Ray. Iowa's representative at Big Ten conference meetings, said a motion was brought before the conference earlier this year by the schools' trainers and team physicians to limit cheerleader pyramids to two tiers. The motion, which passed, was recommended to avoid complications regarding liability for injuries. Ray also said the use of mini-trampolines at all Big Ten athletic competitions would be banned.

During one building session this fall. an Iowa cheerleader did sustain injuries after a member fell on her when the pyramid collapsed.

Since this is the first full year the athletic department has been responsible for the cheerleaders. Heininger said they (the athletic administrators) were unsure how to handle the medical bills she sustained.

CONCERNING BIG TEN enforce ment. Heininger said a director or administrative representative from one of the other conference schools would have to report seeing the Iowa cheerleaders building a pyramid at a conference game and then send a report to the Big Ten office. Word would come down from the Big Ten office citing the rule violation before any action would be taken." he continued. So far no official word has been received Heininger said pyramids have always been something Iowa has done. since they have had a big cheer squad. He said the reason for the accident this fall was a result of putting a girl, not used to it, in the top position. He also thinks there are two other conference schools that are not following the rule.

City development enhanced by industrial bonds

By Martha Manikas

In an effort to revitalize downtown Iowa City, the Iowa City Council this vear authorized more than $3 million in ndustrial revenue bonds for commercial, industrial and - for the first time - residential development.

City councilors agree that issuing the bonds in 1981, the second consecutive year, was a positive move in that the bonds helped finance much of the recent development of downtown Iowa

Bonds have been used for the im-

Co. building - now a Lenoch and Cilek True Value Hardware store - and helping the Brown Bottle restaurant "fill a gap in the downtown" where the Younker's store once was, Councilor David Perret said.

Perret said he has mixed feelings about the bonds allocated in 1981. The council did "fairly well" approving the bonds but could have scrutinized the applications more carefully, he said.

PERRET SAID he believes a good use for the bonds is the rehabilitation of existing businesses and the renovation of older buildings. "The Brown Bottle project is a prime example of wanting to provide lower cost financing to renovate existing older buildings downtown," he said.

But Perret said another good use for the bonds would be to finance the development of a proposed hotel/department store for downtown because it is a high risk for the developers. The bonds would help provide a quality downtown hotel with reasonable room rates, he said.

Councilor Larry Lynch also said Monday that the issuance of bonds "was the most brilliant move we've

Iowa City has made business growth feasible despite the "dismal condition of the economy," which has prevented growth in other cities, he said.

The bonds have also greatly helped the city's tax base. Lynch said. Because the bonds are tax-free, the federal government loses revenue from tax money, but "it doesn't cost the city a thing - it's only a city gain,"

LYNCH ADDED that although none of the bond applications brought before the council have been perfect, "the Developers who wish to receive industrial revenue bonds apply to the city. The city staff then reviews applications and makes a recommendation to the city council. The council decides on bond issuance following a public hearing.

After bond issue approval, bonds are purchased by an underwriting company. The underwriter loans the business money and makes its profit from the interest charged on the loan. Loans can be made at unusually low interest rates because the underwriter is not taxed for income made on the Bonds issued for industrial development can be used for equipment and fixtures for projects within the city limits, whereas bonds for commercial and residential development can be used only in the urban revitalization

The area, originating in the federal urban renewal area downtown, was expanded Oct. 6, by a unanimous vote of the council, to include the area north to Iowa Avenue, south to Court Street and east to Gilbert Street with a portion of land extending to Van Buren Street. See Bonds, page 5

Phased retirement just for UI faculty

By Rochelle Bozman

A phased retirement incentive plan for UI tenured faculty members was approved by the state Board of Regents after a lengthy discussion over the in-clusion of the UI professional and scientific staff members in the plan.

The regents denied the program to professional and scientific staff, but approved a compromise that provides for regent consideration in June 1982 of the inclusion of the staff members.

In the originally recommended action, the review to determine whether to include professional and scientific staff would have occurred within the next two years. Regent Peg Anderson, Bettendorf, proposed the amendment to the measure to "send a meassage" to the professional and scientific staff that their exclusion is the result of fear of a bill before the Iowa legislature, not a concern about the staff.

THE BILL threatens the regents' control over personnel matters within the five regents institutions. If approved, all personnel except faculty and educational-related staff would fall under the state personnel system. rather than the regents.
Staff Council President Howard

Mayer was not happy with the com-promise proposed by the board. "Make no mistake about it," Mayer said, "If you choose to eliminate 'p' and 's' (professional and scientific staff members) they are going to get a very clear message." Mayer said the professional and scientific staff and faculty are very similar and at times difficult to tell apart.

"We haven't worried about pay increases because we're very closely aligned with the faculty. Now you are, for the first time in my recollection, driving a wedge between the faculty and the staff that doesn't need to exist," Mayer said.

THE REGENTS approved Anderson's amendment, 5-3, and unanimously approved the recommendation. "We are faced with the dilemma of expansion of the program to cover both these two groups, which appear to function well on campus, but on the other hand we have some trepidation about departing into a new program with this group (staff) that has a counterpart in the state government at a time when there are discussions and policy decisions to be made about the continuing control of personnel on campus," said regents President S.J.

Boyle still teaching after 25 years

By Karen Herzog

The Rev. John Boyle, director of the UI School of Religion, said he has seen students change in the quarter-century. he has spent teaching since he was ordained a Roman Catholic priest.

"Today you have people interested in religion, but not in religious institutions. It's more of a charismatic religion."

Students are beginning to have looser with institutions, according to Boyle.

Boyle observed the 25th anniversary of his ordination Wednesday, but his priesthood has not been marked by raditional service.

"My activities as a priest are very

Boyle said. "I'm not instructing people who want to be Catholics, but students in a secular school where the work is strictly academic."

He fondly remembers the day of his ordination in Rome at the North American College chapel.

"My mother and father came for the ordination, and I was excited because I hadn't seen them for three years," he

BOYLE, 50, has spent nearly half his life as a teacher, beginning at a time when few priests worked outside their dioceses. He served as a faculty member at St. Ambrose College and at Assumption High School in Davenport, after his ordination from North American College. He later returned to the UI, where he had some undergraduate studies, as a faculty member after receiving a doctorate from Fordham University in 1972.

"Counter cultures were very strong when I returned in the early '70s," he said. "There was a great deal of activism of students concerned about racism and Vietnam." Demonstrations and drugs were a major part of the college scene.

Boyle said the atmosphere at the UI began to change following the end of the Vietnam War.

"There was a turning of the corner toward more private concerns," he said. People were more interested in getting an education and finding a job than in solving world problems.'

He depicts learning as a means to grow and a way of life. "One learns not only in a strictly academic sense. You have learning experiences just by being a part of a community and by atnding a university," he said.

Boyle sees the search for an objective way to speak about religion as a challenge. But "it's not that big of a problem," he said. "College students are less likely to be led by the nose."

Students aren't the only ones that gain education in Boyle's classes. "I continue to learn myself," he said. "I learn from the people I work with, and I learn from my research and

Evans appeals commission ruling that upheld his August demotion

Former Iowa City Police Sgt. Ronald Evans has appealed a Nov. 23 civil service commission decision that upheld, in part, his Aug. 20 demotion to patrolman.

The appeal, filed Wednesday in Johnson County District Court, could reverse Evans' demotion.

C. Peter Hayek, Evans' attorney, said Wednesday night, "all we're asking is that the district court review" the commission's findings

Evans' demotion stemmed from incidents that occurred at the Iowa City Police Department after 10:30 p.m. July 31. In an Aug. 20 memo, Police Chief Harvey Miller claimed Evans:

Ul Senate won't sign statement; court continues with proceedings

By Jackie Baylor

Representatives of the UI Student Senate have refused to agree to abide by the decision of the UI Student Judicial Court in a complaint against the senate, but the court plans to continue the case.

The case stems from a complaint filed with the court Oct. 21 claiming that a senate decision to deny funding to the UI Students' Right to Life Committee last srping was unconstitutional.

Senate President Tim Dickson said at a Dec. 10 senate meeting that he refused to sign the statement because it could bring about a "constitutional crisis. We can't sign it and we don't have to sign it. We are not trying to sidetrack the case.

Both sides were required to sign the agreement by last Wednesday. But Dickson said if the senate signed the statement, it would be defying its own constitution — the Constitution of the UI Student Association, which is also the court's constitution Chief Justice Jim Greer said Wednesday, signature on the statement) because our jurisdiction stands.

ACCORDING TO the statement, "the Student Judicial Court requests an agreement by both parties concerned to a submission of this case to the Student Judicial Court and to abide by its decision therein."

Greer said, according to the constitution. the court still has jurisdiction to interpret the constitutions or operations of all other student government commissions, committees or recognized student groups.

College may set T.A. requirements to improve instruction for courses

Special to The Daily Iowan

A business college subcommittee is reviewing a proposal that would create general educational requirements for teaching assistants. The proposed program's major objectives are to increase the language competence and broaden the course work background of non-native and English-speaking teaching assistants.

"Technically they are good students, but that doesn't mean they can (always) communicate effectively," Zuber said of non-native English speaking T.A.s in the business college.

have completed one year of studies at the UI, to have served in a business college department as a research assistant and to audit any courses they would subsequently

Dickson, McDonald do homework in preparation for council tasks

By Cherann Davidson

Both Kate Dickson and John McDonald, councilors-elect of the Iowa City Council, are doing their homework in preparation for assuming the task of setting policy for

And both said their major task will be taking a hard look at the vast and complex city budget.
Dickson and McDonald will both be serving their first terms on the council. Dickson, 60, 1215 Ashley Drive, is secretary to the director of the UI School of Religion. She served during the 1980-81 school year as a member of the Board of Trustees of Student Publications, Inc., the body that governs the financial affairs of The Daily

McDonald, 37, 116 S. Dodge St., is a practicing optician at McDonald Optical Dispensary. He serves on the Iowa City Planning and Zoning Commission, the Board of Directors of Johnson County United Way and is one of 10 directors of the Iowa Opticians Association.

THE PAIR HAS been meeting with sions since the election. McDonald said the meetings have been "more or less just to get an overview" of the function of the departments. Dickson said the tours and meetings have been "extremely important" because they have provided the necessary background knowledge about the way the departments work with the council. McDonald said the biggest concern facing the council is the budget. "I really want to get into a lot more specifics" with each department on what and where money could be spent. He also said he will examine all the funding sources to determine where city monies originate.

Dickson said the city budget will be of primary concern, adding that she had no specific programs or projects in mind at this time. "I want to take things as they come," she said.

BOTH have attended the informal and formal council sessions in preparation for taking their seats. Dickson said the other councilors have taken time to explain background details on certain issues, and added that she has had "every opportunity"

She also said that she is preparing herself for the city council by "reading everything (in the council packet) that is delivered on Friday evening. Dickson and McDonald both said they have yet to devise a filing system for the large amount of paperwork that councilors receive.

Both said they are looking forward to the hard work of a city councilor. "I think it should be an exciting challenge," McDonald said, adding "I'm looking forward to the first of the year."

Northwestern Bell rates up in lowa as of Jan. 1

DES MOINES (UPI) - Iowa residents will pay up to 80 cents more a month for service beginning Jan. 1, Northwestern Bell Telephone Co. officials said Wednesday.

But Ed Mattix, a Northwestern Bell spokesman, said the increase is 15 cents less than what would have been charged if the state Commerce Commission had not approved an increase in pay-phone calls to 20 cents next year.

Mattix said the 15-cent reduction would keep Bell's revenue at the same level.

Early retirement

The State Board of Regents decides this week on an experimental phased retirement plan for UI employees. The plan would be put into effect July 1, 1982, and would involve UI personnel with more than 20 years experience. At the age of 60, they would be able to negotiate to work no more than 80 percent of full-time in the first year, scaling down to half-time within five years. Although they would only be paid for the time worked, they would receive as a bonus 10 percent of their full-time salary, with fringe benefits based on full salary.

The regents and the UI have worked out many of their disagreements. They still must decide whether the plan will include all professional and scientific personnel, as the UI wishes, or be limited to tenured faculty, as the regents prefer.

The phased retirement plan could be beneficial in several respects. It would prevent departments from becoming top-heavy with older faculty. It would enable experienced employees to wind down gradually to retirement. And it might also encourage senior academics with much to contribute to stay on part-time instead of leaving academic life.

Equally important, it would help open up opportunities for young scholars. Budget cuts are forcing many universities to cut not only faculty positions, usually at the junior level, but whole departments. Cornell College in Mount Vernon, Ia., plans to lose 12 faculty positions in the next five years. The University of Michigan is cutting entire academic departments. The number of qualified scholars far exceeds the supply of teaching jobs, and the gap is Such plans could offer real benefits: a role for older, experienced faculty and jobs for new scholars. And the opportunities offered by the proposal should be extended to all UI personnel and not be restricted to already privileged tenured faculty.

Rising action: Bob Cratchit and others living below the poverty level ask about the basic relief Santa usually provides. At the official deadline for donating to the Federal Campaign, these aides are among the least generous of all participants. ## School lunches Administration budget cutters are again taking aim at school lunch programs in their effort to control skyrocketing federal deficits. The Office of Management and Budget wants a regulation to prohibit the Agriculture Department from giving surplus dairy products to school lunch programs.

The USDA purchases the products from farmers under its price support system. This helps keep prices at levels farmers consider acceptable, but creates a mammoth storage problem for the USDA. Every year, the government stockpiles millions of pounds of cheese, butter and other dairy products that spoil if not sold or Since 1978, a "bonus program" has allowed the USDA to give away some of the surplus to the Food and Nutrition Service, which in turn distributes it to the schools. This is a mutually beneficial arrangement: the government doesn't have to watch 100 million pounds of cheese rot each year, and 26 million schoolchildren enjoy nutritious school lunches at affordable prices.

If budget planners stop the USDA from giving away its surplus, the government will have to peddle what food it can and throw away the rest. Worse, school lunch prices will go up while nutritional value goes down. And once again in this budget war, low-income families will be hit the hardest.

This isn't the first time the Reagan administration has tried to cut spending by skimping on school lunches. Its first proposal, to save money by cutting portions, was abandoned after a storm of ridicule and public outcry.

The current proposal appears to involve only a technical budgetary manipulation, but its effects will be no less nefarious. Surely there are better places to cut down on spending than by taking food from schoolchildren's lunches.

Killing time: poorly trained practitioners need more support

In the last few years I have noticed a lot of people killing time. It comes with being around a giant bureaucracy like a university; one gets used to standing in line for things and sitting in uncomfortable chairs, waiting to talk to peo-

In most places where time-killing is necessary, the management helps things along by providing time-killing devices. For example, magazines in doctors' offices or so-called humorous napkins in airport cocktail lounges.

But the UI has not provided timekilling devices for its clientele even though it has devised many particularly tedious activities. Wouldn't it have been nice if the UI had provided troupes of jugglers to entertain those waiting to buy books, or Lincoln Logs for those waiting to register.

Killing time has become a nearly universal experience. No one kills time as much or as poorly as Americans. The French, for example, kill time tasting sweet young wines and leering at the opposite sex; the English play darts. Americans watch TV or throw pretzels milk and cookies. Third graders could learn about gazing out windows with absolutely nothing on their minds. In high school the students could specialize, choosing where they would prefer to kill time.

College students could major in Bus Depots - the time killing equivalent of an agriculture major - or Dental Clinics. Ivy League schools could teach about killing time between chukkers and USC would no doubt lead the NCAA in killing time while your friend retrieves the Frisbee from the roof of the lifeguards' hut.

Graduate degrees could be offered in intensive time-killing: killing two hours in only fifteen minutes, for example. Gerald Ford could be awarded an Honorary MTS (Master of Taking Up Space) by Michigan State University. The University of Kansas could at last excel at something.

We would like to express our serious disappointment at the manner in which certain members of the UI Student Senate have reacted to criticism by The Daily Iowan. The DI published an editorial (Dec. 9), questioning the senate's plan to give free Rose Bowl trips to persons in the senate or other positions on campus. The editorial questioned the policy in general, as well as the qualifications of these persons to act as guides. We think that the DI was correctly serving the purpose of a free press, to question authority. As a campus newspaper, the DI is supposed to keep a watchful eye on the administrative bodies of the UI, as well as the student government. The senate is elected by the students and is supposed to represent their interests. When it takes action that may be contrary to the students' desires, it is the DI's duty to bring such actions to the attention of those who elect the

The senate as a political body should aspire to behavior that sets examples for all of us. Their reaction to the editorial (DI, Dec. 11), was instead an embarrassment. Instead of explaining the purpose of their policy and why they felt it justified, they chose to make derogatory remarks about the DI. This was an immature reaction to justified criticism and questioning.

Politicians cannot sling mud at the press every time they do not like something they see in print. By taking an elected office, they voluntarily place themselves before the scrutiny of the press. If they are unwilling to accept criticism, they are not the type of persons who should seek office. The senate has accomplished many

Now that the semester has wound down and there is an entire month in which there are no books you have to read, there may be some you'd like to.

Fiction readers should know about Salman Rushdie's Midnight's Children (Knopf, 446 pages). It is a contemporary fable set in India, chronicling the formation of both modern India and Pakistan from the years prior to independence (midnight, 1947) through the Indian invasion of Bangladesh and up to the government of Indira Ghandi. The writing is enchanting.

Rushdie's novel has been compared to Gunter Grass's Tin Drum and Gabriel Garcia Marquez's 100 Years of Solitude. Midnight's Children begins with the narrator's 'grandmother, a rich merchant's daughter, enticing the narrator's grandfather, a young, German-trained doctor, from behind the sheet that must be hung between them when he examines her - medically, that is - in the early years of this century. Rushdie makes his way around English emulating Moslem merchants and the Indian film

ANOTHER NOVELIST who has made a reputation writing on Third World themes, V.S. Naipaul, has a nonfiction book, Among the Believers (Knopf, 430 pages), covering his travels through certain Moslem lands during 1979-80. Naipaul begins in Iran and ends in Indonesia, stopping off in Pakistan and Malaysia. His view of these countries — and the entire notion of Islamic nations - are likely to confirm your prejudices, whether they be of Naipaul or of Moslem nations. Naipaul's opinions have drawn liberal howls and conservative praise. Among the Believers generated enough controversy to put Naipaul on the cover of

Closer to home, Puerto Rican writer Rafael Sanchez gives the rhythm of his native anything-but-island-paradise in Macho Comacho's Beat (Pantheon, 210 pages). Macho Comacho's guaracha "Life is a Phenomenal Thing" plays on radio stations, record players, tapes and other audible devices all over the island. Men, women, and children writhe, dance, and bathe to it.

The novel is a phenomenal thing which reads like Three Trapped Tigers put into a Puerto Rican vernacular. Translator Gregory Rabassa displays contortionist's skills in transposing this verbally gymnastic work into a colloquial English that conveys the rhythms (the puns, the intricate word play) of the original Spanish.

MORE SOMBER notes from Latin America are sounded in El Salvador: Central America in the New Cold War (Grove Press, 389 pages). This collection of essays ranges from foreign policy statements by Ronald Reagan and Alexander Haig to advice and meditations about Central America from Fidel Castro and Mexican novelist Carlos Fuentes. The book not only takes in the morass of El Salvador, but touches the various dominoes theoretically lined up by the United States, including Honduras, Guatemala and Nicaragua.

The serious business of professional basketball, particularly as the Portland Trail Blazers played it during 1979-80, is the subject of David Halberstam's The Breaks of the Game (Knopf, 362 pages). These were Portland's post-Bill Walton (The Great White Hope of pro basketball) days, when the legend had passed and so had he - on to San Diego. Halberstam does a nice job analyzing coach Jack Ramsay's difficulties as well as the problems (on the court and at the contract table) of several players, including Maurice Lucas and Lionel Hollins.

Christmas discs to tap your toe to NEARLY AS COOL is Soul Merry Christmas Baby (a collection of By Jim Musser Christmas. Originally issued in 1968 on early R&B Christmas tunes) and Records Charles Brown's Please Come Home

Here are some more snappy

Christmas records for your holiday en-For the jazz fans among you there are two gems available on Columbia

Jingle Bell Jazz is a beautiful collection of straight-ahead readings of the classics from 1962. It is uniformly excellent, including fine performances by Carmen McRae, Paul Horn, Chico Hamilton, Duke Ellington, Lionel Hampton, Miles Davis and a delightful scat and chorale treatment of "Deck Us All With Boston Charlie" (lyrics from the old "Pogo" comic strip) by Lambert, Hendricks and Ross.

New from Columbia is God Rest Ye Merry Jazzmen. Highly recommended, this one is highlighted by the Arthur Blythe Quartet's "The Christmas Song," the Dexter Gordon Quartet's "Have Yourself A Merry Little Christmas." the Heath Brothers' "Our Little Town," and Paquito D'Rivera's duet with bassist John Miller on "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen." McCoy Tyner's "I'll Be Home For Christmas" is beautiful, but if you can find the melody inside Tyner's patented meanderings, make a beeline for "Name

NOT RECOMMENDED to anyone but her staunchest fans/collectors is Ella Fitzgerald's Christmas. Ella's clear, dulcet tones are intact, but the claustrophobic arrangements and obnoxious intrusions by Ralph Carmichael's Chorus and Orchestra ruin the bulk of the disc. It's a shame this turkey was reissued.

For the rockers among ye, there is the re-issue of 1963's classic Phil Spector's Christmas Album. Far and away the best, most durable and satisfying rock Christmas LP ever made, this record features classic Spector production and arrangements. All the tunes are well-treated, with Darlene Love's

"White Christmas," "(It's A) Marshmallow World" and "Christmas (Baby Please Come Home)" leading the pack. The Ronettes, Bob B. Soxx & the Blue Jeans and the Crystals all contribute to the fun. If you're only getting one Christmas record, let this be it.

Atco, this LP showcases some of the finest R&B artists performing stan- For Christmas, both of which are exdards and original material (the best of the latter being Carla Thomas' "Gee Whiz, It's Christmas" and Joe Tex' righteous "I'll Make Every Day Christmas (For My Woman)"). Nice stuff by Otis Redding, Booker T. & the MG's and Solomon Burke, too.

The Beach Boys' Christmas Album was recorded in the early 1960s, and thereby showcases both their freshness on vocal harmonies and occasional bad judgment on song selection. This one is more uneven than the above-mentioned records, yet still lots of fun. Particularly neat are "Little Saint Nick" and "The Man With All The Toys."

Stevie Wonder's Someday At Christmas is a bright, if inconsistent effort. Stevie's big heart and naivete win out, though, as he presents some of the prettiest odes to peace, love and understanding in recent years. Standouts are the title track, "Twinkle Twinkle Little Me" and an inspiring performance of "Ave Maria."

VINTAGE R&B FANS will want to pick up re-issues on Gusto Records of Christmas.

There are some fine country & western Christmas LPs available with Emmylou Harris' Light Of The Stable and Willie Nelson's Pretty Paper the early favorites in addition to records

by Tammy Wynette, Loretta Lynn and the rock-and-country classic Merry Christmas From Brenda Lee. Folk music is well-represented on John Fahey's The New Possibility. Fahey performs traditional carols on unaccompanied acoustic guitar, with a couple of original "fantasy" arrangements to boot. Very pretty. Squeaky-toy lovers can still get various collections by jazz greats the Chipmunks, but John Denver & the Muppets' A Christmas Together is making rapid gains in the cutesy-poo Bing, the King and Nat King Cole you know about, and Slim Whitman you probably wish you didn't.

NEW YORK (UPI) - Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis testified Wednesday that freelance celebrity photographer Ron Galella's "relentless stalking" not only ruined her past summer on Cape Cod but caused her concern for her own safety.

"I was extremely agitated, upset, despairing," she said about Galella's effort to photograph her last July outside a Manhattan theater. "I thought Galella was going to start his pursuit of me and the children all over again.

Nervous, at times almost in tears, Onassis spoke of her days at the Kennedy compound in Hyannisport and how, "The best time of the year for me became intolerable, almost unlivable, with his constant sur-

Galella's activities since the order was issued, Onassis suggested it was an incident involving her daughter, Caroline, 24, on Labor Day that propelled

Caroline testified Tuesday she was bicycling on Martha's Vineyard when Galella passed her in a car, took pictures of her at close range, and "threatened" to force her off the road onto a sandy siding. "I told Caroline we will have to do something about this," Onassis testified she told her daughter that night after hearing about the incident. "I said we'll have to go to court.' Galella's efforts to photograph the family, she said, "ruined my son's (John Jr.) graduation from Andover and my daughter's graduation from Har-

Is there a good home available for a yurt?

School for Girls offered Wednesday to give away what they believe is the perfect obscure Christmas gift for everyone but Mongolian shepherds.

It is a wooden yurt and is free to anyone willing to haul it away. For those unfamiliar, a yurt is a portable shelter used by central Asian nomads while tending their flocks. Carol Maus, development officer at the private academy, said the St. Paul's version of the yurt was built eight years ago by students as a social studies project.

"We're looking for a good home for it," she said. "We're reluctant to part

The St. Paul's yurt is 13 feet in diameter, has a solid, fan-shaped roof and is wired for electricity. It was used as a classroom for several years and easily seats eight people.

"I won't exactly say it's an eyesore," said Maus. "Let's just say it's outlived its usefulness. It's been subject to a little vandalism lately and was used for some uninvited beer parties.'

Iowa's Kim Howard grew up playing the six-girl, half-court style of basketball most popular in the Hawkeye State. But with the help of her brothers, she has made the transition to the more conventional five-player, full court game on the collegiate level.

Howard, an Estherville, Iowa, native, started playing basketball competitively in the eighth grade. But she gained valuable hours of experience competing against her younger brothers, whom she shared many hours with at a hoop outside her home.

"It (transition) wasn't as difficult as a lot of people make it," Howard said. "It has worked out real good for me because I've been able to start every season since I've been here.

HOWARD, HOWEVER, admits that heavily recruited by South Dakota she took a beating once she started playing full court every day. "I spent a lot of time in the training room," she said. "I didn't work out with weights in high school, and I really didn't run much, so my body wasn't ready. I had some knee and back problems, but they've gone away by now.'

Howard became a starter on Esterville's high school varsity team in her ninth grade year. She always knew she wanted to continue her playing career after high school. "I wanted to play basketball at a big institution such as Iowa," Howard said. "I didn't want to play at a Division II or III school because they didn't offer me what I wanted out of an education."

Howard, a 5-foot-11 senior, was

AS ONE OF TWO seniors and a key returning member of this year's Hawkeye squad, Howard has a double role on the team, playing both center and forward. She said her experience from playing both spots benefits her, as well as the team.

"It helps because I'm more aware of things than a freshman or someone new to the team would be. If they (her teammates) are having trouwhat defense or offense we're in and try to help them out. I don't always have to focus only on how I'm playing all the time.'

Iowa Head Coach Judy McMullen believes Howard is playing the best basketball of her career. "Her performance has improved by leaps and bounds since I first saw her three years ago," McMullen said. "Right now she's playing the best I've seen all year. We're doing a good job getting the ball inside to her and she's a driving force in the leadership of this team.'

HOWARD, ONE OF three captains this year, is currently averaging 13 points and six rebounds per game through eight contests for the Hawkeyes, 2-6 overall. She also holds

> While the Iowa women haven't enjoyed much success at winning basketball games this year, Howard believes by giving a 100 percent effort every time, the wins will come naturally. # Allen named UPI's Player of the Year

Allen, the latest in the long and prestigious line of dazzling Southern Cal tailbacks, is the 1981 United Press International Player of the Year and Running Back of the Year, it was announced Wednesday.

worth completing anyway.

"I would like to thank all my coaches for sticking with me. I knew I had it in me and you guys brought it out in me.'

Allen began his USC career as a blocking back for White in 1977, a thankless job that he held through the 1978 season. He became the tailback in 1979 and his enormous talent emerged as he rushed for 1,563 yards.

But no one - Allen included - was prepared for the success he achieved this year.

In the 11 regular-season games, Allen ran for 22 touchdowns and passed

His coach for four years at Southern Cal, John Robinson, says Allen is the best running back he's ever seen.

"He did things that might never be equalled," Robinson said. "Week after week he was just amazing. I kept thinking he'd have to slow down sometime during the season, but if anything, he got stronger.

Punting a real kick for Hawks' Roby

By George Kunke pecial to the Daily Iowan

Iowa's All-American punter, Reggie Roby, is statistically the best punter in the nation with a NCAA recordbreaking 49.8 yard average this season. Yet Roby sees a need for improve-

'At first I was really upset to not get the 50 yard average," Roby said. "It was one of my goals at the beginning of the season. But now I really have something to strive for next season. Next year I'm aiming for a 55 yard average. And I think I can get it.

'My main problem this season was improve my average.

ROBY, A JUNIOR who prepped at East Waterloo High School, had a 39.4 yard average in high school. "When I came to Iowa I had no technique whatsoever," he said. "At first, I thought my 40 yard average was good enough. But Coach (Hayden) Fry said I must get better.

but that hasn't affected Roby. "When I feel very relaxed. I just blast away.

hitting the ball squarely on your foot." Roby said it's important to hold the ball up as high as you can when you punt because the higher it's held, the higher the punt will go. He said: "I try to give the ball a spiralling effect because on it's downward flight it is gaining speed and makes it more difficult for the returner to catch."

ROBY CREDITS good coaching and dedication for his success, plus watching his weight. "Last year I really felt bad about my punting." he said. "I decided to get in better shape to help my punting. Last year I weighed 260 pounds. The guys were poking fun at me and I couldn't even kick my leg past my waist. So I started swimming, jogging, sit-ups, push-ups, and lifting weights. I lost 40 pounds. Now I can kick my leg over the top of a

Another reason Roby has improved since last season is that during the summer he punted in the mornings and kicked field goals in the afternoons. Among Roby's other goals are to become a good short punter. "I feel I can make the short punt or angle punt better than I do the long one." he said. "If the pro scouts think I can't make the angle kick, it may hurt my chances in getting drafted."

Roby should have no problem getting the first-round of the draft. Roby's longest kick in a game is 68 yards, but

Hawks posted 5-6 and 4-7 records.

The reason is Roby narrowly missed an unprecedented 50 yard average.
