'Conservative budget' to be presented to regents

Budget trimmed in order to gain board approval

By Rochelle Bozman
Metro Editor

A "conservative budget" recommending about $42.9 million less than what was requested by the institutions for 1984, and about $66 million less for 1985 will be presented to the state Board of Regents Thursday.

The three state universities and two state specialty schools will make their biennial budget requests before the appointed nine-member board charged with overseeing the institutions during its meeting at the UI Thursday. Final approval of the budget is scheduled for the regents' October meeting at the Iowa School for the Deaf in Council Bluffs.

The five institutions requested a total of $567.6 million in state appropriations for 1984, but the regents staff recommended about $524.7 million for the same period.

These figures are somewhat misleading, however, because the institutional vitality fund, previously left out of the staff budget, has been deferred until the October meeting.

THE VITALITY FUND is a $16.5 million fund designed to raise salaries of faculty and staff to more competitive levels.

UI faculty awaits decision on vitality fund

By Jane Turnis

Faculty members at the UI may be more than a bit peeved if the state Board of Regents decides to sit on the institutional vitality fund another year — a clear possibility, if it follows the initial recommendation from R. Wayne Richey, regents executive secretary.

The regents staff originally recommended the fund not be requested when the regents make their biennial budget requests before the Iowa Legislature; the issue has since been deferred until the October meeting.

The vitality fund, first proposed in 1980, would provide $14 million for faculty and staff salary increases — an attempt to bring salaries to more competitive levels.

The request for the fund was revised and increased to $16.5 million by the three state universities during the recent budget process.

But Richey thinks the board should hold the fund proposal for another year, in view of the state's "dismal economic state," he said Monday.

"BASED ON the fact that we have made progress with salaries, I think

$167.4 million requested for improvements

By Rochelle Bozman
Metro Editor

Requests of $167.4 million for capital improvements at the five institutions of the state Board of Regents will be heard during the regents meeting here Thursday.

But the board will also hear a proposal from R. Wayne Richey, the board's executive secretary, and the board staff that recommends only $98.2 million be budgeted for building and equipment costs.

"We have a very modest tuition rate recommended," Richey said Monday.

"If you start getting these budgets up very high we'll run into some trouble."

"We have to pay for the good things in this world," Richey said. Increased bonding authority to pay for more capital improvement projects would put a strain on appropriations to pay back the bonds.

WHEN THE BONDS mature in two or three years "that will take a tremendous amount of funds. That means there are other things that the money is not going to be spent for," Richey said.

The money requested by the UI, Iowa State University and the University of Assad Haddad, a Palestinian student, and his wife Lara Haddad take part in a candlelight vigil held by the General Union of Palestinian Students and the Solidarity Committee with Palestine on the steps of the Old Capitol Monday.

The vigil and a protest Monday afternoon were held to show the groups' outrage over last week's massacre of Palestinian refugees in West Beirut, and the use of U.S. military equipment in Israeli aggression in Lebanon.

U.S. forces will return to West Beirut

United Press International

The United States, France and Italy agreed Monday to send a new peacekeeping force to Lebanon amid world outcry over the massacre of Palestinian civilians in West Beirut.

President Reagan, in a nationally televised address, said the tri-national force would act "not as a police force," but to enable Lebanon's government to assume "full sovereignty over its capital" and bring "the long nightmare of Lebanon's agony ... to an end."

He demanded at least three times in his short address that "Israel must withdraw from West Beirut" or it will grow "ever more deeply involved in problems that are not its own and which it cannot solve."

Referring to the slaughter of as many as 1,000 Palestinians in two refugee camps, Reagan added, "The cycle of massacre upon massacre must end."

U.S. OFFICIALS said the new peacekeeping force will be sent only if Israel approves. The Israeli Cabinet, told of Reagan's plan in advance by Secretary of State George Shultz via Ambassador Moshe Arens, set a meeting for today.

An 1,800-man Marine amphibious unit — which includes the initial 800-man force that oversaw the Palestine guerrilla withdrawal from Beirut — is aboard five ships in the Italian Port of Naples, 72 hours away from Beirut.

The U.S. Marines performed a limited role last time, staying only 16 days of the 30-day mandate and never moving beyond the port where there was little contact with Lebanese.

A senior State Department official in Washington said the Marines will "provide a presence" to assist the Lebanese army in taking control of the capital.

The official, who could not be identified under the conditions of the briefing, said the Marines will not carry out a "police function" or go into the Palestinian refugee camps.

HE ALSO SAID Reagan would decide within 48 hours how long the force will remain in the embattled city.

Calls for the Marines' return grew during the past week, which was marred by the assassination of President-elect Beshir Gemayel on Sept. 14, Israel's invasion of West Beirut the following morning and the Palestinian massacre that began on Thursday.

French President Francois Mitterrand said the three nations agreed to send back the troops for "a limited period" because plans to dispatch 2,000 U.N. peacekeeping forces "cannot be put into effect rapidly."

U.N. Secretary General Perez de Cuellar had offered to send 2,000 U.N. troops to Beirut from southern Lebanon but the plan was dropped after Reagan's address.

The Palestine Liberation Organization said it would prefer a U.N. force in Beirut but would go along with the tri-national force, de Cuellar said.

Lebanese Prime Minister Cheik Wazzan had requested the redeployment of the 2,130-man force for at least 20 days to prevent strife following the massacre.

EGYPT, EXPRESSING outrage over the killing, "urgently" withdrew Ambassador Saad Murtada from Israel and appealed to the United States and other world powers to force Israel out of Lebanon by "all possible means."

Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev charged that the United States must share in the blame for the "rivers of blood" created by the Palestinian massacre.

In Jerusalem, military sources said Israeli troops in West Beirut heard Friday morning that Lebanese militiamen were killing civilians in the two camps but took a full day to stop the slaughter.

Israeli President Yitzhak Navon, calling the killers "worse than wild animals," demanded a full inquiry into the massacre.

An official Israeli army statement released Monday said that, by early Friday morning, Israeli army officers began to question Phalange reports of fighting with guerrillas and casualties, which "seemed rather exaggerated."

Senators split on sending troops

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senators disagreed on the wisdom of President Reagan's decision to send U.S. Marines back into Lebanon to restore peace and Arab-American leaders agreed the move offers "too little, too late."

Senate Republican leader Howard Baker of Tennessee told reporters, "This is one option that should be left open. Something's got to be done. You can't let a situation as dangerous as that go unattended."

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said the massacre of thousands of Palestinians in Beirut last week demonstrated the need for an international force to protect civilians.

"The United States has an obligation to fulfill the promises we made" in an agreement that led to the withdrawal of Palestinian forces from Beirut earlier this month, Tower said.

Senate Democratic leader Alan Cranston of California, and Sens. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., and Claiborne Pell, D-Rhode Island, offered cautious approval of Reagan's plan.

BUT PELL, usually a staunch friend of Israel, harshly criticized Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

"I think he is dangerous and I think he has gone too far. He is dangerous in the sense ... that he is shooting for a 'Pax Judaica' and that is not the idea of peace for the other inhabitants of the area," Pell said.

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., said although he supports the president's overall Middle East policy he feels sending in the Marines "could lead to real trouble."

"American troops ... are going to be sought out. They are going to have snipers on them. No matter what we do, unless they remain aboard ship, they become a prime target for the crazies that are in that country right now," Jackson said.

Sens. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., and Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., also disagreed with the plan to send Marines to Lebanon.

Arab-American leaders expressed disappointment in Reagan's decision and urged him to cut U.S. aid to Israel to enforce his call for Israeli troops to get out of Lebanon.

By Jeff Beck Staff Writer

More than a year has passed since the rape on a gravel road in northeastern Iowa, but she says she is still mad, still bitter.

She is mad because of the time she spent in the hospital, mad because of the ordeal of the trial and mad because the convicted rapist still walks the streets, having paid only a fine.

"I'm mad. I don't know what I'll do in two or three years if I'm still mad," the UI junior told a rhetoric class studying rape and contemporary social problems affecting women.

Though she says she has been able to accept and deal with her problems, there is still anger felt against the attacker and the system that has allowed him to escape imprisonment.

BUT HER case, which has reached the Iowa Supreme Court, is by no means typical of the thousands of others heard each year across the nation.

In Iowa, third-degree sexual abuse carries a mandatory 10-year prison sentence with no deferral or probation. But her attacker was only assessed a $5,000 fine.

"He paid the fine and supposedly paid his debt to society," said the 22-year-old victim. "He spends a lot of time in Iowa City I've run into him at bars with a lot of girls and I felt like screaming. 'Do you know who you're sitting with?'"

Court records show the rape occurred on May 30, 1981. The attacker was soon arrested and charged of third-degree sexual abuse were filed on July 15. Bail was posted for the man soon after the arrest and he spent only several hours in jail. He was convicted in October and sentenced in January.

"It ought to be stressed the sentencing was kind of a fluke He is a good judge, but he has a different philosophy than most Had it been any other judge, he would have been in prison by now," said Allan VanderHart, the prosecuting attorney in the case.

WITHIN FIVE days of the sentencing, VanderHart filed an application for a "discretionary Review" of the case with the Iowa Supreme Court. In April, the court accepted the application and a ruling is expected by the end of the year.

"I hope and have every expectation the court will vacate the sentence and remand for resentencing The code is fairly clear," VanderHart said.

The victim too feels confident the man will be resentenced. She hardly thinks the high court "will declare rape a misdemeanor."

But she is still mad, even if the case is a "fluke." The emotional and physical traumas of the last year have been hard for her to accept.

The crime was an acquaintance rape — the attacker was the brother of her roommate, which led to an emotional confrontation and the ending of several friendships.

"I was a shivering wretch all summer," she said. Her roommate, she said, begged her to drop charges and took her to see the penitentiary at Fort Madison. "I tried to drop charges at one point but couldn't. The state files charges in these cases," she said.

HOWEVER, her attitude about the man's family changed radically. "When the family stopped crying and started threatening, I got mad and it was easy to act."

Testifying and undergoing cross-examination in the October trial was one of the most difficult parts of the ordeal, she said. "A lot of people don't believe you don't ask for this type of thing to happen. That bothered me the most."

Karla Miller, director of the Women's Resource and Action Center in Iowa City, who has assisted the victim, said, "Any trial for sexual assault is real, real difficult for the victim. She has to talk about something that happened in graphic detail."

"A lot of myths are used in these cases, like somehow she asked for it ... or rape is a sexually motivated crime," Miller said.

Physically, the last year has been a struggle for the victim too. She has spent much of the last year in the

Imposed settlement requested

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, moving to head off major economic disruptions from a nationwide railroad walkout, asked Congress Monday to act "decisively" by imposing a settlement on 26,000 striking locomotive engineers.

Congressional leaders responded immediately, calling hearings for this morning. In the toughest course of action open to him, Reagan recommended that Congress impose by legislative action the findings of a presidential emergency board.

500 die in floods, mudslides

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Rescuers tracking the muffled cries of children gave up hope Monday of finding them in a mudslide that buried a San Salvador suburb. Heavy floods nationwide left more than 500 dead and 30,000 homeless.

Japan began A-bomb in 1943

TOKYO — Japan's Imperial Army began trying in 1943 to build an atomic bomb, but failed partly because a German U-boat carrying two tons of uranium to Japan was sunk by Allied forces, the project's director said Monday on the state-run NHK network.

Toranosuke Kawashima, 83, a retired colonel in the Imperial Army, said Prime Minister Hideki Tojo received reports the Americans had already developed the bomb and ordered him in January 1943 to develop an atomic bomb for Japan.

Gandhi honored at Kremlin

MOSCOW — India's Prime Minister Indira Gandhi toasted President Leonid Brezhnev's health at a Kremlin dinner in her honor Monday and said nothing should be allowed to weaken Indian-Soviet friendship.

India never has criticized Moscow openly for the invasion of Afghanistan, but there was evidence Gandhi used her first meeting with Brezhnev and other Soviet leaders to express her displeasure.

Senate fails to end filibuster

WASHINGTON — The Senate refused Monday to halt a three-day liberal filibuster that has been blocking action on pro-school prayer legislation. The vote was 50-39 — ten short of the necessary 60.

Senate Republican leader Howard Baker said the Senate will vote again Tuesday on a petition to limit the debate. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., sponsored the legislation, which would forbid the Supreme Court to interfere with voluntary prayer in public schools.

Digest: KGB behind freeze

WASHINGTON — Soviet agents, allegedly operating in the United States as diplomats, have helped "organize and inaugurate" the growing movement for a nuclear freeze agreement between America and Russia, the Reader's Digest said Monday.

Writing in the magazine's October issue, John Barron, a senior Digest editor described as an expert on the KGB, identified by name several KGB officers who have "participated in conferences at American universities, churches and even on Capitol Hill in furtherance" of the campaign.

German in Spacelab crew

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. — The space agency announced today that a West German will become the first foreigner to travel into orbit in a U.S. spacecraft next year when he joins five Americans on the first Spacelab shuttle mission.

Ulf Merbold, of Stuttgart, West Germany, won out over Wubbo Ockels of the Netherlands for the coveted spot. Spacelab, a 23-foot-long orbiting laboratory, will ride into space in the shuttle's cargo hold.

Ian Johnson enters not guilty plea

By Suzanne Johnson
Staff Writer

Ian Johnson, the man who wrote a referendum to adopt the Bible as a supplement to school texts in the Clear Creek Community School District last year, pleaded not guilty Monday to assault.

Johnson was charged with assault Sept. 7 after he was accused of "poking a female in the crotch" while at the Union, according to Johnson County District Court records.

The victim said she was sleeping when the incident awakened her.

Magistrate Nancy Baumgartner set the trial for Nov. 8.

A UI physics and astronomy professor pleaded guilty Monday to wanton neglect of a minor, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Edwin Norbeck, Jr., of 1733 Winston Dr., pleaded guilty to four counts of wanton neglect of a minor, replacing his plea of not guilty entered during arraignment.

District Associate Judge Joseph

Thornton set judgment and sentencing for Oct. 28, and ordered a pre-sentence investigation.

Norbeck was arrested July 24, 1981 and accused of committing lascivious acts with a child, according to court records. The charge was dropped when the county attorney failed to file the trial information within 35 days.

An Iowa City man filed a civil lawsuit against two Iowa City police officers Monday, charging them with malicious prosecution and assault, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Dirk Marple said he saw two police officers Sept. 26, 1980 whom he thought he recognized, stuck a finger at them, and said, "Bang, bang." Marple said as officers Daniel Sellers and Daniel Moore passed him, Sellers struck Marple.

After Marple made an obscene remark and repeated it at Sellers' request, both officers wrestled Marple to the ground and arrested him, the suit stated.

In the suit, Marple said he suffered injuries, embarrassment, and spent five hours in jail. He also accuses Sellers and Moore of arresting him without having reasonable grounds for believing he committed the offenses he was charged with — intoxication and assault.

Marple is asking for actual and punitive damages in addition to legal costs.

A Cedar Rapids man pleaded guilty Friday to second-degree burglary, according to Johnson County District Court records. Burdell Doolin was charged Nov. 19 after a Coralville police officer saw him removing property from a car parked behind the Canterbury Inn, 704 First Ave. in Coralville, which had been locked. After searching Doolin, the officer found a thin wire, considered to be a burglary tool.

Doolin pleaded not guilty Jan. 20 during arraignment. District Court Judge Thomas L. Koehler ordered the Department of Correctional Services to prepare a pre-sentence investigation report.

School board appoints two officers

By Karen Herzog
Staff Writer

Two incumbents recently re-elected to the Iowa City school board of directors will serve extended roles on the board as president and vice president.

The board elected Lynne Cannon as president for fiscal 1982-83, and Dorsey Phelps as vice president during an organizational meeting Monday afternoon.

Cannon served as vice president of the board for the last year of her three-year term. She is also a member of the Grant Wood Area Education Association board of education.

Phelps served as legislative representative to the board during her previous three-year term. "I'm happy to serve the board in this new way," she said.

The fact that she is beginning her second term on the board had a lot to do with the appointment, Phelps said. "It's probably my turn to take a leadership role."

Just moments before Cannon and Phelps were appointed to executive positions, both took the oath of office for the second time in four years.

David Woodruff, who will complete the one-year unexpired term of Classie Hoyle, also accepted the oath, but sat at the board table for the first time.

HE SAID when he walked toward his chair at the table from a seat in the audience a few feet away, "the realization that I'd gotten the job was overwhelming."

"I've got a lot of material to digest, but I'm really excited about it."

Woodruff, a long-time Iowa City resident, manages the Iowa City Credit Bureau and has served on the education committee of the Chamber of Commerce. He said a position on the board "is more of a responsibility than most people realize."

In other business, the board established a regular meeting schedule. Meetings will be on the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month. The tentative format states the first meeting of the month will be used primarily as a business meeting, and the second as informational.

H & R Block Income Tax Course Begins October 4

Thousands of people with spare time are earning money as tax preparers in the growing field of Income Tax Service.

H & R BLOCK is offering a Basic Income Tax Course starting October 4. Classes will be held at the H & R BLOCK offices in Iowa City and Coralville.

For six weeks students will study all areas of tax preparation and receive actual experience in preparing individual returns. Experienced Block personnel will teach current laws, theory and application as practiced in their offices from coast to coast. There is a classroom lecture on each subject and practice problems at every level. The course is programmed to teach students increasingly complex tax problems as study progresses. Students find this course interesting and challenging.

Anyone may enroll. There are no restrictions or qualifications of any kind. The course is ideally suited for housewives, retired persons, teachers or anyone wanting to increase his or her tax knowledge.

While qualified graduates of the courses may be offered job interviews they are under no obligation to accept employment with H & R BLOCK. There are franchises available to residents of small cities as well as job opportunities locally.

The modest fee charged for this course includes all text books, supplies and tax forms for completion of the school. Certificates are awarded to all graduates.

Registration forms and brochures for the Income Tax Course may be obtained by contacting H & R BLOCK of- fice at 308 E. Burlington Street, Iowa City. Phone 354-1750.

Stereotypes of dentistry often have roots in tales

By Mary Tabor
Staff Writer

Over the sound of drills in her freshman dental lab, Carolyn Peters said it isn't the high salary that inspired her to be a dentist.

Neither did the first-year dental student take much stock in the stereotype that more dentists commit suicide than people in any other profession. "I'm not going to go kill myself," she said.

"I want to help people in a field I'm interested in," said Peters, whose interest in dentistry began when she wore braces.

"Highly motivated people with a good deal of ego activity decide to go into dentistry," said Dr. Nelson Logan, professor and associate dean of academic affairs for the UI College of Dentistry.

"Many students have known dentists who held respected positions in their communities and so decided to pursue that profession," Logan said.

The UI College of Dentistry, celebrating its centennial this year, is the oldest dental college west of the Mississippi. UI dental school graduates total 80 percent of the dentists now practicing in Iowa.

"MOST STEREOTYPICAL characteristics aren't reflective of modern dentistry," Logan said. He attributed the "old wives' tale" of suicides being higher among dentists to a "highly publicized, poorly substantiated" article from the 1950's that stuck with society.

He also said the advice to get a checkup every six months came not from dentists, but from an old Amos and Andy comedy sketch. "Some people don't need a checkup for a year, others need one every two months."

Dentistry is the only health profession that deals in prevention, according to Logan. In medicine, the disease has usually set in before the patient comes in, he said.

"The main difference between a dentist and a physician is dentists' time is a little more their own. Physicians live more in a fishbowl," Logan said.

"For me it is better than medicine because you're not married to a hospital," said Kyle Schulz, another first-year dental student.

When he had his wisdom teeth removed during his senior year of high school, Schulz said he recognized dentistry as a good way to make a useful contribution to society.

ACCORDING TO LOGAN, competition for admission is "just as heavy as medical school." The UI college of dentistry chose a class of 80 freshmen from about 500 applications.

Peters said that once admitted, competition decreases. "It's not at all cutthroat, we work as a group to help one another, not against one another."

"If one person has a technique that works for them, they'll share it, it's not a big secret," Schulz said. "But everyone in this room (the freshman dental lab) is competing with themselves."

"It's not easy, it's hard work," Peters said.

About 30 percent of the UI College of Dentistry is made up of women, Logan said. "There are many advantages to women in dentistry. In a group practice you can more easily reschedule your professional life for your family."

"DENTISTRY IS an excellent profession for women. Women are compassionate and it is possible to have a family and not be on call 24 hours a day," Peters said.

Schulz said there are many directions in which a graduate of the College of Dentistry can go. Logan said 60 percent of the graduates go into private practice, 25 percent go on to graduate programs and about 15 percent go into the military, public service or some other related activity.

He said dentists are continually updating themselves to keep pace with the new techniques, materials and preventive agents being introduced. They can advance in their community by expanding their impact on the public.

Logan said dentistry "is a profession that serves people. There are emotional and financial rewards."

Developing countries' health care stressed

By Hilary Kapler
Staff Writer

Health, education, and communication are the major medical needs of developing countries, UI nursing professor Leslie Marshall said Monday at a workshop on Third World health care.

Marshall, who lived in New Guinea for more than a year, and Paul Greenough, a UI history professor, led the workshop entitled, "Pregnancy and Childbirth: Health Care Services in the Third World." It is the first in a Women in Development series on women, health and development.

Developing countries' current emphasis in health care is on a cheap source of basic preventive service, said Marshall, chairwoman of Women in Development.

One area of health service in New Guinea — preventing needless deaths associated with childbirth — is expanding through the development of antenatal clinics. These clinics are designed to aid women both before and after childbirth.

At these obstetric clinics, Marshall said, a quick interview is conducted, screening for malaria and anemia is done, and routine medication given out. If there is a health problem, the patient is referred to a hospital for more extensive medical care.

BUT BECAUSE SO many patients seek medical attention and so little time is allowed for them, there was very little personal integration with the medical practitioners at these "hit-and-run clinics," Marshall said.

She characterized the practice as more running the body through the clinic "than any human, caring relationship."

Because of this lack of interaction, she said, "only very few get the needed health care." Two-thirds of the women who have been urged to seek further medical help "simply don't bother to," resulting in many more deaths.

"There are some good possibilities (at the clinics), but there needs to be more stress on education and preventive health care to get the most out of these services," Marshall said.

Health education is a major need, she said. "Currently they're not doing that. They're just processing bodies."

Communication is also important, Marshall said, but the variety of languages spoken causes problems because different languages usually involve different cultures.

Greenough said communication and cultural understanding is also important at the international level.

THE WORLD Health Organization recently proposed a plan to combine traditional medicine and modern medicine, Greenough said. The traditional village midwife could be taught modern medical skills, "integrating the synthesis of merits of both."

"The notion is that these illiterate, low-caste women can be transformed into modern, medically trained practitioners," Greenough said.

But studies comparing the deaths of infants with the degree of the training of the practitioner found "no distinctive difference between trained and untrained midwives in the effectiveness of their deliveries," Greenough said.

Marshall said, "The solutions may not be as much of a panacea as touted to be by the World Health Organization."

Committee approves plans for new seating at Kinnick

By Paul Boyum
Staff Writer

Preliminary plans for a redesigned $1.7 million seating addition to the north end zone of Kinnick Stadium were approved by the Campus Planning Committee Monday.

The new plan would add 6,500 seats to the stadium, increasing seating capacity to approximately 66,100, according to Wayne Snyder of the Waterloo architectural firm Thorson, Brom, Broshar and Snyder.

Richard Gibson, UI director of facilities planning, is expected to present the plan to the state Board of Regents for approval Thursday.

Last January, the UI Board in Control of Athletics approved an addition to the north end zone but those plans were scrapped when bids received ran over projected costs.

Randall Bezanon, UI vice president for finance, said Monday more than $1 million for the addition would come from the $1 increase in ticket prices for the 1982 and 1983 football and basketball seasons. Additional financing would include $500,000 in contributions from the UI Alumni Association and $200,000 from interest on incomes.

The Campus Planning Committee considered aesthetics, traffic flow and accessibility before approving an overview of the plan.

DESIGNS FOR THE new plan call for additional seating behind and around the existing north bleachers. The new seats will extend back to the edge of the street north of the stadium, which runs in front of the UI Recreation Building. The street will be narrowed from 31 feet to 24 feet with a sidewalk on the north side of the street only.

Gibson said video tapes recorded Saturday to monitor pedestrian access into and out of the stadium during the Iowa-Iowa State game will be analyzed to determine what improvements need to be made in the final design of the new north stands.

The north end zone structure will include four new restroom facilities and three concession areas, according to Snyder. There will be an area for 17 handicapped fans at the west edge of the north stand.

Snyder said the grassy areas on both sides of the north stands will not be changed.

Meanwhile, in Ames

If you think the student government is strange here at the UI, wait until you hear about Ames. Anthony Williams, the student government president of Iowa State University, was forced to resign because he didn't register for this year's fall classes. The fact that Williams is a convicted felon and alleged to owe thousands of dollars to American Express and an Ames car rental agency hasn't helped his short-lived political career, either.

The Williams debacle has been a front-page story for The Iowa State Daily. The newspaper endorsed his candidacy in April, but Williams now blames it for hounding him out of office after the editorial staff blamed him for not revealing his past offenses.

"I don't know of any politician who will stand up and say 'These are my faults,'" Williams said. Indeed it is the responsibility of a newspaper to investigate a candidate's background before making an endorsement.

The enthusiasm with which the Daily reported Williams' misdeeds makes it appear that they were more anxious to save their good name after opting for the wrong candidate than to improve student government. Williams' only real crime in this situation was not registering. The other illegalities occurred in the past, were taken care of by the proper authorities, and have no relevance to his performance as student body president.

It has been argued that the fact that Williams is black might also be related to his dismissal. The Black Student Organization still strongly supports him and has been vocal in blaming the Daily for his demise.

Whether Williams should be president is not clear. By not registering, he basically booted himself from office. He claims he is merely waiting for his student loans to come through, but if this is true he should have requested an emergency loan or temporarily enrolled for one credit and fought for his position. Instead, his actions only add suspicion about his fitness to be president and help justify his opponents' tactics.

The late Grace Kelly — a fairytale princess from Philadelphia?

Royal fixation

Last week, television presented the funeral of Monaco's Princess Grace live, while newspapers gave the event banner headlines and front-page coverage, and this week, CBS furthers the Hanover-Spencer mythology with its TV-movie "The Royal Wedding of Charles and Diana."

This fascination we seem to have developed recently for princes, princesses and other beautiful creatures of privilege is disturbing both historically and culturally.

It wasn't that long ago that monarchy was laughed at, if not spat upon, as an anachronistic model of society. The revolutions of the late eighteenth century proved that the divine right of kings was no longer a suitable principle to organize life in a world increasingly defined by technology and industry.

But as modern pluralistic life has become more crowded and confused with that technology and industry, with inflation and depression, with totalitarianism and terrorism, the simplicity of a life in which we are guarded by a beautiful, benevolent family takes on a charm that belies the history of royalty.

Much of the adulation heaped on Princess Grace at her death was due not to her short career as a movie actress or her abilities as a head of state, but because she was a little American girl (from Philadelphia, ironically) who grew up to become a princess.

It's nice to think that life operates like a fairy tale, as it did for Grace Kelly. But that kind of thinking disregards the issues of privilege and absolute power that have reduced Britain to a nation on the dole and have kept Monaco embedded in a feudal world consisting of spirits of mead and gaming.

The privilege enjoyed by princes and princesses was a worthless commodity in 1782; celebrating that privilege in 1982, for all the ruffled shirts and teary-eyed late night viewings of High Society, is a senseless waste of time.

Manville evading responsibility

SLICK USERS of "the law" often perpetrate more injustice than blatant violators of the law.

Rarely has that been more manifest than in the case of the Manville Corporation's filing for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

Manville has more than $2 billion in assets and a net worth of $1.1 billion, and even in this recession its cash flow has rolled on as steadily as the Mississippi. So why this bankruptcy filing? Because Manville is trying to use an absurd quirk in the bankruptcy laws to fend off thousands of disabled workers who have filed lawsuits claiming they got a lung disease, asbestosis, or mesothelioma, an incurable internal cancer, as a result of exposure to asbestos while working for Manville.

More than 16,500 lawsuits already have been filed against Manville; it expects as many as 35,000 more, which eventually could cost the company more than $2 billion.

MANVILLE'S LAWYERS have come up with the slick idea that the 1978 federal law does not require that a company be insolvent to declare bankruptcy, so they have filed under Chapter 11 with these goals in mind:

1. Put an automatic freeze on all pending litigation, and use the bankruptcy law to prevent other disabled workers from suing.

Carl T. Rowan

2. Have a bankruptcy judge lump all the current lawsuits together, perhaps along with the claims of the company's creditors, with the bankruptcy judge then deciding who gets what.

3. Create such cries of outrage on the part of disabled former workers and the creditors that the federal government will feel forced to pony up several billion dollars to compensate the ill former employees and the families of the dead ones.

Manville's first big gamble is that no bankruptcy judge will have the guts to do what ought to be done: throw its Chapter 11 petition out as a fraud, which it patently is. The second gamble is that Congress will not react with disgust and promptly do what Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kans., suggests: "clip the wings" of the bankruptcy judges and make it clear that bankruptcy courts do not have exclusive jurisdiction over the present and future asbestos lawsuits against Manville, or the other 250 or so companies against which another 20,000 asbestos suits are pending — should those other companies resort to the "bankruptcy" gimmick.

AT THE HEART of most of these lawsuits is the claim that Manville and other companies exposed employees to asbestos dust when company officials knew that lung disease and/or cancer would be a likely result. Surely no sane member of Congress ever intended that such an issue could be decided in bankruptcy court.

But, as Dickens had Mr. Bumble say, "the law is a ass, a idiot" — and often a mean one at that. Widows living in agonizing loneliness and former workers who are enduring excruciating pain might be left in legal helplessness by the Manville caper but for one thing: A lot of powerful people and forces also stand to get hurt in this perverted use of the bankruptcy laws.

The bankruptcy petition indicates that Manville owes $68 million to the Prudential Insurance Co. and another $96 million to four of the nation's biggest banks, all of which could wind up losing a lot of money indirectly helping to pay some of the claims of disabled workers. Prudential and the banks are not likely to applaud Manville's bankruptcy ploy.

Manville stockholders, who saw a share selling at $38 in 1977 but drop below $5 after the bankruptcy filing, are not going to be happy either — unless this action succeeds in forcing a federal bailout.

MANVILLE CLAIMS that many of the cancer victims were exposed to asbestos fibers while working in World War II shipyards where, on orders from the government, Manville used asbestos to fireproof ships. Manville's president, John A. McKinney, says the bankruptcy action would not have been necessary "if the government had accepted financial responsibility for its role in causing much of the disease."

Government is loathe to accept responsibility for the obvious reason that it would then become vulnerable to damage claims for illnesses allegedly caused by at least 200 toxic chemicals used by thousands of companies that do some work for Uncle Sam. But, then, perhaps the government should be held responsible — something that ought to be decided somewhere other than in a bankruptcy court.

Meanwhile, there is a lesson in this for the "free enterprisers" who have been attacking OSHA (The Occupational Safety and Health Administration). OSHA was created to help protect workers from chemicals like benzene, formaldehyde, PCB, vinyl chloride, which are suspected of causing leukemia, cancer, skin disease and liver damage, respectively. Companies that scream, "get OSHA off our backs" cannot expect to enrich themselves by recklessly using chemicals that kill workers and others and then ask the federal government to bail them out when the lawsuits start rolling in.

UI Medical School

To the editor:

The inception of the UI Medical School, Sept. 21, 1870, saw relatively few students and a small faculty. Carver Pavilion was a century away, University Towers a half century in the offing, and the west side of the campus lay quiet, amidst trees, grass and rolling acres of farmland.

The College of Medicine has received numerous honors during its 112 years. One distinction we of the present generation can appreciate is that from its beginning, the Medical School was co-educational — in 1870 this was new and startling, and it drew protests throughout the country.

At a recent History of Medicine Club meeting, Adolph Sachs, Professor Emeritus of Neurology, gave a lecture on the UI College of Medicine. Early origins, prior to 1870, that later had influence on the UI Medical School, can be traced to St. Charles and Rock Island, Ill., then across the Mississippi to Davenport and Keokuk, Iowa.

The east side of the Iowa river was the Medical School's first home. It may have remained a permanent home, but fire destroyed a beautiful new medical building in 1901, and much valuable material was totally lost.

The west side campus blossomed in 1919, with the erection of Children's Hospital. Two years later, the Psychiatric Hospital came on the scene, and University Towers was formally dedicated in the fall of 1928.

It is nearly impossible to capture the many faces who have been a part of the UI College of Medicine over these past years. Sachs mentioned several: the Sisters of Mercy and their involvement in the early hospital; the first dean, Dr. W.F. Peck; the current dean, Dr. John W. Eckstein.

This is a time to salute the UI College of Medicine for its continued development, its dedicated service and the recognition it brings to the UI and the people of Iowa.

Francis R. Lalor

Thanks, but no

To the editor:

This June, I voted in a gubernatorial primary election in Iowa for the first (and very probably the last) time. I have been in regular contact with the Democrats every since. First I got called for a survey when the Conlin property tax issue arose. Then I was called and asked if I would volunteer for the party. I politely refused. Then I was called and asked for money. I thought surely that would be the last of it, but no. Last week, someone called and asked if I wanted a Lynn Cutler sign for my yard.

I appreciate the hard work the Democratic Party is doing, but wish they would leave me alone. Had I realized that I would practically become public property just by voting in a primary election, I would certainly not have walked over in the rain to do so. The Democrats can rest assured that next time, not only will I not be interested in volunteering or giving money, but I'll think twice about voting at all.

Carla DeLay

Safe solution

To the editor:

Abortion violates human rights and must be banned. President Reagan deserves Democratic support against abortion.

Unborn babies might not have all adult properties, but they have the decisive ones: unmistakably human chromosomes different from their mothers.

When human life begins is unproven. Even pro-abortionists can't deny third trimester fetuses are human after seeing one. But does human life begin on pregnancy's 180th day or 179th, the 31st day or the 30th?

In moral conduct two sorts of doubt arise: duty and fact. Our duty to avoid killing guiltless human beings is certain. What is doubtful is fact: We don't know if the unborn become human at conception or later.

Persons in doubt about fact must follow the morally safer course. A farmer may not roll boulders downhill if people might walk below. A hunter may not shoot into bushes if the object there might be human.

Banning all abortion is thus the only conscionable solution. To prevent homicide we need laws declaring human life begins at conception. Only then will we be morally safe.

County United Way looks forward to another good year for campaign

By Mark Leonard
Staff Writer

Interest rates, not a corporation or any individual donor, were the top contributors to the United Way campaign last year in Johnson County.

"Last year, the interest on that money was the single biggest contributing factor to the campaign," Bill Stewart, chairman of the charity's allocation commission, said. "And we're looking for another great year this year."

Once the money gets to United Way it is sent to Iowa State Bank. At that point, United Way Treasurer Tracy Clark takes over.

"We try to keep the money fully invested at all times," Clark said. "We have money coming in and going out throughout the year."

He said timing is the key to investing for United Way in such things as money markets, since it is never known for certain when the money will be needed.

Mary Ann Volm, United Way's director in Johnson County, said the charity rotates banks every three years because the account balance "is a sizable amount of money and banks can benefit from it too, so we like to change every couple of years."

While the charity made approximately $12,000 through interest last year, the UI employees, the largest group of contributors, donated $77,800 of the $303,000 the United Way received.

THIS YEAR the charity has set a goal of $122,700 for the UI and a total of $350,000.

Although the 1981 donation figure was the lowest in the Big Ten last year, the UI average gift of $85 per employee was one of the highest reported in the Big Ten.

"We hope the generous friends we have at the UI remain generous, but at the same time we need for them to do better, especially in the area of small donations," said Mary Ann Volm, Johnson County United Way director.

Of the approximately 10,000 UI employees, about 900, or about 9 percent, gave to United Way last year, she said.

These figures compare with the largest corporate donor in the Iowa City area, Procter & Gamble, which will give a corporate donation of $12,000 this year. Last year, 433 employees from the plant donated a total of $24,793 to United Way, averaging $57.25 per giver.

"If everyone did like Procter & Gamble, we'd be rich," Volm said.

Mary Jo Small, UI assistant vice president for finance, said one of the reasons UI contributions to United Way lag behind other schools is the fact the UI "does not pick and choose the (charitable) organizations."

"I WOULD STRESS that there are a number of charitable organizations that are given to by the faculty and staff," she said. "The university encourages giving to these groups."

"For a number of years, the university has offered to send through campus mail, letters from these organizations," Small said.

Volm said this year UI employees will be able to donate by payroll deduction and be able to send that contribution to the payroll department by campus mail. Also, she said United Way will be working with the UI athletic department to help in their campaign to raise contributions.

"Some young men and women athletes will be going out to employee rallies to help raise funds this year," she said.

Paul Scott, personnel manager of the Iowa City Procter & Gamble plant, said they do two things to encourage the nearly 85 percent donation rate the facility gets.

"FIRST, we have only one campaign that is permitted in the plant," he said. "And secondly, we consolidate our energy into a campaign over a short period of time. We get everyone fired up to do it, and get it done."

He said United Way was picked as their charity because it had the "broadest coverage" Procter & Gamble could find.

"We want to be good citizens of the community and put our money into a local community organization that serves the people here," Scott said.

United Way administrative costs are also relatively low, Volm said. If, for example, someone donates $1 to United Way, 92½ cents goes directly to the organizations, while 7½ cents is used to help cover costs of annual contribution drives, and to pay salaries and overhead expenses.

In Johnson County, there are only two full-time United Way employees. "That's why we can keep administrative costs so low," Volm said.

BECAUSE of this, United Way relies heavily on the volunteers who give time to help the organization. Volunteers also make up United Way's planning and allocation division, which scrutinizes each agency's budget.

Volm said they try to get as broad a background of people from Johnson County in this division as possible so "no special interest group can control where the money goes."

After six years on the job, she said her attitude has changed toward the public. "I find that I like people a lot better now. I find that most people are kinder, braver and more generous than I ever dared to believe. I'm looking for another good year."

New 'Iowa Fight Song' recording by UI band produced by local duo

By Kristine Stemper
Staff Writer

Until now, the only version of the "Iowa Fight Song" readily available for public purchase was recorded by the University of Michigan's marching band, according to two people who recently released the UI favorite on a single record.

Todd A. Buckton, a UI business student, and Ron Bierma, manager of Discount Records in Iowa City, have recently joined efforts to produce a 45 rpm record that is now available in record stores state wide for $2.50.

They received permission from Dr. Morgan Jones, Director of the UI Marching Band, to use the band's master recordings of three songs.

"There just wasn't any sense in doing it any other way (without the UI band)," Buckton said.

ONE SIDE of the single features a hyped-up "Hawkeye Fever" with cheering and yelling in the background to "show what a Saturday afternoon football game in Kinnick Stadium would be like," he said. "On Iowa" and the "Iowa Fight Song" make up the second side.

Demand for Meredith Wilson's "Iowa Fight Song" reached an all-time high when the Hawkeyes traveled to Pasadena, Calif. last winter. The Rose Bowl appearance was a real inspiration to produce the record, Bierma said.

He feels he had an advantage because he knew there was a demand for the product through his job at Discount Records. "We would have thousands of people come in and ask for an Iowa record," he said.

The UI band cuts an album about every two years so band members have something to reminisce about, Bierma said. But only a small number of the records are printed, and Buckton and Bierma felt there was a market for them.

AFTER OBTAINING the rights to use a master tape from the marching band's most recent album, the first printing of the single began about a year ago.

Since then they have almost sold out of the first cut of 7,000 records, and are ready to print a few thousand more, "hopefully this week," Bierma said.

The two entrepreneurs are hoping the UI football team can turn in a winning season because, "Our sales are directly correlated with how the Hawkeyes do," Buckton said.

Buckton and Bierma had planned to set up the release of their record for last season, but when KRNA came out with their disco version of the "Iowa Fight Song," they figured it would not be the most opportune time.

They did, however, get some figures on how many records KRNA sold in order to get an idea of how many they should print.

The UI Marching Band is receiving "a few cents off of each record that's sold," Jones said.

Buckton said, "The nice thing about it is the band needs to be recognized more — they're a really excellent band."

Improvements

Northern Iowa will not be available when the regents present the budget to the Iowa Legislature this winter, Richey said.

"There just isn't that much money around or on the horizon for that matter," he said.

But several UI projects survived the cut in the capital improvements recommendations.

The board staff recommended the regents pursue funding for the UI law school, equipment for the new theater addition and the communications center and funding for renovating the Chemistry-Botany Building. Some funds were also recommended for utility improvements and fire safety.

The regents will also consider a proposed 6-percent tuition increase for the first half of the 1983-85 biennium. The staff's recommendations for tuition increases would raise in-state undergraduate tuition from $1,040 to 1,104.

In addition, the regents will hear an appeal from the Iowa coal industry regarding a bid that was let to an Indiana coal company.

Faculty

we should concentrate on maintaining our existing position competitively."

Wayne Franklin, co-chairman of the UI Faculty Senate Budgetary Planning and Review Committee, disagrees with Richey's "times-are-tough" reasoning.

"Even though times may be hard in Iowa, we have to keep this issue alive. Up to around 1976 or 1977, the real income in Iowa was growing about 30 percent, yet faculty salaries decreased. If we can't get something to take care of our problems in good times, I don't see the logic of putting things off now that we're in bad times."

It's important that the vitality fund remain a top priority to the regents, Donald Heistad, UI Faculty Senate president said. Heistad said he thinks faculty morale has improved because the regents have been supportive in bringing the faculty's message to the legislature.

"I think it would be a great blow if the regents were to back off of this now," Heistad said.

FACULTY SENATE member George McCormick said the importance of achieving competitive salaries has not diminished because the state is having trouble paying its bills.

"Other institutions know that people are vulnerable here. There comes a point where you'd be foolish to turn down an opportunity for a better salary elsewhere," he said. "And when you lose people, you lose the cream of the crop."

"There's no question that your better people start looking elsewhere," said Eleanor Birch, another faculty senate member. But, she said, many faculty members have not moved because of high interest rates for housing.

"Now, interest rates are coming down, though — which could encourage the so-called 'faculty exodus.' " Still, Birch said Richey's proposal to sit on the vitality fund at least another year "may ultimately be the best choice."

"WHEN THE TIME comes that we do have a chance at it, we may look like we're crying wolf," she said. "My only hope is that the economy will turn around."

Franklin said a more serious consequence of low faculty salaries is morale. "Dispirited faculty don't get as excited about their work. People get distracted."

"Their concentration is broken. When it comes to the decision of whether to stay up past midnight to prepare material, for example, they're not likely to make the extra effort."

"Most of us didn't become teachers to make a lot of money," Franklin said. "But now we don't know if we'll be able to provide education for our own kids. It's like a doctor not being able to provide medical treatment for his own child."

Budget

petitive levels. The original regents docket recommendations "include no funds for academic quality and vitality. Rather it is proposed that the emphasis during the current budget cycle be on maintaining the present competitive position of the institutions in faculty and professional employee salaries."

R. Wayne Richey, regents executive secretary, has said he believes the fund should not be proposed for another year because of Iowa's present poor economic conditions.

The budgets recommended by the board staff and requested by the institutions represent an increase of 1.5 percent and 9.8 percent over this year's $517 million budget.

The UI general fund requests for 1984 are about $174.5 million compared with the staff's recommendation of about $160.9 million. Based on the current UI budget of $158.6 million, an increase of about 10 percent was requested by the UI and an increase of about 1.4 percent was recommended by the board.

RICHEY SAID the recommended levels were kept within 6 percent of current levels for the first half of the biennium and 7 percent for the second half of the biennium because of the tough economic climate in Iowa.

"The board office recommendations reflect the current state's economy and the austere look for the next 18-30 months," the budget proposal states.

Randall Beanson, UI vice president for finance, said Monday although the state seems to be in dire fiscal straits, "it is incumbent upon the institutions to describe as clearly and as forcibly as possible what the needs of the institutions are."

hospital or convalescing at home. Attacks of multiple sclerosis hit her in January, brought on by the stress and emotional trauma of the rape, she insists.

THOUGH SHE attempted to attend classes at the UI, her health eventually failed her and her education was set back a year, which she said was a major loss and an impediment to her plans to attend law school.

Now, she is planning to take further legal action — one of the first civil suits in a rape case in Iowa history to recover medical costs and other expenses resulting from the crime.

Tom Riley, the victim's attorney, would not confirm that a suit will be filed, but said that such suits are a rarity in rape cases.

"That is the advantage the rapist has — the victim generally doesn't want the publicity that could come from a suit," Riley said.

But Miller said though the money involved in civil suits attracts publicity, more and more are being heard now. "They're becoming more common. You're going to see it more and more. My personal feeling is that in many cases, it's well warranted."

THE WOMAN said she is more careful of who her companions are now, more than a year after the rape, but believes there is little way to prevent the same thing from happening again.

"It's something people really don't want to think about — there's nothing you can do to prevent an acquaintance rape. It's somebody you know and trust."

She said, "My parents taught me to be very cautious. I have a whistle on my keychain and mace in my purse and the whole bit I learned that my cousin who had been murdered had also been raped."

More than 80,000 reported rapes were accounted for in the FBI's 1981 Uniform Crime Report.

Rights unit raps council reaction

By Doug Herold
Staff Writer

City Human Rights commissioners, upset over criticism directed at them during an informal meeting of the Iowa City Council, rebuffed the council's interpretation of an investigation into discriminatory groups that do business with the city.

Commissioner Edward Raupp said at the commission's Monday night meeting that "unless the press was completely perverse" it didn't seem to him that the council responded with anything except "a knee-jerk reaction."

The report on the commission's minutes at an informal council meeting Sept. 13, "went straight to their gut without passing through any grey matter. It didn't seem to me they were responsive to the concerns of the citizens," Raupp said.

AT THE SEPT. 13 informal meeting, Councilors Larry Lynch and John Balmer protested the commission's decision to investigate the possibility the city is "interacting with one or more civic organizations which are discriminatory in that females are not allowed to become members." The matter was brought up after councilors reviewed the minutes of the commission's August meeting.

Monday night, Chairman John Watson stressed the commission initiated the investigation only after the city's Affirmative Action Task Force brought it to the commissioners' attention.

Commissioners said they were upset they learned of the council's feelings indirectly, through reports in the press.

"I object to us getting into a battle of words with the council," through a press medium, Commissioner Elliott Johnson said.

Johnson, Raupp and Commissioner Nancy Jordison volunteered for a committee which will look at the policies and by-laws of civic groups that donate money or services to the city.

The committee also will provide "corporate support" for Raupp when he composes a letter to the city about the matter.

After the meeting, Raupp tempered his comments, saying "the point I was making was governments are installed to serve the needs of their constituents.

Here was a case where constituents expressed their concerns and "it's necessary the government be responsive. It's a syllogism."

Johnson said although he didn't attend the council's informal meeting, it didn't seem to him the councilors were responsive about the discrimination matter or the commission recommendation that the city hold "all public meetings of city boards, commissions and departments ... in rooms that are accessible to the handicapped."

Other commissioners stressed that remodeling — something the council has said is too expensive — was not the only solution to the accessibility problem. They suggested other buildings could be used to house the city meetings.

There was a case where constituents pressed their concerns and "it's necessary the government be responsive. It's a syllogism."

Johnson said although he didn't attend the council's informal meeting, it didn't seem to him the councilors were responsive about the discrimination matter or the commission recommendation that the city hold "all public meetings of city boards, commissions and departments ... in rooms that are accessible to the handicapped."

Other commissioners stressed that modeling — something the council said is too expensive — was not the solution to the accessibility problem. They suggested other buildings could be used to house the meetings.

At the beginning of the nineteenth century, astronomer William Herschel coined the term "invisible light" to explain the infrared light phenomenon he found in the color spectrum during a series of experiments.

Artist-photographers have recently begun to explore and use infrared for its evocative and emotional possibilities. "Invisible Light," the current display at the UI Museum of Art, features 65 infrared photos that exhibit curator Robert Cartmell chose from over one thousand submitted to him.

The techniques for use of infrared film are difficult: the film is unstable and uncontrollable by ordinary standards; light meters do not accurately assess its exposure times; since it is very sensitive to heat, it can easily deteriorate even in someone's pocket.

But its effects, when used properly, are remarkable. Because the film is sensitive to heat, it provides unusual nuances of tone — tree leaves are seen as light, while rocks and wood often appear only as dark images.

In Minor White's "Two Barns and a Shadow," for instance, the long line of a utility pole shadow reaches into the lower half of the image, giving an ominous aspect to an almost idyllic rural scene. And in his "Cobblestone House," an Edgar Allan Poe sense of decadence emanates from the dark structure surrounded by wispy branches of trees.

LUTHER SMITH's portrait of "Brenda" displays the eeriness that infrared photos produce with humans: the subject's dark brooding eyes, combined with the soft blurred contours and the exposed veins which the infrared process produces suggest an unearthly being.

Robert Cartmell, who spoke Sunday at the Museum, said that he began working with infrared himself in the early 1970s when he was searching for a more interesting method to photograph rollercoasters. By using different colored filters he achieved a sense of night even though he was shooting in day.

Cartmell thought many of his images looked like a "peaceable kingdom" and was surprised to learn that many viewers saw infrared pictures as sinister.

Indeed, though many of the pictures in this exhibit are landscapes of trees with dreamlike, flowing branches, many others project a decidedly menacing distortion of light and shadow.

In Abigail Perlmutter's "Tree With Orchid Plants," for instance, the distortion of tonalities changes the exotic flowers into foreboding shapes.

Two particularly effective sets of photos, one by Simon Marsden of Irish castle ruins, the other of the gardens of Versailles by Peter Laytin, evoke the fantastic aspects of the medium. Laytin's work looks like it could serve as an adjunct to the movie Last Year at Marienbad.

THOUGH INFRARED technology may be held responsible for many of the ghostly characteristics of these photos, the artist's eye and technician's control determine the success of the best of the photos.

The question Cartmell suggested in his lecture — is infrared photography merely pyrotechnics? — has to be posed in this context. And the answer may well be that the technique, like any other, is successful only to the degree that its practitioner controls its limitations and employs the medium in the interest of his own vision.

"Invisible Light" will continue at the UI Museum of Art through October 17.

Pop era reviewed in 'La Dolce Vita'

By Randy Wood
Special to the Daily Iowan

La Dolce Vita is a Rosetta stone of the 1950s and 1960s pop culture. In director Federico Fellini's stylized milieu, journalists and jet-setters, beatniks and prostitutes, rock singers and glamour stars all make their appearances and get their moment on center stage.

The film's obsessions with the emptiness of celebrity and the pettiness of the process of starmaking anticipate Andy Warhol, while the delight in broadly drawn "stars" ridiculously thrown together by the mass media smacks of Frank Tashlin.

Tashlin, the cartoonist-turned-director who helped create such 1950s icons as Jerry Lewis, Jayne Mansfield and Tony Randall, was heralded by Jean-Luc Godard and others as the inventor of a truly modern style of comedy. This style, as it turned out, barely lasted the decade and now seems, like tail fins and rockabilly, to be an index of 1950s Americana — symbols of crude modernity.

The dynamic congruence of Tashlin and Warhol would be unimaginable without La Dolce Vita to translate the vulgar into the chic. Just as Tashlin used Jayne Mansfield as a cartoon caricature of Marilyn Monroe, so Fellini's caricature of that caricature, Anita Ekberg, goes even further and anticipates Warhol's reinvention of the star system with Edie Sedgwick, Candy Darling, Holly Woodlawn, et al.

IT SHOULD COME as no surprise that Tashlin used Anita Ekberg before he found Jayne Mansfield, nor that Nico Ozark from the orgy scene in La Dolce Vita should resurface six years later as the vacuous star of The Velvet Underground and Nico, produced by Andy Warhol.

In all these cases, the elaborate stylization of Hollywood is turned back on itself and what remains are curiously flamboyant individuals who know they are Stars and accordingly embrace the ethics of the "Superstar."

These ethics, like those of the true aristocrat, the messianic crackpot or the artistic genius, are distinct and above those of the masses. When Ekberg is asked whether she sleeps in pajamas or a nightie, her answer ("I sleep in two drops of French perfume") is given the weight of a proclamation of Napoleon. Stardom in these films becomes grotesque.

Tony Randall in Tashlin's Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter? is the surrogate for the audience: a "non-star" who is both frightened and finally transformed by Mansfield. The journalist played by Marcello Mastroianni serves the same function in La Dolce Vita, only instead of one Jayne Mansfield, there are dozens, each one receiving about 15 minutes of stardom.

IN ANDY WARHOL'S plan, there was no need for a spectator like Randall or Mastroianni to mediate between the audience and the star of the hour: it was Warhol's avowed project to let everyone be famous for 15 seconds. This democratization of the pop process hasn't yet become a reality, but it has come closer and closer — just ask Farrah.

Fellini shot La Dolce Vita in "Totalscope," the Italian cinemascope process. This wide screen format does more than just signify crude conspicuous consumption, however.

It allows Fellini to linger over the shock effect of the star of the hour — the way the restaurant, the villa, the fountain, even the cathedral are altered by the narcissism of the reigning deity: putting Anita Ekberg inside St. Peter's Cathedral is like putting the Chrysler Building next to the Taj Mahal.

THIS EFFECT is lost, however, when the film is shown in the standard screen ration on TV or in the classroom, which is probably why La Dolce Vita is usually lumped with the upper-class "ennui" films of Bergman and Antonioni instead of pop classics like Blow Up and now Diva.

Tonight the Bijou is presenting a sharp 35-millimeter print of La Dolce Vita in Totalscope. It's a rare opportunity to see a major art work in the form in which it was intended to be seen.

Randy Wood is a member of the Bijou board. This is part of a series of articles on films presented by the Bijou.

Entertainment today

AT THE BIJOU: Tonight's big show is La Dolce Vita, Federico Fellini's masterful look at Western decadence in the age of ennui. Marcello Mastroianni stars as a bored gossip columnist who's dreadfully tired of Rome's cafe society but won't do anything to escape.

Also starring Anouk Aimee, Anita Ekberg and Lex "Tarzan" Barker, La Dolce Vita establishes the sexy, arty sleaze that today defines "new wave" styles: It's the look you want to know better because you can't get away from it. 8:50 p.m.

Joseph Lewis' The Big Combo is a 1955 film noir starring Cornel Wilde as a detective who's almost as loony as the crime boss he's trying to snare (Richard Conte). Jean Wallace plays the woman caught between the two.

Lewis, who along with Edgar Ulmer reigned as "King of the B's," is noted for his gritty style, so fast-paced that it becomes desperate. The Big Combo, along with his Gun Crazy, stands as a nearly perfect example of noir technique. 7 p.m.

Port of Shadows, a Marcel Carne-Jacques Prevert collaboration (they did Children of Paradise), develops a fatalistic plot almost identical to that of The Big Combo. In fact, Port sets up many of the narrative and technical strategies that American noir directors used and improved. Starring French icons Jean Gabin (Grand Illusion) and Michele Morgan (Les Grandes Manoeuvres). 8:45 p.m.

TV: NBC's already-controversial "The Man Who Shot the Pope: A Study in Terrorism" airs tonight. Veteran red-baiter Marvin Kalb "suggests" (which, given the legitimacy provided by TV, is the same as "announces") that Mehmet Agca was part of a Soviet-backed conspiracy to off the Pontiff because he was a symbol of Poland's Solidarity, or something.

This documentary should be fascinating both as an in-depth study of an assassin and as yet another installation of the American ability to create conspiratorial order out of complete chaos — this time on a global scale. Thomas Pynchon, where are you? 9 p.m., KWWL-7.

We would be remiss in this space if we did not mention the Emmy Awards telecast last Sunday night. While most awards ceremonies are nauseating in their excess, the Emmys succeeded in making even the Reagan inaugural ball look like a backyard barbecue.

From the Marine Corps escort and "drill" inspired, evidently, by the box-office success of the overrated Officer and a Gentleman at the opening (once again, the mavens of television prove themselves incapable of accepting their medium as capable of standing on its own) to the humiliation of having terminally ill Kate Smith wheeled out to lead the crowd in "God Bless America" at the end, the Emmys seemed more designed to announce the landing of American forces in Beirut than they did to award the best TV shows of the past year.

That may well be for the best, considering an institution that found "Night of 100 Stars" more deserving of an award than "SCTV" and that found Roy Scheider an acceptable substitute for Edward R. Murrow.

Nonetheless, the politics of this year's Emmy Awards set a new standard for toadying to the reactionary sentiments of Ronald Reagan, TV Guide and the Moral Majority. It scared the goosebumps off our goosebumps.

French conductor Reynald Giovaninetti leads the symphony with a unique style of imagination and color. The Chicago Symphony Orchestra's long history of superb conductors and performers, and numerous Grammy Awards, have earned it a reputation as one of the finest orchestras in the world. The Hawkeye No. 1 mens' soccer team, a new club with no official coach as of yet, defeated the Cedar Rapids Rowdies, 10-0, Sunday in Cedar Rapids.

The Hawks were led in scoring by Scott Magnes and Graham Tobin who scored two goals apiece. Magnes also had two assists in the game.

"The Hawkeye team played an excellent game," said Dr. Bernard Fallon, publicity chairman for the club. "All goal-scoring opportunities were taken and there was constant pressure on the opposing goal keeper."

The Hawks next host the Cedar Rapids Comets on Sunday. Fallon believes that the Comets will "greater test our abilities."

Less fortunate was the Hawkeye No. 2 soccer team. They lost to the Cedar Rapids Comets, 3-0, on Sunday.

As a new team with no coach, team representative Jacques Bourgeois said the squad has "a lot of talent, but we have not put our act together yet."

THE BICYCLISTS of Iowa City sponsored the annual Century Ride Sunday, ending its summer season.

"The Century ride is mostly for people who like to do touring on their bikes," explained Kathy McGinn, chairman of the event.

The 100-mile ride boasted 115 participants and a 100-mile trophy dash. Two people from Iowa City were winners in the trophy dash. Michael Grohek took the licensed division, and Tony Weil won the men's division. Barb Donovan of Cedar Falls was the women's division winner.

The Bicyclists club's next major event will be the Cyclocross, Oct. 17, at Sugar Bottom. It is a race over fields, through mud and around trees.

"Cyclocross is ballet in the mud," said club member Shelly Plattner.

The Iowa City Women's Rugby Club defeated both Chicago Lake Shore and Indiana University last Saturday in Chicago, raising its season record to 3-1.

In the Chicago Lake Shore game, the Iowa City team won 13-0. Tanya Fry made a post point in the first half and in the second half, Jean O'Leary and Jennifer Jantsen scored tries. Fry also scored a two-point conversion.

In the second game, Iowa City defeated Indiana University, 16-0. Sarah Lussman scored two tries for Iowa City and Lucky Roberts and Sue Chase each scored once.

The rugby team will be at home to face the Columbia, Mo. team next Saturday in City Park at 1 p.m.

The men's side rugby team defeated Des Moines, one of the top teams in the state, 13-6, Saturday. The B side lost, 6-0.

Scoring for the Hawks were Hiram Melendz with three goal kicks and a try by Mike Reagen.

The rugby team travels to Davenport next Sunday to meet the Quad City Irish.

On the line

The games were just too easy last week, so the sports staff at The Daily Iowan decided to really get tough in this week's On the Line contest.

This week's winner will be truly deserving of the grand prize eight-gallon keg, compliments of Mama's.

Mama's will be providing the beer as well as half their place to drink it in. Again, get your entries in early so we can determine if they are legal or not. To be legal, the ballots must follow the simple rules, first of which is the 5 p.m. deadline on Thursday. If your entry is not in the On the Line box, located in Room 111 of the Communications Center, it will be disallowed.

Besides that, as always, no DI employee or person under 19 years of age can enter — sorry freshmen. Simply circle the teams you think will win and fill in the predicted score of the tiebreaker. If you predict a tie score, circle both teams.

This week's winners:

Missouri at Texas
Northern Illinois at Northwestern
Stanford at Ohio State
UCLA at Michigan
Iowa at Arizona
Southern California at Oklahoma
Arizona State at California
Nebraska at Penn State
Purdue at Notre Dame
Tiebreaker:
Pittsburgh at Illinois.
