President Reagan:
"We've begun to rescue this economy ... but it's only a beginning."

End to economic slump in sight

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan said Wednesday the economy is beginning to scratch its way back, and vowed to stick with his supply-side program even though "the slowness of the recovery" is "painful to me."

"The first evidence of economic recovery is in sight," Reagan said. "We've begun to rescue this economy ... but it's only a beginning."

The president, in his 12th news conference, also:

• Said he remains "optimistic that the solution will be found" to end the bloody conflict in Lebanon between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization.

• Minimized the effect on the Atlantic Alliance of his tough sanctions against a Soviet gas pipeline to Western Europe, while defending the idea of grain sales to Moscow as a way to take money out of the Kremlin's war machine.

• Promised more spending cuts in the years ahead, but said he would not be locked into paring the Pentagon budget.

Reagan opened his nationally televised meeting with reporters with a statement boosting the proposed constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget.

HE ARGUED the amendment, now being debated in the Senate, would have the important "psychological effect" of convincing Americans the government is serious about controlling deficit spending.

The president rejected a suggestion that it is ironic for him, while presiding over deficits exceeding $100 billion, to argue "there ought to be a law against what I'm doing."

He argued that if the Congress had passed his "full supply-side economic program" of sharp budget and tax cuts last year the deficits would be smaller now.

House Speaker Thomas O'Neill, D-Mass., in a statement after the news conference, said the president "is trying to hide from his own record."

O'Neill said Congress last summer "passed the Reagan tax bill, the Reagan budget, and the Reagan reconciliation bill."

"He promised to balance the budget by 1983. Instead he has presided over the highest federal deficits in history," and "his program has thrown 3 million more Americans into unemployment."

REAGAN REELED off a string of economic statistics — a rise in real personal income, an increase in retail sales and a slight drop in interest rates — to buttress his assertion that recovery is at the nation's door.

He predicted economic recovery "in the second quarter of this year, but I'm not going to predict how much." Refusing to be pinned down on the precise

Regents study need for third hike in tuition

By Connie Campana
Staff Writer

The need to raise tuition for the third consecutive year could put members of the state Board of Regents and UI students in a "genuine dilemma."

The regents are preparing next year's budget, and a tuition decision "will have to be made in the fall," Fred Nolting, regents member from Waterloo, said Wednesday.

"We are going to have to see what the bottom line is," he said. Federal and state funds are "not growing with the cost of education."

Philip Hubbard, UI vice president for Student Services, said he "wouldn't be surprised" if tuition is increased.

The board policy is "not to increase tuition unless they need to," Hubbard said.

BUT STUDENTS would be hurt by another tuition increase because "all the other costs are going up too," he said. Inflation is raising the costs of "all the things a student needs" — including food, rent, transportation, books and clothes.

Hubbard said students probably haven't given "much thought yet" to the possibility of another tuition increase. "I hope it doesn't come as a rude shock to them."

UI administrators try to keep student government representatives informed, he said, so students "have an opportunity to voice their opinion."

Also, although the regents will be considering the tuition issue at their September meeting, Hubbard said a final decision will probably not be made until October.

"The regents have always given us a chance to respond."

STUDENT SENATE President Patty Maher said the organization will campaign to get students to protest the possible tuition hike and to vote in the November election.

The two "go hand-in-hand," she said. "Tuition hikes are our motivators to get students to vote."

Maher said the only way to fight the Iowa Legislature's pressure on regents to raise tuition is for students "to put equal pressure" on the regents and their legislators.

Since this is an election year for legislators, she said students can make a difference "if they react."

In previous years, she said, students "have just lain down and taken it."

REGENT PEG ANDERSON said it's too early to say if the board will raise tuition, because of the uncertainties in the federal budget, state economy, legislative appropriations and monetary requests of the regents' institutions.

It's important to "recognize the reality of the need for income," she said. "Obviously, there's got to be money to run the universities."

She said she expects some administrators and students to "raise some questions" about another tuition hike, but it "would be shortsighted of them."

Maher said another tuition increase will cause some students to drop out because they can't afford higher education. "I think that traditionally students have always been the ones to bear the brunt of it.

"I UNDERSTAND they (the regents) have to pay the bills," she said, but added the burden always seems to fall the hardest on the ones who can least afford it.

"I don't think it's being shortsighted to say you're not going to take it anymore."

Hubbard said the regents have used portions of tuition increases to raise the amount of student financial aid for lower-income students in past years.

There are two groups of students to worry about, he said — those receiving aid and those who will need it if tuition is raised again. The objective is that "no one is forced to drop out."

Hubbard said the regents' concern about a new UI law building and an "institutional vitality fund" to make faculty and staff salaries more competitive with the outside market could be a "very important factor" in their decision.

Draft resisters may be denied aid

Cooper Evans:
"It is grossly unfair to focus in on students."

This story was written from reports by DI Staff Writer Scott Sonner and United Press International.

The director of the Selective Service said Wednesday he supports legislation that would deny federal aid to students who fail to register for the draft.

"I see no reason why persons should benefit from the government when they are not willing to register" for the draft, Selective Service Director Thomas Turnage, a retired Army major general, told a House Judiciary subcommittee.

But Rep. Cooper Evans, R-Iowa, said Wednesday night it is "very discriminatory" to disqualify draft registration resisters from federal student aid.

"It is grossly unfair to focus in on students," Iowa's 3rd District congressman said.

Despite Evans' dissenting vote, the House approved, 303-95, an amendment to the $177 billion defense authorization bill for 1983 to bar federal education aid for men who refuse to register with the Selective Service.

House leaders want to complete action on the bill today or Friday and send it to conference with the Senate, which passed its version in May. The Senate version does not include the student financial aid amendment, Evans said.

In a telephone interview from his Washington, D.C., office Evans said those who disagree with the law and take a stand against it must expect to pay the consequences.

BUT HE SAID if federal aid to nonregistrants is barred — something he does not necessarily oppose — it should include other programs such as food stamps, not just student loans.

"I don't support at all putting this requirement just on college students. What about young people in the ghettos, cities and in the country?" Evans said.

The amendment approved by the House requires universities and banks to report loan applicants who have not registered for the draft. Students who would like to register at the time of the loan application would not be allowed to do so under the amendment, something Evans called "unreasonable."

25,000 rats scurry to UI labs, accompanied by a solitary pony

By Jeff Beck
Staff Writer

If a cure for cancer is ever discovered, or the intracacies of the central nervous system better detailed at the UI, it will be because of several hundred researchers and thousands of rats.

An estimated $17 million — 36 percent of all research grants — was used by UI officials in fiscal 1982 for investigations involving laboratory animals, according to Margery Hoppin, director of the division of sponsored programs.

In the Department of Medicine alone, about $8 million in federal grants involved animal research, she said.

Currently, 403 UI employees are actively researching and requesting laboratory animals, according to Dr. Paul Cooper, director of UI animal care units.

Members of about a dozen different departments do animal research, though the animal care units only account for animals used by the medical and psychiatric departments, Cooper said.

LAST YEAR, researchers from the departments of medicine and psychiatry used approximately 25,000 rats, 20,000 mice, 4,000 rabbits, 2,500 dogs, 1,000 guinea pigs, 900 cats, 250 monkeys and one pony. Ferrets, opossums, snails and sheep were also used in research, and pigeons and ducks have been used in the past, Cooper said.

Different animals are used for different kinds of research and not all die as a result of the experimentation, he said.

A species of animal is chosen when the system being studied in the animal is similar to the human system. "Dogs are often used to study cardiovascular systems; cats for the central nervous system; rats are often used for studying tumors; the pony was used in a dermatology study...," he said.

The animals used in the research range in cost from $1 for the least expensive mice to $1,000 for some

Job stress affects nurse turnover rate

By Nancy Lonergan
Staff Writer

Long, unpredictable hours and little appreciation are traditional reasons to avoid the nursing profession, but one often unforseen problem that takes a heavy toll on nurses is mental stress.

Mental stress is one reason approximately 28 percent of the 1,100 nurses at UI Hospitals leave each year according to Sally Mathis, UI Hospitals nursing service director.

Nationally, the turnover rate among nurses has been as high as 50 percent, Mathis said. About 20 percent of Iowa City residents change jobs annually.

Although much of the nursing turnover at UI Hospitals can be attributed to spouses who are relocating, mental stress is a factor, she said.

Some nurses simply burn out. "Sometimes there are anxiety-producing situations, — life and death situations ... being a nurse means dealing with stressful kinds of situations," she said.

"When I get into life-saving and life-threatening situations it's very stressful for me ... you never know what will happen and you really have to rely on quick judgments," said Karen Bollinger, Mercy Hospital staff nurse and former UI assistant nursing instructor.

GERALDENE FELTON, dean of the UI College of Nursing, said stress is a given in the field of nursing.

Guatemalan villagers slain

GUATEMALA CITY — Unidentified gunmen shot to death at least six villagers in a western hamlet, raising to 46 the number of killings reported in one day, witnesses said Wednesday.

The gunmen attacked a cluster of huts in Chimaltenango province late Tuesday, killing the six men, residents told a journalist who visited the hamlet, 28 miles west of Guatemala City.

Schmidt against pipeline ban

HAMBURG, West Germany — West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said Wednesday the Western allies were united against President Reagan's effort to scuttle a Soviet-European gas pipeline deal and that nothing could stop the multi-billion dollar project.

It was the clearest statement yet that West Germany would follow other European countries in defying the U.S. sanctions on the export of European goods made under American license for use in the pipeline construction.

U.S. blamed in expulsion

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Nicaragua claimed Wednesday the United States was behind the expulsion of three Nicaraguan diplomats from neighboring Costa Rica, a move that prompted Nicaragua to kick out three Costa Rican officials.

Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto said Costa Rica's action Tuesday of accusing a Nicaraguan envoy of bombing a Honduran airline office was the "handiwork" of a U.S. campaign to destabilize the leftist Sandinista regime.

House endorse wives' rights

WASHINGTON — The House, urged to recognize a wife's contribution to her husband's military service, voted Wednesday to give divorced wives rights to a share of their former husbands' military pensions.

The vote came as the House worked for the sixth day on the $177 billion defense authorization bill for 1983. House leaders hoped to complete action on the bill today and send it to conference with the Senate, which passed its version in May.

Salvador land reform absent

WASHINGTON — Land reform in El Salvador has been terminated by the Salvadoran government, nullifying any justification for continuing U.S. aid to the Central American government, a study released Wednesday said.

The study was done by Martin Diskin, associate professor of anthropology at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and done for Oxfam America, a non-profit relief and development agency.

Guardsmen watch beef plant

DAKOTA CITY, Neb. — National guardsmen and state troopers, armed with riot gear and a court order limiting picketing by striking meatcutters, stood watch Wednesday at the strife-ridden Iowa Beef Processors plant.

Officials at the packing plant, crippled by labor violence in the nearly 8-week strike by 2,400 meatcutters, said they planned to resume full production next week.

Bicyclists, beware of the wrath of Campus Security bolt cutters

By Scott Sonner
Staff Writer

UI students determined to continue locking their bicycles to trees, signs and handrails may want to buy heavy-duty cable to protect their means of transportation from Campus Security officers bearing bolt cutters.

Campus Security is ticketing and, in cases of repeat offenders, impounding bicycles that are locked to anything other than the UI's 3,200 bike rack spaces.

The tickets are actually "violation notices," which carry no fine. And there is no fee to remove a bike from impoundment, only proof of ownership.

But UI officials hope the notices will "educate" people about the violations, reduce "unsightly paint chipping on rails" and clear fire escapes and walkways for the handicapped, said Ellie Horning, UI Parking Enforcement supervisor.

"IN IMPOUNDING bikes in violation, yes, Security will cut the locks. They have bolt cutters," Horning said.

About 15-20 bikes have been impounded this summer because they received three warning violations, she said. Security officers have stepped up the issuance of bike violations in recent years because of the increase of bike traffic on campus, she said.

Several UI students interviewed Wednesday expressed shock that their bikes could be impounded. Many said they lock their bikes outside of bike racks because the bike racks are full.

But William Binney, assistant director of security services, said, "With very few exceptions there is room, if they are willing to walk or ride an extra block.

"When you drive a four-wheel vehicle, you can't park it right at the front door; you have to park in a designated parking area," he said.

HORNING SAID there are no plans to add bike racks in high-demand locations as long as space is available at other racks on campus.

Liz Heger, a UI senior, said she often locks her bike to a rail near Burge Residence Hall when the bike racks are full. She said she "couldn't believe it" when she saw Campus Security officers "ticketing bikes" at the library.

Mark Collins, a UI senior, said he saw "a guy in a green truck clip the lock" on a bike that was locked to a parking meter on Clinton Street, across from Phillips Hall.

"During rush hour at 10 in the morning all the bike racks are full. You lock it to something else because you don't want to get ripped off," he said. Collins said it is "crazy" for bikes out of racks to be impounded.

Steve Zerwas, a UI graduate student, said Wednesday he has ridden his bike 10 months out of the year for the past two years and has seen a "definite increase" in the number of bikes on campus. He said he has no problem finding space in bike racks at Schaeffer Hall early in the morning.

"But after 9 (a.m.) it's very crowded. Normally you can't get in," he said.

"I SAW them ticketing bikes at Lindquist Center. They were suggesting that you park at the library, but that's unreasonable. If they are going to ticket at Lindquist they should provide bike racks at Lindquist," he said.

Andrew Miller, a 19-year-old UI student, said he often can't find room in bike racks at the Union and the library.

"Once I went to the Union and all the racks were full, so I started to lock it to a tree. Some guy from the university came up and said he was going to give us a ticket. I couldn't believe it," Miller said.

"I asked what he would do if I left it there, and he said if I do it again, it would be impounded," he said.

When told that UI officials expect bikers near the Main Library, the School of Journalism and Lindquist Center to search out space in bike racks on the Pentacrest, Miller said:

"Like you're supposed to park it up there and walk down? I can't believe it. I'm supposed to be saving energy and all that by riding my bike."

Tough rules signed on loan repayments

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Trying to collect billions in back debts, the Education Department will cut needy-student loans to schools with high default rates and crack down on delinquent federal workers, Secretary Terrel Bell said Wednesday.

Bell signed rules for the National Direct Student Loan program he said will "play hardball" with 1,300 schools with default rates above 10 percent.

About 1.2 million students are in default — 120 days late — in repaying NDSL money, and the national default rate is now 16 percent. The schools are responsible for repayment.

The 528 schools with default rates above 25 percent will get no new loan money out of the $180 million appropriated for next fall, although they can use repaid loans as a revolving fund.

The schools above 25 percent have $150 million in overdue loans, according to department figures. Sixty-five percent — 347 — are private proprietary schools such as beauty colleges, 107 are public colleges and universities, 68 are private colleges and universities, and six are vocational-technical schools.

SCHOOLS WITH rates between 10 percent and 25 percent will have grants cut by the amount they should have collected, but didn't. The 1,600 schools with low default rates will not be affected.

Congress has 45 days to veto the regulations, but disapproval appears unlikely, a Capitol Hill aide said. Some members want the rules to exempt schools that cut defaults by large amounts, even if the total remains high.

Bell said the department collected $45 million in delinquent loan debts last year, and expects to retrieve $55 million this year and $80 million in 1983 with help from private collectors.

Bell said private loan collectors hired on commission last year have turned around more than 15,000 loans. He said federal collectors are now taking in $32,000 a month, compared with $10,000 a month during the Carter administration, and are so successful he may hire more.

Legal actions to recover loans brought in $15 million, Bell said. The government is owed $1.7 billion in delinquent guaranteed student loans, and $896 million in overdue National Direct Student Loans to needy students.

"WE THINK the 25 percent increase in what we've done this year over last year is significant progress," Bell told a news conference. "We ought to be doing better than that ... We're really going to push on this."

The department will match records of 1 million defaulted borrowers against personnel files on 10.3 million current and retired federal workers, Bell said. The results will be given to government agencies this fall and Bell said they will be "aggressive" in seeking repayment.

At hearings last week, Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., said more than 37,000 federal employees are delinquent debtors — an "outrageous situation." The administration backs Percy's bill to garnish wages of federal debtors.

New avenue open in cancer study

By Allen Finch
Special to The Daily Iowan

The human body does not regulate malignant cells, according to medical textbooks. But Dr. Richard Lynch, chairman of the UI Pathology Department, has helped advance the idea that malignant cells can be controlled.

Such unconventional thinking is opening up a new and exciting avenue of cancer treatment that utilizes the body's own immune system to combat cancer. In fact, researchers are beginning to use the immune system to carry cancer treatments directly to the tumors.

The immune system keeps the body healthy by providing antibodies. When foreign matter enters the body, antibodies produced by white blood cells seek out and attack the invading substance without harming normal tissue. These naturally-occurring antibodies work to protect the body from viruses, bacteria and other intruders.

WHEN NORMAL CELLS become cancerous, they display characteristics that mark them as different or foreign, Lynch explained. Thus an antibody that is specific to malignant cells could attack the cancer without damaging healthy tissue.

Researchers at Stanford University recently succeeded in the laboratory production of antibodies that attack B-cell lymphoma — an uncontrolled multiplication of a certain type of white blood cell.

Patients suffering from the cancer were injected with proteins called monoclonal antibodies. To make monoclonal antibodies, the scientists used a single clone — a perfect duplicate — of an antibody that combats the cancer in mice.

When injected in patients suffering from B-cell lymphoma, these antibodies seek out and destroy the cancer for which they have been tailored without harming normal cells.

IN THE March 4, 1982, issue of the New England Journal of Medicine, the Stanford researchers reported one of the first successful uses of monoclonal antibodies in a human.

The patient, a 67-year-old man who suffered from B-cell lymphoma, received eight injections of monoclonal antibodies. The man's symptoms disappeared and have not reappeared since.

Lynch discouraged unfounded optimism about this technique, pointing out that the man's symptoms may have vanished for reasons unrelated to the monoclonal antibody treatment.

He also said that additional research is needed to determine the effectiveness of the treatment. Even if it proves effective, the technique used to produce monoclonal antibodies, which now costs $50,000-$60,000 per patient, will need to be greatly simplified, Lynch said.

Lynch's own research has involved looking within the body for some answers about cancer.

AT WASHINGTON University in St. Louis, where he worked from 1966 until July 1981, and at the UI, Lynch has collected evidence showing that the immune system constantly produces antibodies that attack malignant cells, preventing the growth of cancer. When the immune system fails, cancer develops.

He said he believes this kind of knowledge will prove to cancer researchers that the best treatment for cancer involves the body's immune system.

Lynch has concentrated on studying myeloma, a cancer that originates in the bone marrow. While at Washington University, he discovered antibodies that combat myeloma present in people suffering from the disease.

Lynch believes that the antibodies, known as suppressor T lymphocytes, do not effectively combat the cancer because they appear very late in the course of the disease.

HE IS currently working to improve a technique for extracting and storing the suppressor T lymphocytes of people with myeloma.

The extracted cells would be injected back into patients after chemotherapy or radiation has eradicated most of the cancer. Lynch hopes such injections will wipe out the cancer altogether.

Researchers are particularly excited about this treatment, because unlike conventional cancer treatments, which also damage healthy tissue, this technique is highly specific and works against malignant cells without harming healthy tissue.

The standard treatment for cancer consists of chemotherapy, alone or in conjunction with radiation or surgery. Most of the chemicals used to treat chemotherapy patients are toxic and attack healthy as well as cancerous cells.

Chemotherapy patients often suffer agonizing side effects, including weakness, nausea, increased susceptibility to infection, severe weight loss, and loss of hair.

Lynch plans to continue his research and believes that, eventually, the years that he and others have devoted to studying cancer will pay off.

"What we have to do is work on fundamentally basic cellular biology. Hopefully out of this will come understanding. I'm confident this will have an impact on cancer."

Group claims no part in threat

The Iowa City El Salvador/Central America Solidarity Committee "had absolutely nothing to do with the bomb threat" that forced the closure of the UI Engineering Building Monday, committee officials said Wednesday.

"The use of this tactic would serve to alienate the public from our position rather than educate them about U.S. involvement in Central America, which is our purpose," committee member Mike Price said in a statement prepared by the committee.

The statement was prompted by an article in The Daily Iowan Tuesday that quoted an Iowa City police report. The report said an anonymous caller "with an accent" told police, "Because the people of the United States have not helped El Salvador, we have planted a bomb in the Engineering Building."

Price said, "We want the community to see we are concerned and responsible and didn't have anything to do with it.

"... It's hard to ask people to sign your petition when they think you were part of a bomb threat," he said.

City begins survey on flooding

The city this week started a telephone survey of residents along Ralston Creek about flooding in the area.

The survey is being coordinated by the Iowa City Department of Planning and Program Development with the results being forwarded to the Committee on Community Needs for inclusion in their September budget discussions.

The following questions are representative of what is being asked of the residents:

- Do you ever have problems with water entering the basement or other parts of your home?
- How many years and how frequently have you had this problem?
- Does your sanitary sewer ever back up?
- Has the problem become worse in recent years?

The CCN has previously recommended creek- and storm-drainage improvements for funding in the city's 1983 and 1984 Community Development Block Grant budgets.

House Democrats join nuclear freeze drive

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Thirteen House Democrats, including Iowa Rep. Berkley Bedell, joined the New York-based Nuclear Freeze Political Action Committee Wednesday to raise "a $1-million war chest" for candidates favoring a bilateral and verifiable nuclear arms freeze.

"The nuclear freeze campaign is a Middle America issue which came from the realization by an increasing number of people that nuclear war must be prevented," Rep. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., said in a press conference.

"We are people who understand that we need schools, not bomb shelters; highways and harbor dredging, not evacuation plans," she said.

Bedell said, "People throughout America, indeed the world, look to us for the needed leadership that will guide us away from this ever-maddening race without end."

The House is scheduled to vote soon on a nuclear arms freeze resolution, approved by the House Foreign Affairs Committee June 23 and strongly opposed by President Reagan as "dangerous" to America's strategic position.

A STATEMENT issued by the lawmakers explained that the money to be raised will be used to help Democratic and Republican candidates who support a nuclear arms freeze.

The committee also announced plans for a media campaign to support the freeze and to make voters more aware of the stands that their representatives take on the issue.

"The 'freeze' sentiment has already had an influence on the disarmament debate," committee treasurer Donald Spector said. "Today's political reality is money. That is why 'Freeze PAC' exists."

In addition to Mikulski and Bedell, the other Democratic House members joining the fund-raising are Thomas Downey, New York; Barbara Kennelly, Connecticut; Richard Ottinger, New York; Paul Simon, Illinois; Sam Gejdenson, Connecticut; Charles Rangel, New York; Jonathan Bingham, New York; George Miller, California; Donald Pease, Kansas; John Conyers, Michigan; and Patricia Schroeder, Colorado.

Two other House Democrats are on the committee's advisory board — Rep. David Bonior of Michigan and Rep. Ronald Dellums of California.

Rock rolls into the video future on cable's MTV

By Jeffrey Miller
Arts/Entertainment Editor

Television

This is the last in a four-part series examining the history and future of rock 'n' roll on television.

With demographic profiles used by the commercial networks establishing an audience for televised rock'n'roll in the 1970s, cable entrepreneurs realized that these free-spenders would likely pay for the pleasure as well.

Acts censored and interrupted by the networks could be seen on cable as they wished to present themselves, in concert or on videotape, for only a few dollars a month.

Cable by 1980 was in essence doing to televised rock'n'roll what FM had done to radio rock'n'roll ten years earlier, with a new service called M (as in Music) TV leading the pack.

MTV, a cable outlet not yet available here (though if you sign the petition in any record store in town...), provides rock'n'roll 24 hours a day with accompanying concert footage and videotapes. An added advantage of MTV is that it's broadcast in stereo — if you subscribe to the service, you can pick up the audio portion on FM radio.

MANY FANS of rock'n'roll watch MTV as avidly as others do soap operas or professional football. And MTV, especially after midnight, is one of the more interesting forms of TV: the digital graphics used in some of the videotapes are far ahead of anything the networks do, while other videotapes are so ridiculously self-serving that you can't help but get a good chortle out of them.

But, as was the case with the networks' late-night rock'n'roll shows, MTV takes all the risk out of the effort. What's worse, MTV has nothing to fall back on, no other type of entertainment with which to try innovations.

Record companies and performers are already complaining about MTV because of its reliance on concert tapes as opposed to the more conceptual approach favored by groups like Devo and Talking Heads. And if producers and suppliers are upset because the medium is too conservative, something has to be wrong.

One of the usual criticisms of popular art is that it only gives people what they want. Though no one has established why that's bad, it is nonetheless true that when an art form promises and has shown that it can deliver great things but instead settles for providing the cheapest, easiest product it can, it cheats both the art and its consumers.

MTV DOES just that, removing rock'n'roll from any "real world" context and placing its viewers in a safe little universe unto themselves, unsullied by fear or frustration. It's the perfect TV entertainment for the Sony Walkman generation.

While MTV fulfills its function as a video Quaalude, however, one show still tries to maintain the vision of TV and rock'n'roll acting together to make a difference in people's lives that Shake, Rattle and R-O-C-K presented in 1956.

It's long been fashionable to attack "American Bandstand" producer/host Dick Clark as being a parasite making millions off of people 30 to 40 years younger than he is.

That may be true. But Clark's capitalism is one of a higher, more liberal order than most: if it's popular with kids, he'll play it and show it, no matter how dangerous.

"American Bandstand" was the only place many black artists could be seen for years; it was the first show to feature the Doors and the Jefferson Airplane in the 1960s; it was the first show to feature the Clash and Public Image Ltd. in the 1970s and 1980s.

AND WHILE "American Bandstand" has long appealed to a primarily white, middle-class audience (as opposed to its black counterpart "Soul Train," about which I've written before), over the past few years it has presented songs by black performers that don't get played in places like Iowa.

More important than any of this, though, is the fact that "American Bandstand" shows people doing something with the music. Part of the numbing effect of the old late-night shows and MTV is that you are virtually a solitary audience, forced to sit and watch without any stimulus to do anything.

But "American Bandstand" gives you a real live audience! That really dances! And not just the robotic pelvic thrusts of the dancers on "Solid Gold" (you can almost hear the gears in their hips mesh), but young, exuberant, frequently erotic dancing — which Clark's cameras make the most of.

One can interpret dancing as a sexual phenomenon, a political phenomenon, or just having a good time. But dancing is action, unpredictable both in its performance and in its consequence. "American Bandstand," unlike the shows it has helped spawn, both includes and invites that action.

If I had children, I would likely suggest they not watch "American Bandstand"; I know I wouldn't watch it with them. That tension between young and old — the fear on the part of the latter of the new worlds the former might and should discover — is what Shake, Rattle and R-O-C-K suggested could make rock'n'roll and TV together be important.

It's ironic and pitiful, perhaps a little tragic, that after all this time Dick Clark might be the only person left to understand that.

Actress Frann likes the challenge of new role as wife in 'Newhart'

By Roxanne T. Mueller
Special to The Daily Iowan

Television

The 1981-82 television season might have been called "Return of the Retreads." James Garner, Lorne Greene, Mike Connors, Lee Majors, Tony Randall, Robert Stack, even professional recluse James Arness returned to the small screen. Except for Garner and Randall, they weren't a terribly jolly group.

This season, however, will see the return of one of television's most refreshing veterans — Bob Newhart — in a new MTM show called, simply, "Newhart."

Gone will be the psychiatric office, the funny dentist, the wiseacre secretary and the Chicago setting. Instead, Newhart is playing a history buff who buys a vintage 1774 Vermont inn, renovates it and runs it as a business. For steady work, Newhart's character, Dick Loudon, writes "how to" books like Know Your Harley and The Joy of Tubing.

Gone also will be Suzanne Pleshette, who, as Newhart's wife, lent a salty charm to the old show. The new woman in his sitcom life is confident Pleshette's ghost won't even be conjured. Her name is Mary Frann, and her background reads like Teen magazine's guide to success: live commercials in St. Louis for a teen dance show, followed by a term as America's Junior Miss in her senior year of high school, two years of drama study at Northwestern, and a job on a TV news staff back in St. Louis.

LESS THAN a year later, she was in Chicago co-hosting a morning entertainment show and also performing regularly at Chicago's Drury Lane and Pheasant Run Theaters.

While Frann may not have reached superstar status since she landed in Hollywood 14 years ago, she has had steady work, including a four-year stint as Amanda Howard Peters in the soap "Days of Our Lives" (a role, she says, that was about "a woman who coped") and a role in last season's prime time soap, "King's Crossing."

A "seasoned" actress, Frann long ago left behind her ingenue past and has few illusions about the business she's in. Though her series work has been heavy on drama of late, she's approaching the Newhart show with few fears. "I've always done both comedy and drama," she said in Chicago recently. "Actors who have any longevity do both."

"Newhart" will follow the MTM formula of ensemble playing. With Newhart and Frann at the center, the show also features a next-door neighbor who's a pathological liar, a beautiful maid who comes to work at the inn in order to learn what it's like to be "average" and a bumbling caretaker played by Tom Poston. Frann has specific ideas for her own character.

"I THINK she's going to have her own little quirks. Obviously, she should not be a loony bird, because I don't think he would be married to someone who is just daffy. But she won't be just totally smooth. She should have her own strong personality traits....The one thing that I felt was important and that we should see at all times is that she is genuinely crazy about this man and is very proud of him."

When it was suggested her character might come off as a Nancy Reagan-esque husband worshipper, Frann took offense. "Oh, I don't agree with that at all," she said, but wouldn't elaborate.

And what is Bob Newhart really like?

"Bob is intensely funny without being 'on.' He'll say, while you're waiting for a scene to be lit or something, 'So anyway, what'd you have for dinner last night?' 'Well, I had a taco,' and all of a sudden he's in this monologue about tacos and Mexican restaurants. You're on your knees laughing and he's just rolling. He's a great, great improviser. His mind is always working."

Frann likes the humanity of Newhart's humor. "It's so wonderful because it's so close to home. So much of his stuff people enjoy because it strikes a chord — there's a reality in it and people identify with that. I know I do. You identify with the little guy trying to cope and get through life."

AFTER TRAVELING in the circles of theater, daytime drama and prime time television, Frann keys in on the differences, especially those between the latter two.

"Lots of people in soaps use cue cards. I do not believe in them. Acting is acting and I think you should adjust physically to the different media but not cheat. In a series, they light you but in soaps they light for a set. That's why you might look great in one scene and washed out in the next. And then, because there is so little protection in soaps, if you're good in them, you'll be good anywhere. There is very little editing in soaps."

She likes the challenge of "Newhart" and the MTM tradition of performing in front of an audience.

"I like being up on a high wire and being a little scared. It revitalizes you — a live audience keeps you fresh."

Mary Frann: "I like being up on a high wire."

UI's Moses to conduct seminar in Austria, performing Haydn

By Jeffrey Miller
Arts/Entertainment Editor

Music

This is the 250th anniversary of the birth of composer Franz Joseph Haydn, and the UI is taking part in the celebration.

The 1982 University of Iowa Classical Music Seminar, directed by Don V Moses, will present the first full realization of Haydn's comic opera La Pescatrici since the composer's lifetime as part of the International Haydn Year celebration in Eisenstadt, Austria, this August.

Moses founded the seminar in 1976 both to give American college musicians a chance to study in Europe and to give Europeans a chance to hear good American performers.

"Europeans are used to seeing hundreds of American high school singing groups," he said, "which is really not the best idea of the quality of young American musicians."

THE SEMINAR offers college musicians the opportunity to study the traditions of classical performance while performing the works of Haydn, Mozart, Schubert and other classical composers in the halls for which they were composed.

This year, 118 students will attend the seminar. "Students come from all over the country," Moses said. "This year we have only 25 from Iowa. We get a good number from the coasts, although about half still come from the Midwest."

The work those students will perform this summer has a history that itself might make a good opera. Written by Haydn in 1792, portions of La Pescatrici were destroyed in a fire, and the work was never performed in his native Austria.

H.C. Robbins Landon, a leading Haydn scholar and one of the faculty of the seminar, discovered copies of several missing sections 12 years ago. In the past six years, he has also discovered the orchestral score of the opera's overture.

WITH THOSE pieces and a complete libretto, he was able to reconstruct most of La Pescatrici, though one aria had to be musically "created" for dramatic unity.

"This isn't ideal," Moses admitted, "but one has to decide whether or not to leave the existing 98 percent of the work unheard. I think it's better to hear the rest of the work, especially when it's reconstructed as well as this is, than to hear none of it at all."

Much of the excitement of the seminar comes from its setting — the Esterhazy Palace in Eisenstadt, which includes the hall for which Haydn wrote his symphonies. "We're playing the exact place for which the piece was originally written," said Moses. "It's like performing another instrument."

UI faculty accompanying Moses to the seminar include Beaumont Glass, Allen Ohmes and Michael Lobberegt. The seminar will be conducted August 4-22 and is funded by the province of Burgenland, Austria, and the UI Foundation.

Return E.T., you odious creep

By Jeffrey Miller
Arts/Entertainment Editor

Jeffrey Miller

Wouldn't you know it? Just when something nice happens, someone comes along to ruin it.

I am speaking in this instance, of course, of the vermin who stole the E.T. model from the Astro marquee.

Last week, I walked by the Astro and saw a 5-year-old girl pointing up to the marquee and squealing with delight to her mother: "E.T., Mommy! E.T.!"

Last night, I walked by and saw the same girl, clutching her mother's hand and crying: "Where'd he go, Mommy? Where's E.T.?"

Tears rolled off her cheeks.

You would think that America has gone through enough embarrassment in the past decade: Vietnam, Watergate, Iran, cars and space shuttles that run like they were built by Ronco. The list goes on.

BUT NOW — this. Just one more craven and contemptible act for Brezhnev and his buddies to make the most of, one more opportunity for them to say: "Ha ha, rotten Amerikanskis!"

Well, let me tell you one thing, Mr. E.T.-snatcher: you didn't just steal a little red plastic alien — you robbed us of everything he stands for.

Kindness. Respect. Charity. Love. Words that don't mean anything to you, but that mean plenty to that little girl, her mother, and everyone else who looked up to E.T.

You remember the last thing E.T. said in his movie? "Be good." That's right, Mr. E.T.-snatcher. "Be good."

That's probably another concept that doesn't mean anything to you, but why don't you quit swilling your beer and gorging on your candy (at least E.T. doesn't boot his on downtown sidewalks!) and think about it for a moment?

Why don't you try for once in your life to be good?

Bring back our E.T. — if not for me, for that little girl and the hundreds of other little girls who cry themselves to sleep at night worrying about their missing friend.

He would forgive you.

Maybe someday we will, too.

monkeys.

Vice President for Educational Research and Development D.C. Spriestersbach said experimentation with animals is only done when information cannot be gathered by alternative methods.

"WE HAVE a fine animal care program. It's carefully monitored ... and I'm very satisfied we do an excellent job on that score," he said.

Fred Petty, a researcher and assistant professor of psychiatry, said protocols for experiments must be approved by the granting organizations to receive money.

He said that factor, in addition to government regulations, make experiments humane and efficient.

Arnold Sherman, a research scientist in the Department of Psychiatry, said mistreating laboratory animals can often lead to inaccurate data.

"The animals are going to have to die anyway (rats in experiments that require dissection), but there is no reason to mistreat them. It's not good for the animals and it messes up our experiments."

Cooper said both researchers and animal care technicians must abide by strict rules imposed by the Federal Drug Administration, the United States Department of Agriculture and

ALL ANIMALS that undergo surgical procedures are given anesthesia and reports are made to the USDA of any experiments involving pain to laboratory animals, Cooper said.

"Regulations strictly specify the size of the cage, how often the cage is cleaned, temperature controls, lighting controls. There are more controls for these animals than for a building that houses humans," he said.

During 1979-80, a report by the UI Animal Care Committee found not all animal care facilities were in compliance with federal standards. Numerous suggestions were made to improve conditions for laboratory animals.

Since then, $750,000 has been designated for improving facilities, including $150,000 for renovation and $500,000 for expansion at the Oakdale animal care unit, Cooper said. Renovation is also planned for the medical animal lab facility.

He said the animal care units have been in compliance with USDA regulations for the last two years.

"We are very concerned with the humane part of research .... We have feelings for the animals."

Nurses

Stress is prompted by "the constant thinking that you have to be on guard, that any error you make could mean increased complications or a threat to a patient's life," Felton said. "You learn to live with it."

The amount of stress a nurse experiences varies, Bollinger said. Intensive care units and floors with long-term cancer patients are especially draining on a nurse. "Some areas are so intense nurses do get burned out quicker."

In addition to the mental strain, nurses must also deal with the physical burden of caring for patients. "Sometimes when I'm on, I can be in charge of 17 patients with one aid."

Staffing an adequate number of nurses for the number of patients scheduled, is a common complaint. "I don't remember working any place where that wasn't a problem.

"A lot of nurses burn out and become a clerk at Sears or a checker at the Hy-Vee because they couldn't stand the strain," Bollinger said.

LOW SALARY in comparison to the amount of responsibility nurses must assume, is also a factor in nurses leaving the profession.

Although Bollinger said she can count on another salary because she is married, making ends meet on a nursing salary "can be a real difficulty for someone supporting themself or a family."

According to Mathis, an average staff nurse at UI hospitals earns $19,000 a year.

Although many nurses are eventually driven out of the profession because of their inability to cope with the day-to-day pressures, Bollinger does not foresee changing careers. "It's not a boring job."

As UI nursing students progress through the program, they must take classes that include possible methods for dealing with stress, Felton said. Clinical experience allows students the opportunity to see how nurses and their instructors handle stress.

By the time nursing students become seniors they have already been exposed to some of the stresses they will face in everyday nursing.

UI nursing students learn specific coping strategies in a required nursing class.

PHYSICAL ACTIVITY, meditation, drugs and alcohol, and spiritual convictions — while not all positive methods — are possible means of alleviating stress, said Kitty Buckwalter, UI assistant nursing professor who teaches the Introduction to Health and Healthcare Systems class.

An important method of alleviating mental strain for nurses is the ability to accurately predict what a patient's response will be if certain steps are followed, Felton said. This gives the nurse a feeling of control over a situation and lessens strain. Bollinger said she unwinds from her job in a number of ways. Simply leaving the hospital after her shift is a release.

Talking with family and friends about "stressful" work experiences also helps reduce mental strain.

Coping with job stress is a technique Bollinger learned while a UI nursing student, she said. Role-playing and classes in psychology and sociology aid in learning adapting skills.

The psychological impact of being a nurse or patient was also often discussed in clinical teaching settings, she said. Although those experiences helped prepare her for the mental strain of being a nurse or patient, "some things can't be taught in the classroom."

Cease-fire arranged in Beirut

United Press International

Israeli jets and gunboats pounded West Beirut for the seventh straight day Wednesday before a hastily arranged cease-fire brought a nighttime quiet to the besieged Lebanese capital.

But an Israeli official warned the Palestine Liberation Organization will face "hell" if it uses the lull in fighting to delay an agreement on evacuation of an estimated 6,000 Palestinian guerrillas trapped in the city.

U.S. envoy Philip Habib, who arrived in Beirut from Jerusalem following talks with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, arranged the cease-fire.

Lebanese government officials also reported that Habib — who visited five nations in seven days seeking a solution to end the crisis — had received conditional pledges from Syria, Jordan and Egypt to grant asylum to PLO guerrillas.

Israel, Lebanon's President Elias Sarkis and President Reagan have all demanded total PLO withdrawal from Lebanon.

Reagan

timing of the recovery, Reagan declared the comeback will be "a more or less permanent one."

With Congress working on a $98.5 billion tax increase plan to cover present deficits, Reagan said, "I'm not through with cutting in spending — I'm going to ask for more, I'm going to ask for more cuts."

On the situation in Beirut, where PLO guerrillas are surrounded by Israeli troops who invaded Lebanon June 6, Reagan carefully chose his remarks, stressing the delicate negotiations being conducted by his personal envoy, Philip Habib.

THE PRESIDENT refused to place blame for the fighting, saying he would not name "any stumbling blocks" to a peaceful solution.

"I still remain optimistic that the solution will be found," Reagan said, reiterating the American position for removal of the PLO and other outside forces and the establishment of a strong Lebanese government.

He also said that "contrary to some reports, there are no deadlines of any kind that have been set."

Reagan told reporters he has "no second thoughts" about banning export of American technology for a pipeline to supply Soviet natural gas to Western Europe, despite protest from America's NATO allies and their opposition to the ban.

He argued the decision is not inconsistent with selling grain to the Soviets. Reagan is expected to announce soon a one-year extension of the current grain sales accord with Moscow.

"TECHNOLOGY for the pipeline is obtainable only from the United States ... grain they can obtain elsewhere," Reagan said.

He reasoned that grain sales drain dollars from the Kremlin's purse, while completion of the pipeline would add to Moscow's treasury that would be used "to build up their military might."

On America's military spending, Reagan insisted he will decide how much must be spent, and not be bound by the budget targets approved by Congress — with his blessing — for the next two years.

Draft

He said he voted for a different amendment that would have "softened" the ban on federal aid by allowing conscientious objectors to "drop a registration card in the mail" at the time of their application for federal aid. That amendment failed.

Evans said the student assistance issue "may" influence his vote on the House's version of the $177 billion defense authorization bill.

"I don't decide if I'll support an omnibus bill like this on one issue ... one has to look at the whole package on balance.

"But there are some other things on the defense authority bill I'm not particularly fond of. There is a good chance I'll vote against it," he said.

Patty Maher, UI Student Senate president, said it is "very unfair denying financial aid to people" under such circumstances. "I don't think that is the purpose of an educational institution," she said.

"People should always have the right to disagree with the government without fear of reprisal from the government," Maher said.

She said the amendment singles out poorer non-registrants because they are the ones who need the financial aid.

Bruce Hagemann, former UI Student Senate president, said he doesn't understand the connection between financial aid for education and draft registration.

"If you break the law, there can be penalties ... but I thought you are innocent until proven guilty," he said. Hagemann said he did not think it would be legal to deny a non-registrant financial aid without due process of law.

"That's kind of my weird interpretation of the law," he said.

Turnage said those who fail to register for the draft will start losing "the advantage of anonymity" in August, when the agency starts matching its registrant files with Social Security lists.

Turnage said the names of 225 "probable violators" already have been turned over to the Justice Department for investigation or prosecution for failing to register.

Reese faces probation violation

MIAMI (UPI) — Former Miami Dolphins defensive end Don Reese, who wrote of drug use in the National Football League in a magazine expose, will be charged this week with violating his probation, officials said Wednesday.

Reese, 30, who was convicted in 1977 of selling drugs, will be charged with violating his probation by using or possessing cocaine, said Phillip Ware of the Department of Offender Rehabilitation.

George Yoss, chief Dade County assistant state attorney, said he would meet this week with Ware and Reese's attorney, Robert Josefsberg, to discuss the case.

Yoss said he has investigated some of the statements Reese made in his article and has turned his findings over to county parole authorities but would not discuss the contents of his report.

WARE SAID HE expects a warrant to be issued for Reese's arrest this week. "I expect that I will file a warrant for his arrest, unless they surrender him, within a day or two, within this week for sure," he said.

Last month, Sports Illustrated published a first-person article by Reese on drug use in the league. He wrote it, with help from magazine writer John Underwood, after Reese was released by the San Diego Chargers late in the 1981 football season.

In the story, Reese admitted using cocaine while in jail and as a football player, and told of drug use by other NFL players.

In 1977, Reese and former teammate Randy Crowder pleaded no contest to charges of selling a pound of cocaine to two undercover officers. Both men were sentenced by Circuit Judge Joseph Durant to serve a year in the Dade County Stockade and another four years' probation, which ends Aug. 10.

AFTER THE ARTICLE was published, Durant targeted Reese for investigation of parole violation.

Reese, who has played for the Dolphins, the Chargers and the New Orleans Saints, could not be reached for comment.

Under Florida law, Reese would not be entitled to post bond on the probation violation charge. However, a judge could order a bond. Judge Ralph Person will hear the case because Durant is now in juvenile court.

Martin Dardis, a former Dade County state attorney's investigator who now works for Sports Illustrated, said the whole episode was "a shame."

"Reese is a decent guy. He hasn't hurt anyone except himself. He's shaping up now," Dardis said.

He said Reese recently completed a five-week drug program in California and has become a born-again Christian.

Starr

of corners.

Nevertheless, he remains optimistic and for once it appears justified.

He has a solid defense, anchored by one of the best linebacking quartets in the league; Lynn Dickey, an immobile, but savvy quarterback who is getting better with age, and a fearsome receiving corps headlined by James Lofton and John Jefferson, a pair of All-Pros.

"WE'RE VERY confident and excited about this season because we have a football team that is ready to assert itself," Starr said.

There are numerous problems, however.

The defensive line again has a weak heart with Terry "Too Small" Jones and the inexperienced Richard Turner expected to play middle guard. The offensive line is aging and battered and needs help from newcomers Larry Pfohl, Angelo Fields and No. 1 draft choice Ron Hallstrom to erase last year's embarrassing yield of 52 sacks.

A bigger problem is the running game, which promises to be as pitiful as it was a year ago, unless halfback Eddie Lee Ivery returns unscathed from his second major knee surgery in three years.

"Right now, he looks great," Starr said. "He's recovered well. At this time, we're very optimistic."

Starr's optimism here is buoyed by Ivery's 1980 season, in which the former Georgia Tech star gained more than 800 yards following knee surgery the previous year.

Bart Starr: "We're closing in on being a playoff caliber team."

Johnson named Texas manager

ARLINGTON, Texas (UPI) — Don Zimmer, officially dismissed as Texas Rangers' manager and replaced by Darrell Johnson Wednesday night, could not contain his bitterness over the decision of team owner Eddie Chiles.

Zimmer sat next to Chiles during a meeting with writers and broadcasters after the Rangers' 3-2 loss to the Milwaukee Brewers. But the viewpoints of the two could scarcely have been further apart.

"Don can have any position he would like in our organization," Chiles said.

"How would you like to manage?" Zimmer was asked.

"I'd like to manage Friday night (the Rangers' next game)," Zimmer said.

"Well I think Don would actually like to relax and play golf on Friday," Chiles said. "He has had a hard time the last few days."

"No," Zimmer shot back without a smile. "I'd like to manage Friday night."

Zimmer said he was not sure why he was fired.

"No," Zimmer said. "Hell, no. We didn't win (the Rangers slumped to 20 games below .500 with the loss). But we didn't win a month ago. I guess he (Chiles) knows. And it's his business."

BEFORE THE GAME, Zimmer said he thought the club owner knew nothing about baseball and was listening to the wrong people.

"Mr. Chiles called me last Sunday and told me he thought I was doing a good job under the circumstances," Zimmer said. "Then on Monday he called me and said he thought the club should be a .500 ballclub."

Zimmer said he was perplexed by front office moves this year, including the dismissal of former general manager Eddie Robinson.

"I really don't know what his motives were," Zimmer said, referring to Chiles. "I don't think it was anything to hurt me. People in the baseball world are laughing about it now (Chiles' handling of the club)."

Zimmer was particularly distressed about a study done by Craig Wright, employed by the Rangers to do a statistical report on the club. It was Wright's report to Chiles that appeared to trigger Zimmer's downfall.

"When you've got Craig Wright making decisions," Zimmer said. "I don't know how it's (the front office) being run. I just think the whole thing is a mess.

"I think Mr. Chiles is being misled by the front office people, including Craig Wright. I think he's listening to people who are not advising him right."

ZIMMER, WHO WAS dismissed by the Boston Red Sox two years ago, said he knew before the season began that his club was in trouble. He cited, in particular, an off-season trade that sent Al Oliver to Montreal for Larry Parrish and Dave Hostetler.

"In New Orleans (where the Rangers played an exhibition game with the Houston Astros before the opening of the season) I knew we didn't we have a chance. I'm not trying to knock the players. But, overall, it was a talent thing."

Johnson, who previously managed in both Boston and Seattle, said he had had too little time to formulate any game plan for the Rangers.

"It has all happened too fast," Johnson said. "But I don't know anything Zim has done wrong."

Shannon hit gives Pooters IM title

By Mike Condon
Staff Writer

Pitcher Randy Shannon singled up the middle to score Dave Arens in the top of the 10th inning and catcher Dennis Nicklaus singled home an insurance run to give the Wild Pooters a thrilling 4-2 victory over the defending champion Stallion Battalion for the men's intramural softball title Wednesday night at the Recreation Building field.

Each team earlier Wednesday advanced to the finals with semifinal victories. The Pooters, using a 12-run first inning, defeated Feinberg, 17-4, while the Battalion came from behind in extra innings to defeat Raw Scores, 12-11, on Jerry Rosenboom's two-run homer in the bottom of the eighth inning.

THE POOTERS survived two bases loaded situations in the eighth and ninth innings of the championship game. With the game tied 2-2 and Mark Dragonjac on first with one out in the bottom of the eighth, Rosenboom lashed a double that just eluded the grasp of short fielder Jim Mason. Dragonjac advanced to third.

John Skowronski was issued an intentional walk, loading the bases, before Jim Nelson hit a one-hopper that shortstop Randy Rings threw home to force Dragonjac. D.R. Miller then popped up to Shannon to retire the side.

The first two Battalion batters were retired in the ninth before consecutive singles by Mike Quinlan, Sean Brennan, and Dragonjac loaded the bases. But Shannon then inticed Lynn Zieske to fly out to right fielder Bill Jacobson to end the threat.

Wild Pooters' Brian Heyer is tagged out by Stallion Battalion pitcher Mike Quinlan in the second inning of the IM softball title game Wednesday. Heyer was trying to score from second on a bad throw from the outfield after teammate Jim Mason's sacrifice fly had scored Phil Sachs.

"WE HAD our chances," Dragonjac said of the eighth and ninth innings. "But take nothing away from them, they played a hell of a game."

Rings felt the Pooters had no choice but to load the bases in the eighth. "We had to set up the force," he said. "We had to move our outfielders in, but getting the ground ball was the real key."

The Battalion jumped out to an early 1-0 lead as Brennan singled and went to third on Dragonjac's single. He then scored on Zieske's short sacrifice fly to Rings.

Jim Mason tied the score for the Pooters in the second inning with a sacrifice fly, bringing home Phil Sachs from third. In the fourth, Battalion shortstop Rosenboom singled, moved to second on a walk to Skowronski and scored on a single to left by Miller.

THIRD BASEMAN Brian Heyer led off the fifth inning by grounding to Dragonjac at third, but his throw to first was wild and Heyer ended up at second. Mike Steffensmeier advanced Heyer to third with a single to left where he scored on Mason's second sacrifice fly of the game.

The score remained tied until the 10th when the first two Pooters were retired. But singles by Arens and Sheldon Schur and an intentional walk to Jacobson set up Shannon's winning blow.

"I was just trying to drive the ball up the middle," Shannon said of the game winning hit. "They beat us pretty bad (15-5) earlier in the season so we were really fired up for this one.

The Pooters also had another reason for doing well. Former teammate Reid Sheets was seriously injured in a car accident last summer "Reid was a big part of our team," Schur said. "We really wanted to win for him."

Semifinal and final-round action in the coed division will be played tonight. Bushwackers (5-1) meets Win or Lose (5-1) and Raw Scores (4-1) challenges Lynx (6-0) at 5 p.m. The winners play at 6:15 p.m. for the championship.

Leonard hints of retirement from ring

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sugar Ray Leonard, recuperating from eye surgery, is hinting he may retire from the boxing ring because the love he had for the sport has "died out."

"I don't even think about it (fighting)," the world welterweight champion told The Washington Post just two-and-a-half months after he was to defend his crown against Roger Stafford. "I don't get the urge. I don't get edgy. I can relate to what they go through. But the pistons don't budge.

"I love boxing now as a spectator. I appreciate the talent," said Leonard, who has earned approximately $40 million in his career. "The love that I had, it's died out."

LEONARD, 26, underwent surgery to repair a partially detached retina May 9. He said he may announce in the next two to three months a decision on his future plans.

But his comments appeared to suggest his retirement.

"Every day I'm away from boxing, the chances are much slimmer I will consider going back," he told the Post in an interview at his home in Mitchellville, Md.

"I thought the ultimate would be when I had to do color for CBS (which televised Sunday's Thomas Hearns-Jeff McCracken fight). If I didn't get up for that, if I didn't get the feeling for Hearns, I said, 'I won't ever get it again.' I didn't get it.

"I can walk away. I don't rely on boxing. In '77, yes, I relied on boxing. It was mandatory, yes. I did it for love. The love is vanishing, diminishing. That's maybe a sign of retirement."

LEONARD SAID his injury has given him time to reflect on life since his 1976 Olympic victory.

"It's given me time to lay back, see what I want and don't want. I'm in a place on the map. I have time off to say, 'This is okay, this is not.' I've been living at such a fast pace. I haven't realized what I've accomplished, what I've put in the bank. I never knew the true significance of Sugar Ray Leonard."

But he noted his fans may not believe a retirement announcement.

"Whether I say, 'Yes, I will continue,' or 'No, I won't,' how much of the public will believe it? After the Olympics, I said, 'The dream is over' and I turned pro. They felt I contradicted myself. After (Roberto) Duran (his only pro loss), I said, 'This is it,' and I came back.

"My age has a lot to do with it and my profession. We're not supposed to rationalize, to be able to put things in perspective," he told the newspaper.

Canadian Open minus golf's big names

OAKVILLE, Ontario (UPI) — The pride of this week's Canadian Open golf tournament has been much like Wayne Gretzky's first shot off the tee during Wednesday's pro-am tuneup to Thursday's first round — a little shaky.

The hockey superstar, who was making a promotional appearance, accidentally sliced his drive off the 10th tee onto the head of a 17-year-old youth who was standing in the spectators area. The victim, Mark Giaretti, of Scarborough, Ontario, was taken to the first aid station, and later to a hospital where he was kept under observation overnight. He was not seriously hurt.

But tournament organizers are a bit hurt that several of the big names in golf have chosen to take a week's rest, leaving them with a better than average field for the tour but one not in keeping with the 73-year-old tournament's usual luster.

SEVEN OF THE PGA's top 12 money winners are missing from the Canadian production at the par 71, 7,060-yard layout at the Glen Abbey Golf and Country Club near Toronto.

Some late withdrawals had been anticipated from players gearing for next week's more prestigious PGA championship, but the most popular official excuse has been not battle fatigue, but the demands of expectant fatherhood.

Tom Watson, the British and U.S. Open champion, Craig Stadler, the leading money winner, and Curtis Strange each cited their wives' pregnancies as one of the reasons for not attending this year.

THE LATEST absentee was New Orleans Open winner, Scott Hoch, who was originally announced as an official entry. But tournament officials said late Thursday Hoch is injuried and was mistakenly included among the field.

Leonard Thompson, who fired a course record 62 at Glen Abbey a year ago, is resting along with Ray Floyd, Jerry Pate and Hale Irwin.

The Canadian tournament, the only PGA stop north of the border, carries an alluring $425,000 purse, but those are Canadian dollars which are currently worth only about 79 cents against U.S currency.

But the field remains formidable, led by Jack Nicklaus, who is returning to pursue the only major national championship not yet housed in his trophy room.

Bob Gilder, 1980 champion, Andy Bean, Bruce Lietzke, Ben Crenshaw, Tom Purtzer, Lon Hinkle, George Burns, defending champion Peter Oosterhuis and Bobby Clampett will give the field of 157 plenty of high class competition.

ALSO RETURNING is three-time winner Lee Trevino, who hopes his pleasant history here may bode the end to one of the worst slumps he has ever endured.

"I especially enjoy this event," said Trevino, who has been plagued with back trouble. "The first time I won the Canadian Open was 1971. The sponsors have done a great job with this tournament and can always count on me being here."

The less than household names, who play consistently well but seldom win, do not miss Watson or Stadler.

Dan Pohl, who has earned $350,000 over four years but no victories, also suggests that the gruelling Glen Abbey course — Trevino calls it the Green Monster — may have made it easier for some pros to stay at home.

"Some courses are not suited for certain people. I'm sure some players feel this course is a little long for their games so this becomes a good week to take a rest," he said.

"YOU WON'T succeed here just with your driver but it will help," said Pohl, who is regarded one of the heavy hitters on the tour.

"It's an advantage to be hitting your shorter irons on your second shot ... I prefer the longer courses because they give me a bit of an advantage."

Tournament director Jim Deeks discounted Pohl's assessment.

"A lot of guys were committed to come so when they withdrew we have to take their reasons at face value," Deeks said. "But I don't buy that theory about Glen Abbey being too tough. There may be some players who shy away but there are more who respond to the challenge."

Starr remains optimistic about reviving the Packers

GREEN BAY, Wis. (UPI) — The beaming face has dulled with the furrows of age and worry and the once-bright eyes are fading. Glints of gray show in a head of hair that has grown dangerously thin at the top.

Bart Starr, the boyish-looking hero of the glory years of the Green Bay Packers, is nearing his 50th birthday.

But his uncompromising optimism seems to have eluded time.

"We feel we are on the threshold of really doing some big things here," says Starr, now in his eighth year as coach of the Packers. "I'm very anxious to have this football team back in a championship posture and we're closing in on it. We're closing in on being a playoff caliber team."

THE PACKERS got very close last year, but their participation in the notoriously weak NFC Central Division, coupled with a schedule that could only be rated "PG," cast serious doubt on their credibility as a quality team.

Enforcing the skeptics' conviction was a season-ending 28-3 drubbing by the New York Jets — a loss that kept Green Bay home for the playoffs for the ninth-straight year and without a winning record for the eighth time since 1972.

Green Bay overcome a 2-6 start to finish 8-8. Before being embarrassed by the Jets, the Packers had won six of their last seven games, beating teams that finished the season with a combined record of 40-56.

"There are no weak teams in the National Football League," Starr contends. "New Orleans knocked off the Rams twice last year, for instance. People have a distorted view of what strengths and weaknesses are in our league. There are a lot of strengths and very few weaknesses."

IN ALL LIKELIHOOD, the 1982 Packers must emerge as a major strength if Starr is to keep the job he cherishes.

Last year was by far the most tumultuous of Starr's quarter-century in Green Bay. Not surprisingly, he doesn't care to discuss it publicly.

"I'm not addressing that now because I don't think it's appropriate," he says, somewhat irritably. "This is after the fact. We're into a new season and I'm going to let that stay where it is and that's in the past."

To most people, it seemed a living hell.

"I really never even thought of it in those terms," Starr says. "You've got so much on your mind that has to do with the team that you don't have a chance to think about things like that. You really don't."

HIS TEAM WAS booed vociferously in Milwaukee and Green Bay; his strongest backer, Dominic Olejniczak, was stripped of his duties as club president and replaced by Judge Robert J. Parins, himself less of a Starr man; Starr's throne was in a precarious position throughout the season.

Starr's uncertain future with the Packers dragged into the post-season before the club's seven-man executive committee offered the former favorite son a new contract.

Reportedly, there was much discussion about its length. Starr wanted three years, the committee advised one. There was a perfect compromise.

"I don't think it's even appropriate to talk about," Starr said, again growing a bit testy. "That was what the contract is and that is what we're working under and I don't think anything else is really necessary to comment on it.

"WE'RE DELIGHTED to be able to continue our program and that's the approach we're taking, forgetting lengths of contracts and everything else."

With a record of 39-65-2 — the lowest winning percentage of a Green Bay coach since the legendary Vince Lombardi took over in 1958 and the worst of any seven-year coach in NFL history — Starr clearly is backed into the tightest
