weapons research

By Kristine Stemper

In the last two weeks, more than 2,000 people signed a petition asking the UI to stop all "weapons systemsrelated" research, but that show of support is having trouble finding its way to a place where it will make a dif-

Members of New Wave, a liberal UI student organization, showed their petition to a UI administrator who told them stopping research requires a lot more than a simple order from him.

"There comes a point when somebody has to decide (what research should be done). Who is it?" asked D.C. Spriestersbach, vice president for educational development

"There's no way that I can possibly know or understand all of the 1,500 fields represented by our faculty," Spriestersbach told three New Wave members Thursday. "What kind of a judge would I be to sit here and say this is permitted and this isn't?"

RESEARCH BEING DONE in the UI engineering department that is funded by the U.S. Department of Defense involves developing a computer program to test equipment mathematically to determine how it will perform.

New Wave members pointed out that funds from the DOD have more than doubled from 1981-1982, going from $1,284,496 to $2,629,617, but the group's efforts to stop such research through the petition drive seem to have hit a

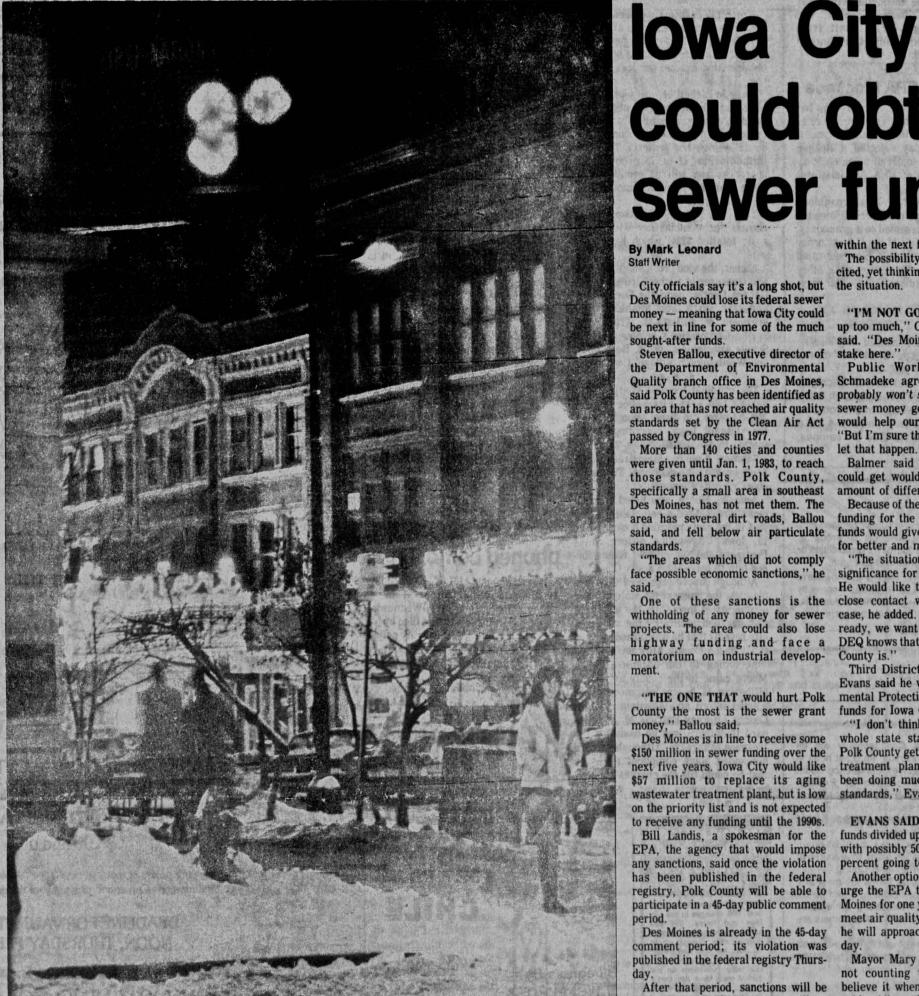

Spriestersbach said he must consider the importance of academic freedom along with doing his job of overseeing

The UI "guards" faculty freedom 'with great zealousness," he said. That freedom allows faculty members to "study whatever that person wishes" as long as it coincides with UI

But New Wave members feel the research, which the military can apply to make more effective weapons, is inconsistent with UI research

The UI Operations Manual states that research must aid in "the advancement of the public welfare," and the mere availability of funds for research is not a sufficient justification" for it to be undertaken.

SPRIESTERSBACH said the

Des Moines could lose its federal sewer money — meaning that Iowa City could be next in line for some of the much sought-after funds.

Steven Ballou, executive director of the Department of Environmental Quality branch office in Des Moines. said Polk County has been identified as an area that has not reached air quality standards set by the Clean Air Act passed by Congress in 1977.

More than 140 cities and counties were given until Jan. 1, 1983, to reach those standards. Polk County, specifically a small area in southeast Des Moines, has not met them. The area has several dirt roads, Ballou said, and fell below air particulate

"The areas which did not comply face possible economic sanctions," he

One of these sanctions is the withholding of any money for sewer projects. The area could also lose highway funding and face a moratorium on industrial develop-

"THE ONE THAT would hurt Polk County the most is the sewer grant money," Ballou said.

Des Moines is in line to receive some $150 million in sewer funding over the next five years. Iowa City would like $57 million to replace its aging wastewater treatment plant, but is low on the priority list and is not expected to receive any funding until the 1990s.

Bill Landis, a spokesman for the EPA, the agency that would impose any sanctions, said once the violation has been published in the federal registry, Polk County will be able to participate in a 45-day public comment

Des Moines is already in the 45-day comment period; its violation was published in the federal registry Thurs-

After that period, sanctions will be decided upon and the matter will go back for another 45-day public comment period. Landis said any action taken would occur in mid-summer.

If the sewer grant money to Des Moines is terminated, the funds would revert back to the DEQ for reallocation. If this happens, Iowa City could possibly receive some funds

Balmer said any money the city could get would make "a substantial amount of difference for us."

Because of the uncertainty of federal funding for the city now, he said, the funds would give the city the go-ahead for better and more definite planning.

'The situation definitely has some significance for us," Balmer said. He would like to see the city keep in close contact with the DEQ in this case, he added. "If Polk County is not ready, we want to make sure that the DEQ knows that Iowa City and Johnson Third District Congressman Cooper Evans said he will go to the Environmental Protection Agency to lobby for funds for Iowa City.

"I don't think we should have the whole state stagnate and have only Polk County get its one big wastewater treatment plant when they haven't been doing much to meet air quality standards," Evans said.

EVANS SAID HE would like to see funds divided up among other counties, with possibly 50 percent instead of 100 percent going to Des Moines.

Another option he is considering is to urge the EPA to delay funding to Des Moines for one year to allow the city to he will approach EPA with this Mon-

McMullen 'burned out,' submits resignation

By Thomas W. Jargo

Saying she's "physically exhausted" and "burned out" after four years as Iowa women's basketball coach, Judy McMullen said Thursday she will resign at the end of the current season.

McMullen, 32, came to Iowa in 1979 after four years as head coach at Righetti High School in Santa Maria, Calif. She has compiled a 36-59 record with the Hawkeyes. Iowa is 5-11 overall and 0-7 in the Big Ten Conference so far this year.

Despite the lopsided record, McMullen said she has received no pressure from Iowa Women's Athletic

Ginzburg says military buildup needed to counter Soviet threat

By Susan E. Fisher

CEDAR RAPIDS - The United States must continue to build arms to ensure peace with the Soviet Union, said Soviet dissident Alexander Ginzburg at a press conference at Mt. Mercy College here Thursday.

Ginzburg, a veteran human rights activist, said the United States should be wary of military agreements with the Soviet government under Yuri Andropov.
"I feel that Andropov is no better."
"I feel that Andropov is no better."

than any of his predecessors and his predecessors have continually violated these agreements," he said, through his interpreter George Gerich. The 46-year-old Ginzburg suggested that the U.S. recall Soviet history in order to understand the importance of military might.

'Remember the Soviet Union never attacked a strong enemy - which means if America maintains its strength, it will never be attacked."

Ginzburg has openly opposed the Soviet Union for many years. His work as an editor of an underground poetry magazine and as a journalist resulted in two terms in Soviet prison camps. He was arrested in 1960 and served two years; arrested again in 1967, serving

UPON HIS SECOND release, Ginzburg worked with exiled author Alexander Solzhenitsyn to found the Russian Social Fund, an organization which aids Soviet prisoners and their founding members of the Moscow-Helsinki Watch Group, a citizens' organization which monitored the Soviet Union's adherance to the humanitarian provisions of the Helsinki accords.

In February 1977 Ginzburg was once again arrested. His internationally protested trial resulted in an 8-year sentence in a labor camp.

Following a widely publicized prison exchange in 1979, he was released and gained asylum in the United States.

He now resides in Paris with his wife and two children. Currently, he is speaking throughout the United States on human rights.

At his stop in Iowa, Ginzburg acknowledged his approval of President See Ginzburg, page 6

White doubts claim of collection firm

By Mike Heffern

A private company that works to recoup money for "inter-governmental activities" will not get the signature of Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White on two claims compiled for the county because White questions the accuracy and methods used by the firm.

White told the Johnson County Board of Supervisors at Thursday's formal meeting he would not sign the two claims totaling $3,376. The claims require his signature before the county can receive half of the $3,376 from the Iowa Department of Social Services.

The other half of that amount would go to David M. Griffith and Associates of Northbrook, Ill., a firm hired by the county to recover money for the county

According to White, Griffith and Associates is a "private company that makes its money off of intergovernmental activities.'

The two proposed claims determined by Griffith and Associates would recoup money from the state's social services department for "indirect costs" incurred by the county's Child Support Office.

ACCORDING TO WHITE, indirect costs in the past have included time spent by offices in the Johnson County Court House to operate the Child Support Recovery Program.

White said he has tried repeatedly to find out from Griffith and Associates See Supervisors, page 6

Judge clears EPA blockade

WASHINGTON - In a victory for Congressmen trying to see secret Environmental Protection Agency files, a federal judge Thursday rejected a Reagan administration effort to derail a contempt-of-Congress prosecution of EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch.

The ruling removed a legal roadblock thrown up by government lawyers to keep the citation from being presented to a grand jury. But officials at the office of the U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia have indicated they will not pursue the charge while other efforts to resolve the dispute are under way.

Mary Jo Eicher, 51, was sentenced to 48 hours in the Johnson County Jail for drunken driving, according to Johnson County District Court records. She began serving her sentence Thursday immediately after her court appearance, and will be credited with three hours for previous time spent in the county jail.

The $150 fine for possession of cocaine in combination with court costs totalled $224, which have been paid.

Although Moore presented the complaint in the name of the state of Iowa or the city of Iowa City, the motion to dismiss filed jointly by the state and city reveals that he was turned away at the Johnson County Attorney's office.

According to the document, when Moore came to the county attorney's office Jan. 14, he was informed by both a legal intern and Assistant Johnson County Attorney Patricia M. B. Sheppard that there was no basis for the trespass charges. Although Moore demanded blank complaint forms so that he could file the charges himself, he was refused.

A nationwide study of graduate programs that has received criticism from UI faculty members and judged UI programs rather harshly is one of the best studies of its kind, D.C. Spriesterbach, dean of the UI Graduate College, said Wednesday.

Spriestersbach was a member of the board that selected criteria used to evaluate the 228 colleges and universities and he said, "This is the best designed study of its kind that has ever been put out.

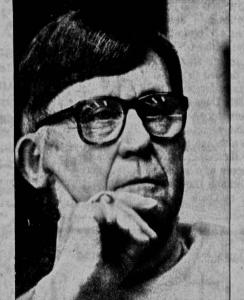

"Quality is a very difficult thing to put into quantitative figures in a survey like this, but we had the advantage of correcting the errors that were made in Spriestersbach defended the study and attacked the media coverage of its release. "To fully understand this entire survey it is important to realize that this study uses six different criteria in judging the quality of the programs studied.

"ALONG WITH THE reputational survey - which has seemed to receive the most publicity - the study also looked at areas of program size, characteristics of graduates, university library size, reseach support, and also publication records. Contrary to what has appeared in the press, this was not strictly an opinion survey.'

The report, entitled "An Assessment of Research-Doctorate Programs in the United States" was released by the Conference Board of Associated Research Councils and took more than five years and $500,000 to be completed.

The report rated 28 different graduate programs at the UI in five different

D.C. Spriestersbach

The majority of the programs studied were judged "average" in terms of a national standpoint and UI graduate programs also finished near the middle of the pack when compared with other Big Ten universities and the University of Chicago, which make up the Committee of Institutional Cooperation.

Although many departments criticized the report, Professor John Long of the UI School of Pharmacology - which was not included in the report - said the report, especially the reputational survey section, has a great deal of merit.

"I feel that peer review is the name of is based upon peer review - any published paper or research grant must be subject to peer review, so why isn't also a good method for judging the quality of graduate

A COMPILATION OF the results garnered from the report showed that the UI had no colleges ranked higher than sixth out of the 11 CIC institutions. As a whole, the UI graduate programs were ranked eigth in the CIC.

Spriesterbach, however, disputed this finding. "This study was never meant to be used as an indicator of entire programs and certainly not as a ranking for the complete graduate college. It's sort of like making hash out of steak.

Other faculty members, however, were not as charitable toward the survey and its

Marilyn Somville, director of the UI School of Music - which received good ratings in the report - thinks the analysis of music schools was useless. "It was a pointless survey and I feel that its findings are probably not very accurate at all because the survey simply failed to look at some of the most important areas of music

Erling B. Holtsmark, UI Classics Department chairman, which was rated to be next to last among the 11 CIC institutions, also has been outspoken in his opinion of the survey.

"I was extremely disappointed in the way the study was carried out. In the preface of their report the authors admit there were areas in which they lacked essential knowledge and then they went ahead and tried to evaluate them anyway,"

Higher enrollment strains advisers

By Mary Tabor

Swelling enrollment at the UI not only causes pain for students trying to squeeze into classrooms, but places a strain on advisers and advising centers who try to fit the students into those classrooms, according to UI officials.

"I say we do have a problem and I say it is a serious one. But it is not out of hand," Howard Laster, dean of the UI College of Liberal Arts, said Thursday.

In the UI Undergraduate Academic Advising Center, which during peak times counsels about 6,000 students, the problem is being handled well. Laster said professional advisers have been added in about equal proportions to the increasing Open majors comprise 45 percent of the undergraduate academic center's clients. About 90 percent are freshmen and omores.

Despite about 1,600 more students this academic year than last seeking counseling at the center, the case load carried by each of the 30 half-time advisers hasn't increased. "We are keeping pace, more or less," Juliet Kaufman, advising center

"OFFICE SPACE IS tight at the moment, having absorbed eight new staff members," Kaufman said.

'We couldn't put any more advisers any place," said Billie Stephens, secretary for the Undergraduate Academic Advising Center in Burge Residence Hall.

The center accommodates eight offices and Stephens said at times nine or more advisers will be there trying to counsel "Then we have to use the kitchen or go out in the lounge," she said. It makes the job of the adviser more difficult when they are forced to work away from their own office and supplies. The advisers are scheduled to work in three shifts, Stephens said, but often unexpected appointments cause overlaps. The advising office in Quadrangle Residence Hall offers 12 advisers during three different shifts. But, according to work-study employee Kerry McCormick, when scheduling conflicts overload the office, advisers can be found giving advice in

KAUFMAN IS NOW busy wrestling with projections of rising enrollment and said only after she determines needed staff increases can she look at expanding

Laster said the problem with burdensome caseloads is more severe in individual departments than in the undergraduate advising center.

"We haven't been able to keep pace," he said. The number of liberal arts faculty members has remained fairly constant, while the enrollment shot up by 35 percent.

He cited computer science as a prime example of a field where adviser-advisee ratios have reached extraordinary propor-

Three years ago 207 UI students declared a computer science major. This fall that number was 822. According to Laster, this fourfold increase in students met with only a one-third increase in faculty members.

'Traffic has been growing for several years," said Sherwood Tuttle, associate dean in the liberal arts advisory office. "I don't think it is critical yet."

Tuttle said the present solution is for everyone to work harder.

Laster said in many cases, "The poor faculty members are being run ragged."

The tight advising situation must be addressed, he said, "But short of having state money, we can only try to contain it.

"Now the situation is far from ideal, but most cases are manageable with some sacrifice in faculty overtime," Laster said.

The state's sales tax will increase to 4 cents per dollar effective March 1, a result of decisions made in the Iowa Legislature Thursday.

Lawmakers decided this week to move the increase up one month from the originally proposed April 1 date, to secure another $13 million to help pull the state out of financial trouble.

According to one Iowa representative, the tax hike is favored by the average-income Iowan. "You go to the tavern, talk to the guys wearing the steel-toed shoes, and they'll say they want the tax increase," said Rep. Charles Poncy, D-Ottumwa, Thursday. But if you talk to the people in the chambers, you might get a different

A $20 million bonding bill that would give the go-ahead to the five-floor Colloton Pavilion Phase B addition to the UI Hospitals will be debated by the House Monday.

The bill raised skepticism of the need for further hospital building, but the current project met favor from most legislators. If passed, construction could begin in April, creating about 600

Educators: TV news often entertainment

By Robyn Griggs Special to The Daily Iowan

The American public is probably watching more television news than ever before, but they are not any more informed than they were 10 years ago. according to several UI faculty members who specialize in media analysis.

Extended media newscasts, the development of prime-time news shows, and the advent of cable television news channels are all evidence of an increase in television interest in news brodcasts.

This added attention to electronic news can be attributed to networks' desire for more profits, media experts

Network news has become "not so much a public service, but a profitable one," Bruce Gronbeck, UI professor of communication, said.

Franklin Miller, UI professor of broadcasting and film, noted, "As the networks discover that they're being opted by the public for movie and cable television channels, they find they must concentrate on what's left. They're good at news, so they want to compete at this level.'

IN AN EFFORT to lure viewers, Paul Traudt, assistant professor of broadcasting and film, said, "television news packages itself like standard television fare. Stories are newsworthy not because of newsworthiness, but because they're human interest stories or 'hot items.' "

Traudt said advertising money is the television promoters' "prime village." He explained, "Television motivater." and they think audiences want to be entertained rather than in-

Because of this, news stories are 'dressed up to come under the umbrella of entertainment," he said. "I believe audiences are becoming jaded

Miller agreed that audiences may not be as trusting of television newscasts as they once were. "I assume people are increasingly willing especially feel that what they see in the to see the news as something produced news relates to their own for them, not as transparent fact," he

Although people have been entertained by the news, they have gained little real information from the additional news brodcasts. "One reason why television news is so popular is because it is so entertaining. People want to be entertained," said Patricia Westfall, a lecturer in the UI School of Journalism and Mass Communication.

"BUT WE OUGHT to ask ourselves if this is so bad. I sometimes question the elitist attitude that news should always be informative. The crime is perhaps not in seeking entertainment; the mistake consumers make is in not accepting it as entertaining. We get into trouble seeing it as an actual picture of reality," Westfall said.

Don Smith, UI professor of journalism and mass communication, agreed that the basic benefit from prime-time television shows is entertainment. Viewers, however, do not believe they are not becoming informed citizens.

'The producers acknowledge that they're basically entertainment, but the public doesn't see it that way. In that sense, a certain dysfunction is created. People feel that they're informed, but the programs don't offer much more than entertainment."

Gronbeck also said there has been a steady increase in the importance placed on television news by the viewing public. "People perceive television as a major news source because it is more dramatic," he said. This, he said, has contributed to "the speeding up of cultural life, because television is seen as an immediate window on the TRAUDT POINTED out television has made the world into what consumers can describe as a "global media has, in a sense, shrunk the world. We've come to expect immediate coverage of events as they happen.

An adverse effect of such television coverage was cited by both Traudt and Westfall

'Some research suggests that we're probably more paranoid because of television news," Traudt said. "Studies have shown that the elderly neighborhoods and consider their lives more dangerous."

Westfall said, "One of the effects of the popularity of television news is that a lot of people often feel that the world is a more violent place than it is. Television news stresses a lot of war and violence.

Blacks honor heritage this month

By Jeff Eichenbaum Special to The Daily Iowan

Blacks at the UI will be honoring their heritage throughout February, with movies, speeches, poetry readings, discussions and other events to highlight cussions and other events to highlight Black History Month.

Petrice L. Whittaker, president of the UI Black Student Union, said she feels Black History Month is a time for black people to remember their history, learn more about it and share it with all people to "gain" respect for the things we have done.

"A race must know about its history" if is to go on, to grow and continue, Whittaker said.

"It's like an ad I saw in a magazine," Whittaker said, "that showed a young black girl with a doll that was black. The girl says, 'Mommy, there's something wrong with my doll.' Now that's not right," Whittaker said. "You have to be proud of your own."

THE BSU HAS planned a Black Arts Expo on Feb.24 that will feature some of the UI's 600 black students' works in poetry, dance, music and drama, along with guest speakers.

The UI Afro-American Studies undergraduate and graduate programs are co-sponsoring a series of events during Black History Month. Included are readings from poets and scholars about many black issues.

Sherdell Brig, president of the local NAACP, said Black History Month is a time of awareness, "to realize blacks have NAACP, said Black History Month is a time of awareness, "to realize blacks have contributed to the shaping of America." Many NAACP events are planned, Brig said, but details won't be out until Feb.7.

"History books lack information about blacks" said Paul Tomlinson, Phi Beta blacks," said Paul Tomlinson, Phi Beta Sigma's UI president, "and Black History Month fills in the gaps, both for whites and blacks."

Tomlinson said Black History Month is good because "there's little for blacks in the way of black culture in Iowa City and this is a chance for people to see some.

"WE NEED TO realize the good things done by our ancestors both in America and Africa." he said

According to Joseph Henry, president of the Afro-American Graduate Studies Program, Black History Month was founded by Carter G. Woodson on Feb.7, 1926. He started a week to honor black history and picked the time because it was the week of Abraham Lincoln's and Fredrick Douglass's birthdays. During the 1960's, Black History Week was expanded to a month, Henry said.

Henry feels Black History Month should show not only the similarities between white and black cultures, but also how the cultures differ.

Henry said blacks have different cultural views on subjects such as "politics, religion, employment, art and economics."

EDITOR WANTED

The Board of Student Publications, Inc. and the publisher of the Daily Iowan will soon interview candidates for editor of the Daily Iowan to serve in the upcoming year. This position will require a person with ability, dedication, and responsibility to assume editorial control of a daily newspaper with a circulation of more than 19,000 in the university community.

An applicant must be either an undergraduate or graduate student currently enrolled in a degree program at the University of Iowa. The Board will weigh heavily the following qualifications: scholarship; pertinent training and experience in editing and newswriting (including substantial experience at The Daily Iowan or another daily newspaper); proven ability to organize, lead, and inspire a staff engaged in creative editorial activity; and other factors.

Applications will be accepted only for the full-year term from June 1, 1983 to May 31, 1984

No application will be accepted after 4 pm February 25, 1982.

Application form and additional information may be obtained at:

Liquor department study is criticized

DES MOINES (UPI) — A study released Thursday touting the state's system of state-owned liquor stores has been criticized as self-serving by one lawmaker who is considering breaking the government monopoly.

The report, compiled by the Iowa Beer and Liquor Control Department, concludes that Iowa's distribution system has been successful in raising large amounts of revenues for the state while keeping consumption low

Sen. Tom Slater, D-Council Bluffs, who heads the State Government Committee, referred to the director of the liquor department in terming the report "one of Rolland Gallagher's defense mechanisms." Slater said it is significant the report is released at a time when lawmakers are examining the state liquor monopoly.

He also raised questions about the way the report was distributed. He note that is was mailed to the news media before la makers.

"He knows Democrats have historically looked at the liquor system so he knows this would be a good time to release the report," Slater said.

The report says Iowa ranks 22nd among the states in per capita revenue raised on alcoholic beverage sales but the state is 47th in consumption.

What will happen if the Reagan Budget is not amended by your member of congress and senators?

- THREE Important financial aid programs The Supplementary Educational Opportunity Grants, The State Student Incentive Grants, and The National Direct Student Loans will be abolished.
- ALL Applicants for the Guaranteed Student Loans will be required to pass a need test, regardless of income.
- THE current GSL origination fee of 5% will be doubled.
- ONLY those students who can contribute an amount equal to 40% of educational costs from their own income and job earnings will be eligible to receive Pell Grants.

The expected increase in work-study funding can never compensate for these cuts. Last year, letters from students and parents turned the tide, and defeated a set of extremely deep education cuts. Unless a similar outcry occurs this year, these cuts may be approved.

exactly how the indirect costs are determined and how they relate to the claim the county sends to the state.

The firm would not cooperate or offer any form of "supportive evidence," White said, and therefore he could not in good faith put his name on the claims.

"I'm not going to take David Griffith's word for what the county is entitled to," White said.

"I'M NOT GOING to do it unless I know it to be accurate ... particulary with David M. Griffith my experience has been that they are not accurate. Every time I've looked at something they've prepared it has turned out to be inaccurate," White said.

Supervisor Harold Donnelly asked White if Griffith and Associates was responsible for the amount given in the claims. White

In a letter sent to Griffith and Stevens on Tuesday, White wrote, "As per usual with your firm, I haven't the vaguest notions as to how these figures were derived.

"COULD YOU PLEASE provide us with file material sufficient to allow me to determine the basis or rationale of the claims which you have prepared.

In an interview after the meeting White said, "I have a philosophical problem with a private company that acts as a gobetween for two different tax-paying groups." But he said that is a policy question that must be handled by the board.

The County Auditors office said figures are not yet available for how much money Griffith and Associates would have saved the county in the years it has been under contract with the firm. Griffith and Associates splits in half the amount of money its claims save for the county up to $8,000, at which point the county receives all additional savings.

Of the inconsistencies emanating from the Reagan budget, those concerning education may be the most glaring.

First, the president proposes a new, tax-free savings account to encourage parents to save for college expenses. Money from such an account - similar to an Individual Retirement Account would not be taxed until funds are withdrawn to help pay tuition costs and related fees. The plan would allow contributions from relatives outside the immediate family, and thus, its proponents say, would encourage meaningful gift-giving and help to revive the ailing nuclear family.

Second, Reagan proposes a tuition tax credit for parents of students attending private schools. Arguably, such a program allows private colleges to maintain enrollment during hard economic times by helping families afford the higher costs associated with such institutions.

In and of themselves, these programs may be worthy of some merit, but not when juxtaposed against proposals on the other side of the academic coin.

Continuing his undisguised effort to abolish the Education Department, Reagan has requested that its fiscal 1983 authorization be cut 15 percent, to $13.8 billion. The bulk of the the $1.2 billion reduction — about $900 million — would come from student loan programs.

Also included is a fiscal 1984 budget of $13.1 billion, which calls for an additional $143 million cut in student loan funding, and a reduction of $324 million in vocational educational programs.

The message is clear. For those whose incomes are currently large enough, the ability to save will be enhanced by a tax-free educational account. For those wealthy enough to consider attending private schools, tax credits will be made available. But for the less affluent — those who would depend on some form of direct federal aid to give them the opportunity to obtain a college education, there will be a billion dollars worth of reductions in

Through the eyes of the president, maybe the scheme isn't contradictory after all. The rich, it seems, will still be getting

Like, why not?

Did you ever notice that there aren't many prizes given to the kind of writing us regular types read? Like why shouldn't Jim Davis get a Pulitzer Prize for doing "Garfield," right? And where's the Nobel Prize for literature they've never given to Victoria Holt, Louis L'Amour, or the late great Jacqueline Susann? I mean like have they ever made even one of Gabriel Garcia Marquez's books into a movie? If Anna Karenina is so good, how come it isn't stocked with the paperbacks that really sell at the local Hyvee?

Not to mention like suitable recognition for our own writing, right, other than the rhetoric teacher who could never like keep a straight face when he handed back our assignments?

Well, like it'll really knock you over with a spoon but at last there's a contest for our kind of writing.

The English Department at San Jose State University is sponsoring the Bulwer-Lytton Fiction Contest. In commemoration of then-popular 19th Century novelist Edward Bulwer-Lytton, the contest calls for the submission of a single sentence with which one could begin the worst novel in the English language. Bulwer-Lytton's own Paul Clifford began as follows:

Ignoring the realities of athletics

By Lawrance M. Bernabo

OUR RECENT articles and editorials on what to do with that unique hybrid, the college student-athlete, have all tended to ignore some of the peculiar realities of their situation. I do not have in mind that ideal type of student-athlete who trades four years of athletic skill for the opportunity to earn a degree; rather I am concerned with those athletes who want to attempt to pursue a professional career

Such players as Ronnie Lester or Ron Hallstrom, destined to be firstround selections, as well as those who will show up as potential free agents, are in an interesting position. In the NBA and the NFL, 99 percent of the players went to college, but none of them were required to get degrees. The rare exceptions are a handful of Moses Malone types and immigrant side-winding place-kickers who were never part of the NCAA circus. The fascinating point that these future millionaires have to go to college but do not have to graduate is forgotten.

This makes athletes rather unique: not only do they make money for the university, they are also interested in potential, lucrative careers that are academically frowned upon by the very colleges that the pros scour for next year's talent. Remember lads, don't ever forget you're students first when you spend half the day practicing to get the school that bowl or tournament bid.

WITH THE ADVENT of the USFL, the growth of the Continental League, and the existing pipelines to Canada and Europe, more and more athletes will be able to turn some bucks as professionals. Thus the proverbial rock and hard place: tomorrow's superstars need to go to collges but need to be distracted from preparing for their potential careers or the NCAA will get 'em.

The NCAA wants to tighten restrictions on the student-athlete, so that a Ronnie Lester whose test scores and grades are supposedly sub-standard would be compelled to give up his freshman year of eligibility. This would be comparable to a math or biology major being told they could not take any courses in their major field their freshman year.

Although the Football Hall of Fame has announced that all future inductees will have to be college graduates, ("I don't care how many records ya broke, kid, ya need a degree to be immortal in pigskin heaven"), I seriously doubt that professional sports teams will hire only college graduates. For some reason, possibly having something to do with all of these recent strikes, the pros aren't crazy about guys with degrees in the business. So why don't we give them certificates or degrees in

WE KNOW THAT college athletics are different from "normal" college educational activities; this is evident from decisions that raise the salaries of coaches while holding the line on the salaries of those who merely teach reading and writing. And until colleges turn out Hemingways and Einsteins whose books are published by university presses so that all the proceeds go back into the university (to preserve the amateur status of these writers and thinkers) this state of affairs is not likely to change.

But if athletes are compelled to go to college to pursue their professional propriate degree? Not all players would want one, nor could all players get one; I would think a Lute Olson or Bobby Knight would be a bit particular about who got a degree of this sort from their program.

Potential professional athletes would get what was essentially a two-year degree by taking a reduced class load for four years, in the manner in which graduate students on teaching scholarships are essentially "employed" half-time. The situations are similar in that the school makes money from the talent of athletes and saves money by hiring three or four teaching assistants for the price of one professor.

EACH PROGRAM COULD determine the requisites for the degree, and you would no more be able to get a job ministration and entertainment for the in the business world with a degree in students. Fans who attend college football than you would be able to get games to hurl insults and taunts at opthat job with a degree in English literature. In an age of specialization it is what the degree is in, not its mere existence, that counts. Whether this means the Football Hall of Fame would accept a football degree is beyond my guess. If after one summer in the sun or several years in the big leagues, an athlete wanted to return and get a regular degree, he or she could do so. If such athletes cannot read or write, and are unable to fulfill the degree requirements, do not give them degrees amid the fuss about illiterate jocks.

we never see mention of such people graduating.

College athletics wants these people to come play and make money for them; they never profess an interest in graduating the Patrick Ewings of this world. And when such people can look forward to making more money in one year without that degree then I will the rest of my life with two or three of those pieces of paper, you have to wonder who the NCAA thinks they are fool-

As long as our colleges serve as the minor leagues for professional sports we have to find a way to resolve the paradox of students who do not need to

IT WOULD ALL BE so much simpler if we admitted that college athletics are a business proposition for the adposing players and to bemoan the lack of skill and intelligence of their own teams are not yelling at or for young people barely out of high school; they are exercising that bizarre right verbally to assault another human being guaranteed by the purchase of a ticket.

If the athletes fulfill such a need in us, why can't we be more considerate of the stupid situation that we have put college athletics into in recent years?

The early indication is that the UI will seek a coach with several years experience at the Division I level to replace Judy McMullen, who announced her resignation plans on Thursday.

Women's Athletic Director Dr. Christine Grant will start the search today when she meets with Iowa Assistant Coaches Vickie Wilson and Diane Lloyd to talk about their futures with the UI. Lloyd said Thursday she plans to apply for the position while Wilson was unavailable for comment.

Although no timetable has been set for finding a replacement, Grant wants to move quickly. "I don't want to lose any recruits Judy has been pursuing," Grant said. Among the preps Iowa has been courting is Cedar Rapids' Lisa Becker. Grant is looking for three qualities in a new coach.

We want somebody with experience in Division I basketball who is very, very knowledgable of the game and can recruit well," she said. "We want somebody who can manage the program. We think we have the GRANT DENIED Thursday that McMullen was under any administrative pressure, despite the fact Iowa has lost 20-consecutive games in the Big Ten dating back to Feb. 12, 1980, when the Hawks edged Minnesota, 70-68.

"Most head coaches put themselves under pressure," Grant said. "I don't think there was any direct pressure on Judy. It was Judy's decision to resign.

We sat down yesterday and she informed me of her decision. I can't say I was shocked because I know this was not an easy season for Judy." Iowa has a 5-11 record going into Friday's game

McMullen, who told the team of her decision following Tuesday's practice, left open the possibility of coaching again. At one point she answered her I was winning," by replying "Maybe

But for the most part, McMullen echoed Grant's claim of a no-pressure decision. However, McMullen said that in the past Grant and herself had disagreements over the way the program should be run.

"I'm burned out from banging my head against the wall to get a solid Division I program," she said. "In the past, Dr. Grant and I have had a basic disagreement on how a Division I United Press Internation program should be run.

"She controls the purse strings, I've done it her way, and I'm worn out."

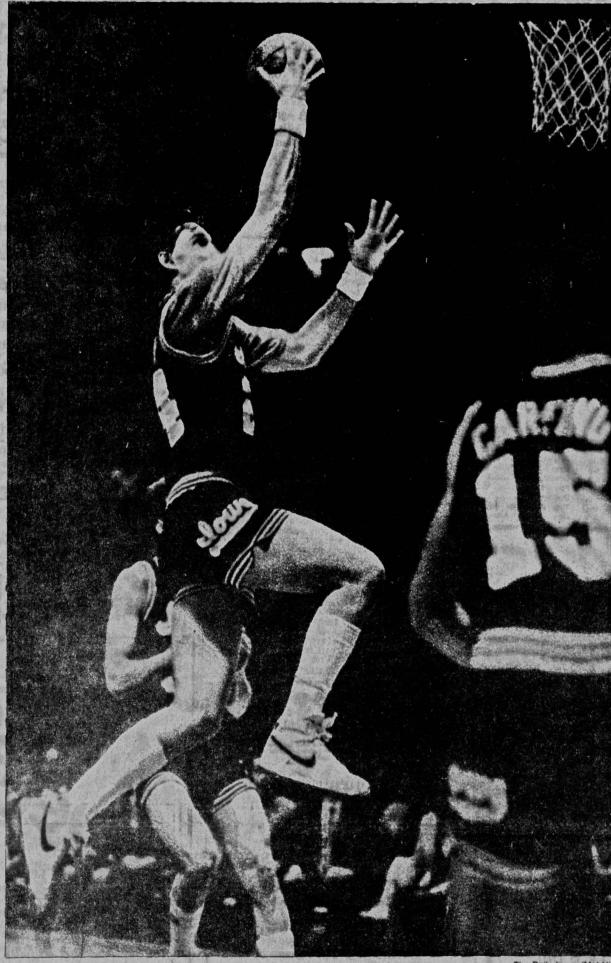

McMULLEN believes the foundation is now sound enough for Iowa to build a highly-competitive program. "I'm not saying I'm perfect, but there are definite requirements for producing a Division I program. I've just used up too much energy getting us there."

McMullen plans to help in the search for a successor, but said she has not recommended anyone.

Miller commits

CHAMPAIGN, ILL. - It was a game not fit for any textbook. Both teams looked far from impressive and it certainly wasn't pretty. But in the end, the Illini had a little more fight in them, defeating the Iowa Hawkeyes, 62-61.

'happy with the officiating," he gritted his teeth and said, "Extremely."

Illinois Coach Lou Henson, his team now in a tie for second place with Purdue with a 5-3 record, said his squad was "tight" at the outset.

"It was one of the hardest fought games I've seen," Henson said. "Our defense won the game for us. Offensively, we struggled, but you have to give part of the credit to Iowa . . .

"We feel great because we beat an excellent ballclub. They are awesome when they go with their inside and outside attack.

IN A GAME marred by fouls, 38, and turnovers, 27, both Olson and Henson used their benches extensively. Iowa took a 4-2 lead on a Michael

Payne jumper and never relinquished it, extending the lead to as many as 7 points with 5 minutes remaining in the

But Chief Illiniwek, the Illinois mascot, did his war dance at halftime and the team took the hint, chipping away at the Hawkeye lead, and finally tying the game at 50-50 with 8:26 remaining

Stokes fouled out soon after, and the Illini grabbed the momentum. Both teams exchanged free throws and jump shots with Carfino's three-point basket giving the Hawks a 61-59 lead with 3:09 emotional mood after the game, said: "A lot of fouls went against us. I didn't think some of them were legitimate, but in the Big Ten they call them close.

"I have to get mentally into the game. If they are calling them close, I can't go for the blocked shots."

Harper was probably the most ecstatic of the Illinois players, but said he thought the Illini were a "little too up for the game". He and Carfino exchanged words late in the second half after Harper fouled.

"I wasn't necessarily mad, I was just using psychology. In order for us to get going, we need enthusiasm on the Meanwhile, outside the Iowa locker room, Carfino was taking a great deal of the blame on his shoulders.

"We've been losing some close games lately and maybe that's my fault," he said, "I'm supposed to have leadership qualities on the floor, and that's something I have to work on."

IOWA NOW has four games in the loss column, but Olson refused to put any more importance on this latest defeat. "You're worried about any game you lose," he said, "Down the stretch that's senior and junior time. We need them to take over more."

The Hawkeyes themselves were already looking ahead. "We have the whole season ahead of us," Carfino said. "We've got to put this behind us." "We'll be ready for Saturday," Stokes said. "Coach says we're digging a hole for ourselves and there is no way out other than to win.'

Thoughts of yesteryear at Purdue 'boils' Hawkeyes

By Steve Batterson istant Sports Editor

Mention the words Purdue basketball to an Iowa fan and watch the blood boil. The mere thought brings back sights of Dan Palombizio sinking a free throw with no time remaining to give the Boilermakers a 66-65 win last March at

Mackey Arena. It also brings back thoughts of Iowa Coach Lute Olson chasing Big Ten referee Jim Bain off the court in a fit of

The end result - Bain isn't officiating Iowa games this season and Olson was told by the Big Ten to keep quiet about the officiating or face a one-game suspension.

Olson reflected only briefly on the incident earlier this week. "It should be an emotional game," he said. "Because of the issue taking so long to die, it was in the forefront longer than I expected it to be."

ON THE COURT, the Boilermakers have been one of the surprise teams tention and a lot of respect after defeating both the Soviet National Team and Louisville earlier in the

"I think we all felt Purdue was going to be a first division team," Olson said. "I felt that in the preseason they were the biggest surprise in the conference.

The game, which begins at 8:05 p.m., Saturday, is a big one for both teams. The Hawkeyes, 4-4, are in another must-win situation if they want to stay in the conference race. The Boilermakers are tied for third in the league with a 5-3 record.

The top match-up should come at the center spot where Russell Cross, fourth in the Big Ten in scoring with an this season. Purdue gained a little at- 18.9 average, will square off against Greg Stokes.

> The 6-foot-10 post man is coming off knee surgery last summer to correct a problem he's had since playing at Chicago's Manley High School

> STOKES WILL have his hands full with Cross. "It should be an interesting battle between Stokes and Cross,' Olson said. "Purdue is looking to get the ball into him as much as possible.

"Cross has really emerged into the player they expected him to be," Olson said. "He's now playing like he's capable of. The big difference in Russell Cross this year is that he is much quicker than last year - he's running the court well."

Stokes sees him as a challenge. "He's playing well, I hear," Stokes said. "It's a lot like going up against (Minnesota's) Randy Breuer. It's a real challenge to contain him."

In addition to having the ability to hurt you inside, the Boilermakers are deep at the guard spot - where Steve Reid, son of Rock Island High School Coach Duncan Reid, is called the best sixth man in the country by Purdue Coach Gene Keady.

THE SOPHOMORE transfer from Kansas State is averaging 14 points a game coming off the bench and Olson said Iowa took a serious look at Reid when he played at Dodge City, Kan., High School.

'We saw him play a number of times and he was obviously a coaches son,' Olson said. "You could tell he had a background on the floor. He's a great competitor and he's made a big difference in them this season.'

Purdue also possesses a three-point threat in Curt Clawson. Olson termed Clawson "the one man in the Big Ten that the three-point play has affected the most. It's given him the opportunity to play."

The Boilermakers will start two sophomores at forward; Palombizio and 6-6 Jim Bullock. The other guard spot belongs to Ricky Hall, a speedy guard who at 6-1 was second in rebounding on the Purdue team last

Tankers face no 'Normal' task

The Iowa women's swim team travels to Normal, Ill. tonight to challenge the Redbirds of Illinois

The dual meet is also the Redbirds' last home meet of the season and their "homecoming" meet. According to Iowa Coach Peter Kennedy, this could also give the Redbirds a "good psychological edge" over the Hawkeyes.

"It should be an exciting meet,"
Kennedy said. "They have some reasonable depth, but we feel that we're going to perform well."

NBC's "encore performance" of "Shogun" concludes tonight with deceit, denial, death and a vicious samurai battle in the darkened corridors of Osaka Castle. Just like real life. With Richard Chamberlain, Yoko Shimada, Toshiro Mifune and John Rhys-Davies. 7 p.m., KWWL-7. • Tonight on "Dallas:" Bobby (Patrick Duffy) proceeds to blackmail oil commissioner Hicks, which further alienates him from Pam (Victoria Principal); Clayton Farlow (Howard Keel) proceeds to romance Miss Elly (Barbara Bel Geddes), which further alienates them from J.R. (Larry Hagman); Rebecca (Priscilla Pointer) and Cliff (Ken Kercheval) proceed to Houston to stop J.R.'s plans to buy a refinery. Hint: one of them doesn't quite get there. 8 p.m., KGAN-2, WHBF-4.

• It's the first anniversary of "Late Night with David Letterman," and joining Dave in this special celebration are New York mayor Ed Koch, comic Robert Klein and some of the show's greatest moments. (Gene and Rog shooting baskets, maybe?) More fun than porpoises should be allowed to have. 11:30 p.m., KWWL-7.

Saturday

On "Hill Street Blues:" Frank (Daniel J. Travanti) tries to stop Chief Daniels' (Jon Cypher) "Operation Big Broom" when half the Hill gets thrown in jail; Renko (Charles Haid) tries to redeem himself by saving people in a burning building; Hill (Michael Warren) tries to revenge Renko's beating by Benedetto (Dennis Franz); Joyce (Veronica Hamel) tries to reassure Frank about her interview with the Justice Department. Wonder how. 6 p.m., WOC-6. This episode will also be seen tomorrow at 4:30 p.m. on KWWL-7. We'll be there for both.

• It's only logical that William Shatner and Leonard Nimoy should team up again on "T.J. Hooker." Nimoy plays a detective whose emotions and judgment get out of hand after his daughter is raped; it's up to the Hook to keep the cop from running amok. Now, if they'll only give us a cameo from DeForest Kelley: "Hook ... Spock's brain - it's gone!" p.m., KCRG-9.

· Sid Caesar's "Your Show of Shows' was NBC's first foray into Saturday night live comedy; tonight, Caesar returns to 30 Rock for the offspring, "Saturday Night Live." We hope he does some skits with Robin Duke, who is at last beginning to emerge as the heir apparent to Imogene Coca. Also appearing, in a bit of post-Belushi irony: Joe Cocker, with Jennifer Warnes, performing "Up Where We Belong." 10:30 p.m., KWWL-7.

Sunday

Well, now that "Shogun's" out of the way, here comes this year's most ballyhooed miniseries: the ABC adaptation of Herman Wouk's "The Winds of War." This 18-hour blockbuster begins with U.S. diplomatic attache Victor "Pug" Henry's (Robert Mitchum) maneuvers in 1939 Berlin and his son Byron's (Jan-Michael Vincent) growing affair with the beautiful - and Jewish - Natalie Jastrow (Ali MacGraw):

This Dan Curtis ("Dark Shadows") production also features Polly Bergen, John Houseman, Jeremy Kemp, Topol, David Dukes, Peter Graves and Victoria Tennant. Maybe someone will actually see all of it. Pass the VTR. 7 p.m., KCRG-9.

• NBC, desperate to cut in on the action, has called in every debt Steve Martin ever owed for "The Winds of Whoopee," a collection of old Martin sketches from "Saturday Night Live. "Tonight," his own specials and a real live brand-new sketch of Martin as an Italian director pitted against an NBC executive (Ron Liebman) over a new special. Pretty cheap, guys - but pretty funny, too. 9 p.m., KWWL-7.

· Movie on cable: While everyone is making a big deal about Jessica Lange (Toosie, Frances) now, the 17 people who saw Bob Rafelson's remake of James M. Cain's The Postman Always Rings Twice two years ago knew something was going on then. Lange's portrayal of a sexually insatiable woman who teams up with an equally insatiable drifter (Jack Nicholson) to kill her husband and steal his money made the alleged star look like an extra in Dawn of the Dead.

While this Postman has little to recommend it beside Lange, she alone is worth the cost of cable this month. And the breadboard scene is a genuine classic in sexual cinema: Flour sales jumped 300 percent the week after the movie was released. 7 p.m., Cinemax-

A good performance by an interesting new (to this area) band, hampered only by the often-muddled vocal mix.

The Grass Roots began their career as West Coast folk-rock band under the direction of semi-legendary P.F. Sloan in 1966. A couple of hits later, the group fell upon a formula that welded bubble gum sensibilities to a pale-blue-eyed-soul sound. From that point until their demise in 1977, the band had 13 "gold" singles and scored a platinum album with Their 16 Greatest Hits.

THE GRASS ROOTS that took the Crow's Nest stage Wednesday night included only one member of the original band (lead singer Rob Grill), yet the crowd's response left no doubt that was plenty - just as long as they played the half-baked yet trim for his (relatively) advanced age, led his capable but unspectacular backup band through a 19-song show that included 11 hits from the original band, 7 songs from last year's Powers of the Night LP and one cover a run-of-the-mill rendition of the Beatles' "She's A Woman." Accompanied by cheering, clapping, singing and a night-long packed dance floor, the band's performances tended to be reflective of the relative quality of their material. The best of the oldies were the band's first single, "Where Were You When I Needed You?," "Let's Live For Today," "Lovin' Things," an extremely well-sung "Bella Linda," "Sooner or Later" and a very strong "Midnight Confessions."

AT FIRST SHE suspects that he is insensitive to her concern for him. But after a moment's reflection, she knows that he would not willingly torment her, that he seeks nothing less than to make sense out of each complex moment, for the sake of his art and for the sake of his life. So she trusts him. And in that trust, they become equals.

All these interactions — between the

Nelligan's strong performance highlights 'Trace'

By Roxanne T. Mueller Special to The Daily Iowan

The despair of a mother whose young son disappears one day while walking to school provides the focus of the topical new movie Without a Trace, which opens today at the Campus 3.

A "problem" film in that it treats a topic too often ignored, Without a Trace brutally reveals one of the more horrid facts of American life: Each year, almost 50,000 children are snatched from the streets, never to be heard from again.

If Without a Trace succeeds in making people aware of a situation they never dreamed existed on such a scale, it will largely be due to the strong performance from one of the best actresses working today, Kate Nelligan, who is starring in her first film since Eye of the Needle and is currently garnering rave reviews for her work in the Broadway play Plenty.

Nelligan's portrayal of a recently separated mother is straightforward and convincing. As a Columbia University professor, she transmits intelligence and strength, her character persevering in the notion that, despite police withdrawal, a drop in media attention and abandonment by her friends, her son still lives.

"I THINK IF I were in the same situation," Nelligan said in an interview in New York, "I would absolutely fall apart. I talked to people whose children had disappeared and learned a lot. They told me that other people's reactions to their situation are very odd. People lose their jobs because they don't want that tragedy near them. There's a real fear because they think that if that person had that happen to them, there must be something wrong with them.

"It gets to the point — and this is really awful - where the best friends of these parents think that the parents killed the children themselves.'

Nelligan had her own problems coping with the demands of the role. Without a Trace is the first film she's had to carry herself, and the pressure mounted in the form of physical exhaustion and mental strain.

"I've never found film easy - it's like being in a war. You wake up every morning whimpering and wishing you get up at 5 every morning and get home at 9 every night. If you're there every day, you think you're going to die.

"That never happens in the theater. You rehearse, learn your lines and go to work for six hours a night. There are so many more pressures in film. I did both once - worked on a movie in the daytime and acted on the stage every night. It was hell - I slept on the set. It was horrendous."

BORN IN LONDON, Ontario 31 years ago, 'Nelligan trained in the classics in England's Central School of Dramatic Arts, was a member of the Royal Shakespeare Company in Stratford, appeared in numerous BBC productions, including "Measure for Measure" and "Therese Raquin" and acted opposite the likes of Paul Scofield at the National Theater before embarking on a film career that to date includes Dracula and Eye of the Behind Nelligan's steady hazel eyes and wide, sensual mouth lies a practicality of purpose.

"I don't think I would have survived in America if I had started here at 22. It's too tough. They're horrible to people here. In England, You work and you learn; you get a chance to grow. What you can't do is become rich and famous. There was a trade-off to be

"There was one year in London where I played 13 leading roles. I didn't have any choice - it was that kind of contract. They made me an offer I couldn't refuse, and part of it involved working myself to death. Halfway through that season I would have done anything to walk on as a maid.'

Describing her film roles thus far as being "women without men," Nelligan would nonetheless jump at the chance to play opposite actors like John Hurt, Robert DeNiro and Dustin Hoffman.

"I'D LIKE TO PLAY Tootsie in the road version," she quips. "I'd love to work with Dustin. People have been were dead. What happens is that you hospitalized for months after they've worked with him, but I'd love the Nelligan's director in Without a Trace, Stanley Jaffe, agrees that Nelligan would be a natural to play against Hoffman. "They'd kill each other, but it would be wonderful to watch," he said. "She's an intelligent woman who can play virtually anything. She could easily do Philip Barry sophisticated roles. In this, she plays a very strong woman and yet she was soft and vulnerable in Eye of the Needle. Her range is extraordinary."

Jaffe's assessment is backed up by one single, powerful scene of Nelligan's in Without a Trace in which Susan Selky finally breaks down. It is a wrenching, heartbreaking moment when, all alone in a tub full of water, she falls into wracking sobs of frustration and pain.

"That was the last shot we filmed and it was done at 3 in the morning," Nelligan recalled. "I had been up since - oh, I don't know, I had been up for days by then. It scared me because at that point I just didn't care anymore. I movie before, so in that scene I was moments in 1983

In that scene, Kate Nelligan reflects the anger, the hurt and the wretchedness of losing a child to some maddening unknown. The scene along with Nelligan's superlative performance - is certain to be rememwas exhausted. I had never carried a bered as one of the most poignant film exhibition featuring more than 80 works from two generations of Czech photography, has its national premiere at the UI Museum of Art beginning

Though the isolation of Czechoslovakia from Western-bloc countries has limited European and American familiarity with Josef Sudek and Jan Saudek, they are revered in their own country.

Sudek worked in Prague for 50 years until his death at the age of 80 in 1976. Images of places near his home - trees, gardens, backyards - appear consistently in his photographs. One "senses" the people of Prague, as if they have just left the scene.

Sudek most often used a large format camera (roughly 12 inches by 16 inches). Since making exposures and waiting for light was a laborious process, the body of work that survives him is not large. He made few copies of his prints, and most of the 15 books he produced from 1947 to 1976 are in Saudek/Sudek: Images from Czechoslovakia, an small edition sizes. Nonetheless, he is considered to be the master of his generation.

Jan Saudek, born in Prague in 1935, is, unlike his predecessor, a visual provocateur. Images of family and friends tease traditional notions of family album documentation and ask pointed questions about the ambiguities of relationships between people.

Another major portion of Saudek's work focuses exclusively on women, whom he alternately "placed on and beneath the pedestal," as James Kaufmann writes in the exhibition catalogue. The nudes in his studies are both sublime and ridiculous, holding daffodils and Coke cans and staring at empty bird

The exhibition catalogue, with 20 photographic reproductions, is available for purchase at the UI Museum of Art. Saudek/Sudek: Images from Czechoslovakia will be on display through April 3. Museum hours are 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, and noon-5 p.m. Sunday,
