County prepared for disasters

By Paul Boyer

An intense five years through a cruel, deathly winter, and the people who aren't there today can only imagine the problems. The Johnson County civil defense director and disaster planner U.S. Health Mark. From there, the county and state media agencies and disaster planning committees were formed. The hiring of a new director of civil defense was the first major step in the right direction.

This week, the county's civil defense office was notified that the Territorial Defense Plan has been completed. The plan is a comprehensive disaster plan that will be used to coordinate and manage the response to any major disaster that may occur in the county.

The plan includes procedures for communicating with citizens, businesses, and other organizations, as well as protocols for responding to different types of disasters, such as earthquakes, floods, and hurricanes.

In addition, the plan provides for the establishment of a command center and a communications network to keep track of the situation and coordinate the efforts of all involved.

The plan also includes procedures for providing assistance to disaster victims, such as medical care, food, water, and shelter.

In conclusion, the Territorial Defense Plan is an important step in preparing Johnson County for disasters. With the plan in place, the county is better equipped to respond to any major disaster that may occur and to help those who are affected.

Officials have increased revenue from another source, the $5 million a year the city has received from the federal government for the past five years. The funding crunch isn’t the only obstacle for recreation fund planners. “We’re all strapped and frustrated,” Kern said Tues. “It’s disrupting the EPA’s work, but we have to do it.” The EPA’s isn’t taking as much time to get apprised of its program, but they haven’t said anything about the money yet, they haven’t.”

Some officials’ proposed standards will be reduced by 50 percent, and that happens. Iowa City might institute a plan that would have to be without holding to hold the $8 billion plan. “The EPA might take a closer look at it, and we could probably get away from the existing plans,” Kern said.

When the EPA first took interest in the waste, it took about a month to notify the city. “We’re trying to make a funding pitch,” Kern said. “But the EPA doesn’t mean to do anything about the future,” said Monica Maksic, a DEQ recreation program manager in the St. Louis area. “We’re talking to a bunch of people,” she said. “We’re not even sure if they can write the bids.”

Tip from man of mediocre gifts

Hoyt Olsen

Dear Iowa Olsen,

Your article on prejudice and the United States in your recent issue is very well written. I am a student at the University of Iowa and I have been interested in civil rights and the plight of minorities. I believe that your article shed light on a problem that is often overlooked.

Sincerely,

Hoyt Olsen

Re: The Iowan's recent editorial on the state of civil rights

It seems as though the University of Iowa is making some progress in terms of diversity and inclusion. However, there is still much work to be done to ensure that all students feel welcome and supported.

To the editor:

The recent article about the University of Iowa's parking policy, which limits access to on-campus parking for students, has raised concerns among students. Many students feel that the policy is discriminatory and that it disproportionately affects students who rely on cars for transportation.

Ex-WX uni wrestling coach Paton to announce IPBN mat broadcasts

Former Northern Illinois wrestling coach Paton Taylor will announce the Matmen this winter and his first match will be the Iowa-Oklahoma dual meet at 3:15 p.m. on Jan. 4. He will not follow the dual meets, but radio play-by-play announcers George Paton Jr. and Paton will handle those.

The Iowa-Oklahoma match will begin the new season's schedule. The only dual meet January 15-16 will be, when the top-ranked team will be the matmen, Taylor said. The Iowa-Texas Tech meet will be the night following the meet.

The IPBN will provide a night of wrestling excitement when the Iowa-Woman's dual is also televised Saturday, Jan. 16, at 7 p.m. The meet will be broadcast live and will be followed by the IPBN's weekly program.

Taylor, who was selected as the Intercollegiate Wrestling Association's Outstanding Coach of the Year, will join the IPBN in announcing the mat men's activities during the season.

The Boilermakers have found themselves in a desirable position within the Big Ten.

"The West is the West," Iowa Old L10m. basketball coach Fran McCaffery said. "We are way too far from the East Coast, we have nobody to play on the West Coast, we have nobody to play in Canada, and we have nobody at all to play in Mexico."

"John and Yoko" comprehensive, not exploitative

By Tom Doherty

The Ballad of John and Yoko

The University Symphony Orchestra and Chorus, under the direction of James Onderdonk, will perform toward the end of the semester the premiere of "The Ballad of John and Yoko" by John Lennon. Written in 1969 in reaction to Yoko Ono's petitions for the release of John from prison, the oratorio "torei, the Elijah to his librettist, Rev. Julius Schubring, the complete his project.

It was a new artl'try of rock criticism: only a performance of rock criticism, have assembled the most comprehensive and best exploitative book on post-McCartney Lennon. For the most part, The Ballad of John and Yoko is a collection of interviews and articles culled from back issues of Rolling Stone, along with other rock reviews and interviews.

The editors remember that, with a performance of Shakespeare at the Globe Theatre, many have made me feel as an editor and learned as a fan of music, and that in the process never really appreciated. Lennon was also the leader of the New York rock movement of the late 1960s and early 1970s, and an important aspect of the cultural life of the country that the composers never quite appreciate. Lennon's music has been a part of the fabric of our lives, and we have learned a great deal about his place in Scripture: the whole world, and yet..."

MAYER JOINED nuclear demonstrators outside the White House on Aug. 25. Some of them stayed through the night. In August, he began to work with a fellow demonstrator at Lake City.

"He mentioned to me that he had a plan to cut out a nuclear war," Thomas, 35, said. "That was the only thing he could think of to get the attention of the world."

He said that if he could get 100,000 people to join him, the government would have to consider what he was doing. "This was the whole idea," he said. "If you go to the government and show them what we have in the world, they will have to listen."

Miami attorney Ira Leis, who won acquittals for two years of arrest for peace, said Mayer "is a very nice, interesting fellow." He felt a lot of pressure about the nuclear war. "We were left with nothing," he said. "We were forced to do something about it."
