Charles Manatt, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, cited Sen. Roger Jepsen, R-Iowa, as one of three prime targets for Democratic elimination in the next election, along with Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Sen. Gordon Humphrey,

Hotel chains bidding for city project By Mark Leonard

Downtown Iowa City will be the next home of either a Sheraton Hotel or a Hilton Hotel, City Manager Neal Berlin announced at the Iowa City Council's informal meeting Monday.

Representatives from both hotel chains made proposals for the project before the bidding for the on-again, off-again project ended Monday afternoon. Sheraton has proposed an $8.7 million development, while Hilton proposed a $10 million plan.

Berlin added that Hilton's representatives, Mid-City Development Associates of Minnesota, will be meeting with officials from the cities are hungrier than we are. Armstrong's department store in Cedar Rapids today to discuss plans and possible ways of funding. Armstrong's, which has been named the preferred developer by the Iowa City Council to construct a store adjacent to the hotel, has been struggling to find financing for the project.

Councilors now have 30 to 60 days to decide on a preferred developer for the hotel. Several developers have shown interest in building a downtown hotel, but so far, all have either bowed out or have been unable to secure

In other action, the council met with Iowa City Chamber of Commerce officials to discuss a report on economic development for Iowa City.

THE CITY and chamber said they wanted to work closely with the UI to develop programs to entice high ogy firms into relocating in Iowa City.

"Everybody in the world is looking to attract and expand industry, Berlin said. "We're going to have to look at something unique and look at what this city can offer." Martin Kelly from the chamber's economic development committee said the city has been losing potential new businesses because of a lack of a comprehensive plan and a lack of land available for such growth. Representatives from United Airlines, he said were in Iowa City a year ago looking for space to house its national reservations office, but could not find any suitable space.

Among other benefits that it would have brought to the community, the company would have employed a large number of college students.

Mayor Mary Neuhauser agreed that the city needs an economic development policy. "Des Moines is going to be very aggressive in this area. Unless we get our act together, they will go to Des Moines.'

KEITH KAFER, executive vice president of the chamber, said, "I think the thing to remember is that most of And when you're hungry ... you fight.'

A high-technology corridor in the state should be established between Iowa City, Cedar Rapids and the Quad Cities, he said. One key factor to make that work is a "first class" airport in Cedar Rapids.

"It's a priority," Kafer said. Not because of the brand new terminal building, but because of what the airlines and customers that frequent the facility will think. But before thinking about a hightechnology corridor, Kafer said the city must look at land needs. "We have to have the land. If we don't have it when firms come, they're gone."

KELLY NOTED, "Our selling point is the university. They are the key to this. They have got a lot of resources we can use.'

Everyone agreed that the key to success for the plan will be leadership and cooperation that the chamber, city and UI exhibit. "For this to be effective, all three groups have got to give more than just lip service to it," Councilor John McDonald said. "It's extremely important, otherwise it's just another

The council said it will appoint Berlin to be the city's representative on an economic development committee, which will include representatives of the chamber and the UI.

Nuclear bomb film stresses destruction

By Jeff Beck

A small audience was largely impressed with the possibilities of nuclear destruction displayed in a film at the UI Monday night.

The campus event was one of several free programs scheduled this week in conjunction with Nuclear Weapons Awareness Week.

Cinematic simulations and replays of nuclear explosions, clips of the gaunt and scarred Japanese survivors of bombings and an intellectual discussion of the potential for a nuclear conflict beginning in Western Europe were featured in a film shown at Van

"It's hard to imagine something of that scale," said Jean Robinson, who said the film helped her realize the destruction possible in a nuclear holocaust. "You're looking at millions of people here. When you realize you could be one of those people, it makes

"Misunderstanding of the present is the inevitable consequence of ignorance of the past." Marc Bloch; The Historian's Craft. If a recent study is accurate, high school students in Iowa may be ill-equipped to understand the world they live in because of their lack of grounding in history, both national and global. And they are likely to remain ill-equipped, because so far there has been little response to the study's warnings.

Several Iowa history professors, including representatives from the UI, Grinnell and Cornell colleges, released the study's findings in 1979, and have apparently been greeted with silence ever since. Yet their results may indicate some important trends that deserve serious consideration.

The researchers were critical of the way history is taught in Iowa high schools. In particular, they believe Iowa's students are receiving less information about world history, in a time when the world is becoming increasingly complex and interdependent. They recommend that the state require a world history course for high school graduation - a recommendation that has been

Also emerging from the study was the fact that 87 percent of Iowa's history teachers are men. Surprised at this, the researchers went on to discover that 57 percent of the teachers also identified themselves as coaches — only two of these were women. This discovery raises the possibility that many of these teachers are coaches first, history teachers second.

In a state that worships sport as Iowa does, this is not so surprising, but it is disturbing. The study suggests that "A local school district ought never to search first for an individual who can coach a particular sport and then to find a position for that person on the faculty." That such a recommendation should have to be made at all should be incredible, but like the rest of the study, it has caused nary a ripple in the general complacency about Iowa's "educational excellence."

Living in Iowa, it is easy to forget there are other nations out there that don't necessarily share our priorities and assumptions, and whose present cultures are a product of different histories. To understand those cultures as they are today we must understand, even superficially, those histories. As many have pointed out, it is impossible fully to comprehend the Middle East without knowing something about events there and in Europe for the last few centuries. And perhaps the Soviet bogeyman could be seen more clearly by Americans armed with a little knowledge of recent history.

Being unaware of history can be disorienting and even dangerous. Simon Wiesenthal was here not long ago to remind us of the Holocaust; soon all the eyewitnesses will be dead, and we will only have history to teach us. Let's not forget that there are those who deny the reality of the 6 million dead, just as there are those in Japan who are trying to rewrite the history of World War II - only our ignorance will allow them to do this.

Recently, the information officer for the UI's Air Force ROTC unit was asked about the increasing numbers of students becoming interested in a career in the services. He explained that the "Vietnam aura" around the military had faded, saying "I don't know if our kids today have any idea of what people were complaining about" back then. If that is true, then it is a sad indictment of the education "kids today" are receiving in their own country's history, let alone that of the rest of the world.

By depriving "kids" of history, we are depriving them of the chance to develop a full and mature understanding of their world. For as Cicero wrote, some years ago, "Not to know what happened before one was born is to remain a child."

Handling winter

Don't let the latest heat wave fool you. Winter is approaching fast and with it comes the mounds of snow for which Iowa is notorious - not to mention icy roads, bad visibility and dangerous driving conditions in general.

"We believe we are prepared," says Bernard Ortgeis, director of the Iowa Department of Transportation. Indeed, this year's arsenal against the harsh winter elements seems formidible.

Almost one fourth of the year's road maintenance budget, over $14.5 million, has been allocated for snow and ice removal. The IDOT employs 1,460 workers at 138 different locations to help with the project. Their equipment includes 712 medium trucks, 146 heavy trucks, 126 four-wheel drive vehicles, 100 motor graders, 170 front-end loaders, 19 large snow blowers and eight snow blowing attachments. Supplies include 200,000 tons of sand, 32,000 tons of road salt, and another 55,770 tons of salt are still under

This year the IDOT has ordered 100 tons of an experimental road de-icer that is alleged not to rust cars and bridges the way rock salt does. The compound, calcium magnesium acetate, was developed last winter by chemists from the federal DOT.

Everyone from top meteorological scientists to wooly bear caterpillar readers has predicted a wicked winter this year. It is reassuring to learn that the state has taken precautions to help ensure that most Iowans won't be completely snowbound when the bad weather hits.

ET ME TELL you a story: When he was in the Phillipnes - it was 1944 - my father built a radio from junk found around his camp. Done, he invited his platoon to his bunk, to see it work.

He touched speaker wires to the radio. A voice emerged. Everyone cheered.

But Barlow wasn't smart enough to leave well enough alone.

"Wait a minute. This thing's not plugged in.' The men started to laugh. Someone noticed Barlow was holding the unplugged plug in his hand. "He's right." The men laughed

Barlow tried to ignore them. He adjusted the dial. But the one tinny station came in, no matter where he tur-

Everyone was watching him, amused by his perplexity. He reached forward, slowly, grabbed the one tube sticking out from the radio. He pulled it out. The radio kept playing. The men kept laughing.

Barlow figured it out the next day. The army had set up a transmitter nearby. His radio, somehow, vibrated to its frequency, as a tooth's filling sometimes will. The speaker once connected, picked up those vibrations, making them audible.

MY FATHER SAYS he learned to Opinion accept what works, and to take what credit he could from that. But he's

The other day I was watching the TV news. They had a clip on of Reagan campaigning in Texas. Interest rates at 12 percent, he said, and the stockmarket rally proved his economic policies were working.

He was, I think, playing my father's

But he's not as honest - or naive as my father. For what has he done? He cut taxes; he increased taxes. Interest rates are going down because fewer and fewer can afford to borrow. The stock market is going up because investors see corporations enticing them with short-term profits (a result of Reagan's tax cut?) rather than with long-term reinvestments (the purpose of Reagan's tax cut). Neither of these should be to Reagan's credit.

But he makes as though they are. In a way, though, Reagan should be exonerated - and he would be, had he not claimed successes not his - from blame for our economic condition. The problems are greater than even the leader of the central economic power on earth can control.

The problems are several. And each definition exposes further complications. But a look at only two can show that even Reagan, as he now operates. can do little more than give the "quick

First, world population is growing at an "impossible" rate. We're faced with the possibility of a population doubling in 20 years.

THIS MAY NOT seem crucial to U.S. economics, but it is.

We learned, from Korea and Japan in the 1950s, from Taiwan in the 60s, what the impact of cheap labor can be on our domestic market. If you don't believe it, talk to someone once employed in textiles, in electronics.

And now India is industrializing, and China. Imagine how many people live in India. There are more in China.

And import quotas, we've learned, aren't the answer.

And what about Mexico? Population grows fast there. And, as long as there are jobs in the United States, the stream of workers into the country will continue. So, even if U.S. population stabilizes, world population pressures will keep our unemployment

Second, there is the limitation of resources

We are running out. Of oil, of coal, of everything. And, as resources become scarcer and harder to reach, those who possess them (Arabs?) are going to charge more and more for them. The current oil glut may lull us into thinking prices have stabilized. Logic, however, makes us realize the situation is only temporary. Whatever Reagan may tell us. his policies have failed to address either of these problems — and both must be resolved if our present economic

It must be one of two things. Either Jeffrey Miller and John Voland spoke with a different Barney Kessel than me after "The Great Guitars" Hancher performance on Oct. 9, or the placement of "Arts/Entertainment Editor" following one's name endows supernatural powers of interpretation. Those powers would then allow the reviewer to sense a performer's mood without any supporting factual information. (DI, Oct. 12.)

Miller and Voland obviously enjoyed a splendid show, and their response to the "jazz guitar virtuosity" displayed by the trio was most positive. However, they refused to leave a good review at rest. Some aspect of omniscient artistic knowledge had to slither into the final draft.

The comment regarding Hancher Auditorium's surmised inhibition of the players' performance is totally erroneous. Barney Kessel stated after the show that, "You should be very proud of this auditorium. Its acoustics better. You got a good night from us because of it.

The performers certainly felt they were near perfection. The air in the Green Room was relaxed and pleasant. "The Great Guitars" knew the audience was treated to a marvelous show, and they fully experienced the warm response of those in attendance.

Whether Miller and Voland surmised otherwise is their own prerogative. But as for me, I will take Amid reports of renewed fighting in the two-year-old Iran-Iraq war, I was not really surprised to hear that Iran has rejected yet another U.N. Security Council call for a cease-fire.

Like their invasion of the Iraqi territory, earlier this summer, the Iranian attacks are aimed at toppling the regime of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, and extending Khomeini's theocratic rule in the region. The and audience inspired us to perform Iranian invasion last July was a disastrous failure, with some 30,000 Iranian deaths and thousands of casualities and prisoners.

In a related development, a report and a number of authenticated photos have been released by Mojahedin-e-Khalq, Khomeini's main domestic opposition, charging that Khomeini's fanatical "Islamic Guards" have massacred substantial numbers of unarmed Iraqi POWs. Citing reports from Iranian Army officers, the report indicates that the POWs were shot after refusing to chant slogans praising the Avatollah.

But for a regime as savage and merciless as Khomeini's, which has murdered thousands of innocent Iranians and has continued a bloody war mainly to justify its policy of torture inside the country, not even these charges seem impossible. Nancy Heydemann

Support field hockey

To the editor:

After attending women's field hockey games at Kinnick Stadium, we are disappointed with the lack of attention given to the nation's numberone-ranked field hockey team by its athletic department.

The chief reason for our disappointment is that there was I use of either scoreboard even while the host team competed.

During the game between Iowa and Northwestern, Iowa led by one goal is the second half with Northwestern threatening on several penalty corners. Unknown to the fans and more important, to the players, was the amount of time that remained in order for Iowa to secure a victory.

With time as Iowa's ally the fans constantly asked the official timer for the game time, surely drawing her attention from her field responsibilities.

We are sure we are not alone in our request for the respect due the UI's number one team by its athletic department; we hope the other teams were not given an impression of low interest by the athletic department through the less than full use facilities

Program funding is disputed program and why it is needed at the

Extra funding for an alcohol awareness program was approved by the Collegiate Association Council without full knowledge about the program, various members of the council argued Monday night.

We were railroaded into passing (the recommendation)," CAC member Sharon McMulin said, because the council was not allowed enough time to fully consider the nature of the program.

Some council members indicated the program's budget request was approved because it is included in CAC's Student Activity Fee Recommendation which will be discussed at next week's Board of Regents meeting.

CAC President Carol Soul said the funding proposal was discussed only briefly at its Nov. 1 meeting.

She said council executives had not even heard of the alcohol awareness program until Oct. 27 when Harley Feldick, director of Student Health, requested $1.11 per student for funding the program at a meeting between Philip Hubbard, vice president of student services, and executive members of CAC, student senate, and associated residence halls.

MONDAY NIGHT'S meeting was the first time CAC members received detailed information about the alcohol awareness program, and that information was only in the form of a lengthy paper, CAC Vice President Ken Albrecht said.

McMulin complained she didn't get to read Feldick's proposal until the actual voting process had begun Monday night. "He didn't make himself available when we voted on it,' preventing members from asking questions about the proposal.

Several CAC members said they didn't understand why Feldick didn't meet with the council to discuss the proposal, especially since he requested a large amount of money.

"Everyone seems to be taking guesses about what he's going to do,' CAC member Ed Koufer said.

A "quiet sort of crisis" was presented to Iowa City residents for comment during a public meeting Monday night that will be remembered by the seven Iowa City citizens who attended for its long periods of silence and the meager attendance.

Final approval of a renewed franchise must come from Iowa City voters through a special referendum.

Researched and produced by the Union of Concerned Scientists, the film presented the views of former Defense Secretary Robert McNamara and top military strategists, and scientists in both the United States and Europe.

THE MOVIE detailed how "what could begin as an attempt to stop a Russian tank assault (on West Germany) could end in global nuclear war. Europe would be destroyed. The United States and Russia would be destoyed as well."

In the film, McNamara said the policy of "flexible response" that the Reagan administration supports is no longer appropriate for the situation in Western Europe. He said the United States should commit itself, just as the Soviets have, not to initiate a nuclear He pointed out some shocking statistics to support his judgment. The film reported that current nuclear weapons have explosive capacities up to 1,000 times that of the bomb dropped on the Japanese city of Hiroshima, and world nuclear capacity is now equal to approximately 1.5 million Hiroshima

That bomb, which thrust civilization rudely into the nuclear age on Aug. 6, 1945, destroyed Hiroshima, killing and ful search for the killer was fatally injuring 75,000 people.

European nuclear strategists interviewed for the film attested that a Soviet tank invasion smashing through a wall of conventional defenses in West Germany would draw low-yield nuclear attacks.

THEY WARNED such an attack would escalate into a regional, continental and global conflict - with no winners and few survivors.

Tim Twito, a member of Physicians for Social Responsibility, said the film enforced the concept that deployment of nuclear weapons "is not a limited military procedure .... That is overlooked by people who would view it as a viable military option.

"In the heat of battle, we would lose this rationale to avoid using nuclear weapons," he said.

Eleanor Miller, another member of Physicians for Social Responsibility, said she and many other people evidenced by the support of nuclear freeze resolutions in the Nov. 2 elections - favor a freeze and a no-firstuse policy.

"The people in both the United States and the Soviet Union want a freeze. The people there are just like we are. They live in fear, they love their babies just as much. The governments are standing in the way," she said.

Jay Robinson, a member of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, said the film was part of a greater effort reminding people the threat is there "and they can't hide from it."

Jepsen, Helms and Humphrey are 'prime examples of senators who are out of touch with their districts and far too ideological to represent their constituents," she said.

Lewis said Jepsen's vulnerability became apparent from talks with Iowa voters. In a statement released last week,

Jepsen said he was "not surprised" he had been eyed by the Democrats. "In the end, the people of Iowa will make the decision and the big national

ACCORDING TO Jepsen press secretary James Lafferty, the wording hints that the senator will try for a second term 1984.

'It's a little early to start announcing things like that but he never said to me that he wasn't (running)," Lafferty said. He said the people in Jepsen's Washington, D.C. office work under the assumption the freshman senator will be on the campaign path in Iowa Democrat Lynn Cutler, vice chairwoman of the DNC, said she had little to do with the decision to name Jepsen, but said "he would be vulnerable (if he ran). He can hardly

According to Cutler and other area politicians, Rep. Tom Harkin, 5th District-Iowa, is likely to be Jepsen's competition in the next election. Cutler said she would be working with that campaign if Harkin runs, but did not say in what capacity. She lost a bid for the 3rd District Congressional seat

MAC-PAC - which slung considerable quantities of mud in the 3rd District race - is expanding its mode of operation to cover the entire state with a Harkin defeat in mind, according to Corey.

WE ARE FULLY expecting Tom Harkin to run and we should have fun with him," Corey said. "He has the supreme weakness, the same one that Lynn Cutler had, and that is that Iowa voters are not going to send anyone to Washington knowing they are bigspending liberals."

In reference to MAC-PAC's last effort, aimed at Cutler, Corey said "I don't want to take all the credit for that victory, but we certainly helped." Corey dismissed accusations of

MAC-PAC tactics being anti-Semitic as In her defeat speech last week,

Cutler said an anti-Semitic campaign had been waged against her in the closing days of the race.

"I am sorry because I don't think this belongs in America. I don't think this belongs in politics. It does not speak well for the people of Iowa that there was so much of that in this 3rd District race," she said.

Ray's films provide insight into postwar life, ideology

By Stephen Barr

The sale of old movies to television beginning in the 1950s spawned not only "The Early Show" and "The Late Show" but also, more recently, the "serious" study of film in the university and revival film programs like the Bijou.

But this interest and fascination with films of the past suggests more than their efficacy as entertainment; these films continue to articulate issues and problems as timely today as they were when first

In this sense, the films of Nicholas Ray, including Bigger Than Life, which will be at the Bijou this Tuesday and Wednesday, are more than pertinent. For more than 25 years, we have turned to James Dean's explosive performance in Rebel Without a Cause as addressing the difficulties of entering into dulthood. Yet all of Ray's films, from They Live By Night in 1947 on, offer some insight into the culture and ideology of post-World War II America. And it is no wonder that there has been a recent resurgence of critical interest in these films, considering the more general trend to mine the icons and images of our recent past and to investigate them with irony and cynicism.

THIS ARCHAEOLOGY of cultural artifacts whether in film, TV, books, music, advertising, or dress - reveals the convulsions of a nation discovering that the sky's no longer the limit. And therein lies the most fascinating aspect of Ray's

In the 1950s, American institutions appeared stable, yet Ray's movies explore their tenuous foundations. Anger, hostility and despair teem below his films' tranquil surfaces, erupting periodically. The American Dream slowly becomes a nightmare.

Bigger Than Life focuses on James Mason as a grade-school teacher and happy family man stricken by a fatal arterial disease that can be treated only with cortisone, a relatively unknown miracle drug at the time. Mason abuses the drug, however, resulting in psychosis and the near destruction of his family and his life.

From the film's very first shot, a close-up of

Films

Mason's hand tensed in pain, his physical dysfunctions reveal psychological disturbances. Mason's attempt to provide a certain social status for his family turns into hysteria caused by overdosing on

Like the recent Tylenol scare, which suggests more about American anxiety than it does about the few crazies out there - consider its effects on trickor-treat this Halloween - Bigger Than Life uses a miracle drug and Mason's violent addiction to it to call into question fundamental American institutions and values: family, middle-class success, education.

DURING ONE of his rages, Mason suggests that schools are breeding "moral midgets" and turns to revolutionizing teaching with different methods he tries on his son (withholding dinner until the boy can answer a difficult mathematical problem, for exam-

And at the film's end, Mason nearly sacrifices his son, as Abraham did. When his wife protests that God eventually told Abraham to spare Isaac, he responds: "God was wrong."

Despite the seething tensions that rupture the surfaces of all Ray's films, most of them conclude problematically with evidence of a conventional 'happy ending': the star-crossed lovers are clutched in each other's arms; father and son reconcile; in Bigger Than Life, the family is reunited.

This final reunion and the film's apparent closure are deceptive, however, considering the violence that has come before. Bigger Than Life, like Ray's other films, does not subvert American institutions as much as it cuts open their surfaces to examine the pain underneath. It is only today, in a world perhaps even more fragmented and alienated than the one Ray shows, that we can look back at these films and imagine a world in which our institutions indeed fail to

'Mason' reruns give viewers Michelin guide to '60s culture

By Jeffrey Miller Arts/Entertainment Editor

Cable has opened vet another long-sealed vault in television history, as WTBS-17 has begun daily reruns of the original "Perry Mason" (10:05 a.m.,

"Mason," like most shows twenty years ago, had a ormula so set you only had to see one show to know the series — first 15 minutes: introduction of characters, flimsy exposition of motive; second 15 minutes: crime committed, attorney Mason called in third 15 minutes: wrong suspect on trial, private eye Paul Drake helping Mason; final 15 minutes: Mason pulls off courtroom miracle, real criminal

But within that formula were enough nuances to keep the show running for nine years. In the name of realism." producer Gail Patrick Jackson provided what in hindsight is a Michelin guide to American culture circa 1960: battleship-sized cars with fins, Swedish-design furniture so new you could almost smell the Naugahyde, boxing matches on the radio,

AND THE SHOW'S characters were equally welled. Mason (Raymond Burr) was a frontier marshal brought to 1960 L.A. and given the benefits 20th-century education and psychology. Just as Matt-Dillon could be counted on to protect the honor of some innocent with his wile and his six-gun, Mason could be trusted to save some poor soul with his wile and Provision 610 of the California Code. Burr's Mason, a sturdy, attractive man (you can tell he's a real man by the way he smokes his cigarette) who nonetheless kept a safe distance from personal entanglements, was the middle figure between the other important male characters: private eye Paul Drake (William Hopper) and D.A. Ham Burger (William Talman).

The smooth-talking Drake, who, like Mason, was all, well-built and smoked like a four-alarm fire, obviously lived life in a lane to the left of his employer's, with jazzy suits, speedy cars and an unclear amount of physical comfort with young

BURGER, on the other hand, was short, wormy and given to sweating (though also perpetually suckng on a cig) — particularly when his adversary would pull some new trick out of his hat to blow the D.A.'s case all to hell. Week after week, Burger would complain about "Mr. Mason's pyrotechnics" week after week, Mason's mysterious drawings and

The show's other major character, Mason's secretary Della Stree seen no longer on TV: a sharp, articulate secretary who had some obvious affection for her boss.

Hale's portrayal of Street was based largely on Lee Patrick's portrayal of stenographer Effie Perrine in The Maltese Falcon. And indeed, much of 'Perry Mason," from the detailed interiors to the lighting to camera techniques (moving the camera through an open window to let us in on a domestic squabble) was film-oriented.

"PERRY MASON" was made at a time (1957-1966) at which TV still had no history to rely on. Its rich look and well-developed characters came from the producers' need to condense what they could of film genres into a 60-minute weekly format - a condensation necessary in the translation of any popular art from one form to another.

Part of the reason that old shows like "Perry Mason" look so good now is that television more and more is condensing itself. Instead of looking to outside sources like literature and films, television (like literature and films) is relying on its own history and its own process as its main creative

In essence, such self-awareness is a good thing: TV has become an art form mature enough to comment on its own growth. And at its best, this selfsufficiency has given us some great TV: "Mary Hartman," "Fernwood 2-Nite," "Hill Street Blues," "SCTV."

BUT IT IS also in part responsible for sets that look designed and built by Tinkertoys, scripts that are collapsed to an almost preverbal state and characters (witness "The New Odd Couple") that have become stereotypes of stereotypes.

The vitality of "Perry Mason" today, twenty or so years after its first broadcast, indicates that TV's ever-increasing reliance on itself may be turning

The Case of the Decline of TV - the question of how we got from "Perry Mason" to "T.J. Hooker" is one that even the good attorney would have trouble cracking. We can at least be thankful that he's back to provide some clues.

After being rated in the top three nationally all season, Iowa's field hockey team was passed up by the NCAA tournament committee when the top four seeds for this weekend's satellite tournaments were announced.

Apparently some NCAA field hockey coaches from the East are under the impression that Iowa is not as good as its 20-1 record would indicate.

We're just going to have to go out there and show them that teams in the Midwest can play just as well as a team from the East," Barr said. "If the intensity level of (Monday's) practice is any indication, we will definitely be ready on Saturday.'

Saints vote for the latest owners' offer

NEW YORK (UPI) - Striking NFL players Monday overwhelmingly reected the latest management proposal in separate team meetings.

According to the NFL Players Association, 24 of the 25 teams polled so far have turned down the owners' current offer. Three West Coast teams had not yet been heard from while the New Orleans Saints were the only club to support management.

"We're delighted that management's latest illegal tactic has failed," said NFLPA executive director Ed Garvey, alluding to the league's plan to present its contract offer directly to the players. "The offer, quite frankly, was not much more than they put on the table last week.'

THE UNION did not specify the exact voting of each team, nor did it say if the votes were cast by secret ballot. But by the outcome, Garvey said the players sent the owners a message.

'We hope now that management will respond to our proposal," he said. The next step is for them to obey the law. The system catches up with you in this country.

Marvin Powell, the New York Jets player representative, said the owners' 75-page proposal had no chance of approval with the rank and file. The teams received a 41/2-page synopsis of

"I don't think any reasonable person who can read would accept that," he

THE OWNERS' package includes a wage standard for each player based on years of service beginning at $30,000 and increasing $10,000 per year to a top level of $200,000; an immediate bonus of $60,000 to all players who are vested upon resumption of the 1982 season; severance payments beginning with $60,000 for a player with four years of service to $200,000 for 18 or more years experience and a doubling of postseason benefits so that a player for a Super Bowl winner receives up to

The union said the Saints' vote was not a true indication of team feeling since, according to the NFLPA's count, less than 20 players attended the meeting in New Orleans.

One of those attending, safety Tommy Myers, criticized the union and its executive director.

"In my way of thinking, it's an upside-down organization, with the power coming from Mr. Garvey," he negotiations have recessed after eight days of meetings in New York. Jack Donlan, the NFL Management Council's chief negotiator, left the talks Saturday night, announcing the two sides were wider apart than ever. Private mediator Sam Kagel, having failed to obtain an agreement in Maryland and in the latest sessions in New York, flew home to San Francisco Sunday.

Garvey said he expects negotiations to resume "fairly soon" in New York, saving an injunction would help get management back to the bargaining

The NFLPA previously charged the owners with not bargaining in good faith and the National Labor Relations Board set next Monday as a hearing date for the complaint.

Garvey talked Monday with NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle but would not comment on details of the discus-

The NFLPA has been criticized in some quarters for not being responsive to its membership's wishes. Union president Gene Upshaw defended his

'The players have not lost control of the union," he said Monday night. "It's an open union, the players have input."

'Right now, I can't understand the owners," said Baltimore player rep Mike Ozdowski. "Businessmen just don't throw away $22 million. If they think we're stubborn this year, let the season be canceled and see what they'll do without money.

"If they don't settle it by the end of this year, they'll come back and find a financially poor, but resolved bunch of individuals who will be very irritable in their own right. The attitude of the players is 'you screwed us. Now we'll screw you."

TWO OWNERS WERE utterly discouraged by the situation.

Cleveland Browns owner Art Modell said he will not even try to predict the outcome of the strike. "I share the view of our spokesman (Donlan) that the season is in serious. serious jeopardy," Modell said. "Soon it may dwindle down to nothing and

NEW YORK (UPI) - The University of Georgia, bidding for its second national championship in three years, grabbed the No. 1 college football rating by a narrow margin over Southern Methodist on Monday following balloting by UPI's Board of Coaches.

Georgia, 9-0, collected 22 first-place votes and 607 points from the 42 coaches on the Board, while No. 2 Southern Methodist, also 9-0, received 18 first-place votes and 602 points. Last Saturday, Georgia, led by Herschel Walker's 219-yard, three-touchdown performance, walloped Florida 44-0 and SMU topped Rice 41-14 to extend its winning streak to 13 games.

THE BULLDOGS, who ironically moved into the No. 1 position at this time two years ago en route to their only national title, replaced Pittsburgh at the top of the ratings after the Panthers were surprised by Notre With four teams in last week's top 10 losing, the ratings have taken on a new look from top to bottom.

Pittsburgh, ranked in the top three from the start of the season, tumbled to No. 7 and Arkansas, which lost 24-17 to Baylor for its first defeat of the year, dropped from fourth to No. 9.

Nebraska, 8-1 after a 48-10 triumph over Oklahoma State, moved up two positions to No. 3 with one firstplace vote and 514 points. Penn State, a 54-0 winner over North Carolina State, also moved up two spots to No. 4 with one first-place vote and 493 points.

UNBEATEN LOUISIANA State, 7-0-1 after a convincing 20-10 victory over Alabama, advanced five places to No. 5 followed by No. 6 Washington, Pittsburgh, No. 8 Florida State, Arkansas and No. 10 Clemson, the defending national champ.

Oklahoma, 7-2, and aiming for a Big Eight Conference showdown with Nebraska on Nov. 26, moved up one position to No. 11, followed by No. 12 Michigan, No. 13 UCLA, which fell five places after losing 10-7 to Washington, No. 14 Notre Dame and No. 15 Alabama, which fell eight notches. MADISON, Wis. (UPI) - Wisconsin Coach Dave McClain, saying "mountains are being made of mole hills," Monday defended his decision to play injured quarterback Randy Wright in the fourth quarter of Saturday's 20-17

Wright was taken by ambulance to University of Wisconsin Hospitals after being hit by two Indiana defenders late in the first half. Wright later said he had temporarily lost feeling and movement in all "parts of my body."

But he returned to the stadium late in the third quarter and re-entered the game at the start of the fourth.

At his weekly news conference, McClain said he had no qualms about said Wright had been cleared to play by doctors at University Hospitals and also by team physician, Dr. William

"I DON'T THINK it's right for anybody else to judge those doctors," McClain said. "They've gone to school many, many years and they know exactly what they're doing. I think people are making mountains out of mole hills when there's really not anything there.

Two Milwaukee neurosurgeons, quoted in a Milwaukee newspaper story, questioned the decision to put Wright back in the game.

reaction toward his decision to play Wright was probably brought on by the use of the ambulance, "which made it look so dramatic.

"BUT I THINK it was a positive thing. We could have walked him (Wright) off the field and nobody would have said a thing about this. But now that we worried about him and made sure we did things right, everybody is making a big mountain

McClain said the decision to put Wright back in the line-up was not affected by the importance of the game. Wisconsin, needing a victory to remain in serious contention for a bowl bid, was trailing 10-7 when Wright retur-

"If the doctors said he could play, yes," McClain said when asked if he would have made the same decision in a game of lesser importance. "If it was a tight game, I wouldn't hesitate to play Randy. He was fine. I didn't have any qualms whatsoever playing him.'
