board narrow dispute

By Susan E. Fisher

The Iowa City school board and the Iowa City Council came one step closer to making a settlement on the ownership of Central Junior High property at a board meeting Tuesday.

Mayor Mary Neuhauser and Councilor John McDonald met with the board's executive council in an attempt to resolve the property dispute.

District officials had hoped to sell the junior high school and adjacent land at the end of this school year. However, according to the city's legal staff ownership of the area reverts to the city if the property is not used for school-related purposes.

The issue came to a stalemate after the city rejected a school board proposal. The council said the school board's proposal was not responsive to the council's priority of building congregate housing on part of the property.

AT THE DISCUSSION the possibility of litigating the issue was rebuffed by representatives of the government bodies. Board President Lynne Cannon said, 'You can rest assured that we do want to negotiate.'

Mayor Neuhauser agreed, "We are not interested in litigating

Pointing to the possible outcomes of court action, Neuhauser said either the school would get the title or the council would win the case and the school district might decide to stay on the property.

"No matter what would happen we'd lose," Neuhauser said. In an effort to resolve the dispute, the school board asked the council to consider several possibilities. One suggestion is cash settlement between the two groups. Cannon said either the city could buy the property or the school systems could buy the title from the city.

In addition, the board suggested the council restrict the congregate housing site to a smaller area than was originally requested by the council.

Neuhauser said although the city had desired to use the entire southern half of the property, she said congregate housing could be placed on one-fourth of the Central property.

THE BOARD ALSO asked the council to find out whether Mercy Hospital parking could be considered "public use" of the property. Mercy officials have appeared before both the board and the council to ask for consideration as a prospective buyer of the property. Although Neuhauser said, "Mercy does provide a vital community function," the city's current legal interpretation of city guidelines would prevent the sale to Mercy. According to this interpretation, the city could not relinquish the title without compensation unless the property is

Arms control has more than 'zero options'

"I support arms control," almost every politician tells would-be supporters these days, but when the time comes to wade through the campaign rhetoric, local political analysts say the waters get very cloudy.

"Almost everybody is going to say they favor arms control in one way or another," Dee Norton, associate professor and chair of the UI psychology department, said Tuesday.

But Norton, who co-teaches a class called Military Affairs, pointed to a "spectrum" of widely varying stands on arms limitation.

Negotiating with the Soviets and other world powers from a position of military strength is the policy President Reagan advocates, Norton said. But the professor added, this administration defines strength as superiority.

What Reagan presently proposes is a "zero-option" plan, which according to Norton asks the Soviets to remove their SS20 medium-range missiles; in turn the United States agrees to stop the future deployment of ground- dent's judgment of the controversial launched Cruise missiles and Pershing IIs stationed in Europe.

"SOME SAY IT IS arms control and some say it isn't," Norton said. Critics say it asks the Soviets to give away something already in place, while the United States forsakes future plans. "I personally think there is a lack of serious commitment to arms control," Norton said. "They (the Reagan administration) want to go forward and then agree. I'm looking for a way to move back.

Reagan worries about the "machoaspect" of arms control - not letting the United States appear weak to Third World countries, Norton said.

He said he believes Kenneth Adelman, the president's choice to head the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, is "a disaster."

Co-chair of Johnson County Republicans Don Johnson came to the president's rescue, saying he hoped to see Adelman confirmed by the Senate. "I defer to the president. I think he should have his own man." Johnson's deference to the presi-problem. "Even those of us interested in politics never read deeply enough to understand all the nuances of arms control arguments," he said. AT THE OTHER END of Norton's spectrum of arms control perspectives

Reagan wants more Salvador advisers; won't exceed ceiling

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The Reagan administration told Congress Tuesday it has no immediate plans to increase the number of U.S. military advisers in El Salvador, but that the United States must do more to help the Salvadoran government fight leftist guerrillas. The administration has limited the number of U.S. training personnel to 55, but the actual number has remained below that figure.

"For the moment, we are going to use that self-imposed ceiling more effectively," Assistant Secretary of State Thomas Enders told a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee.

We are going to use this ceiling first before we reassess to see whether any increase is needed."

Nestor Sanchez, deputy assistant secretary of defense, said the administration wants to step up the training of Salvadoran forces, but that can be done outside El Salvador if Congress provides additional money.

"We can live with 55 (trainers in El Salvador)," he said.

THERE ARE 51 U.S. advisers now in El Salvador training helicopter pilots and other Salvadoran units under strict regulations that prohibit their participation in combat and limit their weapons to sidearms for use in selfdefense only, a Pentagon spokesman

A senior White House official said Monday the administration is considering increasing the number of advisers, and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said last week he would want their strength boosted by the "tens or twenties.

But spokesmen for both the Pentagon and the State Department told reporters that their advisory status will not change to permit them to accompany patrols into combat areas or guerrilla strongholds, a move that would be certain to meet with stiff resistance from

Sanchez said the present training program has reached about 10 percent of the Salvadoran army. "We have to continue to improve the quality of the Salvadoran army," he said.

'Crucial' need seen for language skills

By Dan Hauser

The United States lags behind other countries in foreign language education, placing a damper on business and international trade negotiations, members of the Governor's Task Force on Foreign Language and International Studies said Tuesday.

The last in a series of three planning sessions for the task force was held at Coe College in Cedar Rapids, before a group of concerned parents, area businessmen and educators to discuss the need for improvement in U.S. foreign language and education programs.

In attendance were UI president James O. Freedman, former Gov.

Robert Ray and others concerned about the future of foreign language instruction and international studies. Ray, who along with Freedman is spearheading a campaign for foreign language education, said "We are interested in bringing the business college closer to the language college." He said this would promote better communication in international trade.

'It is crucial to have a clear understanding of culture and fluency of language in foreign lands," said Arthur Kelley, of the Rockwell International Corp. and mediator for the conference.

OPEC agreement 'imminent'

PARIS - Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani said Tuesday a pricing agreement among OPEC members was "imminent" and the cartel could hold a full meeting to set a new bench-mark price for crude as early as Saturday.

Yamani's statements were the most optimistic yet that the Organization of petroleum Exporting Countries might avoid a global price war and solve the worst crisis in its 23year history. In 1960 the group was formed to keep the price of oil from slipping below $1.80

147 missing in ferry mishap

PEKING - A ferry carrying at least 232 people to a popular south China tourist area capsized Tuesday during an overnight thunderstorm, leaving at least 147 people missing and feared dead, officials said.

Officials in Guangdong Province said the ferry Red Star 312 was on its regular run from the provincial capital of Canton to Zhaoqing, a craggy mountain attraction 46 miles to the west, when winds heeled it sharply to port and capsized it. Most of the passengers were believed to have been asleep and had little time to grab life preservers before the boat turned over in the Shanshui River.

Johnson County Sheriff Gary Hughes came down hard on County Engineer O. J. Gode for Gode's comments last week in local press which Hughes felt were critical of the Sheriff's Office and its enforcement of embargoed road laws.

Hughes, speaking at Tuesday's informal meeting of the Johnson County Board of Supervisors, asked Gode for a public apology for remarks Gode made last week in local press. "I would like to say I think Mr. Gode owes the Johnson County Sheriff's Department a public apology for recent statements the

At the Feb. 24 formal meeting of the supervisors Gode was authorized to post weight restrictions on county oil and gravel roads to embargo heavy truck traffic. The traffic can ruin the roads softened by an early spring thaw. Gode as well as members of the board had expressed disapproval about the embargo's enforcement.

GODE WAS QUOTED last week in The Daily Iowan, the Iowa City Press-Citizen and The Cedar Rapids Gazette as saying the embargo is no better than the law enforcement and that it is difficult to get enforcement from the sheriff's office because they are worried about making a charge stand up in

But Hughes turned the statement around. "The embargo is no better than the county engineer, I would say." Hughes said the problem with enforcement was also a problem of cooperation that he said

Hughes recalled a particular case last year on Danes Road south of Iowa City where he said Gode's lack of cooperation caused problems for the sheriff's department and discouraged the possibility of filing

Mr. Gode," Hughes said. He said he would like to get Gode to issue permits to those vehicles that can drive on the embargoed roads in accordance with section 321.471 of the Code of Iowa.

Hughes accused Gode of not cooperating with the sheriff's office and requested a meeting, which took place Tuesday afternoon and was attended by Gode, Hughes, Board Chairman Donald Sehr and County Attorney J. Patrick White.

Deadline for financial aid causes rush at Calvin Hall

Students waiting until the March 1 deadline to apply for preferred treatment with financial aid made things a "little hectic" for workers in the financial aid office Monday and Tuesday a worker in Calvin Hall said.

Don Grimm, an employee in the financial aid office said Tuesday the office was very busy, but "we expected it to be that way. We knew it was going to be busy. It builds up then it dies down after the deadline.

Mark Warner, UI associate director for Student Financial Aid, said the office has not been keeping track of the numbers going in and out of the office, but he said there were 35 to 50 people waiting outside the office during the office lunchbreak. "It's nothing abnormal. It's been happening the last five or six years." Warner said referring to the flow of people waiting until the last day of the deadline.

GRIMM EXPLAINED THE procrastination on the students part as "human nature."

Along with the students application for financial aid, Warner said students are also turning in a one-page application form for aid to the UI which is not sent to the College Scholarship Ser-

"For dependent students, they will have to turn in a copy of their parents 1982 1040 form. For independent students, they will send their own 1040 form.'

Warner said the financial aid forms were late arriving at the UI this year because of obstacles in Congress. He said the office did not receive the forms until the first week of January of this year. In the past the forms were received around the first week of December and were sent home with students over semester break.

ALTHOUGH THE FORMS were late arriving, Warner said, "they were mailed out as soon as we got them.

Students who failed to turn in financial aid applications before the March 1 deadline will still be eligible, but will not have as high priority as the students who made the deadline, Warner

These students can apply for the Guaranteed Student Loan program and the Pell Grants. These students can look to non-work study work, Warner said.

Ruling halts action against corporation

The Sheller-Globe Corporation was granted a summary judgment Tuesday, preventing Iowa City from enforcing two city ordinances against the corpora-

Sheller-Globe filed a petition for declaratory judgment and permanent injunction against the city Dec. 22, 1981. In it, the corporation stated it received a notice of claim from the city accusing it of illegally discharging a substance into the city sewer, causing $100,000 damage to the system. Sheller-Globe would have been held liable for the damage.

Sheller-Globe officials expressed their concern in the 1981 petition that the decision of liability rested with the Iowa City Manager or with the City Council, two parties they considered to be biased.

In the ruling District Judge Larry J. Conmey filed Tuesday, he said the administrative duties of the council "affects, if not prevents" it from acting as an impartial tribunal.

Sheller-Globe officials stated in the petition that the ordinances Iowa City cited were unconstitutional, because if enforced, they would deprive the corporation of its property without a trial by jury or an evidentiary hearing before a fair and impartial authority.

Diversity of platforms seen in slates for Student Senate

By Kristine Stemper

For the next two weeks three independent candidates and the members of four slates vying for seats on the 1983 UI Student Senate will spend hours posting signs, passing out hand bills and giving away colorful campaign buttons to try and reach as many of the UI voting populace as possible to draw votes in

Even though the bond fee, which every student candidate must pay, increased from $10 to $25 this year, the room in Gilmore Hall where campaigners were given the go signal Tuesday by members of the UI Elections Board was filled.

Members of the Beauty-Amiability-Trustworthiness party (BAT Party), the Progressives '83, the Representative Choice and the Student Reform Party put on their campaign buttons and looked their competition in the eye.

With bond fees paid and the lists of 50 constituent signatures (required from every person running) handed in, the official "I want this to be a clean campaign" precaution was made by the elections board.

EVERY SLATE PRESENTED a platform listing the issues they will emphasize during the election except the BAT-party. "We don't have a platform yet. We only have a small box," said member Dana Anderson. Their motto: "To the BAT-polls." But, "If we win we're going to demand a recount."

Anderson mentioned some issues the group considers important. "We're going to get rid of all the dull and boring classes" at the UI, he said, and they will request that the UI basketball players wear bat uniforms and change their name to the UI BAT-eyes. Members of Progressives '83 will deal with more serious issues, including the retention of mandatory student fees, saying that is "the only portion of tuition in which students exercise control.

Dispute procedure proposal approved by faculty council

By Paul Boyum

The UI Faculty Council gave final approval Tuesday to proposed changes in Faculty Dispute Procedures. The changes will now be considered by the Faculty Senate at its March 15 meeting. Tuesday's action followed weeks of council discussion on changes of wording in the UI regulations that pertain to problems and disputes involving a mem-The new wording concerns the clearly adequate record of achievement. Council member Eleanor Birch drafted new language for the section after the council objected to the words "reasonable persons The new language reads, "Essentially, the faculty member's case is so strong that any reasonable group of informed evaluators would be convinced of its merit. The report explains the need for coordination bet-

Johnson said the most difficult problem for his department was to "meet the crunch" for computer access by UI faculty and staff and the growing num-

"Les," 67, prepares the courtroom by gathering case files for all activities scheduled for the day, filling the silver water pitcher on the judge's bench every morning, and making sure the judge has access to pencils and pads.

"I enjoy being with people," he said, and in the course of his work he is in contact with many people. Taking jury members out for meals is part of his job; such a lunch was the source of one of the few disagreements he ever had with a judge.

"HE THOUGHT I should take them out at 11 one day, and I said, 'I don't take them out until 12:30,' and he got mad." Les explained it's difficult to find a restaurant to cater to the uncertain needs of a hungry jury which is never sure of its arrival time. During that tiff, he said, the judge said he wished he could fire Les, but since bailiffs are Johnson County Sheriff's deputies, the judge lacked the authority to do so. Most people seem to get along with Les without any problem though. Johnson County District Judge Paul J. Kilburg described the man with the pencil-thin moustache as friendly and outgoing. He always attempts to be helpful and get people to the right place, Kilburg said.

The minute his family is mentioned, Les is quick to pull out his billfold to display snapshots of one grandson and five great grandchildren. Pointing to one curlyheaded little girl, he said, "There's my lit-

Cleanup of Council Bluffs waste site to begin in May

May to clean up the bankrupt Aidex Corp. pesticide plant near Council Bluffs, Iowa's top-priority site for cleanup of chemical wastes, Gov. Terry Branstad and Sen. Roger Jepsen said Tuesday

After a meeting with the head of the Environmental Protection Agency, they said a request for bids was issued Tuesday. The site is the top-priority spot in Iowa and is listed for action under EPA's Super-

"To get word they're moving forward today is good news," Branstad said at a hectic news conference in the hallway of a Senate office building. "I'm very pleased with what we were informed to-

"We expect within three months (surface) cleanup of the site will be completed."

Jepsen, R-Iowa, said EPA Administrator Anne Burford released "a complete schedule" for cleanup. Deadline for bids is April 1, he said, and the winner should be announced May 1 with work to begin soon after that.

AFTER SURFACE WORK is done, he said, there will be "deep probes" to see if there is subsoil and groundwater contamination.

Branstad said "I don't think you see families displaced" when asked if neighbors might have to move pany. Its plant caught fire in 1976 and water used in fighting the fire is believed to have contaminated the EPA officials said more than 4,000 barrels of pesticides and pesticide wastes are stored and buried on the property. Wastes also are held in a large underground tank and a concrete pit, they said. In December 1982, EPA used Superfund money to erect a security fence around the site. Burford was scheduled to appear with Jepsen and Branstad after their meeting but scurried out of the building without speaking to reporters. Jepsen said he did not believe the announcement of action at Aidex was linked to congressional investigation of EPA handling of cleanup of toxic wastes.

"NOTHING MOVES AS fast as you'd like it to," he said later. "The EPA has made an honest effort." After repeated questions about the length of time since troubles were identified at Aidex, Jepsen said: "I would point out action on this particular site was taken by this administration. If you're going to ask questions, why did it sit for four years (during the Carter Administration)?

We expect it'll be May and June and possibly July to clean up," Jepsen said, "In July and early August, they will start the deep probes.

Congressional letter presents EPA 'criminal conduct' charge said Tuesday he has "specific information of criminal conduct" in the government's handling of toxic waste cleanups and called on President Reagan to keep his pledge not to cover up wrongdoing.

In a letter to Reagan and the Justice Department. Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., urged Reagan to release all documents relevant to his subcommittee's investigation of the Environmental Protection

Appearing at a budget hearing later, EPA Administrator Anne Burford, her voice cracking, said the "circus atmosphere" swirling around the agency has crippled its ability to do a job that would challenge "the Lord himself."

She said she believes the only way to resolve the situation is to allow "total congressional access" to EPA's enforcement files under an elaborate procedure already worked out with one House panel in an executive privilege struggle that has soured relations between the agency and Capitol Hill. Several congressional panels have subpoenaed EPA files with limited success. Reagan invoked executive privilege in withholding some Superfund materials late last year, a move that provoked Congress to vote a criminal contempt citation against

Dingell, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce oversight subcommittee, said sworn statements by EPA employees "present evidence of wrongdoing, unethical behavior and potential agency has refused to surrender.

He said the subcommittee was told "there were several tracks at EPA, one being a fast track, one being a middle track and another being a political

The agency has been racked by allegations of political manipulation of dump cleanups under the $1.6 billion Superfund and accusations it made should pay all or most of the cleanup costs.

Among matters referred to the Justice Department was an allegation Lavelle made a false statement to Dingell's panel by certifying in writing that her first knowledge her former employer, Aerojet-General Corp., was a possible responsible party in a cleanup case came on June 17, 1982.

Agency employees have told UPI - and Dingell said Tuesday they repeated the charges before his committee - that Lavelle first learned of the connection with California's Stringfellow dump site at a staff meeting on May 28, 1982.

WHILE PERJURY prosecutions are rare, another federal criminal statute states that persons who use false writing or documents "knowing the same can contain any false, fictitious or fraudulent statement" may be fined up to $10,000 or imprisoned for up to five years.

In California with President Reagan, who is enter-taining Queen Elizabeth II of Britain, deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said Dingell's letter has not been received at the White House and any evidence of wrongdoing should be turned over to the Justice Department.

Lower gas prices forecast

DES MOINES (UPI) - Gasoline prices at Iowa service stations have reached the lowest level since late 1979 and an Iowa Energy Policy Council official said Tuesday they could go even lower in the coming

Dick Vohs, a fuel price analyst with the state Energy Policy Council, said Iowans paid 3 cents a gallon less for self-service regular gasoline in

The IEPC's February fuel price survey for prices as of Feb 23 set the average price for regular gasoline at self-service pumps at $1.10.5 a gallon which was down about 13 cents per gallon from a similar survey taken last November, Vohs said. Decreases in other grades of gasoline at Iowa selfservice and full-service islands ranged from 1.5 cents to 6 cents a gallon in February as lower prices on the worldwide "spot" market began to show up at Iowa pumps, Vohs said.

With the world oil market in a highly volatile situation, Vohs said: "It's really hard to say what might happen in the next month. We look for the downward

"GAS PRICES PROBABLY will continue to come down," he said. "Self-service regular is already at the lowest level since late 1979. Unleaded gasoline hasn't been this low since January 1980."

Unleaded gasoline at self-service pumps averaged $1.18.5 in February, while self-service regahol averaged $1.08 — off 2 cents a gallon from January and the average price of self-service gasohol was

At full-service islands, regahol averaged $1.20.5 a gallon, down 4 cents from January; gasohol was $1.34 a gallon; regular $1.25.5 per gallon, down 1.5 cents; and unleaded averaged $1.30 - down 2.5 cents per gallon, Voh said.

Prices for diesel fuel, and No. 1 and No. 2 heating oil dropped as much as 6 cents per gallon in the February survey, Vohs said. Self-service diesel prices averaged $1.12 per gallon, while No. 1 and No. 2 heating oil averaged $1.05 and 99 cents per gallon respectively. Vohs said propane averaged 66.5 a gallon cents last month, down about 3 cents from

Part of the drop in average gas prices last month occurred when some service stations in Iowa reduced self-service regular to 99.9 cents a gallon. Vohs said he doubted dealers would drop prices very far below that level because most dealers are losing money on gasoline sold at less than $1 per gallon.

"IT'S CONCEIVABLE IT could go further, but 99 cents is about as low as the dealers can afford to go right now. They're losing money right now," he said. "If the world oil prices drop, prices at the pump will drop eventually.

Vohs said spot prices on the world oil market already have fallen $2-$5 a barrel below contract prices, which he said added to the oil "glut" and has translated into lower prices for American con-

Vohs said gasoline prices in Iowa could drop another nickel a gallon in the next couple of months, but consumers may not notice the drop because a 5cent a gallon increase in federal excise taxes will be added to the price of gasoline on April 1.

He said increased demand for gasoline which traditionally occurs during the summer months, a firm price agreement among OPEC and an economic recovery are factors that could drive petroleum prices up in the near future.

Council plans road, sidewalk upkeep for summer

By Mark Leonard

The coming of spring usually means Iowa City citizens can count on at least one street in town being torn up. This year is no exception.

City Engineer Frank Farmer has estimated it will cost $184,000 to replace the road and sidewalk on Dubuque

Street from Washington Street to Iowa Avenue this summer. Street lights and sidewalk vaults will also be replaced and repaired in the process.

The Iowa City Council adopted a resolution Tuesday authorizing the city to take bids on the project until March 31. The city hopes to have construction completed in August.

The reconstruction of Highway 1 is also scheduled for 1983. The council has also discussed but not yet approved the reconstruction of Linn Street this year, Farmer said.

THIS SUMMER'S project, however, is only a hint of what is to come for Dubuque Street. The council has plans to repair Dubuque Street from Iowa Avenue to Park Road in 1984.

Gingrich said even with the transplant, the possibility of Head's survival would be quite low. "I don't think I could give him more than a 10 percent chance." In a transplant between siblings, he said, the best chances for survival would be 20 to 25 percent. Cranston, however, supports the B-1 bomber. Mondale and Hart oppose it.

The California senator says the bomber, which is built in his home state, is necessary for the "bomb leg" of the nuclear triad. He maintains because the Soviets can more easily verify the bomber than submarine-launched or inter-continental ballistic missiles, it is not as destabilizing. The B-1 also is preferable to these missiles because it

Fidel Chavez Mena, who gave a private briefing to members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said his country wants more military assistance for transportation, training and communications equipment, but he would not say whether it also wants more U.S. advisers.

SPEAKING THROUGH an interpreter, Chavez Mena said the additional $60 million in military assistance the administration is seeking for El Salvador "is very important to us" but his government could survive without it.

Deregulation will hurt

Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad reacted Monday to President Reagan's plan to lift all regulations on the price of natural gas by 1986 by saying he is "not sure" whether deregulation would be good or bad for the state. But there should be no doubt in the governor's mind — gas-consuming states will be hit very hard by deregulation.

Actually, Branstad was probably being tactful by not attacking the Reagan administration's stand on natural gas deregulation. He knows very well that partial deregulation has already cost Iowans hundreds of millions of dollars, particularly because of "take or pay" contracts that allow pipeline companies to charge utilities for gas they order but do not use. (The utilities are then able to pass the cost of the unused gas on to their customers.) And he has noted how airline deregulation has resulted in higher ticket prices and poorer service in less-populated states such as Iowa.

Branstad and the governors of other energy-consuming states must soon make up their minds to openly and vociferously oppose the administration on deregulation; "Thou shalt speak no ill of other Republicans" is a commandment Branstad will have to break if he is to serve the best interests of the citizens of Iowa.

For gas deregulation is patently unfair to consumer states, and will be until such time as there is real competition in the natural gas industry. As things stand, pipeline companies have virtual monopolies in entire regions of states - deregulation would only allow them legally to charge what the market will bear. That would have obvious benefits for producers and producing states, but at the cost of severe economic hardship for the rest of us.

Williams' lasting art

The death of playwright Tennessee Williams last Friday brings to a close one of the most complex and creative careers in

Though Williams had been relatively inactive for the last decade, and only moderately successful when active, the body of his works by that time spoke for his genius. The Glass Menagerie and A Streetcar Named Desire were more than any playwright could hope for out of one life; to that Williams added Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, Summer and Smoke, The Night of the Iguana and half a

A list of Williams' characters virtually defines a pantheon in American drama: Amanda and Laura Wingfield, Blanche Du Bois, Stanley Kowalski, Big Daddy, Brick, It's no wonder that Arthur Miller, whom many would consider competition, could refer to Williams as "the greatest American playwright."

Williams' personal life was like that of his Blanche Du Bois: he didn't want reality; he wanted magic. His spells of depression, his dependence upon drugs and alcohol and his guilt over his homosexuality all served to make him almost as pathetic and tragic as one of his characters, at least to the public's eyes.

But Williams managed to exorcise his personal demons in art that has already lasted beyond his own time and will no doubt last far beyond ours — a fact that the media forgot while he was alive and even more shamefully exploited in his death.

The fact that Williams was a playwright, much less a great one, was almost lost in copy that wallowed in his personal problems. A KCRG-9 newsbreak announced his death as that of "an avowed homosexual" known to have had trouble with drugs and booze. which might in turn have had something to do with his death; UPI wire copy described him as "a homosexual who battled with alcohol and drug abuse problems."

While these are hardly insignificant details, they should not be ripped from the context of a 71-year-long life that has given us art as great as that of Tennessee Williams.

Blanche Du Bois could depend on the kindness of strangers; it's a shame that Tennessee Williams couldn't.

Propaganda movies?

Three documentary films from Canada, two about acid rain and one about nuclear war, have been declared propaganda films by the Reagan administration — those viewing them will have their names collected by the government.

This decision is frightening, both because of its stupidity and its Gestapo-state mentality. The decision was stupid because it gives both issues free press attention and focuses attention on the problems of acid rain and nuclear war.

Neither issue has so far proved to be the administration's finest hour. The public is presently being treated to weekly revelations about the incompetence, possible criminal activities and politicization of the Enivronmental Protection Agency. Many Americans and Europeans have taken to the streets to protest the Reagan administration's bellicose posturing and lackluster efforts in nuclear arms reduction.

More important, the decision indicates that the administration is prepared to go back to the days when J. Edgar Hoover collected lists of dissidents, including church groups, and attempted to smear or frighten all those who disagreed with him. The Ford and Carter administrations began the process of bringing the FBI and the CIA under control.

Reagan relaxed those controls and now seems prepared to loose the government on potential filmgoers. The government has no legitimate interest in which groups or individuals see films on any subject, let alone films on subjects like acid rain and nuclear war. That it believes it does just illustrates how far Reagan, the "foe" of big government, is willing to intrude the state into the private affairs of citizens.

Films and real life in America

By Linda Blandford

T IS FRIDAY night in Philadelphia — a sort of national joke. The streets are uncomfortably quiet for a New Yorker. A car or two, a man stretched out on the sidewalk fast asleep beneath the watching eye of the bored policeman

On the corner of Market and 12th streets there is an unexpected crowd of people. They are queuing for the cinema. But what really astonishes the New Yorker is the film for which they are so patiently lining up. Across the road, Dustin Hoffman's Tootsie is showing to a practically deserted house. Here there is Gandhi.

In Manhattan, Tootsie is the great hit of the moment. In movie guides it is customarily referred to as "a temporary sexual confusion," of which more later. In the little restaurants around Central Park, over the glasses of chilled Chablis, it is the subject of long, serious discussions about its political relevance. Those who talk confidantly there of Hoffman's inevitable Oscar for his performance are puzzled by the Golden Globe and New York Film Critics' nomination for Ben Kingsley as Gandhi (all too often referred to as Ben Who as What?).

THOSE WHO COME out of the early showing of Gandhi here in Philadalphia walk out with hardly a word. In the second performance there is total hush in the cinema as the film ends. The usual American rush for the door and babble of articulate comment is, for

The insularity of even educated Americans has often been remarked upon. It takes a film like this to bring it home. In a country that mourns the death of coach Bear Bryant as a national hero, there is hardly any concept of worlds that are not reared on Kansas grain. Our boys in Vietnam were real, if not the Vietnamese. So too is the Holocaust, perhaps because of the presence of so many survivors to keep its memory alive. India might never have existed; Gandhi is yet more alien than ET.

The notion of such a man's enduring odyssey, let alone such poverty, suffering and violence, is humbling and recognized as such. The inevitability of catastrophe on such scale defies the imagination of those reared in this land of abundance and hope. It is impossible to exaggerate the impact of Gandhi on this audience of Americans. They are inspired but they are also ashamed.

IT CANNOT BE said often enough that there is no way to absorb the misery of the Third World in newspapers whose fat advertising is a celebration of the American feast. The happy news of TV renders meaningless the odd snippet of famine and disaster. It is often said that Americans no longer care: it is more likely that they cannot

And thus, such an inevitable consequence of such self-centeredness, we have Tootsie lauded as a social event and political breakthrough. The "suffering" of women, their bottoms caressed, their very names lost in a morass of "honey," "sweetie," and "tootsie" - this is suffering to be grasped easily against the din of advertising for Beefsteak Charlie's (everything you can eat for $5.95) or the newest TV commercial slogan ("but wait — there's more").

And in the land of more, Tootsie is an important film not because it is charming and funny (which it certainly is) but because it exposes the horror of exploitation, namely of beautiful and educated women wondering not whether they will have dinner today but with whom they will have it.

Hoffman's movie experience of dressing, playing and ultimately feeling as a woman changes his understanding of what it is to be one. If Richard Attenborough had to wait 20 years to make Gandhi, one can imagine the 15-minute waverings at giving Hoffman his head with Tootsie - the breakfast meetings in Beverly Hills chilled by the thought of the big, bankable star dressed as a woman for the best part of two hours, the fear of how it would play in Peoria.

Hoffman's character is the only in- acting soul mate, has not within her teresting woman in the film. It may be the best of Hollywood but it is still ment - let alone talent. It is women

Hugs, Haagen-Dazs and Holocaust

E WILL all go together when we go,' songwriter Tom Lehrer Sandi wrote in 1958. That's one of the best descriptions I've seen of the aftermath of a nuclear war. Oh. some he-man pioneer types will argue that's pessimistic, and will vow that if only you build a better fallout shelter than your neighbor, you can skirt the path to Death's door. To this, I offer a quotation from the Physicians for Social Resposibility: The survivors will envy the dead.

As for me, just bring on the hugs and Haagen-Dazs and I'll vaporize peacefully.

And until that Big Flash sails through the sky, I'll protest like hell. That's not all I've been doing to prepare for the Final Final. I've been saving sheets of cardboard so I can disguise myself as the Carver-Hawkeye Arena in case a nuclear bomb lands on Iowa ("A Place to Glow"). This idea of dressing up comes from the parody pamphlet, "Meet Mr. Bomb," which points out that neutron bombs destroy people and leave buildings intact. I suppose the rationale is that giant mutant roaches will need places to stay in bad weather or stuctures in which to change their bathing suits.

I've also been making friends with roaches. I provide 24-hour room service in my roach motels in the kitchen: miniature fountains of champagne, veal Cordon Bleu under glass (a very small one). Cheaper than bribing a congressperson to save me a special spot

AND IF I HAD any illusions I was on the laundry list of the Indispensible, they were dispelled Sunday in the Newspaper Iowa Depends Upon.

Common humanity

To the editor:

I am responding to recent articles concerning the leukemia victim (DI, Feb. 22 and 23).

What has happened to our common humanity? Have we become so intellectual and uncaring so as not to allow a fellow human being one simple request - of letting a potential donor know a recipent's condition?

I am a part-time nursing assistant at the UI Hospitals and I am shocked that hospital officials would sit on such an issue of life and death by not informing "Mrs. X" that an actual leukemia victim exists. I do not understand how this could be considered "coercion."

If "Mrs. X" knew the truth she would be better able to come to a decision. I agree with Tom Riley, the patient's attorney, that "Mrs. X" is "looking at this in an abstract way," since the hospital only asked if she would participate in the program in a general way

As for the hospital officials - if we are going to truly serve the needs of the community and humanity as a learning and teaching institution, we need to open ourselves to one simple truth and that is love. It is not the intellect or philosophies that bring joy; it is the heart. The heart is the only judge humanity will ever have to answer to. Roger Mills 620 N. Linn St.

In this corner ...

To the editor:

In the Feb. 11 DI, two letters appeared criticizing the proposal put orward by the New Wave regarding UI weapons-related research for the Department of Defense. We argue that the university should not accept any further weapons research as a statement against Reagan's bloated military budget and simultaneous cuts in social programs, particularly education. Though Wes Schlenker's letter raises an argument we've encountered in the course of our work To the editor: around this issue (non-military, beneficial applications of the research), I would like to take this space to respond to the points made by Paul Gies.

While I agree that "the U.S. military establishment is overgrown, overpaid, and too little restrained," and that yes, there are things worth fighting for, I see an error in his arguments that many students fall into: assuming that advancement in weapons technology is inherently a good thing in the hands of the right people. The belief behind this is that it is the role of the U.S. armed forces in the world to maintain peace. However, we in the New Wave see people, not guns, as the primary force for peace in the world.

It is clear to us that the governments of the United States and the Soviet Union are forces for war, not peace. It is not Reagan versus Andropov; it is the peace movements of Europe and America and the struggles for peace and freedom everywhere all in one corner, versus Reagan and Andropov in the other.

Todd Rohm for New Wave

Cheap shot?

I must take exception to the editorial titled, "Israel's Image" (DI, Feb. 16). It is a misrepresentation of the report of the Commission of Inquiry to imply, as did the editorial, that the report criticized current Israeli policies in general or the war in Lebanon in par-

Israel, tormented by Palestine Liberation Organization actions based in Lebanon, entered Lebanon and dispersed the PLO. Phalangists were sent into Sabra and Chatilla to ferret out remaining PLO guerillas - and there actually were such in the camps. The commission found certain Israeli leaders negligent in failing to properly consider the possibility that the Christian phalangists would take bloody revenge upon the innocent Palenstinian

The reaction in Israel to this horrible revenge can be seen in the huge demonstrations in Tel Aviv, the setting up of the Commission of Inquiry and the eventual acceptance of the commission's recommendations by the Israeli government.

Full acceptance of the commission's recommendations does not - contrary to the suggestion of the editorial - require a change in government policy or any punishment of Ariel Sharon beyond his dismissal as minister of defense; these matters were not the subject of the inquiry, and they are not among the recommendations.

We must take note also of the editorial's conclusion, namely that these events justify labeling Israel a "terrorist group." This may have been the expression of honestly felt anger, or it may have been a deliberate cheap shot at Israel. In any event, it was not a responsible appraisal of the facts.

Olson joins cry for six NCAA spots

sistant Sports Editor

An NCAA berth. How, who and why? Iowa Coach Lute Olson doesn't know and won't even venture a guess. But it's not a topic to be overlooked, especially in the Hawkeye state where unlike the past few years, it seems doubtful that the Iowa basketball team will gain easy access to the the postseason tournament. At this point in the season, the big cliche goes something like: "Nothing will be decided until the final week of the season." And it's true. But Big Ten coaches whose teams are in the middle of the league race are now clammering that six teams should go to the NCAA. Last year, four teams represented the Big Ten, Atlantic Coast Conference and Big East. Three were selected from the Southeast Conference and two from the Pac Ten. In all, 48 teams went to the NCAA THIS YEAR, the field has been expanded to 52, but the Big Ten is more each Big Ten team has the day off

After Sunday's win over Iowa, Minnesota Coach Jim Dutcher said six Big Ten teams should go to the NCAA. The fourth in the league.

At his Tuesday press conference, Olson agreed. "If the purpose is to get the top teams into the NCAA, then there's no question that we (the Big Ten) have six teams that belong in the top 52 in the country.

conference winning record and look at the quality from top to bottom, there are six teams deserving of the NCAA...It's not too far-fetched."

Asked about the NCAA chances for some of the teams ahead of Iowa right now, Olson said: "I have enough difficulty determining if we close strongly, if we deserve to go the

Also on the agenda Tuesday was a general health report, and Olson said all 13 Hawkeyes will be ready to go against Northwestern Thursday -Iowa's last home game of the season. Andre Banks, who had been hobbled by two sprained ankles in the last week, has "been going full-tilt" in practice, according to Olson. THE FIVE IOWA starters were given the day off from practice Monday, spending the afternoon viewing tapes of Sunday's game instead. The Hawks will be idle Saturday as balanced than ever before and with when playing its traveling partner (in everyone knocking off everyone else, Iowa's case, Northwestern), in the "At this point of the season, an open date for anyone is helpful," Olson said.

"Since we played Sunday, the open Gophers are presently 8-6 and tied for date really helps us. The timing couldn't be a whole lot better.' The Hawks will have the weekend off from practice and get back to business on Sunday. The two-day layoff will be their first since Christmas break.

"That will give a lot of aches and pains the chance to mend," Olson said.

Spring fever's catching

Enberg, McGuire most deserving of post-season bid

The multitude of college basketball games on television this season has brought many new names and faces into the the broadcast booth. Teams have been battling all season for a berth in the NCAA tournament and now would be a good time to see which announcers are worthy of post-season

The "Final Four" is really an easy choice. The NBC crew of Dick Enberg and Al McGuire is by far the best duo on the air today. Enberg is a stabilizing force in McGuire's world of "french pastries" and they put a very entertaining product on the air.

McGuire has become much more refined in the past few years, but when a game is close he uses his coaching experience to tell fans what each coach triguing element to the game.

should be doing and that adds an in-show in Albuquerque, N.M., so the fans will have to settle for Gary Bender and team but not quite in the style of was close until the very end.

Enberg-McGuire. Bender tends to become a follower to Packer's insights instead of sometimes questioning as Enberg does of McGuire. Packer, at times, seems to become a little too vehement in making his point.

A prime example was the recent Virgina-Missouri telecast in which Packer did a feature on the short threepoint shot in the ACC. After Packer interviewed a number of coaches, Maryland's Coach, Lefty Dreisell, was shown making a three-pointer and Packer joked about how bad a shooter are not as good as the rest. But the

BUT CBS HAS the rights to the big Driesell really was. It would have been fine if it had stopped there, but Packer continued throughout the second half Billy Packer, a very well-polished and it detracted from the game which

> ESPN HAS MADE the claim of having the "greatest college basketball schedule ever." Although that is true in numbers (the network will have carried over 150 games by season's end) the announcers have fallen a little short of the great status, with one ex-

The exception is former Detroit University Coach Dick Vitale. He has been criticized in the past for his boistrous air voice and his putdowns of conferences and players he believes man's knowledge of the game is unsur- fer him a contract and his career has passed.

Once the viewer cuts through his occasional pop-offs about unrelated topics, Vitale's insight to coaching strategy, action on the floor and calls from the officials is on the same level with McGuire and Packer.

OTHERS WHO DESERVE mention for good work include MetroSports' Jim Thacker and Harry Kalas. Both are fine play-by-play men who would look much better with analysts in the class of McGuire, Packer and Vitale. In fact, Thacker and Packer used to be the team for an ACC network that did games in that part of the country before the cable television boom. NBC thought enough of Packer's work to ofwent from there.

For Iowa fans, a column on basketball broadcast teams wouldn't be complete without a word or two about the Iowa Television Network's duo of Bob Hogue and Sharm Scheuerman. But, oh my, this isn't a column about cheerleaders or analysts that still think college basketball is a four quarter game, so I'll leave it to Hawkeye fans to make their own judgment on Bob and Sharm.

Sports Director Campbell is always on the run

KCRG-9 Sports Director John Campbell started running seven years ago to get in shape for his 10-year high school reunion.

"I just kind of wanted to feel good and look good, I guess, so I started running in my Converse tennis shoes." said the pleasant-sounding sports journalist. "A half-mile was my idea of running back then."

But that was the simplest his running life has ever been. That half-mile-perday "guy getting into shape" developed into a 60-mile-per-week runner training for a marathon. "I've done everything from training for a marathon, which involved an 18-mile run on Sundays, to where I am right now, which is four to five (miles) a day at the most. I'm kind of down right

"It's no fun to know you've trained hard enough, and then for some reason it just doesn't work on Campbell is beginning now to wash away this bad marathon taste. "I'm still kind of tired, but I'm trying to come back from that." Monday he ran six miles, his highest total since the Running provides a good balance to Campbell's professional life. He says he has a perfect schedule, not having to get up at the crack of dawn. There are exceptions, however. "I remember when we were going to fly over to Ohio State for Iowa's final basketball game two years ago, I had to get up and run a 12-miler at 4:30 in the morning that

CAPITALIZING ON A RACE in a foreign atmosphere is just part of his running-working experience. While traveling with the Iowa basketball ning, and by 241/2, I just had it; I was team on its trip to Pullman, Wash., last year for the first round of the NCAA West regional, Campbell took advantage of a nearby race.

We had to drive up to Spokane to get a tape off, and I had heard on the radio that there was going to be a five-mile race at a junior college in town, so my photographer and I drove out there. He slept in the car while I went out and ran. It was a great time."

After clipping through the five-miles in about 39 minutes, Campbell saw Iowa Coach Lute Olson's wife Bobbi in the hotel. "She said I looked like a mess, and I probably did."

RUNNING SEEMS to be many different things to Campbell. "It's a great time, a time when you're alone. It's a time of play, too." Another time he suggested that running to him is a family activity, as he mentioned running with his wife and son.

The sports director's running future holds even more variety. Among various 10,000-meter races and the Bix 7 seven-miler in Davenport he would like to tackle this summer, he mentioned the Iowa Triathlon, held during the fall in Lisbon.

The triathlon — a long swim in an open body of water followed by a bicycle ride and a long run — is regarded as man's most severe test of endurance. "I think guys who have been running for as long as I have are kind of looking for something new, and that provides Campbell may be bent on doing adventurous things. "I remember last year on some of those 80-degree-belowzero days, I went out and ran four or five miles. It's just part of the challenge, I guess. I don't run indoors; I can't think of anything more boring.'

Campbell calls himself an "averagebelow average guy trying to stay in shape. It gives me something to do.' By the way, he didn't impress anyone at his high school reunion.

Consistency aids gymnast's art

By Steve Batterson Assistant Sports Editor

Brad Smith returned to Hilton Coliseum last weekend.

But this time, the junior gymnast was competing for Iowa rather than the University of Northern Iowa and this time his team could compete against the nation's third-ranked Cyclones.

The last time Brad Smith competed at Hilton he was a freshman out of Urbandale and the Panthers finished in third place, scoring 187.9. The only problem was that Iowa State scored a 278.6 and the Hawkeyes scored a 267.15.

"At that time, I had no idea UNI was going to drop their program," Smith said. "But after the season was over, they decided to drop the program because of money problems so I looked at Iowa.

"THE TEAM HERE was better than I expected, but in a way, it was fortunate for me that I left UNI," Smith said, adding, "but it wasn't that I didn't like it there. It was just that I didn't think I would go very

"For the first time in my career, I'm real consistent in what I'm competing in," Smith said. "I've had trouble in the past but now I seem to turn on in meets, but I still get a little nervous once in a while on (pommel) horse. I knew that if I worked hard enough, I could make it.'

"HE'S COME QUITE a ways in training and learning how to practice efficiently," said Iowa Coach Tom Dunn. "I saw him compete in high school and I thought he had some excellent potential, especially on the pommel horse. I was real happy to have him transfer.

"His biggest problems last year were with consistency so his role was mainly one of filling in when we had injuries," Dunn said

Team captain Tim Gaffy sank a crucial free throw with just two seconds to go to give Currency a 50-47 intramural basketball victory over Mavicular Fossa in the second round of the men's independent league playoffs. The contest was featured a the IM game of the week

Gaffy's heroics leaves Currency undefeated in six games. He said after the game he felt no pressure to hit the late free throw to clinch the game. "I got two shots, and I knew I wouldn't miss both," he said.

The game was close from start to finish as neither team could pull away from the other. Mavicular Fossa scored the first seven points of the game, but Currency came right back with six-straight points. Halftime had Currency on top, 25-23.

Hawk notes

Men's gymnastics

Iowa men's Gymnastics Coach Tom Dunn said the Hawkeyes didn't look real sharp and seemed tired in Tuesday's practice. Dunn attributed Iowa's fatigue to intense workouts both Sunday and Monday.

"We didn't have quality performances all the way down the line Tuesday," Dunn said.

The gymnasts also competed in an intrasquad meet Tuesday. Dunn believes that the Hawks are performing better due to the intrasquad meets.

Wrestling

During Tuesday's practice, the Iowa Hawkeyes began "peaking for nationals," according to Coach Dan Gable. The NCAA meet is March 10-12 at Oklahoma City, Okla.

Hawkeye grapplers went through 21consectutive minutes of "hard, intense wrestling," Gable said, who compared the 21-minute workouts to one,

Greatness of 'MASH' pioneered way for better prime time shows

This is the last in a three-part series.

It is not to mark (Benjamin) Franklin, but to attempt to appraise the nature of the difficulties that molded him ... nearly all our national hernes have been driven back - and praised by reason of their shrewdness in making walls, not in bursting into flower. - William Carlos

Many critics saw "Frank Burns" as the weakest link in "MASH's" chain of commanding characters, a cardboard caricature of cowardice, incompetence and

But Frank Burns, because he was such a ferret-faced louse, became the catalyst for every innovation "MASH" had to offer.

It was because of Frank Burns that "Hawkeye" and his accomplices retained what little nastiness they had and kept their halos smudged and atilt; it was because of Frank Burns that "Hotlips Houlihan" had a sex life (her short-lived, never-seen marriage to Donald Penobscot notwithstanding) - one that created a necessary tension between her professional and personal desires and needs.

Frank Burns kept the war dirty, and Frank Burns kept the show's major storylines and characters moving and vital. Oddly enough, Frank Burns, the most static and stereotypical character, was also the one irreplaceable character - in part, ironically, because Alan Alda himself thought Frank Burns was too cartoonish.

SO WHEN Larry Linville's craven wimp left the show in 1977, we got in his place David Ogden Stiers' "Charles Emerson Winchester," a snotty blueblood from down East - but one who was dependable, skillful, even funny at times. And because there was no one rotten to bring out the bad or show the good in anyone else, the other characters virtually ascended into heaven. even as we watched.

With Alda in firm creative control of the series, "MASH" came to stand more for "Miraculously Altruistic Saints Here" than for "Mobile Army Surgical Hospital." The characters became genteel do-gooders whose minor flaws were inevitably resolved at the end of every episode, while the storylines became increasingly pretentious and didactic. Frequently, only the show's consistently excellent production and acting were all that kept it from sinking to the Norman Lear level.

No character was affected more by this gentrification than Margaret Houlihan. With Frank Burns as a romantic partner, she had to develop from the libidinous harridan she was at first into a dedicated,

But with Frank gone, Houlihan's sexuality was lost: The horny Hotlips became the motherly Margaret. The battle between lust and labor was essential to the character of Nurse Houlihan; with the lust eliminated, she became little more than a liberal male fantasy of what a woman HOTLIPS' DEMISE exemplifies the whole problem with the last few years of "MASH." Though the show purported to give us "real people" with "real feelings," it instead offered one man's - Alda's - vision of what real people and real feelings should be - a vision bounded by a Puritan sense of the all-encompassing importance of work, the sinfulness of sex, and the election of only those who believe in the spiritual and political doctrine as presented into the kingdom of heaven.

Alda seemed determined to follow the namesake of Benjamin Franklin Pierce: He wanted to explore new possibilities but only within the confines of already accepted tenets, of what was practical.

It's no accident that as the straight liberalism of the show's political line (a liberalism presented in a context that somehow excluded black people) became first unbelievable and then oppressive, individual shows became more and more self-enclosed. By the end, many episodes of "MASH" were as dogmatic politically and conservative formally as any of Aaron Spelling's cop shows.

memorable. Polemics were kept, if not to a minimum, at least plausible, and the integration of the storylines in the final farewells was, though contrived, touching. As always, the production was superb, the equal of any movie in town.)

THE FATE OF "MASH" offers several lessons for the future. Producers, first off, should consider a law that would require ending all TV series after seven years. Grant Tinker saw that "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" had done all it could in that time; though it, too, could have spun out four more years, the quality would not have been the same. Had "MASH" ended after seven years, most of its serious problems would never have occurred.

Second, "MASH" speaks for the importance of collective creation in television rather than individual auteurism. "MASH's" best years, which were among the best years of any show, were those in which the responsibilities were shared between 20th Century Fox, Gene Reynolds and Larry Gelbart and their staffs, Alda, and any number of other people. When the show became in essence Alda's alone, it almost necessarily began to fall apart.

Finally, there is the apocalyptic fervor that has come with the end of "MASH."

"MASH" WAS a good show; for several years it was a great show. It gave us characters and situations to laugh about and to care about, ideas and emotions to think about. Because of "MASH," prime time television has grown up a little: If 'MASH" wasn't directly responsible for programs like "Barney Miller," "Hill Street Blues" and "St. Elsewhere" programs that in many ways have already achieved more than "MASH" — it was at least a major influence.

addresses the problems of prostitutes in modern-day Tokyo. Used by their men (customers and bosses) and reviled by their families, frowned on by the law and hounded by creditors, these women eventually lose their humanity in their soulless society. Mizoguchi tries to restore that humanity and a good deal more in this sensitive look at a way of life many would like to ignore. 8:30 p.m.

OPHIE IS TRAPPED. Her boyfriend Nathan is trapped. And now, their new friend Stingo is trapped. No one in Sophie's Choice is free, and that includes the audience.

Seen through the eyes of Stingo (Peter Mac-Nicol), a Southern boy aspiring to fame as a writer in Brooklyn, Sophie's Choice plunges us into a world of memories and mysteries. where each new revelation tells Stingo, and the viewer, something more about his two new upstairs friends, Sophie and Nathan.

Sophie (Meryl Streep) and Nathan (Kevin Kline) are surrounded by their past, desperately trying to break through the thick layer of broken dreams and mental anguish that covers their lives. Stingo is assimilated into their world, but cruelly trapped by his lack of knowledge about their past.

THE VIEWER IS trapped behind Stingo's eyes. The perspective on each character changes as the film unfolds, and we realize that we may never know the entire truth about these people. We are the voyeurs of life, "trapped" inside a darkened cinema, trying to create a world from what we see.

Kline and MacNicol give fine supporting performances, but they are just that - support to the actress everyone is talking about. Meryl Streep, in her Academy Awardnominated performance as Sophie, is caressed by the camera, each shot carefully selected to heighten her dramatic potential.

Her Sophie is a woman unable to accept life as full of the simple joys that Stingo sees when he first comes to Brooklyn, as she has seen the dark underbelly of life in Auschwitz (it was here that the terrible "choice" of the title was made)

Streep struggled to learn Polish so the Polish Sophie would sound realistic even when speaking her broken English. It sounds like the same "artist as martyr" publicity that Robert DeNiro received for his Oscarwinning performance in Raging Bull, for which he gained 60 pounds and learned how to box. This publicity may be a bit overbearing, but both artists do deserve some considerable praise (not worship) for their talents.

ACTORS ARE LUCKY today if they can find a single good role in a good film, much less make a career out of quality pictures. DeNiro and Streep have been lucky so far. Streep works from the novel adaptation angle, looking more for the drama then the cinema (reflecting her extensive theatrical background), while DeNiro always has the mastery of director Martin Scorcese and his small circle of friends to assure cinematic excellence in those films he stars in.

Sophie's Choice is a really good film, on the same level as French Lieutenant's Woman. (Some might say that Streep's films are women's pictures, but only in the sense that they rely on complex emotions instead of kinetic action to keep the viewer's interest. And women don't have a monopoly on those.)

The film has the complex feel of a novel (it is based on William Styron's best seller), but unfolds with the simplicity of a fascinating tale. Director and screenwriter Alan J Pakula (All the President's Men) doesn't fall

While Iowa City's teeming thousands were glued to television screens seeking the burning answer as to what happened to Hawkeye and whoever those other guys are, a few of us - a very few of us - trundled off to Hancher Auditorium to the Guthrie Theater's touring production of Talley's Folly Monday night.

Lanford Wilson's 1980 Pulitzer Prizewinning play is the perfect show to take on the road, of course. With a decent but easily transportable set, only two characters and a single costume each, the show hardly needs a convoy of semis to move from place to place. In fact, the Guthrie production is so laid back, the packing cases and ladders were all left on stage. Hey, I like homeiness as much as anyone, but clut-

It's no secret the Guthrie is in trouble. Falling attendance has driven it to the extremes of scheduling such overperformed summer stock fare as Guys and Dolls in the coming months. The Tony Award the Guthrie got last spring came just in time - before the spectacular innovations of its past fade completely.

SO WHAT DOES this have to do with Talley's Folly? Well, it seems to me that a touring production of a regional repertory theater might take the time to send two members of that repertory to us'n folks out y'ere in the boonies. Nowhere in the biographies of Jacqueline Knapp, who plays the arch-Missourian Sally Talley, or Eugene Troobnick, as the wisecracking Matt, does it mention any other Guthrie show

True, one of the Guthrie's other problems is keeping a permanent coterie of actors, and the ones it has are kept covetously on the Minneapolis boards, but for those of us who keep up veteran or two to show his or her face?

All this crashing of cymbals is also an excuse not to dwell on Monday's production. It was fine as far as it went well-acted, funny in the right places and poignant when it was supposed to set tear ducts quivering. But it failed to convince this viewer that it was anything beyond two actors up there playing roles.

Underneath Sally's Southern reserve and Matt's jaunty demeanor are two people who are supposed to hurt, but somewhere between Matt's dumb office stories and his retelling of the horrors of his oppressed past lies an emptiness that charm and a sudden spilling of the guts can't fill.

AND TRY AS I could, I failed to see what attracts Matt to Sally. She's supposed to have spirit and a sense of independence that give her the gumption to throw off the shackles of her awful with the Guthrie, is it too much to ask a family, but to tell the truth, I like Sally Talley a lot better when Wilson ages her a couple decades in his follow-up play, Fifth of July. Could it be because Matt isn't around anymore to dominate?

The performances were well above the pedestrian level to be sure, but I can't help but think I'd ever invite Matt and Sally over for coffee. They just don't seem that interesting beyond the scope of the play.

To top off the disappointment, the production design as a whole was downright inadequate. You can do wonderful things with lighting, especially in this play when the moon makes its lazy way over the Talley boathouse, but here any hint of romance and magic were drowned out in the harsh glare of the on-stage overhead lights.

I've seen better Guthrie productions and I've seen better productions of Talley's Folly. Maybe someday the twain will meet.

UI theater opens college comedy

NIVERSITY Theaters will present Wendy Wasserstein's provocative comedy, Uncommon Women and Others at 8 tonight in Old Armory Theater. Other performances will be at 8 p.m. March 3, 4, 5, 11 and 12 and at 3 p.m. March 13.

Uncommon Women and Others pinpoints the frustrations and ambitions of five women educated at Mount Holyoke College in the early 1970s. Six years after graduation the women reunite at a restaurant and joust with one another over marriage

Nostalgia overtakes them and they return to the "Gracious Living" couch of a Mount Holyoke sorority, where the hot topics of conversations are sex, love and "incredible" fame.

Wasserstein draws her characters with immense affection. Kate, Muffet, Samantha, Holly and Rita alternately enchant and shock the audience with their wry witticisms and outrageous ideas.

Thomas Babe, another playwright who was in Iowa City for last year's Iowa Playwrights Festival, will direct the play. He was present at the first production of Uncommon Women and Others when it was chosen for the Eugene O'Neill New Playwrights Conference in 1978.

BABE EMPLOYS an arena stage in which the audience completely surrounds the performers. This emphasizes the isolation and insulation of the

"The set will be elegantly designed," he says, "but the theater-in-the-round atmosphere will heighten the intimacy for the audience as well as for the per-

Babe has little but praise for Uncommon Women. 'The play has a timeless quality about it," he says, "in that Wendy's knowledge about gifted women in society seems to leap out of the time frame in which

"Yet the unerringly realistic details make the characters very sharp. Their personalities are so rich that the audience may find it difficult to choose

The notion of shifting alliances and perspectives is a crucial aspect of the characters' development. One of the most original and hilarious scenes occurs when the women decide who, among themselves, each would choose as a marriage partner.

The humor and insights go hand-in-hand, in rapidfire fashion. Babe attributes the play's success to the audience's "pleasure in knowing each of these

Tickets for Uncommon Women and Others are priced at $3 for UI students and $5 for nonstudents. They are available at the Hancher and Union box
