Texas Tech (17-3), Texas (17-9) and Texas A&M (27-17). "We got everything going and beat Arkansas and Joe Ferguson (22-7)." Everest said.

Fry's team followed with a victory over Baylor (12-7). Then Fry met with SMU President Paul Hardin.

"The erosion had started and couldn't be stopped," Everest said. "Hayden was fired before the Texas Christian game."

"I think they (downtown Dallas group) were the group who got us fired. Anybody who gives large sums of money has large opinions. It was tough. We had a shorter stick than Texas (conference winner)," Everest said.

Baylor's Dub King said: "He got a raw deal. The downtown Dallas group was out to get him. It's politics."

Fry's team responded to the dismissal with a 35-22 win over the Horned Frogs after being ahead 35-0 at the half. Despite being picked for last place in the Southwest Conference, SMU ended up second in the conference with a 7-4 season record. Fry was outraged at being fired. "You don't jump up and down and clap your hands when you go 7-4 and get fired," Fry said about the incident.

HE WAS OFFERED the Purdue head coaching job after Alex Agase turned the job down. But when Fry was considering the opportunity, Agase contacted Purdue officials and said he wanted, and was given, the job.

Fry ended up in Denton at North Texas State University. "When you don't have a job, you can't call it a step down," Fry said.

At North Texas, assistant coaches were required to teach. Everest had a master's degree, and he joined Fry at Denton, but Phillips, who did not have a master's, became an assistant at Oklahoma State. Dave Smith, who was the Oklahoma State head coach, took the vacancy at SMU. Smith's staff followed him to Dallas.

Fry immediately started reshaping the North Texas program. "He built it from almost nothing," Pouncey said. "He started a Mean Green club and got the school spirit up. He redesigned the uniforms and school emblem. He started upsetting teams he had no right to."

The highest sum of money ever raised in one year for athletics at North Texas was $7,000 prior to Fry's arrival. In his first year, he helped raise $100,000.

The Mean Green went 5-5-1 in 1973, good enough to tie for the Missouri Valley Conference championship. In 1974, North Texas went 2-7-2. But after that, Fry began winning consistently. In 1975 and 1976, North Texas State posted 7-4 seasons. In 1977, including a forfeit from Mississippi State, the team went 10-1. Fry's last year was a 9-2 effort.

"WHEN WE (Fry and staff) took over there (North Texas State), they were 1-9 the season before," Fry said. "We ended up winning 19 of our last 22 games."

Fry wanted bigger and better opportunities. The scratch for success itched at him. Fry publicly lobbied for entrance into the Southwest conference, but his program was laughed at. Fouts Field, home of the Mean Green, had a capacity of only 20,000. "He had realized that they (North Texas State), had limited resources," Pouncey said.

Fry said, "It took Texas Tech 20 years to get into the conference and it took Houston 10. I didn't feel bad about it. I felt I had eight to 10 years to do it."

Fry also was divorced from his wife Hue Leta, mother of the couple's four children, Randy, Zach, Kelly and Adrian. "I don't think it was a jolly one (divorce)," Everest said. The divorce was finalized in June 1978.

North Texas State also had internal problems in its administration. It was a difficult time for the university and Fry.

Bob Comings, then Iowa's head coach, wasn't having a good time either. His 1978 team went 2-9, resulting in Comings' dismissal.

For Fry, only one more itch remains — Washington.

Rose Bowl

The Daily Iowan — Iowa City, Iowa — Monday, December 14, 1981

Pasadena trip may net $200,000

By Betsy Anderson
Staff Writer

The UI Athletic Department will be making almost $200,000 on this year's Rose Bowl appearance — an amount equal to that received by each of the Big Ten and Pacific Ten conference schools and their respective offices.

The exact figure will not be decided until after the game, but a good indication is the amount of money netted last year by each of the teams in the two conferences. After expenses for both teams and the Rose Bowl committee were paid, each of the 20 schools and the two conference offices received $188,900, said Larry Bruner, UI Athletic Department business manager. This year that figure could reach $200,000.

Rose Bowl Committee Chairman Bill Nicholas said, "Gross gate receipts this year — which includes tickets, programs, parking and concessions — should be over $2 million." Television rights for the game will run approximately $4.5 million.

OUT OF THAT total, the Tournament of Roses committee deducts the cost of running the game. Fifteen percent of the net receipts then go to the committee and pay for the Rose Bowl watches that are presented to each player and team staff member as a souvenir. Nicholas said that each watch costs about $125.

But what does it cost to send a team to the Rose Bowl? Bruner said Bump Elliott, men's athletic director, submitted a $815,000 budget to the Big Ten office for approval last week. This is a tremendous increase over Iowa's last Rose Bowl appearance in 1959 which, according to Leonard Brcka in the UI Business Office, cost $64,006.57.

Bruner said the main expense is air fare. Although last year's Michigan team had farther to travel than the Hawkeyes will, Michigan paid only $77,000. With air fare costs increasing during the past year, the UI expects to pay almost $120,000 for plane tickets for 95 players, 15 members of the coaching staff, and those administrators, players' wives and coaches' families who decide to go.

EQUALING THAT expense is the cost of air fare for the Hawkeye Marching Band. According to Big Ten guidelines, a university can only pay for 225 band members. "If more are taken," Bruner said, "the cost will come out of the university's share of the proceeds." At other institutions the band has had to make up the difference, but Bruner said the importance of the band to the football program warrants the athletic department handling the added expense to take the entire marching band. Morgan Jones, director of the marching band, said he is planning to take 279 band members to California.

Lodging and meals for the team and team party for the two-week stay at the Huntington Sheraton Hotel in Pasadena is budgeted for another $120,000, while lodging in UCLA dormitories for the band is approximately $22,000.

Bruner was unable to give an accurate figure for ground transportation because the athletic department does not know how many activities the team will participate in and how much transportation costs to and from those activities will total.

"WE PLAN TO take the team to Disneyland, Knott's Berry Farm, Universal Studios and spend an afternoon at the Santa Anita Race Track," he said.

The Big Ten guidelines also allow a university to include in its budget air fare and lodging for a 68-member official party. Included in the official party will be Gov. Robert Ray, the university president and vice president or their representatives, Board in Control of Athletics members and state Board of Regents members.

Casey Mahon, assistant to the UI president, said the regents decided to relieve some of the financial pressures on the athletic department and pay their own travel and lodging expenses.

The costs for the other members of the official party, who are participating in the UI alumni tour package, is $900 per person. Bruner did not know exactly how many will be making the trip.

Other incidental expenses are $12,000 for practice facilities, laundry and dressing rooms, $15,000 for new uniforms and equipment, $5,000 for publicity, $9,000 for four complimentary tickets for each player and team staff member and $5,500 for Rose Bowl souvenirs which Bruner said, "hadn't been determined yet."

And all these are paid by the receipts from the game.

Rose Bowl — The Daily Iowan — Iowa City, Iowa — Monday, December 14, 1981

Parents follow sons to Pasadena

By Steve Batterson
Staff Writer

You know you've come a long way from rather than spending a chilly Friday evening watching high school football in places like Wellman and Solon, you're traveling to California to watch your son play in the Rose Bowl. For Lola Faye Erb, the mother of Iowa linebacker James Erb, and the rest of the parents of the Hawkeye football players, it's a dream come true.

"It's really quite exciting," Erb said. "I never dreamed this could happen. I'm just so happy it happened this year while James was involved."

Erb said her family has attended all 11 games this season. The Erbs plan to leave Christmas Day and drive to California in a van. "We'll be taking our 6-year old granddaughter and we'd like to have a few days to see the sights. I always thought that James had a lot of ability and I really guess that nothing more exciting could have happened."

She expressed what most of the Hawkeye parents expressed — a happiness that their sons were involved and a great anticipation of a trip west during the holidays.

ONE FAMILY has fond recollections of Iowa's first two Rose Bowl games, in January 1957 and in 1959. JoAnn Hilgenberg, whose son Joel is a center

"It's been his dream since he was a little boy to play in the Rose Bowl."
—Barb Skradis

"Never in my wildest dreams did I ever think we'd be making the trip out there."
—Marilyn Pekar

with the Hawks, remembers the first two trips well. She went along with her husband, Jerry, an assistant football coach at Iowa who was in his first year the first time the Hawks went to Pasadena.

"I remember going very well," Hilgenberg said. "It was Jerry's first year here and Jim, our oldest son, was about 1½ years old and he made the trip with us. He doesn't remember the first trip but he does the second one."

"It's really exciting having Joel involved," Hilgenberg said. "It was always one of our wildest dreams that one of our sons would be able to be to play out there. They've been watching Iowa football for so many years, selling popcorn at Kinnick or whatever."

The Hilgenbergs have been termed the "first family of Iowa football" and JoAnn Hilgenberg says there might be a family reunion in Pasadena.

"Jay, who was a center last year and is with the Chicago Bears now, is trying to make plans to go; he'll be finishing up his season on Dec. 20. Jim, who was a captain five years ago, and one of our daughters who live in Minneapolis, would like to go, so we're trying to arrange our Christmas so we can all go out and see the game."

THEY'RE HAPPY in Omaha, too. If beating Nebraska wasn't enough excitement for one season, Barb Skradis said that she is "thrilled to death" that her son, Bryan, a defensive end, will be one of the Hawks who will square off against the Washington Huskies.

"We're all going, you can count on that. We're just so happy for Bryan. Since he got hurt last season, he was really dissatisfied that he didn't get much of a chance to play after coming back.

for California in a van the day after Christmas and are planning to "pray for good weather." Living in the middle of Big Red country, Skradis said she is proud of the "it's great to be a Hawkeye" sign that adorns the Skradis' front door.

"We were happy when we beat Nebraska, but this is even bigger," Skradis said. "All of our friends and neighbors usually give us a little bit of a hard time about Bryan playing for Iowa, but they're all so happy and proud of him now."

HAROLD HUFFORD, father of Iowa players Paul and Mike, said that he isn't quite sure yet how he's going to get there, but he will get there. "We don't know how or when, but we'll get there the least expensive way possible," Hufford said. "We are really happy for both of the boys, but we think it's a big plus when we don't have to stop at the hospital to see one of the kids."

Peter and Marilyn Pekar plan to leave their Cudahy, Wis., home and go on the tour offered by the UI Alumni Association.

"Never in my wildest dreams did I ever think we'd be making the trip out there," Marilyn Pekar said. "It will be the thrill of a lifetime. We'll be seeing all the sights and going to the Big Ten dinner. The last time I've was there was some 25 years ago, but this will just be great."

Rose Parade a year-round task

By Molly Miller
Staff Writer

By 3 a.m. New Year's Day, 5,000 marchers, 214 horses, 60 floats, one parade queen and 14 elephants must be in place for a several million-dollar extravaganza — the 93rd annual Tournament of Roses Parade.

The parade will begin at 8:30 a.m. (PST) for the 4-million people who will line the Pasadena streets to watch it live and the 125 million who will watch it courtesy of the three television networks. The floats will already have been judged and the participants will have been at the parade site for hours.

The 5½-mile march begins at Ellis and Orange Grove streets and travels north on Orange Grove to Colorado. The longest part of the parade continues east on Colorado and then north on Sierra Madre Boulevard to Victory Park, near Pasadena High School.

THOSE DIRECTLY INVOLVED with the parade are quick to point out that this is not the "Rose Bowl Parade." The parade has been around since 1889; the first Rose Bowl game wasn't played until 1902, and then not again until 1916.

Planning, designing, building, selecting and coordinating the parade is the year-round, cumulative effort of the Tournament of Roses Association and some 1,400 volunteers. The association has only 10 paid staff members.

The volunteers are dubbed "white suiters" because on the day of the parade, they can be seen scattered along the parade route wearing white suits and red ties. Each one serves on one or more of the 29 parade committees and puts in 1,000 to 1,500 hours a year on the parade, said Bill Flynn, the association's public relations director.

Two of the 14 elephants chosen to appear in the Grand Finale of the Tournament of Roses Parade went on a maneuverability test in front of the Rose Bowl. The float, "Casablanca Fan Company's American Eagle Mechanical Military Band Wagon" will be the tallest float in this year's tribute to the rose. The float will have confetti cannons, a 1909 Wurlitzer band organ, six American flags and animated Revolutionary War soldiers.

"It's ironic, but the floats look best the evening of (January) first. That's when the roses are beginning to open up and everything looks full."

—Beverly Peaco, parade manager and art director for C.E. Bent and Son, Inc., a California parade float building company.

ted to do the job.

Building floats for all major parades, nationwide and throughout the year, is a complete industry in and of itself.

C.E. BENT AND SON INC. is building 24 of the 60 Tournament of Roses floats this year — including the one by the Big Ten conference. Bent said he builds floats for about 41 parades each year.

"I've been doing this for 36 years — ever since I was 16," Bent said. "I guess you have to love it."

Beverly Peaco, parade manager and art director for the Bent company, said $6,000 to $12,000 is spent on flowers for each float. A company contracting with Bent may be charged $30,000 to $110,000 for its float, depending on design and variety of flowers used.

Approximately 200,000 to 300,000 flowers are used on each float, Bent said, but he added, "There's no way to say exactly how many roses we use on one float, because we use all kinds of flowers besides roses and a lot of individual petals."

KEEPING THE flowers fresh is not difficult, Peaco said. "Carnations and mums are really hardy flowers and last for a long time with no trouble," she said. Fragile flowers such as roses are kept in water even while on the float in order to keep them fresh.

"It's ironic, but the floats look best the evening of (January) first," Peaco said. "That's when the roses are beginning to open up and everything looks full."

Mums are the first flowers to be used, and arrive at Bent's assembly room Dec. 23 or 24. They are not put on the float until Dec. 27, Peaco said.

Float-builders are a very close-knit group, Peaco said. Thirty years ago float building was considered a part-time job. Most of the younger people building floats in 1981 are children of those who have been building floats for decades, Peaco said.

BUT SHE ADDED: "A lot of people just drop in when we need extra help. The money can be pretty good." A person paid hourly, working about nine months out of the year earns $12,000 to $14,000 a year, Peaco said.

The UI is not sending a special float to the parade, but it will be represented by the Big Ten conference float. The conference floats are the most difficult to design, Peaco said. Since the floats are all built by spring of the previous year and the Rose Bowl teams are not picked until November, the Big Ten's float design must be versatile.

The 1982 design for the Big Ten float features 11 large drums, the largest will display the University of Iowa logo, Peaco said.

THE 22 BANDS are selected in much the same way as the floats. Two spots are reserved for the two schools playing in the Rose Bowl, but the other 20 are usually bands that return annually. This is the 62nd year for the Salvation Army Band. The Pasadena City College Band and the U.S. Marine Corps Band are also regulars in the parade, Flynn said.

The queen and her court are picked by a seven-member association board. About 900 high-school-age and college-age women from the Pasadena area compete for the position.

THROUGH A SERIES of three separate interviews, the number of competitors is finally reduced to 29. The volunteer judges are looking for "the all-American type," Ferber said. "She must have poise, personality and know how to handle herself. The queen represents (the Tournament of Roses parade) to the world, actually."

Kathryn Ann Potthast, a Pasadena high-school senior, is this year's queen. The queen and her court each receive a $2,000 wardrobe to wear for personal appearances and local television interviews.

Besides the bands and floats, 214 horses, divided into 27 equestrian units, will march in this year's parade, Ferber said.

The last float in the parade, by the Casa Blanca Fan Co., will be pulled by 14 elephants, Ferber said. Besides the obvious hygienic reasons for placing the elephants in the rear, the animals do not get along with horses very well, and the farther apart the two species are, the better, Ferber said.

"I'm kind of holding my breath about that one," she said, "but we don't really expect any problems."

The floats are displayed in the park for several days after the parade.

Game preview

Hawks, Huskies two of a kind

By Jay Christensen Sports Editor

Looking at the Iowa Hawkeyes and the Washington Huskies is like glaring into a mirror. Each has a strong defense, a good kicking game and an offense adequate enough to win most games.

The teams have not met since a 1964 regular season game in which the Hawkeyes, despite struggling through a 3-6 season, won, 28-18. Washington finished the season at 6-4. Now, 18 years later, the teams will meet in the New Year's Day classic.

Quarterback Steve Pelluer leads the Washington offense. He's tossed nine touchdown passes in 11 games. His primary target is junior split end Anthony Allen. On the season, Allen has caught 29 passes for 389 yards and two touchdowns.

When defenses start keying on Allen, Pelluer looks for flanker Paul Skansi. He's grabbed 24 passes for 295 yards. Skansi, who's interested in a career in commercial fishing, may instead have one in professional football. He is the fastest receiver on Washington's roster, running the 40-yard dash in 4.45 seconds. Skansi, who has been a starter since his freshman year, can also bench 275 pounds — the most among Washington's receiving core.

THE HUSKIES' top running back is sophomore Ron "Cookie" Jackson. The tailback gained 661 yards this season and scored four touchdowns. Jackson is quick, running the 40 in 4.4 seconds.

Iowa counters on offense with quarterback Gordy Bohannon. He's tossed six touchdown passes this season and has led the Hawkeyes since Pete Gales was injured in Iowa's victory over UCLA.

Bohannon, not noted as a quick runner, is adept at faking and reading defensive coverages. If he doesn't give the ball to leading rusher Phil Blatcher, he's passing to receivers Jeff Brown or Dave Moritz. Brown and Moritz shuttle plays from Iowa's bench into the huddle. Brown is the squad's leading receiver with 20 catches good for 301 yards. Moritz has caught fewer passes, 17, but has more yards, 390. Blatcher is Iowa's leading rusher with 740 yards on 145 carries. He is the team's second leading scorer with 48 points on eight touchdowns.

On defense, Washington has two senior co-captains. Fletcher Jenkins, a 6-foot-2, 247-pound defensive tackle, is regarded as one of the Pacific Ten's top pass rushers. He totaled 108 tackles this season.

MARK JERUE, an inside linebacker, had 144 tackles this year. He is the only three-year letterman on the Huskies' squad. Jerue and Jenkins were the only freshmen to play varsity ball in 1978.

The team's leading tackler is junior linebacker Ken Driscoll. He accounted for 151 total tackles this season, 82 unassisted. It's the second consecutive season Driscoll has led his team in tackles. In 1979, he totaled 144 stops.

Iowa's kicking game, which could be significant in the contest, is led by junior punter Reggie Roby. He led the nation in punting with a 49.8 yard average. Washington's punter is Jeff Partridge, who averaged 40 yards a kick this season. The Huskies' place kicker, Chuck Nelson, was an all-Pacific pick last year. He led Washington in scoring with 77 points, 48 of which came on field goals. His longest kick of the year was 51 yards against Kansas State.

Iowa's Tom Nichol, a freshman from Green Bay, Wis., led the Hawkeyes scoring with 59 points. His longest boot was a 48-yarder against Purdue.

After an opening 10-7 upset win over Nebraska, Iowa broke a string of 20 consecutive non-winning seasons with an 8-3 record this year. Washington was thought to be a young team — too young to win the Pacific Ten conference — but the Huskies went 6-2 in the conference, 9-2 overall; good enough to secure their third Rose Bowl bid in five years.

The early line has Iowa favored by three points. The game is a sellout and will be broadcast on NBC-TV. Starting time for the game is 4 p.m. but a preview of each squad will be aired prior to the kickoff.

Quarterbacks gear up for game

By Mark Ballard
Staff Writer

History shows that in pressure-packed Rose Bowl games, it has been the quarterback who comes through with the big play at the critical moment.

The probable starting signal-callers for the 1982 Rose Bowl, Iowa's Gordy Bohannon and Washington's Steve Pelluer, shouldn't prove to be exceptions to the rule.

Either could steal the limelight, but neither man seems pressured while preparing for what may be the biggest game of their lives.

"Our offense is getting better every week," Bohannon said. "We're due to put one together. We'll play the best we can. Our main objective is to win, but it's not a do-or-die situation. It's no big pressure thing."

Pelluer, a sophomore who played in just three games last year, was also a member of the 1981 Husky Rose Bowl team that lost to Michigan 23-6. He said experience has helped him deal with pressure.

"Last year I was third-string and I didn't handle it (pressure) as well as some of the guys who played more," Pelluer said. "This year I'll be able to. We've got a lot more incentive this year too, considering what happened last year."

PERHAPS THE biggest problem for Bohannon and Pelluer, aside from winning the game, is dealing with outside influences. Places like Disneyland tend to cause the mind to stray from football.

Bohannon, however, should be the least bothered since he is a native Californian. Ironically, Bohannon was born in Pasadena, the site of the New Year's Day classic.

"You have to put the distractions in perspective," Bohannon said. "There are a lot of things outside of the Rose Bowl, but you have to remember what you're there for. We can enjoy the extras and have fun, but we're there to win."

Washington, like the Hawkeyes, had trouble getting its offense into high gear. The Huskies, 9-2 overall, gathered a head of steam following a 31-0 loss to UCLA late in the season.

Washington proceeded to post wins over Southern Cal and Washington State in the final two games of the regular season.

"WE MADE a lot of mistakes early and weren't able to sustain good drives," Pelluer said. "We can't afford to make critical errors. They (Iowa) have some good talent and we must execute well to win."

Bohannon, who considers himself more of a passer than a runner, took over for an injured Pete Gales during the Iowa win over UCLA and has directed the team ever since. Bohannon suffered a mid-season slump against Minnesota, but came back after the Hawkeye loss to Illinois to lead Iowa to an impressive 8-3 overall record.

"We didn't throw as much as I'd have liked this year," Bohannon said. "But that was mainly because of our defense and our kicking game doing the job. I didn't anticipate running as much I did this year, though. I don't have a lot of speed, so I just try to be a smart runner."

Both quarterbacks are big and strong, ideally cut for their positions. Bohannon is 6 feet 2 inches, 195 pounds, while Pelluer is 6-3 and 198. "I think my size helps a lot," Pelluer said. "Plus I've been injury-free so far. I feel I have a strong arm and am very capable. I have to be pretty versatile because we run the ball quite a bit."

PELLUER HINTED that confidence may be an important factor in the game. "I was really young starting the new season," Pelluer said. "Now I'm becoming comfortable and confident. I'm moving the offense and getting stronger, and I'm more confident in reading defenses."

Bohannon and Pelluer will be vital to their teams' success on Jan. 1. It appears, though, that both men are happy just to be where they are.

"I have five brothers and a sister and a lot of other people who'll be watching me out there," Bohannon said. "It's the best feeling I've ever had."

Pelluer shared those sentiments. "I think it's just a great opportunity. We've come a long way and it's a thrill for me to be able to play in such a prestigious game."

Steve Pelluer, Washington quarterback, started young this season. "Now I'm becoming comfortable and confident," he says. "I'm moving the offense and getting stronger, and I'm more confident in reading defenses." Pelluer said he believes his size — 198 pounds — will be an advantage to him.

Mark Jerue is the kind of guy who will do anything to help the cause.

During practice last spring, the Washington football team was a little thin at linebacker, so Jerue helped out by switching from noseguard to inside linebacker. The transition has paid off as Jerue has added stability to an already tough Huskie defense.

Jerue, who won all-state honors playing on both the offensive and defensive lines at Mercer High School in Mercer Island, Wash., said that the move to linebacker was an easy one for him. "The big thing that I had to learn was pass coverage. You have to know all the different defensive sets, and there's a lot more action. I get to hit a lot more."

The 6-2, 225 pound senior doesn't have any trouble hitting. While playing noseguard last year, Jerue was the No.

Mark Jerue

2 tackler on the team with 124 stops. He had 16 of those tackles against Oklahoma State and had 14 stops in three other games. Jerue also led the team with 71 unassisted tackles. JERUE, one of four co-captains this year, believes the upcoming showdown with Iowa in the Rose Bowl will be physical, and that the play of the lines could determine the winner. "Iowa is a big, physical team and their offensive line is as big as I've ever seen," Jerue said. "I watched them a little bit on TV when they played Wisconsin and they looked awesome. I hope they're not that big in person."

While many of the players will be competing in their first bowl game, this is Jerue's third postseason contest. The 1979 season saw Jerue and the Huskies defeat Texas in the Sun Bowl 14-7. Jerue and teammate Fletcher Jenkins were the only two sophomores to play varsity ball during that season.

Last year, Washington earned a trip to the Rose Bowl but lost to Michigan, 23-6. Jerue, however, was voted as the Huskies' most valuable player.

"I'M JUST happy with the way things have turned out," said Jerue.

who was an All-Pacific-10 choice in both academics and football last year. "We saw this year as a rebuilding year, but then we kept getting stronger."

As has been the case with Iowa this year, the Washington defense has been the team's strength. Jerue said the offensive play was sometimes disappointing, but that the defense never let up. "We really had to carry the offense at times," he said. "It was frustrating for us, but we always believed in the offense. Against Southern Cal they (the offense) moved the ball down the field and kicked a field goal to win the game."

Jerue, who is the only three-year letterman on the squad, believes that everybody in Washington has jumped on the bowl bandwagon. "The fans got down on us after we were beaten by UCLA," he said. "But they're right back behind us now, and they're giving us a lot of support."

Hawkeye alumni yearn for Iowa

By Melissa Isaacson

CHICAGO — The definition of agony is being 240 miles away from your alma mater the weekend the football team advances to the Rose Bowl for the first time in 22 years.

Iowa graduates, athletes and non-athletes alike, who are now living in the Chicago area all had one thing in common the weekend of Nov. 21: They wanted to be in Iowa City in the worst way.

Clutching radios while half-listening to the Michigan-Ohio State game on television may be fun; but somehow, it just isn't quite the same as sitting amidst 60,000 Hawkeye fanatics in Kinick Stadium.

Still, those who couldn't be there in person were certainly there in spirit.

Take Jay Hilgenberg, Iowa's center from 1977-80, for instance. Hilgenberg, whose brother Joel is an Iowa center, completed a successful collegiate career at Iowa, receiving UPI honorable mention All-America and first team All-Big Ten honors. Following his final season, he was picked up as a free agent by the Chicago Bears.

OF THE IOWA alumni absent from Iowa City this football season, Hilgenberg was perhaps the most ecstatic over the Hawks' fortunes. He was one of the many juggling a radio and television selector.

"It was definitely an exciting after-

"Here I am, it's a year too late for me. All my friends are going to the Rose Bowl, and I'm here in the agony bowl!"

—Jay Hilgenberg

noon," he said. "I thought for sure Michigan was going to beat Ohio State. But when I saw Art Schlichter make that run for the touchdown, and I already knew that Iowa was ahead, I knew right then that Iowa would be going to the Rose Bowl. It was great. I think they ought to make Schlichter an honorary letterman for the University of Iowa."

"It's a great tribute to a great season. The coaching staff and the players, all of them — this is something they deserve so much."

But how did Hilgenberg really feel? "Here I am, it's a year too late for me. All my friends are going to the Rose Bowl, and I'm here in the agony bowl."

TORN BETWEEN feeling good for the team, but upset about missing out on a great experience? "No, I don't have any bad feelings. I had my four years there and I worked hard and played every game as hard as I could and did as much as possible to win. It's the same with all the other guys I played with last year. The coaching staff and the players totally deserve everything they get. I talked to a few of them and I think I'm more excited and tickled about it than they are. I've been going crazy up here.

"The guys who are seniors now are just going to have a different feeling for the rest of their lives. They're going to the Rose Bowl. They're the Big Ten champions. That's something that no one can ever take away from them. I'm very proud of those guys."

HILGENBERG, an Iowa City native, has followed the Hawks so closely this year that one weekend when the Bears were flying to the West Coast for a Sunday game against the San Francisco 49ers, he could not stand the thought of missing the Iowa contest. So much so that he sat in the cockpit and had the pilots tune in the game on their radio. "I'm the biggest Hawk fan there is," he said. "I bleed black and gold."

Another former Hawkeye, Ronnie Lester, now a starting guard for the Chicago Bulls, was also glued to the radio. "It took them a while to get that winning season, and to have that and go to the Rose Bowl. That's got to be something extra special. The Iowa fans are such good people that it really makes an everlasting impression on you."

LESTER WILL NOT be attending the Rose Bowl as Hilgenberg will, but said. "I'll be watching it on the tube."

One of Chicago's newest residents, former UI President Williard Boyd, was also interested in the result of the Iowa-Michigan State game. Boyd, who is now the president of the Field Museum of Natural History in Chicago, said. "I think it's great and wonderful and nothing could make me happier than to see this happen after long years of struggle."

Aside from Hilgenberg, Lester and Boyd, former Iowa celebrities of sorts, there are countless other Chicagoans with black and gold in their veins. One such fan, Jon Bradrick, who was an undergraduate and dental student at Iowa from 1973-80, said. "The thing that I always thought was so great about Iowa fans was that even in the face of massive losses, like back in 1973 when they would lose all but one or two of their games, the fan support never seemed to dwindle. Iowa's turn was long overdue."

Susan Senoff, a 1976 UI graduate, was yet another Hawk fan agonizing over being absent from Iowa City. "My husband called me at work to tell me the good news and I announced it to everyone. Everyone cheered; no one wanted to see Michigan or Ohio State go to the Rose Bowl again. I really don't even like watching football on TV, but on New Year's Day, I'll be in front of the television. This is one game I will not miss."

The season

1981's 'giant killers' in retrospect

By Mike Condon
Staff Writer

As Hayden Fry led his football squad onto the Kinnick Stadium turf for the season opener against Nebraska, few expected the Hawks to defeat the sixth-ranked Cornhuskers. Fry's team had already been hit hard by injuries. Freshman speedster Treye Jackson was sidelined with a congenital spine disorder, both J.C. Love-Jordan and Marty Ball — the starting backfield — had ankle sprains that would later lead to their redshirting.

Despite these injuries, it was an inspired Iowa team that treated a record crowd of 60,160 to a stunning 10-7 victory. Iowa scored first as Eddie Phillips dove over the goal line and, combined with Lon Olejniczak's extra point, the score stood at 7-0.

Olejniczak connected on a 35-yard field goal on the first play of the second period to boost Iowa's lead to 10-0. That was all the Hawks needed as the defense, and Reggie Roby who averaged 55 yards on five punts, took over and held Nebraska to 231 total yards to keep the Huskers pinned deep in their own territory.

CROSS-STATE rival Iowa State was prepared for the Hawks. Led by the running of the Cyclones' 246-pound tailback Dwayne Crutchfield, who gained 147 yards during the game, and the accurate left foot of Alex Giffords, whose three field goals of 48, 40 and 34 yards broke the Hawks' back, Iowa State dealt Iowa a convincing 23-12 setback in Ames.

The loss placed doubts in the hearts of Iowa fans. After looking so convincing against Nebraska, the Hawks looked flat against Iowa State; but many questions would be answered the following Saturday against UCLA.

After the 20-7 victory over the UCLA Bruins, the media nicknamed Fry and his Hawks "giant-killers." The key to the Iowa win was a swarming defense that held the Bruin offense to 121 total yards and held All-American tight end Tim Wrightman to one reception for eight yards.

Freshman kicker Tommy Nichol, who came in to replace an injured Lon Olejniczak (Olejniczak suffered a broken leg in the third quarter while throwing a block for quarterback Pete Gales), connected on field goals of 35 and 43-yards, and emerged as a new star. The win was Fry's 100th during his 20-year coaching career.

WITH A 2-1 non-conference record, the Hawks traveled to Evanston, Ill. to open the Big Ten season against Northwestern. Gordy Bohannon, playing for an injured Gales, made his first start of the season at quarterback and responded by leading a 64-0 rout over the Wildcats. Despite the win, Fry said his team was "battered" after the game. The worst casualty was center Dave Oakes, who suffered a severe ankle sprain.

A homecoming match against Indiana was next up for the Hawks. With less than two minutes gone, quarterback Babe Laufenberg hit Duane Gunn for 58-yards and a touchdown. Iowa fought back on a two-yard Norm Granger run and a 51-yard pass from Bohannon to Charles Jones. The play that turned the game in Iowa's favor occurred after the Hoosiers tied the score at 14-14 on a one-yard plunge by John Roggeman. Granger took Steve Bradley's kick-off and returned it 99-yards for a touchdown. Iowa went on to win 42-28 and set a showdown with Michigan in Ann Arbor the following weekend.

A crowd of 105,915 was present to watch the Iowa City "giant killers" do a number on the Wolverines. Nichol accounted for all the Iowa points on three field goals from 30, 20 and 36 yards.

THE DEFENSE made the key play. With Michigan driving and leading 7-6, linebacker Mel Cole picked off a Steve Smith pass in the end zone. Bohannon then led the Hawks to the Michigan 19-yard line and Nichol connected on the game winner. The win was a costly one, though, as tackle Bruce Kittle was lost for the season with a knee injury. Third-string center Bill Bailey started in place of Joel Hilgenberg, who suffered a broken thumb in the Indiana victory.

The 5-1 Hawkeyes returned home to face Minnesota on regional TV. Kicker Jim Gallery was the Iowa wingback Lon Olejniczak is taken from the field by trainers during the third quarter of the Iowa-UCLA game, which the Hawks won, 20-7. Olejniczak's leg was broken as he blocked for quarterback Pete Gales. The junior from Decorah, Iowa, is expected to receive a redshirt season.

The Hawkeye Marching Band spells out "Hawks" to the crowd before the Iowa-Nebraska game.

star. His four field goals led the Gophers to a 12-10 upset victory as the Iowa offense had trouble moving the ball. Fry said his team "blew it" and would "have to do some soul searching" before traveling to Champaign, Illinois, to face the Illini.

Fry started Gales at quarterback, trying to generate more offense, but the play failed, and the usually reliable defense was burned for a long touchdown pass by Illini quarterback Tony Eason. It was the Illinois defense that stood out, blocking a Roby punt in the end zone for a touchdown, recovering four fumbles and making two interceptions. The Illini dumped the Hawks, 24-7.

A CHANGE was needed to put a charge in the Iowa offense. Purdue was just as surprised as the Kinnick Stadium crowd when Bohannon led the Hawks to the line on Iowa's first possession in the shotgun formation with no backs in the backfield. The new formation confused the Boilermakers and Iowa jumped to a 30-0 lead at halftime.

Meanwhile, the defensive line kept constant pressure on quarterback Scott Campbell while the secondary held Steve Bryant, the nation's leading receiver coming into the game, to one reception. The 33-7 win gave the Hawks their first winning season in 20 years and was the first time an Iowa team had defeated Purdue since 1960.

ABC-TV was again featuring the Hawks as Iowa traveled to Madison to face Wisconsin. The key play was a 57-yard pass from Bohannon to Dave Moritz to set up Iowa's first touchdown, a two-yard run by Phil Blatcher. The Iowa defense was again superb, holding the Badgers to 29 yards in the first half. Roby's booming punts during the second half kept the Badgers at bay and allowed the Hawks to leave Madison with a 17-7 victory.

BLATCHER was the star of the Michigan State victory. He rambled for 247 yards and scored two touchdowns as the Hawks trounced the Spartans 36-7. Although Blatcher was the star, the big play was turned in by Tracy Crocker.

Michigan State was driving for a touchdown that would have brought the Spartans within two points, but quarterback Bryan Clark threw the ball right into Crocker's arms. His 16-yard return took the Hawks out of danger and that was as close as the Spartans would for the rest of the game. Iowa's win coupled with Ohio State's 14-9 victory over Michigan put the Hawks into the 1982 Rose Bowl against the Washington Huskies.

It's like moving a city 1,500 miles

By Rochelle Bozman
Staff Writer

The population of Burlington, Iowa, is going to pack its bags late this month for a 1,500-mile trip to Pasadena, Calif.

Well, maybe that's fudged a bit. Actually, as many as 35,000 people — 6,000 more than Burlington's population — could make the journey to spend five days in the sun and watch the 1982 Rose Bowl game.

"There are possibly going to be 35,000 Iowans out there. ... It's like moving a city to California for five days," said Randall Bezanson, University of Iowa vice president for Finance.

And when you move a city, someone has to organize the effort. Many Iowans will be working to help those taking student and alumni package tours to the game.

The Big Ten Conference sponsors the trips and tickets of "traveling parties" that go to the Rose Bowl.

THE FIRST PARTY includes the football team, the coaching staff and the usual football traveling party. They will stay at the Huntington-Sheraton Hotel in exchange for about 500 tickets from the UI's allocation.

This allocation is made to the hotel through the Big Ten Conference, Bezanson said. "A little more than 1,000 tickets go to a combination of the Big Ten Conference and, through the Big Ten Conference, to the local hotel for local arrangements," as specified in conference regulations.

The number of players is limited to 100, but there is no limit on the total size of the party, Bezanson said.

The families of the players and coaches make up the second party provided for by the Big Ten Conference, Bezanson said.

"THEN THERE ARE the families of the players and the coaches because they go out before Christmas and spend Christmas there. So the conference brings their families out so they can have Christmas together," he said.

The third group that will go to the Rose Bowl on the Big Ten is the "official party." The official party is made up of Iowa Gov. Robert Ray, the UI Board in Control of Athletics, the UI president, UI vice presidents and spouses.

The Big Ten Conference rules include the state Board of Regents in the official party, but the regents decided to pay their own ways, should they decide to go to the Rose Bowl.

The "official party," though, is subject to change, Bezanson said.

"I HOPE (former UI) President (Willard) Boyd goes and I think it is only appropriate that President Boyd — to the extent that we have the opportunity through the official party — to include President Boyd as well as President (James) Freedman (who will become UI president April 1).

"Substitutions in that party for people who do not go are permitted on a limited basis, but those substitutions would be for such people as, say, President Boyd and President Freedman," Bezanson said.

Boyd said he plans to attend the game. "(Acting) President (D.C.) Spriestersbach has graciously invited Susan and I to join him at the game and we have decided to accept."

FREEDMAN ATTENDED the Iowa-Michigan State game — the game that helped clinch a Rose Bowl berth for the UI — and said after the game that he had promised his 12-year-old son Jared a trip to the Rose Bowl.

The UI Marching Band and the band's support staff — a physician, people in charge of equipment and instruments and people to handle the financial arrangements — about 300 in all — will also make the trip.

Some members of the athletic department staff will go to California, compliments of the Big Ten, but will be working much of the time, Bezanson said. "Whether it be the ticket process, whether it be handling the logistics for the team party and the band and other things," all athletic staff members in the party will be busy.

"THE ATHLETIC DIRECTOR and the athletic director's staff are very much involved in Conference meetings because this also serves as a meeting of the athletic directors every year.

"I suspect the better part of the athletic department staff will go out there and that will probably be too few people to handle the very, very substantial logistics that are involved here," Bezanson said.

The total number of tickets going out to the Big Ten Conference and the number that will be used by UI officials is unknown, but Bezanson said it is somewhere around 3,000. "I don't know if that's right or wrong, but it's probably close," he said.

In addition to the 21,500 tickets available through the UI, many more tickets will be coming into Iowa through local travel agencies, Bezanson said.

The Rose Bowl committee allocates many of its tickets to California hotels, which in turn set up packages with the travel agencies in Iowa to attract business to the hotels.

Bezanson said. "So there are a lot of tickets available outside the university's allocation in Iowa through travel agencies. It could be as many as 10,000-15,000."

Congratulations on a winning season and good luck in the Rose Bowl!

Hawkeye players

Redshirts looking forward to 1982

By Thomas Jargo
Staff Writer

Iowa senior fullback Marty Ball said he is disappointed that leg injuries kept him from playing during the Hawkeyes' 1981 season, but the redshirted player hopes to figure prominently in next year's plans.

"It was a disappointment, considering what I expected of my year," Ball said. "I just wanted to make a contribution." Ball is pleased with the Hawks' success, but adds: "I always get a gut feeling. I really wanted to be out there."

Ball is one of three preseason starters Iowa Head Football Coach Hayden Fry opted to redshirt this season because of injuries. Also redshirted were sophomore halfback J.C. Love-Jordan, for an ankle sprain, and wingback Lon Olejniczak, for a broken leg. Olejniczak did play in Iowa's first three games, but because he did not play in any conference games, he is entitled to a redshirt year.

Ball and Love-Jordan were to have made up the starting backfield for the Hawks this year.

FRY ALSO redshirted highly-touted freshman wide receiver Treye Jackson, who underwent surgery for a congenital spine disorder, sophomore defensive ends Mike Hooks and Tony Wancket and junior college transfers John Carroll and Ron Hawley.

Redshirting means that a player is kept from varsity action, but does not lose a year of eligibility. An injury isn't the only way to receive a redshirt year. Redshirting is also designed to help a player like Hooks, who would not have seen much playing time because of the depth Iowa had at his position — defensive end.

But Hooks was also disappointed in being unable to play during a winning season. "Of course I'm not happy about it (being redshirted) now. I wish I could play, but it's better for the team and myself."

"There were three seniors at my position," Hooks said. "I would be playing behind Andre Tippett, and they (the press) were building him up as an All-American, so I wouldn't get much playing time."

"I HAVE a chance to start next year," Hooks adds, "and I figure three years is better than two." Although Hooks will be a junior next year, he will have three years of eligibility left.

Redshirting can also be done to benefit the team. Kansas State Head Football Coach Jim Dickey redshirted many of his senior starters to give the younger players a chance and to increase depth on his team; he was looking ahead to next year.

And although it may not have been Fry's intention, he could end up with the same result as Dickey. By redshirting Ball, Olejniczak and Love-Jordan, Fry gave backups Eddie Phillips, Phil Blatcher and Norm Granger — who were all playing well — some valuable playing time while also allowing time for Ball's and Love-Jordan's injuries to heal.

All six will be back next year to battle for their respective positions.

Texans talk of Fry and Hawks

By Mike Kent
Staff Writer

Hayden Fry's success with the 1981 Iowa Hawkeyes does not surprise many of his football peers from his native Texas.

O.A. "Bum" Phillips, who was an assistant under Fry at Southern Methodist in 1972 and is now head coach of the New Orleans Saints, said with a Texas sense of humor, "I've known Hayden Fry for a hundred years."

"Seriously, Hayden is one of those guys I've known for 25, 28 maybe 30 years. Anything a Hayden Fry team does good doesn't surprise me." Phillips, who is also a former head coach for the Houston Oilers, said of Fry: "He can organize. He's a sound fundamental football man, and he knows what the hell he's doing."

"Hayden's one of the few coaches who knows what he's doing both offensively and defensively. In fact, he's taught me a few things about defense. He relates to the kids and they play like hell for him."

Texas college football coaches who were not directly associated with Fry agree with Phillips' analysis. Bud Elliott, head coach at Texas-Arlington, said: "I think that Hayden is an excellent coach. He's an innovator, a pusher, an organizer, a public relations man and has good staff organization."

ELLIOTT came to Texas-Arlington after a coaching stint in Kansas. "I've known Hayden eight years personally," Elliott said. "Before that, I was aware of the fact that he was at SMU. I consider him a friend."

Since being the head coach for the Mavericks, Elliott went up against a Hayden Fry team on "three or four" occasions. And each time, Elliott's team was narrowly defeated. "Hayden's the luckiest man in the world," Elliott joked. One person who was able to share many of Fry's good fortunes is Rice Assistant Coach Clovis Hale. And in the first two years of Fry's reign at Iowa, Hale served as an assistant. Although he returned to Texas this year, Hale is happy for his former boss' success.

"There's not anyone that could be any more proud of the Hawks than I am," Hale said. "I don't know if anyone expected them to win the conference in three years. I just hope the heck the Hawks win (the Rose Bowl)."

"THE DEFENSE is excellent from my standpoint. I couldn't wait to get the paper Sunday to see how well they did."

Hale said: "One of the things that Coach would drive home hard is, number one, hard work. He would instill that mental discipline of winning and always drove home the word 'win.'"

Phillips said: "I don't think Hayden Fry has changed since 1950. He was, when I first knew him, what he is now. I've never seen him in a situation when he wasn't at his best."

Both Fry's and Phillips' busy schedules have limited conversation between the two to a few "friendly visits" on the telephone. "We haven't (exchanged coaching ideas) in the last two, three years — at least on a chalkboard," Phillips said. "But I suppose we will one of these days."

Since pulling up his roots and moving to Iowa in 1979, Fry has remained respected in Texas. "Most of us have always appreciated Hayden," Elliott said. "In our profession you're glad that a friend ends up in a good position, and I'm glad that Hayden is in one."

If Bear Bryant can have one...

By T. Johnson
Staff Writer

Bear Bryant, the winningest coach in the history of college football, has an Alabama state trooper who follows him around at games. The trooper is there to keep enthusiastic Bama fans from demonstrating too heartily their love for the staid old coach.

Iowa's Hayden Fry has Lt. Jim Neal, informally titled "The High Sheriff of Denton County," following him around after a couple of games each year. It all started when Fry was the coach of North Texas State University in Denton, Texas.

"I'd known of Hayden for several years," Neal explained over the phone from Denton. "When he came up here to North Texas (from Southern Methodist University), well, we just sat around one afternoon and saw Bear Bryant on TV with his entourage and decided 'Hell, Hayden ought to have a bodyguard, too.' We sat down and struck a deal and away we went."

THE DEAL WAS relatively simple: Neal and L.A. "Red Dog" Nelson — Fry's personal attorney, described by Fry as "the only attorney to get the Texas Supreme Court to reverse a decision" — were going to follow Fry onto and off of the field.

The deal was made considerably more complicated by Fry's move to Iowa. It was no longer possible for Neal and Nelson to flank Fry for every home game.

"We came up to Purdue and UCLA this year and saw a couple of good games. Since I live so far away, I passed the gavel to (Johnson County Sheriff) Gary Hughes at the I-Club meeting one morning. But I'm still the stud bulldog when I'm up there," Neal said.

"The first time he came up — two years ago — Hayden introduced him as the Lord High Sheriff of Denton County, Texas," explained I-Club President Dr. Ken Printen. "He came dressed in his sheriff's uniform and passed the protection on to Hughes, the Lord High Sheriff of Johnson County."

"I COME UP on Wednesday and most of my visitation, when I'm not with Hayden or members of the I-Club. I spend most of my time with Gary Hughes." Neal said of his time in Iowa City. "I never knew any of these people before Hayden got up there and now I have some very close friends up there."

"They (Neal and Nelson) come to the I-Club breakfasts a couple of times a year and visit with everyone," Printen went on. "They're sort of local color even though they come from far away. Everyone likes them and has fun with them." "A lot of people know who he is," explained Bill

Bock, owner of Studio 114, one of the High Sheriff's local haunts. "He's been friends of ours for a couple of years. He's just like a Buford T. Pusser or something. He's an old redneck, a loud, gruff sweetheart. He drinks a lot of Budweiser and tells a lot of stories. He's got a lot of little quips; he must just come up with them off the wall."

Neal and Nelson, like everyone connected with Iowa football, are looking forward to the Rose Bowl. "We knew we'd make it," he says, half chuckling. "I'll see you in Pasadena."

Former coaches praise Hawks

By Mike Condon
Staff Writer

Forest Evashevski and Hayden Fry are easily recognized as members of the Iowa football coaching fraternity. But what about the men who served as head coach between Evy and Fry? Jerry Burns took the reigns from Evy in 1961 and compiled a 16-27-2 record over five years.

Ray Nagel came to Iowa City in 1966 and had two 500 seasons — one in 1968 and one in 1969 — before a conflict between him and Evashevski led to Nagel's leaving after the 1970 season with a five-year record of 16-32-2.

Nagel's departure led to the hiring of Frank Lauterbur, who coached at Toledo before coming to Iowa. Lauterbur was at Iowa for three seasons and compiled a record of 4-28-1 before being replaced by Bob Commings in 1974.

Commings came to Iowa from Massilon, Ohio, where he was a successful high school coach. In his five years at Iowa, Commings compiled a 17-38 record before he was replaced by current Iowa Head Coach Hayden Fry on Dec. 4, 1978.

BURNS, NOW an assistant coach for the National Football League's Minnesota Vikings, is happy for the Iowa fans. "I'm real happy for the school and the kids," Burns said. "But I am most happy for the Iowa fans because they have stuck with the Hawks through thick and thin."

Burns also praised Andre Tippett, Iowa's All-American defensive end. "I saw him play against Wisconsin and he looked awfully good," Burns said.

But he added, "It's hard for me to say how he will stack up against others in the upcoming draft because we have other personnel that are in charge of scouting."

Nagel was "elated" when he heard the Hawks were on their way to Pasadena. It took Nagel a little longer than the rest of the country to receive the news because he is currently athletic director at the University of Hawaii in Honolulu. "I was just getting up when the Iowa-Michigan State game was ending. I still have warm feelings for the University of Iowa and there are no fans that deserve a Rose Bowl as much as Iowa fans."

NAGEL THOUGHT his teams at Iowa had the potential to win a Rose Bowl berth, but problems arose. "We had good potential but we didn't have compatibility between the coach and the athletic director (Evashevski)," Nagel said. "The situation has changed and Iowa now has a fine AD in Bump Elliott and a great coach in Hayden Fry. They gave Iowa a type of organization that had a chance to do well and now they are a solid program."

Lauterbur was "pleased" to see teams other than Michigan and Ohio State representing the Big Ten in the Rose Bowl, and the fact that it was a school that he had worked for made him feel that much better.

"It was just a great effort by Hayden and his ball club," Lauterbur said. "I think there is no question that Hayden should be named coach of the year because of the way he has totally turned the program around."

Although he did not fare too well in his tenure as Iowa's coach, Lauterbur still felt that Iowa would get back to the Rose Bowl. "It was tough for me during those days at Iowa, but I always felt with the support of Iowa's loyal fans they would someday return to Pasadena."

PRESENTLY defensive line coach with the NFL's Los Angeles Rams, Lauterbur, like Burns, has a lot of respect for Tippett's abilities. "I saw him play against Wisconsin and the thing I noticed most about him was the fact that he was always around the ing for." In 1956, Commings was a member of the first Iowa team to ever participate in a Rose Bowl and the next season he received the Iowa Most Valuable Player award. He says the experience is something the current Hawks will find just as memorable as he did. "I had just a great time there as a player," Commings said. "This team should do as well as we did in 1957 (Iowa defeated Oregon State 35-19 that year) because of their swarming defense."

And Commings said of this senior class, "I thought this class had a tremendous amount of character and the best thing of all was the fact that they came to Iowa with a winning attitude and they have confirmed my belief with their trip to the Rose Bowl."

Another Winning Iowa Team!

Skill, enthusiasm and dedication...three words synonymous with the teams of the University of Iowa.

One of the most outstanding of these teams—displaying all the distinguishing trademarks—is the 1,400-member team of the Department of Nursing at the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics.

Although their talents aren't measured on a scoreboard, their influence is far reaching. They display compassion and commitment around the clock, caring daily for more than 2,100 patients who depend on them. And, like any other leading team, the nurses at University Hospitals, Iowa's tertiary health care center are dedicated to a common goal. Their goal—quality nursing care. Working closely with other health professionals, they ensure a personalized touch for each patient.

Nurses serve in 11 divisions. These include Orthopaedics; Ob/Gyn; Urology; Psychiatric; Operating Room; Surgical; Intensive Surgical; Neurological and Neurosurgical; Medical; Pediatric; and Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Nursing divisions.

University Hospitals' nurses are unique. They take pride in knowing they're among the best. Their abilities in using highly sophisticated medical technologies, in caring for patients undergoing complex disease processes and in developing programs of care for patients' and families' individualized needs unquestionably rank them among the nation's top nurses.

Patients often say University Hospitals' staff make them feel like family members-at home in unfamiliar surroundings. And, it seems they almost universally appreciate the "personal touch" provided by their nurses. To become a member of this winning Iowa team, contact Nurse Recruiter, Department of Nursing, The University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics, Iowa City, Iowa, 319-356-2120 (call collect).

University Hospitals' Department of Nursing is an Iowa team with a tradition of excellence. These nurses represent the 1,400 team members who combine their unique talents to serve approximately 2,100 patients each day.

Rose Bowl — The Daily Iowan — Iowa City, Iowa — Monday, December 14, 1981

Iowa's Collins Hegler (44) scores the Hawks' second touchdown in the 1957 Rose Bowl. Hegler made the nine-yard run behind the blocking of Bob Comings (50), Oregon State lost the New Year's Day contest 35-19. Oregon State's Bob DeGrant (88) and John Witts (75) are also pictured.

An official trails Iowa's Bob Jeter, who scored on this 81-yard touchdown run in 1959. Iowa beat California 38-12.

Perhaps the most painful defeat of the season for Iowa was the 23-12 loss to Iowa
 State — a game called by some as the state's modern-day version of the Civil War. In third-quarter action, Iowa quarterback Pete
 Gales is sacked for a
 14-yard loss by Iowa
 State linbacker
 George Jessen. The Cyclones started early, scoring on their first two possessions, jumping off to a 10-0 lead that set the tempo for Iowa State's win.

 Bill Paxson and Dirk Vanderwerker

Nebraska I-back Roger Craig (21) seems to express the frustration Nebraska suffered losing 10-7 in Iowa's first game of the season as Iowa's Brad Webb (94) tackles Craig in the fourth quarter.
 Nebraska's offense was held scoreless for more than three quarters by an imper-meable Iowa defense. The win over Nebraska, a team that was rated as having the second best defense in the country last year, was the springboard for Iowa's winning season.

Iowa Head Coach Hayden Fry received his 100th career win when Iowa upset UCLA 20-7.
 Iowa quarterback Gordy Bohannon makes an extra effort to pass the ball while he is tackled by UCLA's Irv Estman. The game established Iowa as a "giant killer".

Above: The Hawkeyes' 35-7 victory over Michigan State in the last game of the 1981 Big Ten season, combined with Ohio State's 15-9 win over Michigan, sent Iowa to the Rose Bowl for the first time in 23 years. Here Iowa running back Eddie Phillips (18) dives for a touchdown.
 Left: After consecutive losses to Minnesota and Illinois, Iowa ensured itself its first winning season in 20 years with a 33-7 victory over Purdue. Iowa linbacker James Erb blocks a punt by Purdue's Matt Kinzler (28); the ball was recovered by Iowa defensive back Tracy Crocker for a touchdown.
