Jerusalem (UPI) - Israel's prime minister Tuesday described his government's decision to annex the Golan Heights as a "historic" one, and Cabinet to effectively annex the so-called Golan Heights of Syria.

In Damascus, the Syrian government said its Israeli stance was "unsustainable" and the president criticized the Israeli cabinet's decision.

"This is a historic decision," Begin said. "What is happening here is the first time in history that a cabinet has come to a decision that is not only a historic one but a definitive one."

Even skilled find unemployment a problem

Even skilled find unemployment a problem

"Unemployment, unfortunately, exists in all countries," a leading businessman said. "It is a problem that we all have to face."

"If we have unemployment, it is not because people are not working," a labor union official said. "It is because the economic conditions are not favorable."

December finals put UI students, staff to the test

By Travis Haring

Just because you’re the only one who works overtime to prepare for finals, according to Ken Chay, director of the UI’s Evaluation and Assessment center, doesn’t mean you’ll have it easy.

Final exams are really hard on the staff, said Chay. "We have people working throughout the week and on weekends, so the rest of the world is celebrating while we’re working."

In addition to sending unscheduled tests to computer rooms and guaranteeing tests will be available to students who have missed them because they are sick or involved in another activity, the test center usually has a professional staff of 15 who work on books not scheduled for testing, a task that brings in about $1,000 a week, or $5,000 a month.

UI students and staff who work at the test center are paid an annual salary of $4,000, which is about half of what they could earn in another job.

"We’re not going to take up another job to take care of the problem," said Chay.

"We’re just going to get through it," he added.

The test center’s director of information, Will J. McFarland, said he was surprised to receive any other information about the problem.

People called as "professional paleontologists" checked in and out of hospitals without saying, "I need help," and then left when they were finished, he said.

"Our only problem is that we’re not able to take care of the problem," he said. "We don’t have the money to do it.

"We’ve had a lot of people call us and ask if we can help them," he said. "We said, ‘Yes, we can help you, but we need money.’"

"We need money to take care of the problem," he said. "We need money to take care of the problem."
Real issues in Poland

By Krzysztof Meyer

Kobiet and obrazu w Polsce

With the crackdown on the Polish workers in full force, world leaders are searching about to enter the whole event with harsh words and payoffs.

The Polish workers hope there will be bloodshed. The issue is whether Solidarity will lose all the gains it has made, or does it intend to fight for its existence. The Polish government hopes for a negotiated end, but the workers themselves are not interested in any demands, and the Polish workers reject any.

In an effort to write off the conflict entirely from the history, the American press has been saying the country's history is not at stake. This is an incorrect assumption, and it is a correct assumption that the country's history is at stake.

The Poles are seeking an end to the conflict, but they are not seeking an end to the government. The government is seeking an end to the conflict, but it is not seeking an end to the country.

The Poles are seeking an end to the conflict, but they are not seeking an end to the government. The government is seeking an end to the conflict, but it is not seeking an end to the country.

New Maverick -- nice is not passe

By Jeffrey Shiers

Television

John Paul Stoddard, a 19-year-old naturalist from the Upper Peninsula, recently brought a little magic to the stage of the Bijou with his one-man show, "The Wizard of Oz." The show, which opened on October 3 and runs through the end of the month, features Stoddard in the role of the Wizard of Oz, bringing his unique interpretation of the character to life.

Stoddard, who has been performing in various venues around the Upper Peninsula for several years, said he was drawn to the Wizard role because of the character's transformation throughout the story. He said he wanted to create a version of the Wizard that was both magical and relatable, one that audiences could connect with on a personal level.

The show, which is presented in a cabaret-style format, features Stoddard performing a variety of songs and monologues, all set to the music of the classic film. He said he wanted to create a show that was both entertaining and thought-provoking, one that would leave audiences with something to think about after the performance.

Stoddard's performance has been praised by reviewers for its creativity and the way it brings a fresh perspective to a well-known story. He said he hopes audiences will leave the show feeling inspired and uplifted.

The show is a wonderful way to experience the Wizard of Oz in a new and exciting way, and Stoddard's performance is sure to leave a lasting impression on any audience.

People, Righteous and the Rest: A call for a new social contract.

By George H.W. Bush

Iowa City: State of the Union

The data come in the form of stringent eligibility requirements for federal welfare aid. Fewer deductions for transportation, utilities and child care expenses are allowed on a working family's income, and a new ceiling has been imposed on the dollar amount of deductions claimed. Thus, a larger portion of a person's income is considered taxable for eligibility for the programs.

"It cannot be done," said one welfare administrator, "and it is not done in other states." 1006 Melrose Avenue, University Heights

Margaret S. Brown, director of the Iowa City School-Age Community Program Office, said the problem people who come to help because their flat or electricity has been spread off is "the only way to work," and people can pay their bills and not have any money left for other expenses.

"Nothing makes the numbers show how much the children are being hurt," said one welfare administrator. "The decision removes a potential obstacle that the public defender who handled the appeal of Wofford said his state's constitution is too close-minded for the public defender who handled the appeal of Wofford's special education case, said he frequently deals with children's problems in court. He said the number of people who have problems with electronic and telephone expenses is more than that of those children.

"It cannot be done," said one welfare administrator, "and it is not done in other states."

CFA abandons TV plans

BY BUSTER COULSON, Special to The Daily Iowan

The College Football Association abandoned Tuesday夜 in Las Vegas the NCAA's mandate that it was breaking out of a $60 million agreement for airing selected college football games because not enough of its members wished to partake in the venture.

CFA Executive Director Chuck Neinas said the agreement with the NCAA had been signed by the majority of the association's members, but not enough to meet the minimum number of members required to conclude a deal.

"Although a number of CFA members received improved interest in the NCAA agreement, there was a continued concern about the possibility of the NCAA to discourage enforcement practices," Neinas said.

"The CFA has advised the NCAA that there is no present intention of a television deal to improve the agreement." The agreement with the network would have a special period each school would be able to choose whether to honor it. The decision would be postponed at least once and the final deal was outlined Dec. 26.

The association, formed in 1977, has 61 schools, including 13 that are independent and four that are members of the Ivy League. The agreement was signed with the network in September and would have run through the 1996 season.

Arson not ruled out at Hawks' hotel site

A small fire broke out at a basement hotel at the Huntington Hotel in Boston, Mass., Friday night. The fire was reported at 11:15 p.m. and was put out in about an hour.

According to the hotel manager, the fire started in the lobby. He said there were no injuries and the fire was contained to the lobby.

The cause of the fire is under investigation.
