Board moves offices amid controversy

By Elizabeth Flansburg

Amid accusations of "unvalidated" cost estimates, the Iowa City School Board voted 4-3 Tuesday night to move the district's cental office into Sabin

Board member Lynne Cannon said the school district's administration "subtly skewed" the cost estimates of renovating Central Junior High because administrators did not want to move the offices into the aging

But Superintendent David Cronin said the accusation was an unfair statement and said the administration made a "supreme effort" to estimate the renovation costs of each school and they "did not just pick the figures out of the air."

Board member Tom Cilek made the motion to move the office into Sabin, 509 S. Dubuque St., which he said is in better shape, has lower utility costs and because it is a smaller building may be more suitable for the school district's cental offices.

Cannon, who made the proposal to consider moving the office into Central, located at the corner of Van Buren and Market streets, said the school is a historical site and should be preserved. there are more kids on the way.'

The board recently voted to close the

THE ADMINISTRATION'S estimated cost for renovating Sabin would be a total of about $155,925 - including $60,000 for an elevator to be used by the handicapped and elderly. The estimated cost to renovate Central for the 1982-83 school year would be approximately $35,900. But by the year 1986, the district estimates total repair costs would add up to about

The district's current office, in space leased at 1040 William St., would cost the district about $50,000 for the 1982-83 school year. The lease for the office expires in October and the board decided to relocate the office rather than renew Cilek said the district has already responded to declining enrollment and the district should not sell any more of its school buildings at this time.

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors had offered to buy Sabin School for $487,500; an offer rejected by the school board.

Cilek said Tuesday that it is not "prudent or wise" to take another step to respond to the district's declining enrollment because he said, "I think

Neighbors ask moratorium on new buildings

By Cherann Davidson

Residents of College Hill Park neighborhood presented petitions urging the Iowa City Council to down-zone their neighborhood to avoid demolition of older homes for apartment complexes at Tuesday's formal council meeting.

The petition, submitted by the College Hill Park Neighbors, calls for a six-month moratorium on new construction in the area bordered by Jefferson Street on the north, Summit Street on the east, Burlington to the south, and Johnson Street to the west.

The council decided to discuss setting a public hearing on a moratorium on constrution in the area and/or setting a public hearing on rezoning the neighborhood at its May 3 informal council meeting.

The council was unable to take formal action on the issues because the city code requires publication of a public hearing before it can take place.

The 60-day moratorium on construction would take effect when the council sets a public hearing on the down-zoning request, according to the city code.

The Planning and Zoning Commission must review the rezoning proposal before a hearing can be set, but the council can set a moratorium before the planning commission makes a decision on the rezoning issue. Mayor Mary Neuhauser said the council will refer the rezoning question to the Planning and Zoning Commission and make a decision based on the commission's recommendation.

GEORGE WOODWORTH, of 226 S. Johnson St., told the council at Monday's informal session that the moratorium is necessary because developers are putting pressure on residents to sell their

The Iowa City Police Department is looking into a possible hit-and-run accident that occurred early Tuesday morning on Kirkwood Avenue, near Keokuk

According to police records, a nine-year-old boy told the principal of the Horace Mann Elementary School that he was "hit by a maroon car this morning on his way to school.

Principal Paul Davis said he called police and reported what had happened. He said the boy appeared to be unharmed, could offer no other description of the occupants of the car except that it was driven by "two old ladies."

The police department is still investigating a hit-and-run accident that occurred almost two weeks ago, in which a Coralville woman died.

Vicki L. Johnson 30, 107 Second Ave. was struck by a passing motorist on April 16, while she peddled her bicycle along the 300 block of Highway 6. Several eyewitnesses told police that a dark maroon Ford struck Johnson, while others say it was a light colored Mercury

Coralville Police Chief Donald Ewalt said Tuesday police are still investigating the incident and no arrests have been made.

Tax break costly

AMES, Iowa (UPI) - Officials at the Iowa Department of Transportation estimated Tuesday the state's tax breaks for gasohol will cost the road fund a total of almost $75 million.

Gasohol, a 9-to-1 blend of unleaded gasoline and alcohol, has received a tax break since 1978. Legislators this spring agreed to phase-in the full fuel tax by July 1986.

DOT officials said the four-year phase-out of the 7-cent a gallon tax break will cost $46 million. In the first three years, the tax break cost $28 million.

The "conventional technique is tacro-acopic," he said Tuesday. "If grass-and-root level you have to look at individual dust particles."

BEDDOW and his associates recently devised a mathematical system to characterize the shapes and sizes of individual grain particles. His research proposal submitted to the National Institute of Health was approved but not

"We're trying to get someone to give us the money so we can hire people to continue the study," he said. Beddow said the grain industry will not support his research because it is apathetic. People are content to let the buildings

May ranks second only to August as the month when most grain dust explosions occur, according to a 1979 U.S. Department of Agriculture report.

CURRENTLY, the explosions are unpredictable. "Grain dust is the fuel that feeds an explosion," Beddow said. The abrasion from grain particles rubbing in bins or wagons forms a dust which is easily ignited.

According to USDA statistics, Iowa ranks second, after Nebraska, in the number of grain dust explosions in grain elevators each year.

The number of grain explosions have decreased during the past few years. But many grain elevators are not kept as dust-free as they should be, Beddow said. The dust not only causes explosions, but also poses a health problem for elevator workers.

Dust particles are unavoidable. "Keeping everything neat and clean is very nice, but out in a plant it isn't very easy," he said.

Of 66 explosions that occurred between December 1969 and October 1978, 40.9 percent were ignited by the dust particles of corn. In the USDA survey, only 83.3 percent of the elevators were operating at the time of the explosion,

Shouting in unison, "Power to the workers, death to the Klan," anti-Klan groups knock over water-filled barriers and attack Klan and Nazi supporters. After less than two minutes of fist-fighting, three of the protesters were arrested. Only minor injuries to the Klan and Nazi supporters were reported.

Klan, Nazi rally brings violence

Squeezed between two opposing bluffs that rise up on the Missouri side of the Mississippi River sits the small river town of Hannibal.

Normally, the only type of tourist that this aging town of 18,130 attracts is the vacationer who pays homage to Mark Twain by touring the boyhood home of the humorist and social critic. Tourism is this town's largest industry, and the house — home of the legendary Huck Finn — is now a museum of Twain memorabilia

But last Saturday was different, even though a few tourists took advantage of the warm, sunny weekend to visit the cave just south of town where Huck Finn and Tom Sawyer found $6,000 in gold. Or they strolled along the mile-wide Mississippi River where Huck and his friend Jim, the black slave, began their raft trip to freedom.

On April 25 Hannibal braced itself for different kinds of out-of-towners: members of the Ku Klux Klan and the American Nazi party. Following close behind were the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and numerous "antifascist" groups, primarily the Progressive Labor Party and the International Committee Against Racism.

NO ONE EXPECTED violence to break out. But just in case, Hannibal had prepared for the worst ever since Don McLod, a Hannibal resident, applied in December for a permit to make the town's baseball field the rally point for the Klan in their white or red robes and Nazis in their brown shirts.

Like the initial stages that a person goes through upon the death of a close friend or relative, the residents mourned the fate that faced their peaceful town. Denial was their first response. Anger followed soon after. Hannibal's mayor, James Lyng, voiced the bewilderment that many residents felt:

"Essentially, I think that the upset that we felt was simply the fact that our community was chosen for this type of activity that I don't think we solicit or Blackwell, whose wife is white, said, "Two months ago we had a big article in the paper about it. So I went to the mayor and couldn't talk to him 'cause his secretary said he was gone.

"SO I SAID TO HER I didn't think it was right. I said if they come in here it's goin' to be a blood-bath."

Friday, only cursory coverage was given in the local paper to Saturday's Klan rally. Traffic downtown was light. Brief interviews with Hannibal residents by a St. Louis television station found each residents by a St. Louis television station found each resident planning to either ignore or avoid the turmoil. At the Hannibal police station, Police Chief J. Franklin Neff was a bit nonplused. Neff blushed and shuffled his feet a bit when he, after refusing to reveal any secrets about security preparations, was told the town's AM radio station announced 80 officers would be on duty and that the local 140-man National Guard outfit had shifted their monthly drill in Hannibal to this weekend. Neff was at a loss for words.

Friday night the NAACP held a large brotherhood rally at a Baptist church. The Rev. Charles Smith, national deputy executive director of the NAACP, flew in from New York to tell the crowd of 180 that a "new generation" of racists has emerged in the United States and must be met by a "new generation of blacks" who cannot be intimidated.

"WE'RE GOING TO meet them toe-to-toe, watch them, smile at them and pray for them," Smith preached."We're going to stand toe-to-toe, look them smack in the face and say, 'So what.'"

The Rev. Raymond Mallory, director of the Hannibal NAACP chapter, said after the rally, "Even 15 or 20 years ago those people who'd come to town—they would have set Hannibal into terror because a lot of people were afraid of them at that time. No one's scared of the Klansmen anymore. We've advanced too far now to let anyone stop us. And everyone knows it, too."

By noon Saturday Hannibal's transformation was complete. Patrol cars plied the streets downtown: All the media had arrived as well as the various anti-Klan protest groups who picketed and handed out fliers. Local patrons eating lunch in the Becky Thatcher Restaurant, unable to ignore the spectacle, commented that both the Klan and the anti-Klan groups coming up from St. Louis for the day were all crazy as hell.

Missouri state troopers and the Hannibal police in riot gear settled into Clemens Field, where the Klan and Nazis would rally at 1 p.m. A police sniper team paced the roof of the adjoining recreation building.

AS WORD GOT AROUND to the media newcomers that the field, enclosed by 8-foot-high limestone walls, was built to hold World War II German prisoners of war, an unexpected twist of irony was added to the appearance of the Nazis who soon called Jews the enemies of God.

According to plan, the 30 Klan members and Nazis arrived at Clemens Field with police escort, put on their costumes and stood behind a line of oil drums filled with water that served as a barrier between them and the onlookers on the field.

Arthur Robb, a Baptist preacher and Klan member, with megaphone in hand called on whites to recognize their superiority over blacks and Jews. "When Americans realize that the Klan is an answer to the problems of America as it was before, so shall it be again," Robb said.

Only 16 minutes after it began, the rally ended when some of those protesting the rally knocked over the barrels and started a fist fight with Klan members and Nazis.

Police moved in, arresting three of the anti-Klan 'members who were released an hour later and not charged.

When asked later at the press conference about what Mark Twain would say about the incident.

When asked later at the press conference about what Mark Twain would say about the incident, Police Chief Neff replied, "If we knew what Mark Twain would say, we'd make as much money probably as he made,"

Local and national statistics. powever, indicate the nation's elderly tave a lot to learn about taking icines and seeking medical help. The National Institute on Drug Abuse reports that the 10 percent of the pop dation that is over 65 now consumes shout 25 percent of the medications aken in the United States. Director William Pollin says that while drugs hemselves are neither good nor bad, it s "their use by people that makes the afference" and the elderly need to secome better educated about "proper se" of drugs.

Kathy Kelly, director of the Community and Home Health Services Agency, said unfortunately, most smior citizens correlate health care eith sickness. "Health is also staying well," she said. "We try to do as much preventative education as we can."

AGING WELL means taking prevenative measures, having regular checkos, taking medicines wisely and not ig afraid to seek help, she said. Many diseases that were once cripplof or fatal, such as arthritis, diabetes and high blood pressure, have been brought under control. As a result, 1980 Census Bureau figures show that well over 5 million Americans are 80 years or older, and they are healthier and far more independent than the elderly of past generations.

But with these benefits come risks. Dr. Alex Comfort, a UCLA medical professor who spoke at the UI conference on the elderly last year, pointed the finger at physicians for overdoing "small, quite reasonable prescriptions" that become dangerous when taken at the same time.

Comfort said senility is medically defined to include characterists such as weakness, loss of activity, confusion, lack of life's enjoyment, and

"I've had many patients carry in bags with more than 40 bottles," he Beth Sparrow, a CAHHSA nurse, said she has also encountered several cases of over-medication and other misuses of drugs by the elderly.

Sparrow regularly represents

CAHHSA at the Iowa City Senior Citizens Center to offer medical counseling, screening and referral for Johnson County's elderly.

Much of this over-medication stems from the elderly taking four or five drugs to control a chronic illness, Sparrow said.

There is a lot to remember in order to keep things straight," she said. "If they (elderly) can't remember if they took a pill, many times they just take it

Other suggestions include making a "Medicines I Take" check-off chart or a color-coded bottle system.

Too many elderly citizens, either for personal or financial reasons, wait until they have multiple problems before seeking any professional attention, she

Kay Hull, relief director for the Johnson County Department of Social Services, said the elderly must overcome their pride before they will actively seek medical help or other social

"Today's older people were brought up believing you take care of yourself and your family without interference from outsiders," she said.

But Sparrow said 14 senior citizens recently came in over a two-hour period as compared to days when eight people would show up. "We have a different product and it may not be categorized as charity quite as quickly as others," she said.

THE IOWA CITY Free Medical Cinic, located in the lower level of the Wesley House on Dubuque Street, however, reported that during 1981 only 2 percent of its 3,272 patients were over 60 years old. Ten percent of Johnson County's residents are over 60, which is low for Iowa because of the univeristy.

Senior Center Program Specialist Lori Benz said the clinic is only open a couple of evenings and most elderly don't like to go out at night because of sight and transportation problems, which would contribute to this low per-

Clinic staffer Peggy Vouski said senior citizens with chronic problems might be discouraged from using the clinic because the hours would not facilitate the needed continual care.

'The economy is making the elderly put off taking care of health problems," Vouski said. "Most of our elderly patients have multiple problems by the time they get here."

'The elderly worry about losing their independence." Kelly said. "By using our services they won't become dependent on us, but actually will maximize their independence.

"We're not here to do for you, but to see what we can do together. The end product is better that way," she said.

Muffin also jumps on Snyder when the alarm clock goes off in the morning. "I've been sleeping alone for so long that this is a big thrill for me." Muffin also makes Snyder's traveling more fun.

'Stewardesses love her. You know those commercials on T.V. with the stewardesses say 'Hi, my name is Linda. Come fly with me. Ha! Before I got Muffin I couldn't even get a stewardess to give me the time of day. It helps to have her along."

AT LEAST MOST OF the time. Unfortunately, on one flight Muffin got sick on a lawyer in "his Brooks Brothers suit" who said "'I hope you have as good a lawyer as I am.'

If Muffin outlives Snyder, his will states she will go to one of his deaf friends. "But we don't want her to know that. She might bump me off."

Muffin was trained by the hearing dog program of the American Humane Society. The program, which began in 1975, trains "hyper-alert" dogs it collects from animal shelters.

'When parents choose a dog for their child, they don't want one of these dogs. They want the puppy that is asleep in the corner... these dogs would probably be put to sleep. They wouldn't be adopted," Snyder said.

After reading an article about dogs for the deaf in Better Homes and Gardens magazine, Snyder wrote to the society and learned there was a fouryear waiting list.

"But the (Humane Society) people saw my professional letterhead so I got moved up on the list" because a highlytrained professional would give the program good publicity, he said.

The first dog the society sent Snyder was a 140-pound German Shepherd. "I had a hard enough time getting people in the office all ready without this giant dog" intimidating patients, he said. "So I asked them, 'Do you have a smaller model?'

"Like a mail-order bride," Muffin joined Snyder three years ago and became the first permanent dog for the deaf in Iowa. Fifty-six dogs have been trained for the deaf so far in the United

SINCE SNYDER ACQUIRED Muffin, he has addressed many community groups about the society's program and the problems facing the deaf.

'We're the invisible handicapped... we don't have a white cane or a wheel chair," he said. This may be why the Iowa Legislature has not amended state law which allows seeing-eye dogs in public buildings to include dogs for the deaf.

"The blind have been organized a lot longer than than we have. There have been beggars on the streets for millions of years. We've only had a lobby for 10 or 15 years."

Amending this state law will solve only one of many problems the deaf face, but typifies the attitude deaf people encounter, Snyder said.

Science has invented aids for the blind, such as machines that read. But an aid for the deaf, like a small device which could be worn and do Muffin's job, has not been developed.

Although a machine could not provide Snyder with Muffin's companionship, such devices need to be invented so the deaf can lead independent lives, he said.

But, "the deaf community will never get anywhere until we speak out for ourselves... The hearing world won't do anything for you until you speak out," Snyder said.

The sources also claimed 100 Argentine marines had eluded capture and were trying to stop the Royal Navy from building a landing strip on South Georgia that could be a springboard for an attack on the Falklands.

"South Georgia was the appetizer," Rear Admiral Sandy Woodward told reporters on the HMS Hermes before the news blackout took effect. The commander of 40-ship war fleet added: "Now this is the heavy punch coming up behind. My battle group is properly formed and ready to strike.'

Actions speak louder than words. This is especially true in Congress where politicians often spout fine platitudes only to be discovered with their hands in the taxpayers' pockets.

Republican Sen. Charles Grassley and Democratic Rep. Tom Harkin, both from Iowa, were outspoken opponents of a law giving members of Congress a special tax break that allows them to subtract Washington living expenses from their incomes when calculating federal tax liabilities. Republican Sen. Roger Jepsen orginally supported the tax break, then later voted to repeal.

Yet for the 1981 fiscal year Harkin and Grassley both claimed the $50 per day deduction, plus interest and taxes on their Washington homes. A spokesman for Jepsen originally agreed to let Jepsen's accountant answer questions about Jepsen's tax return, but Jepsen instructed his staff not to cooperate.

What is most disturbing is Jepsen's refusal to answer questions. Grassley and Harkin both say that as long as it is legal they have a right to use the break and they made their tax returns public. But Jepsen's record on the issue is wishy-washy and his refusal to answer questions is disturbing. Four Iowa Congressmen (James Leach, Torn Tauke, Cooper Evans and Berkley Bedell) decided not to use the tax break even though it can amount to more than $18,000 per person.

It is reassuring that so many of lowa's congressional delegation have refused to take advantage of such an economic plum for their personal benefits. They should be commended for their actions. As for the others who speak out of one side of their mouth and grab with greedy hands; they should be rebuked and remembered for what they do instead of what they say at election time.

Politics and personality

Criticism against the Reagan presidency is continuing to mount Reagan has been assailed for cutting benefits to the poor, for increasing military spending, for creating a recession. The growing anti-nuclear movement has lambasted his reluctance to enter arms limitations talks with the Soviets. Many question Reagan's ability to understand complex issues; repeated criticism has been leveled at his misstated facts and his tendency to explain serious problems with simple-minded homilies.

If the next presidential election were today, President Reagan would certainly be defeated. Just as certainly, this is the same Reagan who was elected by a comfortable margin less than two years ago.

His stands on the issues have not changed. He explained himself as definitely as any candidate can be expected to; once in office, few presidents have been as absolute in attempting their previously outlined programs.

The American voter must accept much of the blame for the country's assorted woes. No president has completed two full terms since Dwight Eisenhower. Lyndon Johnson quit when his reelection became an impossibility; Nixon blundered into Watergate when public disapproval heightened his paranoia. Presidents Ford and Carter each began their terms with strong public backing, yet each was nearly unseated in his own party's primary before losing in the general election. With Reagan, an old pattern is only being repeated.

The result has been a lack of continuity in government. The situation will not improve until the focus of American politics shifts from personalities to issues. Voters must seek a definite political direction, rather than automatically turning against the Mopeds have been around for decades, but until recent years, you seldom saw anyone riding them except eccentric college professors. The energy crisis has changed all that. Because they are inexpensive to own and operate - most get more than 100 miles to the gallon - mopeds have become a common sight on city streets. In Iowa, moped registrations have jumped from 300 to over 48,000 in less than five years.

Moped laws

They're popular in Iowa for a reason other than fuel economy. A young Iowan can legally ride a moped at 14, but must wait until 16 to drive a car. As a result, many of the mopeds registered in Iowa belong not to adults seeking inexpensive transportation, but to 14to-16-year-olds who drive them for fun.

The quirk in Iowa law that allows teenagers to ride mopeds two years before they can drive cars has created a highway safety problem of disturbing proportions. According to statistics, most moped accidents are caused by mistakes commonly made by inexperienced riders; running stop signs and riding double are the most frequent causes of wrecks.

What makes this disturbing is that relatively minor errors of judgment have such frequently tragic results. A person involved in a moped accident has a 93 percent chance of being injured; by comparison, the injury rate for all motor vehicle accidents is 26 percent. And while the overall rate of motor vehicle accidents in lows is falling, moped accidents are increasing.

Common sense precautions such as wearing a helmet could help bring these numbers down, but the best solution would be to set a minimum legal driving age - 16 - for all motor vehicles. Mopeds are an economical form of transportation, but they make lousy toys. Iowa laws governing their use need to be revised to recognize that fact.

'Supply-side' foreign aid policy foreign aid, the Reagan administration is developing a policy that is the international equivalent of its controversial "supply-side" domestic economics.

Although the changes are not yet

ough the changes are not yet revolutionary, and the size of the foreign aid request is roughly similar to recent years ($8.5 billion for fiscal year 1983, compared to $8.1 billion for the current year), there is a strong philosophical strain in the administration's program that will make itself apparent in future years.

The delay will come slowly because much of the foreign aid program - especially the large hunks of it going to Egypt and Israel - is the result of long-term commitments by previous administrations and cannot be altered without destroying U.S. credibility and global stability.

But the White House and State Department are putting into practice several clear lines of thought:

· Replacing foreign aid with private assistance and increased trade.

• Withdrawing U.S. support from multilateral financial institutions such as the International Monetary Fund.

• Increasing emphasis on the national security aspects of foreign aid, deemphasizing humanitarian con-

 Decreasing the size of the U.S. foreign assistance establishment.

THE REAGAN administration would like to see private assistance from the United States and charitable organizations - estimated at more than $815 million in 1980 - increase, especially in places like Poland, where such humanitarian aid can go directly to the people, without the political liability of the U.S. government seeming to give its endorsement to the local

Increased trade and favorable tariff treatment are also viewed by government officials as a workable replacement for much of the current aid program. They serve to build up economies as well as a sense of self-An important element in the Caribbean Basin Initiative proposed by Reagan last month is that tariff barriers on such things as sugar be from American sugar producers as well as other raw commodity exporters, such as Somalia, on the Horn of Africa, who see it as an unfair handicap to them.

The movement to withdraw support from the multilateral international financial institutions, such as the International Monetary Fund or the regional development banks, reverses a trend that has taken place in U.S. foreign policy in the past 10 years.

THE FORMER THEORY, held by both the Ford and Carter administrations, was that foreign aid would be more efficient and less "political" if it were given out through international organizations.

only be justified on the grounds of contributing to foreign policy objectives, it is not desirable even to attempt to de-

The Reagan administration, led by Treasury officials, wants a clear U.S. stamp on any money or goods going to the developing world.

El Salvador is a case emphasizing the new emphasis on national security uses of foreign aid. In 1979, U.S. economic assistance totaled $11 million. For fiscal 1983, the administration is asking about $200 million for El Salvador's economic assistance (in addition to about $139 million for military assistance).

The people in El Salvador had not gotten any needier in the intervening three years, but they have become more important, in the administration's eyes, as a test of the U.S. ability to oppose Communist subversion in the Western Hemisphere.

That altruistic argument is disputed THIS LEADS TO the paradox that by influential conservatives such as the the most efficient way for any Latin lowered for the countries in the basin. Heritage Foundation, which said in a American country to get more money Lowering tariffs for some countries recent report, "Since foreign policy is out of the United States may be to inleads to almost automatic protests inherently political, and since aid can vite Cuban President Fidel Castro to pay a visit.

Further, there has been a whittling away at the size of the U.S. foreign assistance establishment.

The International Development Cooperation Agency has been abolished. A small umbrella organization that was the brainchild of the late Sen. Hubert Humphrey, IDCA was supposed to coordinate U.S. contributions overseas, making them more effective and coherent.

IDCA never had the staff to do its work and thus had little impact on the U.S. ability to deal with the rest of the world, except for adding another layer of bureaucracy to the process.

More controversial is the planned reduction in the size of the Peace Corps, from about 5,600 in 1981 to a current 5,000 and even lower numbers in future years, if conservatives have their way.

Conservative members of the administration say that foreign aid, while desirable, should be lower on the list of national priorities at a time of economic emergency such as this.

Tuition tax credit Constitutional

Steven Horowitz and Linda Schuppener present an inaccurate view of President Reagan's proposal for tuition tax credits in their editorial "School tax credits" (DI, April 19).

Contrary to the editorial's heading, the tax credits are not for private schools. Rather, they are for parents who pay for their childrens' schooling twice, once in taxes and once in tuition. As for the constitutionality of tuition tax credits, only the judicial process would tell for sure. I find it highly unlikely that such legislation would be struck down by the courts for violating the separation of church and state.

Government assistance to students attending private schools is nothing new. Consider Guaranteed Student Loans. A whole slug of students receive GSLs while attending private

Consider the GI bills. Military veterans receive educational benefits for attending the school of their choice under the GI bills. And consider the fact that low income students attending private schools receive lunch subsidies from the government. If these programs are constitutional, I fail to see how tuition tax credits fall short of constitutionality.

Horowitz and Schuppener challenge Reagan's tax credit proposal on a number of reasonable points. The First Amendment argument in not among this category. My public school education leads me to reject the assertion that tuition tax credits run counter to the Constitution. Mike Streb 703 Benton Ct.

contributions," expressed accurately the fact that increased levels of private contributions cannot be expected to replace the substantial decreases in the flow of governmental funds to social and health agencies, educational institutions, arts organizations and other charities (DI, April 19).

Nationally, the total amount of charitable gifts is predicted to decrease by 10 to 12 percent in 1982 and 1983 at a time when more charities are seeking private funds and inflationary factors and tax-fund cutbacks are rapidly increasing their needs for

This means that at the UI we will have to "try harder" in order to sustain the considerable fund-raising momentum that has been generated in recent years. Tax legislation and an ailing economy may affect the UI's fund-raising success. But we at the UI Foundation are optimistic about the future of private giving. The headline on the front-page story by Karen Herzog signaled a possible decrease in giving to the UI (DI, April 15). Our o the editor:

support of the UI, through the UI Foundation and through gifts made directly to the UI, has risen consistently. The number of contributors also has been rising rapidly, thereby building a solid base for future fund-raising success.

This record has been achieved by a dedicated, enthusiastic and optimistic fund-raising staff in concert with hundreds of members of the faculty, staff and administration and thousands of volunteers — all selling the attributes of a marvelous university.

We at the UI Foundation are ready for the fund-raising challenge ahead, and we know that Iowans everywhere are too. No one has a more "worthy cause" for which to work and to which to contribute.

Format change To the editor:

I would like to compliment the staff of The Daily Iowan on their "test of sorts" (DI, April 7). The "test" was the change from a one-sectioned newspaper into a two-sectioned paper.

This transformation of format is very advantageous to the DI as well as In recent years the level of private to the readers, for it shows style and practicality. It has given the paper a flare of professionalism and a style of organization. The organization places the news in the first section, and arts/entertainment in the second section. Thus readers may move directly to their own area of interest.

The conversion has brought a new face to the DI, and with the new face shall come new respect for the stylistic and professional staff workers. I am eager to read others' comments. Jayne F. Scherrman

Secretaries' Week

Liz Bird's article on National Secretaries' Week stunk (DI, April 20). Some secretaries don't really need Secretaries' Week (me included) because we're shown appreciation and human kindness every day by our bosses and fellow-workers.

Unfortunately, not all secretaries are that lucky. I've been in past positions where slavery was a better title for the job and the only compensation received was the awareness of Secretaries' Week by the bosses. I'm sure it was only then shown because of the status pressure on the boss to be the "nice-guy."

There are a lot of hard-working women and men out there who deserve a lot more than one week of privileges, flowers or what-have-yous to remind them they are human beings and not working machines, but if one week is all they can get then, please, let them Jacinta Hart

Iowa's Ron Hallstrom became the first Hawkeye to be picked in the firstround of the NFL draft since 1975 when Green Bay selected him Tuesday.

Hallstrom, a 6-foot-6, 286-pound offensive guard, was surprised and excited to be going to a team he rooted for during Green Bay's glory years of the mid-1960s.

"I know about Bart Starr," Hallstrom said, referring to the current Packer coach. "When I was younger, in the sixth grade to be honest, he was the quarterback and I sent away for Packer information because I was a big fan back then. I'm so excited. I couldn't believe it. It's a dream come true.

"I had a feeling I was going to go in the second round, early second round and I knew I had an outside chance for the first. But I'm just happy I got draf-

"I'M DEFINITELY happy to be going to New England," Tippett said. 'Its close to my home." Tippett is a native of Newark, N.J.

Ron Hallstrom talks with a well-wisher after hearing the news that he was chosen in the second round by Green by DI Sports Editor Jay Christensen and United Press International.

"In the pros, everybody's an all-star. I'm really looking forward to be playing against the best."

Tippett added that he met New England Coach Ron Meyer when he played in the Hula Bowl this year. He will attend a Patriots' mini-camp in Boston on May 10.

Hallstrom was one of the first players signed by Hayden Fry when he assumed the Iowa head coaching job three years ago.

"He had limited experience, but tremendous potential. In our minds, we just felt he was a more productive player," Starr said.

Starr wouldn't say whether he was counting on Hallstrom to become a starter in the Green Bay offensive line, riddled by injuries and ineffectiveness during last season's 8-8 finish.

"We're looking for him to give us some immediate help," he said, hedging. "We think he has the capability to be of immediate assistance.

DICK CORRICK, Green Bay's director of personnel, said the club hoped Hallstrom could step right in as a star-

"He has the size to dominate," Corrick said. "The main things about him are that he's got a mean streak and he's tough."

Fry to reveal little in spring grid scrimmage

By Jay Christensen

Several key performers will miss Saturday's annual spring football game, but Iowa Coach Hayden Fry isn't planning to reveal much offensively or defensively anyway.

"We will probably use 25 percent of our total offense and one defense and defensive coverage," Fry said. "Spring is a time to experiment. We film each scrimmage and evaluate them all summer long.'

Some of those films will find their way to Nebraska, the Hawkeyes' season opening foe. Fry and Cornhusker Head Coach Tom Osborne plan to exchange spring game films.

And for the second consecutive year, fans, or customers, wishing to see the spring game will have to pay. But unlike last year when all the receipts went to women's athletics, the money will be split with the men's depart-

ADMISSION TO the game will be $1 for students and $2 for adults and that ticket will also be good for entrance into Iowa's baseball double-header against Wisconsin.

Ruled out of the spring game are strong safety Bobby Stoops, free safety Jay Bachmann, guards Joe Levelis, Jon Roehlk and John Carroll, tackle Walt Housman and quarterback Cornelius Robertson. Safety Ron Hawley is questionable, but all are expected back in the fall with the possible exception of Housman, who has ligament damage in a knee.

Robertson has not undergone his knee surgery for ligament damage yet and Fry said: "Hopefully, it will be just a scope job. He was our No. 3 quarterback and was just begining to show some of the ability we knew he had."

Fry said Robertson could not be redshirted and has only two years of eligibility left. Two other Hawkeyes expected to return this fall are Lon Olejniczak and Treye Jackson.

Starting quarterback for the No. 1 unit Saturday, the Black Shirts, who will take on the White Shirts, the No. 2 unit, will be Chuck Long. He has been impressive throughout the spring. Starting in the backfield with Long will be Eddie Phillips and Norm Granger.

"He's as good as any defensive tackle in the nation," Fry said. "I can't believe a guy who weighs 265 can move like he can. When he catches up with the ball carrier, he's always angry. He dances every dance."

The Iowa coach was hesitant to predict where the Hawks would finish in the Big Ten this season, but said this team would be different.

"Obviously we won't be as physical," he said. "We have to adapt our defense to what our players do best. Our offense will have more stability."

Fry revealed that several other Hawkeyes have missed portions of spring practice for various reasons. "We gave (split end) Jeff Brown some time off so he could work on his academics."

Mental errors 'kill' the Hawkeyes as Northern Illinois wins two

By Betsy Anderson

Words were hard to find to describe Iowa's two losses, 6-0, 6-4, to Northern Illinois Tuesday at Mercer Park.

Following the first game, Iowa Head Coach Ginny Parrish said "we were making a lot of mental errors that killed us." By the end of the second game, Parrish was baffled.

The Hawks started the day on a good note getting the first six of seven batters out in the first two innings. Starting pitcher Tina Keppy struck out the first batter she faced and gave up only one walk before things fell apart in the third inning.

Keppy surrendered three earned runs on a walk, two singles and two doubles before Julie Kratoska relieved her to get the final choice. Melinda Hippen then singled on a short fly ball over first base to move Barnes to third. That was as far as they got as Liz Ryan grounded out to the pitcher and Mel Ruth popped up to the catcher.

The second game was just the opposite as the first three batters for Northern Illinois all scored. Iowa's starting pitcher, Christal Shalla, faced eight batters in the first inning giving up three runs on three hits and

The Huskies ended the game with ten hits scoring one run each in the second, third and seventh innings.

Iowa was able to plate two runs in the third inning when centerfielder Polly Ven Horst singled to left field. Ven Horst continued to second when the Huskies' left fielder Cindy Town kicked the ball. In an attempt to throw Ven Horst out at second, Town overthrew the base and Ven Horst continued on to third

LINETTE WIELAND scored Ven Horst for Iowa's first run of the day as she hit a triple into right centerfield. Kris Rogers reached first on an error but was thrown out at second on a fielder's choice by Hippen. Iowa's second run came after Huskies' pitcher Candy Weaver walked Liz Ryan to load the bases and then walked Terry Pactwa to score Wieland.

The Hawks tried to make a comeback in the seventh inning as Rogers led off with a hit to the shortstop. Huskies' shortstop Peggy Wieser threw the ball in the dirt which rolled past the first baseman into dead ball territory giving Rogers second Hippen then flew out to the right fielder and Ryan walked to put runners on first and second. A wild pitch by Weaver advanced both runners and Rogers scored on Pactwa's hit to the second basemen.

Karla Smith singled to short centerfield to score Ryan. With two outs, Smith died on first base as Shalla struck out watching the ball to end the game Northern Illinois' Head Coach Dee Abrahamson was pleased with her teams performance as they tune up for the Illinois state tournament. "We needed a good game, win or lose, and fortunately we got the hits today at the right time.

"Iowa's pitching staff is much improved over last years'. They threw more stuff at us than they did last year," she added. Parrish . said, "We had three difficulties today - hitting, pitching, and defense.'

sent Francis, the former All-Pro tight end who sat out last season on the voluntarily retired list, to San Francisco for two high draft choices. And Houston then dealt unhappy tight end Mike Barber to Los Angeles for tight end Lewis Gilbert and an exchange of draft choices.

The Patriots also made another deal, trading veteran safety Tim Fox to the defense-starved San Diego Chargers for a second-round choice this year and a thirdround pick next year.

Sims, who is expected to ask for and receive about $1.5 million for three years, was thrilled with his selection.

"IT'S A GREAT way to end my college football career," Sims said. "From now on, I don't have to give a politician's answer when people ask me what team I'm going to be playing for. I'm glad to be getting an opportunity to play on the outside - hopefully I can utilize my speed and quickness

Chicago took Brigham Young quarterback Jim McMahon, the all-time passing leader in NCAA history, and Seattle selected defensive end Jeff Bryant of Clemson. Minnesota picked the first of seven running backs taken in the first round, Darrin Nelson of Stanford, and Nelson immediately balked at the pick.

"Minnesota is the only team I sent a letter to, telling them I didn't want to be drafted by them." Nelson said. "I am a little

Reds down Cubs; third straight win

CHICAGO (UPI) - Cesar Cedeno drove in three runs with a double and a sacrifice fly and Johnny Bench hit a two-run homer Tuesday to lead the Cincinnati Reds to their third straight victory, a 6-3 decision over the Chicago Cubs.

Cincinnati starter Bruce Berenyi went five innings in raising his record to 4-1. He has more victories than any National League pitcher.

The Reds scored an unearned run in the first inning off Dan Larson, 0-2. With one out, Ron Oester reached first when shortstop Larry Bowa misjudged a pop-up. Dave Concepcion singled to left and Bench walked to fill the bases. Oester scored on Cedeno's fly to right.

The Cubs came back with two runs in their half of the first. Bump Wills led off with a triple but two outs later Leon Durham singled to score Wills with the tying run. Berenyi then walked Keith Moreland, Steve Henderson and Gary Woods to force in a run.

With one out in the Cincinnati fifth, Oester doubled over Henderson's head. After Concepcion flied out, Bench drove his first homer of the year and 365th of his career into the left field stands to give the Reds a 3-2 lead.

lowa's Banks, Cyclones' Corrigan show contrasting coaching styles

So Iowa State's six-game baseball wini ng streak over Iowa finally ended last mesday. Hallelujah!

One must admit that most UI students aren't particularly enamored with Cyclone pletics. When Iowa beats the boys from hat Western Iowa wasteland in any sport, lows City rejoices and the beer flows.

When pondering Iowa State, the first hing that comes to mind for many jawkeyes is a bony, wimpy, pimply kid bearing high-water K-Mart jeans with a jocket calculator (complete with igonometry functions and numerous other andy extras) attached to his belt.

Thus, when a typical Hawk fan thinks of belone athletics, a bad taste enters the north. Cyclone athletics, with the possible esception of Johnny Orr's basketball team, are about as popular here as the no drinking igns in Kinnick Stadium.

50. WHEN THE Hawkeyes downed lowa ste, 7-6, in extra innings, many Iowa Cisuns were on cloud nine. Iowa had scrapged its way from a one run deficit in the geth to win on a Jeff Nielsen single. The gam that wanted it more had won.

But, in typical Silo Tech fashion, the Cyclone Head Coach, Larry Corrigan, was in ingracious loser. Rather than congatulate Iowa on a valiant effort, Corrigan samed his team's defeat on the umpiring. "I thought the officiating was brutal. It payed a big part in the outcome of the game. he said. "The umpire made all ands of bad calls."

Sportsview

enough, Corrigan topped it off. "The Hawkeyes sure give you home cooking," he added. "Officiating, not Iowa, beat us."

During Corrigan's gripe session, it seemed a violin and a large box of Puffs would be appropriate to solace him. While he was crying about how his troops had been robbed, Iowa Head Coach Duane Banks was showing his class.

When Banks was told that Corrigan said. lowa's victory was a donation from the umpires, and that Iowa State has a better program than Iowa, that nine times out of 10, the boys from Moo U. would clean up on the Hawks, Banks pretty much declined

RATHER THAN RIP into Corrigan's crybaby antics. Banks merely said he'd let his team do his speaking for him. "I don't believe in getting in a shitting contest with him," he said. "If he wants to say that, Corrigan also claimed that Banks apologized to him for the poor umpiring, a charge Banks denied. "I didn't apologize to him. I'm sure the umpiring at his place will be just great," he said. "If you guys (reporters) listen to everything he says, you'll have a field day.'

Banks and Corrigan are the epitome of contrast. Corrigan, who, without question is an excellent baseball coach, is intense, with a seemingly win-at-all-costs attitude. His teams, while they haven't challenged for the powerful Big Eight championship yet, are always competitive.

When Corrigan doesn't like something that is going on on the diamond, he's not afraid to say it. The first game of the double-header Wednesday is a great example. He was all over the umpires every time a close call went against his team. The verbal abuse that he received from the fans at the game was incredible, but it apparently didn't bother him.

BANKS, ON the other hand, is much more laid back. While he always goes for the win, he realizes that college baseball is just a game. Nothing more, nothing less. He stresses to his players that baseball, in the scheme of life, is relatively unimportant. Basically, it's an excuse to go to college and earn a degree.

When banks recruits a player, he looks for academics, attitude and athletic ability, in that order. That's the way it should be. Banks doesn't take himself too seriously. College baseball, in the scheme of life, is merely a learning experience for his

Marshall enjoyed life, took swim competition seriously

As a newspaper journalist, your main respon sibility is to report the news on an objective and professional level. In other words, leave your own personal feelings outside the newsroom while letting the readers decide any form of prejudice or favoritism.

Maybe so, but not in this article.

It is extremely difficult to keep your emotions pent up when writing on the death of former Iowa swimmer Jim Marshall (who was found murdered recently in a Sunnyvale, Calif., parking lot). Probably because it's hard to forget all those pranks and all the horseplay associated with him. And you can't help but remember all those times when he wanted to play one more game of racquetball (only to lose one more time) in the ancient Field House.

Or maybe it's because of the impact Marshall had on Hawkeye swimming, and the way he performed in a 25-yard pool.

IT WOULD BE an out-and-out lie not to call Marshall a unique swimmer. During an interview, his quotes would always be on the humorous side. He despised practices as much as Midwest cold and snow, and he was usually the first to be scolded by Head Swimming Coach Glenn Patton when a kickboard or a pair of goggles went sailing overhead.

But when it came to competition, he was serious. When it came down to one of his classic confrontations with Minnesota's Art Griffith during the swimming of the 50-yard freestyle he was dead serious. And when the curtain went up on the Big Ten Championships, he was in his own world, preparing for his race.

Howie Beardsley

What Marshall did in his two years at Iowa is something no other Hawkeye swimmer was able to do during a 21-year period. He came home from the Big Ten meet with a gold medal. He showed his teammates and Iowa swimmers of the future that a championship could indeed be won by someone sporting black and gold trunks. Best of all, he proved that you could be a winner and still have a good time of it.

FOR MORE than two decades, the Iowa men's swim team was continually shipwrecked at the bottom of the Big Ten standings. But that was only until a confident Patton came along and began to recruit some confident and cocky swimmers like Jim Marshall to turn things Nowadays, they talk about a dynasty in the Field House pool.

Patton, his coaching staff and the Iowa athletic department will hopefully show their appreciation to the school's 1980 50 freestyle champion by naming a yearly team award in his honor. After all, 21 years is an awfully long Beardsley is a former sports staff writer for The Daily lowan who covered men's swimming. He is currently a staff writer for the Bradenton, Fla., Herald.

Although the new north end zone seating will be delayed at least a year, all other planned improvements at Kinnick will go on as scheduled, including new scoreboards. ADMINISTRATION OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPERTY

The unkindest cut of all was dealt to Sara Stimuon. The subject of a stionwide nearch by Walter Matthau and Universal Studios. Sura said goodhe to her dusty Texas home and hello is Hollywood to star in the unpowenth rettake of Little Miss Marker a couple d years ago. Shirley Temple had created the definitive, though senimentally stirky, portrait of the Damos Runyon moppet more than 40 years previously, but Matthau was see the world needed an update.

bad film and Sara went back to Texas, Sympathy for Sara can be modified somewhat because she was one of the most talentless youngsters ever to hit the screen. Her range of emotions ran from dull stare to dull stare with smile. It was a painful experience for everyone involved, especially those who paid to see the movie.

And then there is Wesley Ivan Hurt, pd fortune in things like Roller a 10-month-old kid - that's 10 months - who was snatched from his crib in Nebraska and deposited on the island of Malta to star as Swee' Pea in his grandfather Robert Altman's movie

> With his crooked smile and on-cue gurglings, Wesley managed to snatch the movie away from professional scene-stealer Robin Williams and the overdone antics of everyone else trying to make like cartoon characters.

> Whatever Altman paid Wesley, it wasn't enough. Nowadays, the kid probably stands in an unemployment line sucking on a bottle of prune juice.

What's maddening is seeing the ones who survive in this sniveling, sneaky game of show biz. If there is one kid actor I pray will disappear from movie screens, if not the face of the earth, it is Ricky Schroder. He wept his way through The Champ but instead of arousing my sympathy, he stirred dangerous emotions deep within my heart. I can't stand that kid!

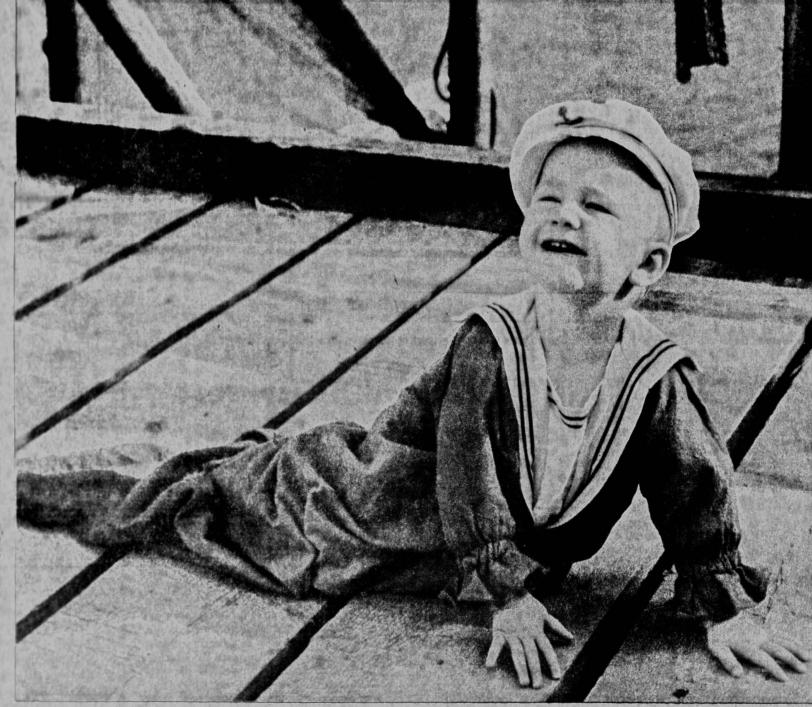

SCHRODER WAS SO insufferable in The Earthling with William Holden, he actually made me nauseous. Thank God I felt no obligation to watch him in television's version of "Little Lord Flaunteroy." My TV set would have been smashed to pieces.

Buddy Ebsen once said something about Shirley Temple that hit it right on the button: "That's no child, that's a hoodlum." Ditto for Schroder.

With all this in mind, I have great fears for the movie Annie opening next month. Can you imagine what will happen to Aileen Quinn, the redhead plucked from that favorite Hollywood haunt of obscurity to play the title role, ad heavily-lidded eye blinking, how if the movie lays an egg? Proof of the inevitable came when I called Columbia Pictures in California to check on some Annie facts. The public relations flack knew Quinn's name but wasn't sure how old she was, "Well," she said, she's older than when she started filming." Aren't we all.

It would not be exaggerating too much to say the fate of an entire movie studio depends on Annie making the untold million-dollar investment back in spades. The little kid with big eyes may knock 'em dead on Broadway and in countless road show stops, but whether she can charm people into laying down six bucks a shot (on the coasts) to see her on the wide screen is another mat-

The Joffrey Ballet will perform at Hancher Auditorium May 7,8 and 9 as part of the company's 25th anniversary tour.

Eclectic, controversial Joffrey 'spreading the gospel' of dance

By Marcia Butzel Staff Writer

Enthusiastic, self-confident Robert Joffrey and Gerald Arpino were like the kids at MGM, filled with that infectiously eager let's-put-on-a-show vigor and drive; they were like the whiz kids we knew back home who fixed up the garage and dragged in the neighborhood gang, at 5 cents a head, and you just better be there too.

 Dance Magazine editor William Como, on the founding of the Joffrey Ballet

Topping off Hancher Auditorium's dance series with performances May 7, 8 and 9, the Joffrey Ballet will be making a celebratory return to Iowa City during its 25th anniversary national tour. The company's itinerary is itself testimony to Iowa City's distinct drawing power for dance, as the community is at least 10 times smaller than the other cities of the Boston to San Francisco tour.

Close on the heels of the parent group, the Joffrey II apprentice company will take up residency in Iowa City during the UI Dance Program's June 7-July 10 summer session.

Last in town during a January blizzard in 1978, the Joffrey has endured severe financial problems in the interim. Cutbacks from national and foundation support forced the company to lay off members and cancel its 1979 season.

For the Joffrey — the only major New York-based company to appear "regularly and affordably" in 49 of the 50 states — this was a bad blow. The National Endowment for the Arts stepped in with a special matching grant designed to stimulate funds from other sources.

NOW, WITH a $150,000 grant from Philip Morris Inc., the largest corporate grant for a dance tour ever, the company has successfully resumed its mission of "spreading the gospel" of American dance.

The Joffrey built itself on touring, in contrast to its two prime competitors, the American Ballet Theater and the New York City Ballet. By diverse means, the company has established itself as America's dance evangelist. Throughout its history, the troupe has maintained a dualistic repertory of commissioned, often experimental, new works and revivals of rarely performed 20th century masterpieces. In 1967, for example, there were

German choreographer Kurt Jooss' revival of the great anti-war piece, "The Green Table," Joffrey's hard rock, light-show "Astarte" and Robbins' silent "Moves," all performed as the company was still moving into its new home at the City Center.

SUBSEQUENT MAJOR revivals include Massine's "Parade" and the Satie-Picabia "Relache." Whether the audience for these curios was the same as for the Joffrey's trendy signature pieces like the rock ballets of the '60s is an open question. But if the company practices eclecticism, it is with an eye both to what is significantly new and to what merits retrieval from history.

At 25, the Joffrey has passed through several financial and aesthetic stages in consolidating its major features of theatricality, entertainment and diversity. The company's youth was ruptured by a rift with benefactress Rebekah Harkness in 1964, but at the same time, the State Department sponsored an unprecedented double tour of the company in the Middle East and the U.S.S.R. Such turns in subsidy sources are notable, for they forecast the way the company would learn to roll with shifts in national and corporate financing. The Joffrey's phoenix-like ability to persevere was evident during the mid to late '60s, when the Joffrey men were-probably the best in the country, and when the Joffrey II, America's first dance farm team,

AREA AUDIENCES will have a chance next weekend to see what has come for the Joffrey with the post-1979 financial regroupment. Always beset by a high turnover rate among its dancers, the Joffrey now has fewer members yet is acclaimed as "better than ever." In recent years, the company's relationship with its critics has been inconsistent and problematic, an issue Gerald Arpino discussed recently during a publicity visit to Iowa City.

While the Joffrey receives favorable press from Clive Barnes and Anna Kisselgoff at the New York Times, the New Yorker's Arlene Croce and the Hudson Review's Marcia Siegel are not so positively disposed. Their criticism comes down hard on what Croce calls the company's "practice of consumerism in ballet," a claim paralleled by Siegel in her recent book, The Shapes of Change: Images of American Dance. Siegel writes about the Joffrey's tendency to produce successful entertainment "like any fine American product and update the model from year to year."

WHAT IS PROVOKING in Siegel's opinions is not so much the common barb about the Joffrey's lack of a company style, or its production reliance on media effects. but rather the way the Joffrey has brought ballet through the entertainment mechanism particular to American life. That is, the Joffrey is undeniably popular because its work responds to American cultural needs for images of ourselves which we desire or repress, but can't ordinarily exploit (whether from drug culture, genteel idealism, homosexuality, eternal youth, romantic sentiment and so forth). At the same time, the Joffrey tells us what our drives and ideals can legitimately be.

IF THE COMPANY elects for itself this evaluated for this alone? Amplifying and defending the Joffrey strategy, Arpino made the much-needed distinction between the pop repertory on which these critics have focused, to the exclusion of the Ballets Russes revivals or the neoclassics of Balanchine and Robbins. The company's diversity does stand up in its own defense, and while Arpino is frustrated with a critical establishment that calls for an "art of the academy and the elite," he continues his own with-it creations (last season's laser-lit "Light Rain" and a forthcoming spacewalk ballet). And yet he refers to the company as the Bonwit Teller of ballet, an unfortunately chosen image, as it reengages the commodity criticism he deplores.

The Joffrey is bringing a selection of works to Iowa City, including "The Green Table." Arpino's classical side will be represented by his "Suite Saint-Saens" and two other Shostakovitch works. Robert Joffrey's new "Postcards," to a song cycle by Erik Satie, will be featured and rep favorite "Cakewalk," done to the music of Hershy Kay, will be balanced by Twyla Tharp's "Deuce Coupe II," to the music of the Beach Boys.

The range of these programs, the challenge of new company faces, and the very controversy which the Joffrey has stimulated should steer all toward Hancher the weekend of May 7.

Hoffmann' tuneful and charming yet also tells a tale of tragic love

For French-German composer Jacques Offenbach, The Tales of Hoffmann, opening Friday at Hancher Auditorium, was hi swan song. Struggling against the gout that would eventualy kill him as well as a gneral disenchantment with the public's kkleness, Offenbach managed to write the serious opera that had obsessed him for so

Hoffmann's rather perverse im gination and adds some dry Gallic wit, with the result a blending of comedy, mystery and tragedy. It's not grand opera, though; throughout there's a light, operettic (as opposed to operatic) touch. Hoffman is tuneful and charming, yet it manages to tell a serious story; the audience gets the

IN THE EPILOGUE, frustrated and cynical. Hoffmann is visited by his muse and finally forsakes idle charms and devotes his energies to his art instead.

Offenbach strongly identified with Hoffmann's experiences. Richard Kracauer, in his biography of the composer, states that "in writing an opera around the ... unhappy Hoffmann, he rendered an account of himself.

Indeed, as Hoffmann searched for validamortalize himself through a serious opera: at 8 p.m. Friday and 3 p.m. Sunday at the composer, though famous throughout

The premiere took place four months after the composer's death and was spectacularly successful. So Offenbach, like Hoffmann, did at last find fulfillment to the opera-goer's ultimate benefit.

Sci-fi alive on cable television

By Jeffrey Miller

Science fiction, despite its vast audience, only enjoyed television popularity during the middle and late 1960s. The existence of shows from "The Outer Limits" to "Star Trek" seemed to be defined by the space race and its accompanying fears.

Once the Eagle landed at Tranquility Base and 2001: A Space Odyssey proved that movies could make sci-fi look both more fantastic and real than anything TV could ever hope to do, science fiction for the most part faded from the tube.

One of the first and most popular entries in the TV sci-fi genre, however, is back with us courtesy of cable. "Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea" (10:30 a.m. Saturdays, WGN-10), marked the TV debut of disaster movie mogul Irwin Allen, and gave us the adventures of the super-sub Seaview, its commanders, Admiral Harriman Nelson (Richard Basehart) and Capt. Lee Crane (David Hedison) and its in-easily reduced to four factors: the Seaview would be invaded by either (a) forces from outer space, or (b) forces from undersea; and those forces would either be (a) monsters themselves, or (b) turn Nelson or Crane into

DURING ALL THIS ACTION, the Seaview would inevitably list violently with the crew falling from side to side and onto the floor. Equally as inevitable, an exterior shot of the Seaview would clearly show the side of the swimming pool in which it was being filmed.

For all its dramatic and technical simplicity, however, "Voyage" was and is entertaining. The characters were drawn with enough credibility (compared to the stiffs in Allen's later, short-lived "Time Tunnel") to be of

The plots of "Voyage" could be The father-son tension between proletarian counterpoint in Chief Sharkey and Ensign Kowalski were particularly effective. (One wonders what the Village People would have made of all these seamen.)

More amazing is the show's timelessness. Last week's episode (undersea monster created by scientist) got into the dangers of nuclear power (the monster's food) and the evolution (the scientist) vs. creation (Nelson) debate, with the secular humanists taking it on the chin. Any show, even if it's 18 years old, which actively proposes that God doesn't like radioactivity has got to be taken seriously.

Sci-fi survives locally in "Space Heaters" (to be telecast at 8:30 p.m. Thursday, cable-26). A production of Iowa City Underground TV (ICU-TV), 'Heaters'' is a Firesign Theater-esque takeoff on space movies in which the intrepid heroes, a group of traveling salesmen, are zapped in space by a mysterious force that turns them into better in theory than in practice - the half-hour show would have made a much better 10-minute skit. Even so, "Heaters," given its financial and technical limitations, is no worse than a good deal of what passes for comedy on late-night network TV these days.

What's important about "Space Heaters" is not so much the product as it is the spirit behind it. The people who put the show together were obviously having fun. While watching, I wasn't so much paying attention to aesthetic qualities as I was remembering my own college days, when friends of mine and I would do equally off-the-wall things with radio programs.

That "Space Heaters" can be done that six people can have fun with TV, this most mysterious of technologies, and present a credible production to the public - is one of the great liberating blessings of cable TV.

And what is a blessing for producers is also one for consumers. Getting to review in the same column a rerun of an 18-year-old network series and a newly-produced local satire show is like being let out of the playpen for the children's television activist asked Congress Tuesday to require that cable TV systems provide free locking devices to subscribers so their children can't watch adult entertainment.

The alternative would be a demand for censorship and "the beginning of the end of the first Amendment," said Peggy Charren, president of Action for Children's Television.

In testimony before the Senate communications subcommittee, which is considering a framework for regulating the rapidly developing cable TV industry, and in an interview, Charren said widespread use of the "locking out" device would keep children.
