Wretched California weather improves

LOS ANGELES (UPI) - The vicious storm pounding California has caused $303 million damage, destroyed or damaged more than 1,600 homes, forced thousands to flee and killed at least 19 people, state officials said late Wed-

The Office of Emergency Services said 29 counties have suffered storm damage since the torrential rains started last weekend.

The latest victim of the onslaught was a 3-year-old boy crushed in a mudslide that roared through his Northern California home.

The death toll for the series of storms, which began last weekend and forced the queen of England and Nancy Reagan to cancel plans for a leisurely sail up the coast and a spectacular entrance through the Golden Gate, rose to at least 19.

Weather forecasters, however, said the worst appeared to be over with only scattered showers likely Thursday.

The storms generated waves up to 25 feet high in some west-facing beach

In Malibu, the waves and mudslides destroyed at least five houses, including the home owned by tennis star Billie Jean King that was the subject of a palimony lawsuit. Two dozen other uses were damaged.

ACTOR ROBERT WEBBER said the new storm had convinced him to give up on the exclusive area

'We moved out here in 1972 and lived in the Garden of Eden," he said. "In 1978 we had a big storm and they said that was a freak. It was such a freak that in 1980 we had another one, and now we have another one, and in between we have two major fires.

"Some people say they're going to stay and rebuild. I'm not. I'm leaving. I can't handle it anymore.

In the Marin County community of Stinson Beach, north of San Francisco, heavy surf pounded one home into driftwood and damaged about 20

About 30 homes along the Santa Barbara County coast were either destroyed or suffered heavy damage from the raging waves. The city's harbor was also shut down. No problems were reported at the Reagan ranch in the mountains north of the city, where the president toured his property in a four-wheel-drive vehicle.

Waves two stories high washed over Santa Barbara's recently restored Stearns Wharf, severely damaging the SEVEN OTHER PIERS were partially destroyed by the pounding waves, including historic structures at Pismo Beach and Santa Monica, where waves swept a crane and derrick off the end of the structure. Heavy surf also smashed sections of piers at Seal Beach, Huntington Beach, Hermosa Beach, Morro Bay and Imperial Beach into kindling.

All structures except an oil derrick were scraped off man-made Easter Island at Seal Beach, creating a small oil slick. Workers had been evacuated from the island a short time earlier.

Draft registration:

Resisters rethink their stands and actions

By Mary Tabor

Years later, they question their actions. One is sticking with his decision. One regrets what he's done. And another is fighting to stay out of prison.

The issue is draft registration. UI students Todd Linden and Tom Fate joined outspoken draft nonregistrant Rusty Martin of Cedar Falls Thursday to discuss how each has dealt with the question.

Linden, who is a peer minister with the Lutheran Campus Ministry, said when he registered four years ago, "It wasn't a big issue." While disliking the thought of war, he said he felt a "responsibility to serve" his country.

Fate, a Wesley House peer minister and conscientious objector, told the handful of people in the UI classroom, "I didn't see not registering as a real strong political statement at the time .... I feel different about that now. I do see it now as supporting the military and a country where preparation for war is a major aim of the govern-

Martin, a University of Northern Iowa student, said that to him, registering for the draft is "acceptance of the idea someone else will tell you when to fight, when to die."

Going public with his refusal to register has caused Martin to become one of the 14 nonregistrants nation-wide the government has made an effort to prosecute.

FATE SAID THESE 14 were choosen from 700,000 draft-age men who have failed to register. "It's about the same odds as walking out the door and getting hit by a bus."

Not registering doesn't appear to be a great risk to Fate anymore; in fact he now says he would move, an Iowa representative has introduced a bill that would give public schools the option of teaching creationism along with the theory of evolution in science classes.

"The bill leaves it up to the local school district," said Rep. James Anderson, R-Brayton, who drafted the bill. "Personally, I think if you're going to teach one, you should teach the

The bill would allow schools in 'more conservative" areas of the state to include the biblical explanation for human existence in their science curriculums, he said, without forcing other areas that might oppose the theory to comply.

"Different parts of the state are more conservative than others -Iowa's not the same all across. In westcentral Iowa, where I come from, people are pretty conservative. They're God-fearing people, and they believe in this," Anderson said.

But Ann Bovbjerg, a post-doctoral associate in the UI Zoology Department, said regardless of an area's beliefs, creationism and science cannot be taught side by side.

"THERE ARE TOWNS that would look on it more favorably than others, but that's not the point. Creationism is not science and it doesn't belong in a science curriculum.

'It's not so much separation of church and state either. It's just not a science," Boybjerg said. "You don't teach woodworking in a poetry class; there might be poetry in woodworking, but you still don't include it."

Although Dale Dye, an Iowa City West High biology teacher, is a creationist, he said Anderson's bill probably wouldn't work. "I think there'd probably be a problem with an evolutionist science teacher teaching creationism — and being able to do good job of it."

Dve referred to recent reports of Iowa State University engineering professor John Patterson, who said instructors should be able to flunk students who support scientific creationism.

"As the present attitudes of scientists and creationists exist, I'd say no" to the bill, Dye said.

IN RECENT HEARINGS, Anderson said, several teachers have expressed their approval of the bill. "There's more support out there than you think," he said. "It tells me that people are becoming more open-minded."

But Dye said in Iowa City the controversy surrounding creationism vs. evolution is brewing more and more. "This wouldn't work in this part of the state - certainly not in Iowa City.

"I wish both sides weren't so hardheaded, and I think it's becoming more so. People are so strong-willed. It's like the issue of abortion — it involves a certain amount of emotion. It's not just a scientifically-approached Rep. Richard Varn, D-Solon, a member of the House Education Committee, said Anderson's bill will probably be snuffed out while in that committee. "I think people are pretty cut-and-

The Challenger's debut gets good reviews

By Robyn Griggs Staff Writer

A new publication made its debut on campus last month in the form of The Challenger, a revamped newspaper whose staff is dedicated to filling the gaps in minority issue coverage that other newspapers tend to ignore.

The Challenger has taken over where Pamoja, the previous black newspaper, left off. Fannie LeFlore, editor of the new publication, said The Challenger is still the black newspaper, but "something new and different"

"Pamoja had its own image, which people didn't really identify with. We just needed something new," she said.

Supervisors defer 'slough bill' vote

By Mike Heffern

No decision was made at Thursday's Johnson County Board of Supervisors public hearing on the "slough bill," which if approved will allow a tax exempt status for landowners willing to participate in the shortterm land set-aside program.

A program initiated by state law allows the supervisors to determine how much land could be set aside as tax exempt for purposes of short-term land preservation. The board can choose to allow up to 3,000 acres of wetlands, open prairies, forest cover, river and stream banks and recreational lakes to be given an exemption from county taxes under provisions of the bill.

The board can also choose not to give any tax exempt status at all and that prospect had supervisors Donald Sehr and Dennis Langensupervisors Richard Myers and Betty Ockenfels on the other.

BOB DOLAN, a wildlife biologist for the Iowa Conservation Commission, told the board that the county's participation in the program would help prevent soil erosion on county farmland. "It could provide incentive to keep erosive land out of production and it could slow the rate at which we are losing wildlife habitat in Johnson County," Dolan

Dolan said an important aspect of the program would be to keep wetlands in the county out of agricultural production. "It more or less eliminates the old argument (by farmers) that I got to clear that slope timber ground or that marsh because I am paying taxes on it," he said.

Sehr, the board chairman, is skeptical about the county's participation because he doesn't think it offers much incentive for area farmers to participate in the program. "If you're talking about marginal farm ground, do you really think ... that by low revenue taxes, that we're going to keep somebody from taking the land out of farm ground?'

"If they can pull those acres out and make farm ground out of it and make $1,000 an acre or $2,000 an acre they're going to do it," Sehr ment in kind" program will affect the amount of land farmers consider to leave out of production.

Myers disagreed, saying the federal "pay-

"I THINK THIS PIK program is going to have an affect on farm land production,"

Myers said. "I think you're going to see people wanting (to leave farm land out of produc tion) where they might not have been able to do it before because it didn't make any economic sense. I would support the idea of an option for wetlands."

Ockenfels sided with Myers, but Langer berg also saw some problems with going along with the program. With a tax savings of only $1 to $2 an acre for those who participate, Langenberg didn't think there would be much incentive for the landowners. " guess I agree with what Don (Sehr) said about the proposal that for a buck, buck-anda-half an acre it wouldn't influence him (a farmer) one way or the other."

The board took no action on the measure but will do so after the return of Superviso Harold Donnelly later this month. Donnelly i vacationing in California until next week.

Manville Heights building permit revoked

By Tom Buckingham

A building permit for an 11-unit apartment complex in Manville Heights was revoked by the Iowa City Board of Adjustment Wednesday because developer John Nolan provided no access to the construction site, a board

Nolan, an Iowa City attorney, lost the 3-1 vote because he did not extend an alley to the proposed construction site before applying for the permit, according to board member Peter Vanderhoef

The issuance of the building permit was appealed in January by Casey Mahon, UI associate vice president for finance, and a Manville Heights area resident.

Nolan was "putting the cart before the horse," Vanderhoef said, in planning to start construction on an 11-unit complex before extending an alley that runs in back of the site. The extension would be necessary in order to connect the proposed complex's parking lot with surrounding streets. Although Manville Heights residents complained that the area would not be able to handle an 11-unit complex, public outcry was not the issue, Vanderhoef said.

The public has a right to have access to the complex and Nolan had not provided any, Vanderhoef said. "That was the only issue."

ABOUT 50 RESIDENTS of the area came to the meeting to express concern that the construction would disturb the environment. In particular, residents complained that a wooded ravine near the site could be destroyed by the construction.

Nolan agreed that access was the issue but felt that he was being unjustly denied access to public property.

Responding to Vanderhoef's charge that he had "put the cart before the horse," Nolan said that it was the board that was not acting rationally by revoking his building permit on the grounds that there was no access when access could be gained through construction.

'All I want is access like everybody else does. Now who's putting the cart before the Nolan said he plans to appeal the board's ruling in Johnson County District Court. The case has priority status in the court, so it is likely it will be heard within a month.

Opinion sought on renovation of Union

By Kristine Stemper

Students will have a chance to voice their opinions on whether they want $1.72 to be taken out of mandatory student fees every semester for the next 20 years to help renovate the Union.

The UI Student Senate voted Thursday to put a referendum on the issue on the March 15 UI student elections The results of the vote will be used as 'a bargaining tool" with the state Board of Regents and the Iowa Legislature to give them an idea of how tudents feel about the issue, Sen. Torn

The referendum states that $2 million will come out of mandatory student fees for the next 20 years to help cover the cost of the redecorations. "Opponents of the plan propose that the student fees be used to support the basic educational needs of the university," the referendum states.

THIS MEANS GIVING the money to the faculty vitality fund to supplement

"I think the timing is off for the renovation of the Union," Drew said. It should not be done "when faculty salaries are the third lowest in the Big

The senate and the Collegiate Associations Council have advised that $1.72 be taken out of each student's tuition every semester for the next 20 years, with $1.62 to go toward the renovation and 10 cents toward the Drew suggests that next year's $1.72 go toward the fund as "seed money, which he hopes will work to inspire the legislature to add to it. "The Union can wait until next year.

Even though student opinion on the referendum is only an advisory to the regents and the legislature, senate President Patty Maher said the referendum may be giving students a false idea that they are actually making a decision on the issue.

IT IS THE LEGISLATURE that makes a final decision on the matter. 'They may think they are actually voting on it," she said.

"You've got to understand that the sources of money (going to the Union and the fund) are different," she said. "I don't think people really understand mandatory student fees.'

The fees come from students' tuition, while faculty salaries are paid from the general education fund.

However, there is no guarantee that if a decision is made not to renovate the Union that the money will to into the vitality fund, she said.

It is difficult "making student service money compete with the general vitality fund." The Union referendum is the second to be included on the ballots of the senate elections. The first referendum asks students if they favor weapons systems related research being conducted at the UI for the U. S. Department of Defense.

Legislative update

The Iowa Senate approved a bill Thursday allowing Iowa taverns to sell quor on Sundays

Currently, at least half of an esablishment's Sunday business must be on-liquor sales in order for it to sell alcoholic beverages. If agreed upon by the Iowa House of Representatives, bar owners could purchase a special Sunday liquor license.

Local governments in Iowa could benefit from voter-approved taxes on sales, payrolls and income, according to a bill in debate by the senate.

Senators approved amendments Thursday that would restrict a sales tax to cities instead of allowing them to be administered by counties. Another amendment would force the taxes to be approved by the voters every two

Iowa utilities would be governmentregulated if a bill on the House of Representatives floor becomes law. The bill would prohibit utilities shutoffs during winter months unless companies can prove the consumer is able to pay her or his bill.

Legislators expect to spend a lot of time on the reform bill before it could be passed. "We're going to have to start a novena to get out of this," Rep. Richard Varn, D-Solon, said.

Varn met with Iowa park commissioners to discuss complaints from Cottage Reserve Area residents that an increase in horsepower limitation last year for outboard motor boats on Lake Macbride has endangered boaters and fishing enthusiasts.

A petition submitted to Varn by the residents also said poorer fishing and increased noise has resulted since larger motors have appeared on the Brazil's attempts of the past two decades to convert millions of acres of the Amazon rain forest into suitable land for cattle ranches have been economically ineffective for the nation's economy and ecologically damaging to the rain forest's delicately balanced environment, a visiting lecturer said Thursday.

Susanna Hecht, a professor in the School of Architecture and Urban Planning at UCLA, spoke at the UI's Gilmore Hall on the history of Brazil's 'Operation Amazonia," which began in 1964, following a national revolution in which a military government came

The new military government was faced with both economic and political problems during the 1960's. In an effort to solve some of the dilemmas, the government formed an agency called the Superintendency for Amazonian

Development and initiated a national program called 'Operation

Hecht said Operation Amazonia was intended to help remedy many of the government's problems. These problems included trying to maintain the support of the nation's populace, the social and political plight of the rural citizens of Brazil, and curbing the rural-to-urban migration that was becoming a problem.

"THE MILITARY government decided to create Operation Amazonia for reasons which were both economical and also idealogical," Hecht said. "The government told the people it was the national destiny of Brazil to create a new frontier in the Amazon, and their reaction was very

The Brazilian government thought clearing millions of acres of rain forest would create a new national frontier for its poor rural citizens, create employment for the nation's unskilled laborers and protect its national borders, Hecht said.

Hecht said the plan also attracted the attention of many multinational corporations because the Brazilian government offered large tax incentives for corporations investing money in the region.

"When the program first began the Brazilian government offered a 100 percent tax exemption for every corporation investing money into the Amazonia region. So for investing money in the Amazon a corporation was allowed to operate its factories in Brazil tax free.'

THE GOVERNMENT decided the cleared lands of the rain forest could best be put to use as grazing lands for cattle. Hecht said the reason for this was to maintain mobility of the livestock and to create a new export market for Brazil.

However, Hecht said, the "Operation Amazonia" never reached the expectations the government had for it. Colonization and employment in the region never developed to substantial

According to Hecht, unsuitable land and poor management of the land caused the failure of "Operation

'Over half of the land that was cleared is now unfit for use. The land itself just isn't suited for grazing - after about five years of use the land becomes primarily unproductive. The region now suffers from heavy flooding erosion and heavy growth of weeds.'

"Also the role of large government tax incentives created the rise of land markets and speculation. The productivty of the land became secondary and thus more cautious land management became irrelevant."

Barbara J. Morck, 25, of 427 Clark St., was charged after police executed search warrants in six local residences in October. The drug raid, one of Iowa's largest, resulted from extensive undercover work by the Iowa City Police, Johnson County Sheriff's Office, Iowa Division of Criminal Investigation and U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency.

Morck was accused of aiding an undercover police officer July 27 in obtaining marijuana.

Gary J. Galligan, who pleaded guilty Jan. 7 to conspiring to deliver LSD, received a suspended fiveyear sentence and will be on probation for three Galligan, whose home was also searched during the drug raid Oct. 27, 1982, was fined $990. He has been ordered to pay about $257 in restitution to Iowa City for his criminal activity.

Galligan was arrested after he put an undercover police officer in contact with someone from whom the officer was able to buy LSD.

The six-packer quacker of Gainesville has been set free.

A white duck on the University of Florida campus was unable to eat or clean itself because a plastic six-pack retainer had been wrapped around its neck. The Gainesville humane society couldn't assist the animal because the campus is not within its jurisdiction.

UF police referred the problem to the Physical Plant Division, which passed it on to the UF grounds department. But the grounds department was unable to give the duck immediate attention.

Finally, two Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity brothers were able to free the duck. They lured it to the edge of the pond with doughnut chunks. When it got close enough, they caught it, cut the plastic retainer with a knife and set it free. -From The Independent Florida Alligator.

Branstad criticizes

Branstad said Thursday he believes some portions of a controversial utility regulation bill could increase the cost of power to customers, instead of saving them money as supporters of the bill have claimed.

Branstad also denied allegations by House Commerce Committee Chairman Ned Chiodo, D-Des Moines, that members of the Iowa Commerce Commission had been lobbying in collusion with Republicans against the bill.

"That is not true," Branstad said, with commissioners Andrew Varley and Christine Hansen sitting near him during a news conference.

The commerce commissioners said they had only been available to legislators to answer questions about

But it is known they have reservations about portions of the bill, inutilities with excess generating capacity and limit a utility's ability to recover the cost of natural gas.

Branstad also said he was "concerned" about the excess capacity provision. He said it could cost consumers money, instead of saving them money. The governor said it would be unfair to penalize utilities for decisions on generating capacity they made 10 years ago with the approval of the commerce commission.

THE GOVERNOR WARNED that the Legislature could be "walking into a swamp" by passing a bill that gives too much direction to the commerce commission. He said the General Assembly should limit itself to setting general policy and said the Legislature should not "second-guess" the commerce commission. Branstad said the bill, which is week, could raise "false expectations" among consumers who believe the bill would lower their utility bills.

He said the way to limit or reduce utility costs is to seek reductions in the price of natural gas, which provides heat to thousands of Iowans. Despite a glut of gas, prices have doubled since congressional delegation to support legislation that would permit the breaking of so-called "take-or-pay" contracts, which have been blamed for driving up the cost of natural gas.

The governor said he supports other measures to limit gas prices, such as rearranging relationships between pipeline companies and gas customers.

Senate Democrats question arms sales

WASHINGTON (UPI) - By selling seas sales, creating a potentially the newest and most sophisticated U.S. weapons to developing nations, the Reagan administration is undermining America's defenses, a group of Senate Democrats charged Thursday.

"The United States is making available top-of-the-line weapons systems to an increasing number of Third World countries," the senators said, raising the question of what the sales do to U.S. security.

Traditionally, the United States has sold older equipment, reserving the newest weapons for its own forces, they said. Under President Reagan, they said, the arms sale policy has gone "out of control."

Their comments were based on a study prepared by the Senate Democratic Policy Committee staff from Pentagon documents.

In releasing the study, Sens. Robert of Rhode Island, Joseph Biden of Delaware and Paul Sarbanes of Maryland said they will introduce legislation to require congressional approval of all arms sales of more than $200 million. Under current law, Congress only has to option to initiate bills to disapprove such sales.

The senators said the sales are not made with adequate safeguards, increasing the potential for the compromise of U.S. technology.

"Further, these sales are causing a drain of ... technicians to service over- they said.

serious manpower problem in our ability to maintain our own systems."

THE STUDY SAID the sale of F-16s to such countries as Pakistan and Venezuela had an adverse effect on the readiness of U.S. and NATO forces.

"Sales of this advanced system have required the diversion of spare parts and aircraft from U.S. and NATO inventories to cover developing country purchases," the senators said in a joint

"Our experience in Iran following the fall of the Shah, where it was reported that the Phoenix air-to-air missile and F-15 technology were compromised, should have served as ample warning of the risks associated with such weapons transfers," they said.

The study said Pakistan, which is buying 40 F-16s, refused delivery of the Byrd of West Virginia, Claiborne Pell first six until U.S. officials agreed to equip the planes with the latest radar systems - despite reported Air Force fears that the security of the advanced equipment could be jeopardized.

That experience, the senators said, "gives rise to concerns on our part that Third World recipients are now dictating the terms of major U.S. arms sales as to the time of delivery, the financing arrangements, and the kind of equipment being provided."

'In sum, we are concerned that U.S. arms sale policy is out of control,"

Republicans join call for Burford's ouster WASHINGTON (UPI) - Sen. Rudy

Boschwitz, R-Minn., called on President Reagan Wednesday to replace Environmental Protection Agency chief Anne Burford, but Burford said she has 'no plans to resign.' Boschwitz became the first Republican senator to join congressional critics in calling for Burford's ouster. 'This current impasse will not likely be resolved as long as Burford remains the target of partisan hostility and as long as serious doubts remain as to her commitment to vigorous enforcement of environmental policy," Boschwitz wrote Reagan. "I have no plans to resign," Burford told reporters after testifying on the EPA budget on Capitol Hill. "The agency is in a very difficult situation at the present time, and I hope to provide the leadership.

"I am determined that we will not falter in cleaning up the environment," Burford said.

Asked about Boschwitz's statement, she first indicated she did not know who he is or where he is from. She then said, "I haven't seen Senator Boschwitz."

BURFORD ANGRILY cut short the interview when reporters persisted in asking about her possible resignation.

Boschwitz urged Reagan to "immediately replace Anne Burford with a politically independent person of nationally recognized scientific qualifications. Asked Wednesday if Reagan continues to have confidence in Burford, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said, "Absolutely."

Boschwitz made his statement in a joint letter to Reagan with Rep. Vin Webber, R-Minn. Other GOP House members previously have called for Burford's resignation

The letter also said Reagan should take politics out of the the agency by making the EPA administrator's job a six-year appointment restricted to persons "of a scientific background with substantial prior experience in environmental research, who possess independent credentials."

Burford was a Colorado state legislator and attorney with the Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph Co. before her appointment.

EPA OFFICIALS have charged Burford stalled release of $1.9 million in federal aid to clean up a St. Louis Park, Minn., waste dump to justify the politically motivated holdup of funds for cleanup of the Stringfellow Acid Pits in California.

But Boschwitz and Webber did not cite the project in their home state in their letter.

Burford returned to Capitol Hill for the last of three days of hearings on her agency's $948.6 million 1984 budget request. Last year, Congress raised the administration's request by $13 million to $1.039 billion.

Members of the House appropriations subcommittee were doubtful the 1984 budget request is big enough.

Burford said demands by congressional investigators for documents are increasing, adding, "There will be an enormous strain on the agency's budget."

Jobs bills are making their way through Congress, among them one based on a New Deal program, the American Conservation Corps, and another to provide public works jobs and humanitarian assistance. The ACC jobs bill would cost $60 million this year and $300 million each year for five succeeding years and would put the nation's youth to work in park and forest jobs. The other jobs bill would cost $4.6 billion and would help rebuild the infrastructure of Both are necessary. Even if the economy is recovering from the recession, the unemployment rate is expected to remain unacceptably high for years and there is in fact some evidence that the long-awaited recovery will be weak and perhaps brief. Large budget deficits and/or a return to escalating oil prices could abort the recovery.

Supporters of the bills are attempting to overcome the opposition by stressing that the jobs "are not make-work." They aren't. There is much work to be done in the parks and forests and clearly the highways and bridges of this country are in a terrible and dangerous condition.

But even if the jobs were make-work, the bills deserve to be passed. First, it is far better to have people work for financial assistance than to just receive charity — public or private. Most people feel terrible getting hand-outs; working for the aid allows them to feel more self-respect. And second, it also gives them more respect — most Americans cannot hide their contempt of those "on the dole." Whether justified or not, those without jobs are not considered full citizens.

This country, already divided between minorities and whites, men and women, rich and poor, cannot afford any more division, any more second class citizens. The jobs bills should be given higher funding and passed with or without President Reagan's

Business of dying

Our paranoia over death and dying has caused us to make a mockery of the act of being buried. Rather than reserving a pine box and returning ourselves to the elements from which we somehow arose, we gussy ourselves with fluids and deodorants, and spend thousands on caskets and vaults guaranteed to keep us dirt-free for hundreds of years.

Americans so dignify themselves to the tune of $5 billion a year, most of which goes to those merchants who never run out of customers - funeral directors. But all is not well in the business of dying.

Consumer complaints are increasing about funeral directors who use questionable tactics to persuade grieving relatives into purchasing costly "funeral packages" in lieu of more economic means of burial. Customer discontent reached a peak last year, prompting the Federal Trade Commission to offer for congressional approval a rule requiring funeral directors to disclose prices and services to customers at the first meeting and over the telephone, and prohibiting directors from misrepresenting the benefits of such services as embalming.

Congress never acted on the bill, so the FTC resubmitted it last week to a new legislature. If it is again ignored by both houses, it will become law in April.

If it does so, it will be over the objection of the funeral industry lobby, which balks at the idea of federal regulation. Most directors say the rule would "take away a fiduciary trust between the bereaved and the funeral director," and that emotionally fatigued relatives are in no mood to negotiate prices.

But whatever fiduciary trust may exist between director and customer would appear to have already been eroded by industry practices, else the FTC would not have been prompted by the public to develop the rule. Furthermore, initial price disclosure by phone or at first meeting is less imposing to sensitive relatives than the discovery that they inadvertantly have purchased unaffordable services.

During an era of federalism and deregulation, it may seem inconsistent to regulate funeral services that are largely intrastate. But the need is there. In this case, congressional inattention may prove productive.

The case for a black candidacy

READ SEVERAL days ago that the most active of America's civil rights leaders, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, or the mayor of Atlanta, Andrew Young, or some other prominent black person is likely to run for president in the 1984 primaries as a 'favorite son.'

I let my mind twist into knots before I called Jackson in Chicago and all but said, "Don't do it!"

For all the barbs thrown at him, Jackson has emerged as the most effective of America's civil rights leaders today. He has kicked a lot of corporations, federal agencies, colleges and other institutions for what he says is their failure to do justice to those Americans most in need of a fair

I was prepared to give Jackson the gratuitous advice to run for nothing except the next airplane to the next city where black, poor and other cheated Americans are clamoring for someone to give them a voice. I said to Jackson that his enemies would love to see him declare for the presidency, because this would enable them to say that his assaults on corporate America, the White House, the federal bureaucracy are all generated by personal ambition - political, financial

JACKSON MADE IT clear that he doesn't give a damn what the White House or corporate America decides his motivations are. He says the people in recent audiences at Morehouse College in Atlanta, in Grand Rapids, Mich., or wherever, understand what he is trying to do and have no doubts about his integrity.

But does this mean that blacks want Jackson to run for president? Will they have lost a vital prodder of the conscience of America if he bombs out in the primaries of New Hampshire, Iowa and the states to follow?

Will even blacks decide that Jackson is on a colossal ego trip - meaning that for years to come they will view with suspicion his every utterance?

I called expecting Jackson to disavow any venture into partisan politics. I got no disavowal.

Jackson says that blacks are perpetuating "all-white primaries" default - by automatic endorsements of white candidates - and thus discouraging non-whites from running for

I raised one of the questions over which blacks are agonizing: "When a black who can't win the presidency enters primaries in New York, Illinois, California, and takes so many votes that the white candidate with a genuine commitment to racial justice loses, and the white conservative winds up with the Democratic nomination, does this really serve the interests of black

JACKSON'S REPLY is that all the white Democrats are competing against Reagan, not for black votes, and that only if there is a black candidate on the platform will the white candidate who has "a genuine commitment to racial justice" be forced to stand up in manly fashion

Jackson says it's time black leaders topped thinking they can show up "for the Super Bowl," that is, the national political conventions, without having played "the season," meaning the primaries. He says having a black run for president as a "favorite son" will produce the following positive results, no matter what ultimately happens at

• Blacks will have a greater interest in politics and will start registering and voting in greater numbers. (Jackson says that when Rep. Harold for mayor of Chicago, another 300,000 blacks suddenly registered.)

· Greater black participation in the primaries could mean the election of five to eight more blacks to the House of Representatives.

• The "myth about black inferiority" will begin to crumble as voters see that a black presidential candidate can hold his or her own in discussing or debating the U.S. budget, Third World economics, relations with the Soviet Union, environmental protection, future relations with China,

'Not only can a black candidate end this myth about black inferiority in the political arena, but he can force white iberals and moderates to give support to a black the way blacks have done for white candidates," Jackson said.

I got the impression that either Jesse Jackson will show up on the hustings in the presidential campaign of 1984, or he will push some other prominent black politician to enter the primaries.

That will cause every other candidate, and all of us journalists who follow politics, to lose a lot of sleep to figure out what it will mean in the November 1984 showdown.

Carefree singing in the acid rain?

ONLY! Re: Canadian Propaganda The administration has been greatly embarrassed and distressed about all the media hoo-hah about declaring Canadian films on acid rain and the nuclear arms build-up to be propaganda. While the sob-sister tone of these Canuck flicks is obvious, the White House thinks the whole matter has been handled amateurishly. While that has been more than adequate in the past, it was inappropriate in this instance since people actually seemed to pay attention to what we were doing.

The time has come to launch a counter-offensive. The first step in this process should be the location and investigation of people and groups who sign up to watch the films. Enclosed find a photocopy of a list of all such snail darter types. Take note that prominent on the list, appearing several times each, are the names "Donald Duck," "Gilligan, the Skipper too, the millionaire and his wife, The Junior Birdmen" and "The Mousketeers." Check these individuals and organizations out!

Second, we should investigate the possibility of introducing subliminal messages into the films themselves. The president has suggested inserting shots of Gene Kelly performing "Singin' in the Rain" into the the acid rain films to give it a happier, carefree image. It has also been suggested that brief shots of attractive young people sunbathing, and thus benefiting from the sun's "radiation," be inserted into the arms race film, playing up the possible cosmetic benefits of nuclear war. Try and come up with more ideas along these lines.

THIRD, IT HAS been suggested that we make our own films as a counteractive measure. It has been said that acid rain has, in some areas, been as acidic as vinegar. That's something we can play on. An opening shot could feature a poor person looking forlornly at a meager, plain salad that is sitting on his rickety table. Meanwhile, through a minimum wage and to get off welfare broken window in the background, we can see acid rain starting to fall, causing surrounding vegetation to wither and killing fish in a nearby pond.

The poor man notices the rain and, his wan face brightening, runs outdoors with his salad and catches some of the rain in his bowl. This makes for an appealing and nutritious meal that gives him the strength to go out and find a degrading job paying less than the and food stamps. A suggested title could be Acid Rain: The Poor Man's Salad Dressing. The liberals wouldn't dare attack it. We might try to work oil spills into this, too.

The arms race film is proving a tougher nut to crack. The working title so far is Armageddon Sentimental Over You. One suggestion is that we co-opt the "End of MASH" thing and call it "MATD (Mutually Assured Total Destruction)." The scenario goes

AND END TO World War III has been declared and two zany Army doctors, Hawknose and D.T.s, bid each other a tearful farewell, several times. The zany company clerk, Klunker, who used to try to get out of the army by wearing decontamination gear, marries a mutant. The crusty but lovable commander, Col. Poptart, is ridden of into the sunset by his horse. By the end, the viewers will feel nostalgic and sentimental over nuclear holocaust and will hate to see it end. Then we'll have them.

Submit all suggestions to the Environmental Protection Agency (ASAP!) and the Defense Department. Do not, repeat, do not, contact the president. His says he knows nothing about this. Let's keep it that way.

More on Mrs. X

UI Hopitals presently face legal action by a man who is certain to die of leukemia if a bone marrow donor does not step forward. The hospitals apparently know the identity of a suitable donor, but will not inform the California woman ("Mrs. X") that a victim with her marrow type currently exists. Mrs. X, having been asked only if she would be interested in participating in a donor program, has declined.

I believe that UI Vice President D.C. Spriestersbach (DI, Feb. 22) has made an error in defending the stand of UI Hospitals. There is no reason that the university responsibilities cited by Spriestersbach should preclude informing the potential donor of the

The specific responsibilities cited were, first, that the university should see to it "that any consent obtained is given freely and without duress or coercion;" and second, that "research projects" involving human subjects should be designed "to assure that the health, well-being and privacy interests of individuals are fully protected." Accepting these criteria, as I do, I urge consideration of the following points:

1) A free choice, in any meaningful sense of the term, should be an informed choice. Mrs. X is being deprived of the most pertinent basis for a rational decision, in that she is not being told that she may save a life by submitting to a one-day ordeal. The relevance of the information is especially clear in this case, as it is known that Mrs. X lost a child to leukemia, and would be empathetic with other victims. 2) Providing this information would perhaps elicit a moral response on the part of the potential donor - but is this to be equated with "duress or coercion?" Surely our society has not reached the point where the pressure of having to make a moral judgment is to be considered "coercive."

3) There is no reason the "health, well-being and privacy interests" of the potential donor need be jeopardized. Provided her anonymity is maintained, there would be no possibility of harassment by the victim or by others. The irony of the university citing its responsibility to the health of individuals while depriving a young man (with a wife and four-year-old son) of his only hope for life is too grim to linger over.

Few would doubt the good intentions of those who support this policy, or the reality of the pressures that produced But this appears to be a classic case of bureaucratic piety sapping the capacity to do the right thing. It would be tragic if a policy resulting in the loss of this man's life, and perhaps others about whom we will not read, were allowed to stand. John Lyne

Let's get winking

To the editor:

Most people in Iowa City don't know it yet, but they are capable of being the catalyst of the next world-wide trend.

The fad that is on the verge of being reincarnated is called winking. It is the simple sensory motor function of quickly closing and opening of a single eyelid. Winking should never be confused with blinking, the simultaneous winking of both eyelids. Blinking is usually a bleak attempt at winking performed by small children and other persons who are not in control of their motor functions.

A wink can suggest anything from

"I've got a piece of dirt in my eve," to "I find you sexually attractive; could we discuss what you are doing later over a cocktail?" Through experimentation, you will be able to apply your individual meanings to

Don't let London, Paris or New York get a five-year head-start on yet another craze. We have the creative resources in Iowa City to make this fashion flourish. The social ramifications are infinite. Don't let this trend pass Iowa City by. So what are you waiting for? Let's get winking. Greg Garbers 319 Davenport St.

Pope's trip is marred by executions

In Costa Rica, Pope Paul II blesses the crowd at an outdoor mass held

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — Pope John Paul II, after his representatives pleaded in vain to spare six men from a Guatemala firing squad, exhorted 500,000 people at a mass Thursday to help the church "eliminate injustice ... hatred and violence."

The executions were regarded as a direct rebuff of John Paul's plea for peace and set up a potentially explosive confrontation when he visits Guatemala Monday, the sixth day of his eight-day tour of Central America.

Vatican spokesman the Rev. Romeo Panciroli said the pope, upon learning of the executions, "expressed his most profound sorrow, above all because this was almost on the eve of his visit to that country."
A Vatican official said "as of this moment, there are no changes" in the pope's itinerary.

JOHN PAUL BEGAN the first full day of his eight-day pilgrimage to Central America by meeting with 50 mem-bers of Costa Rica's Polish community and participating in a ceremonial gift exchange with President Luis Monge and his family.

He then headed for San Jose's

Sabana park, where many of the 500,000 to 600,000 faithful — the largest crowd ever gathered in the nation of 2.2 million - had camped out all night to hear the late-morning mass.

"I come to you as an older brother to his brothers, as a father in the faith to his children, as successor of Peter to the flock," John Paul told the congregation.

The 62-year-old pontiff, obviously exhausted by his 14-hour flight Wednesday from Rome, closed his eyes through the long speeches by local churchmen before he addressed the

In his homily, the pope urged Costa Ricans to work with their clergy to build a better society.

"THIS CHURCH, by doctrine and example ... exhorts us to attend not only to the things of the spirit, but also to the realities of this world and the human society of which we are part," the pope said.

"It exhorts us to commit ourselves to the elimination of injustice, to work for peace and overcome hatred and

Euthanasia advocate Koestler found dead

LONDON (UPI) - Arthur Koestler, celebrated political writer and a long-time advocate of mercy killing, was found dead Thursday with his wife in an apparent double suicide at their home. He was 77.

Colleagues said the Hungarian-born author of Darkness at Noon, - a devastating insight into Stalin's totalitarian Russia - had been suffering from Parkinson's disease.

Police said he died with his third wife, Cynthia, who was in her 50s. She also was a member of the voluntary euthanasia group called "Exit."

Scotland Yard said the bodies were found sitting in two chairs and they ruled out homicide pending the results of an autopsy today.

"There are no suspicious circumstances and no one else is involved," a police source said. Another source said it appeared the couple died of a barbiturate overdose in an apparent suicide pact.

lowa guard Steve Carfino is hounded by Northwestern Hawkeyes' 63-50 win over the Wildcats Thursday in the guard Michael Jenkins during the first half of the Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Carfino led Iowa with 19 points.

Assistant Sports Editor

Quick, someone wake up all the fans who had to endure Thursday night's Iowa-Northwestern game and tell them it's over.

Someone who stayed up said the Hawkeyes won, 63-50.

It was the Hawkeyes' ninth win in the Big Ten and it pushed them up to fifth place, but no one wanted much to talk about it. Things got so bad in the second half that one of the better Iowa plays was a Greg Stokes-to-Lute Olson

Plotted on a graph, it would have looked interesting — lots of peaks and valleys — but on the court it was simply dull and poorly played and there wasn't a single person on either team who was willing to deny it.

"We won," Olson said. "That's all I

SENIOR BOB HANSEN, scoring 13 points in possibly his last home game, said: "I thought we played terrible. We're just lucky Northwestern played worse. That's no joke. I was just glad when the final buzzer went off that we were ahead and could go home."

"We came out so flat," senior Mark Gannon said simply.

Olson was so distressed with the overall sluggish effort of his squad -41.7 percent from the field, 55.6 percent from the free throw line, 15 turnovers (and that's being kind) - that he delivered an ultimatum.

"Who will be in the starting line-up on Thursday is totally dependent on practice between now and then. We could have the same five or two of the

"I SERIOUSLY THINK a couple people think they have it made and some of the reserves are really playing hard.'

One of those reserves is Craig Anderson, who scored just three points in 18 minutes but made his presence felt with six rebounds and two assists.

"We got great play off the bench from Craig Anderson," Olson said. 'He was really a key guy for us. He has a good chance of being in there next week. He really wants to play."

Northwestern, now 8-8 for an eighthplace position in the Big Ten, was led in scoring by senior forward Jim Stack. Stack had 13 points but wasn't doing any bragging afterward with his 4-for-14 shooting performance

"It was a sluggish game on both sides." Stack said, "hard-fought but not a real quality game.'

NORTHWESTERN COACH Rich Falk thought the Wildcats gave the game away in the early going. "I

The 'Cats led only once at 24-23 just before the half, but kept things close within five points - for the first 20 minutes. "In the second half, you saw what happens when a good team gets up at home." Falk said.

Scoreless spans of four and three-minutes in the first half and a threeminute draught in the second half were filled with a lot of bad passes, a lot of dumb fouls, and a couple of good cheap shots to boot.

"Both teams were very flat," Olson said. "Neither team played with a whole lot of zip. Our guys were dragging early in the game which really sur-

Olson said that giving the team the day off on Sunday might have hurt the Hawks against Northwestern, but will stick with his decision to give them this weekend off as well.

"Right now I think that a couple days totally away from it is what we need," he said. "It's a tremendously long season. Every game is pressurepacked and every game you need to be up. Mentally, we just need to be away

Questions about a possible NIT bid instead of the preferred NCAA trip keep popping up but Hansen and Gan-non don't want to hear about it.

"We've played in our final home game," Hansen said.

The Daily Iowan/Steve Sedan

By Steve Batterson Assistant Sports Editor

Only one thing is for sure as the 75th Annual Big Ten men's Gymnastics Championships get underway tonight and that is that nobody is quite sure what is going to happen.

Big Ten coaches see the team race as a four-team tussle between fourthrated Ohio State, No. 6 Illinois, 10thranked Iowa and defending champion

'This looks like it's going to be one of the best Big Ten meets ever," said Michigan State Coach George Szypula. 'Illinois and Ohio State both have very tough teams and Iowa at home will have a bit of an advantage. Minnesota has been off and on, but they are very capable of winning it all."

FIGHTING ILLINI mentor Yoshi Hayasaki said it will be consistency that will lift the winner to a title in the team championships tonight at 7 p.m.

in the Carver-Hawkeye Arena. 'The consistency is the most important thing," Hayasaki said. "In the pressure of the conference championships, the team that can get through the six events without many problems can win it.'

Iowa Coach Tom Dunn agreed, saying that "the competition is so fierce that you just can't make any mistakes. It's very possible that the top four teams won't have any scores in the seven's in their routines. If you see a seven, you're probably talking about the fourth-place team."

Dunn added that the home meet advantage could help the Hawkeyes. "In a meet that will probably be close, something other than the gymnastics might decide it," he said. "If the home crowd goes nuts over a good performance you can pick up an extra tenth and in a close meet, that may be

"THIS MEET IS just too close to call. I certainly wouldn't put any money anywhere," Dunn said. "On paper, I think Illinois and Ohio State have a bit of an edge because of the high scores they've been getting and because Ohio State beat us. We can score that high, too, and I think we'll do it this weekend. On paper, you'd have to put Minnesota in fourth, they haven't done real well score-wise. They do have the people there and they can win it again. The Gophers have won six of the last seven Big Ten titles, except for an Illini triumph in 1981. Minnesota Coach Fred Roethlisberger said the Gophers have not lived up to expectations this

"I haven't seen Illinois or Ohio State since the Windy City (Invitational in November)," Roethlisberger said, "but from the scores I've seen, Illinois has the highest scoring potential and Ohio State has a powerful team. I don't think Minnesota or Iowa are out of it

AN INJURED MICHIGAN team will look for fifth place, if all-arounder Dino Manus returns to competition from a shoulder injury. If not, the Wolverines will give up three zeroes. Michigan is also without all-arounder Gavin Meyeroitz who had been scoring

"You just don't replace that easily," said Wolverine Coach Newt Loken, now in his 36th season at Michigan. "If Dino is back, we'll be fighting for the middle of the pack. If not, we'll probably finish last. We're in the unfamiliar role of not being in the race for the title but that's just lady luck." Michigan State and Wisconsin will join the Wolverines in the battle for fifth. The Badgers are averaging 259.99 while the Spartans have averaged

'Classy' win gives Hoosiers top spot

Indiana basketball fans gave a warm welcome home to the new Hoosier team Thursday night, and the squad responded with a classy, 64-41, Big Ten victory over archrival Purdue, enabling the Hoosiers to grab sole possession of first place in the conference.

Ohio State, previously tied with Indiana for first, suffered a 74-73 home loss to Illinois in overtime. In the other Big Ten game, Michigan State dumped Minnesota, 79-67, in Minneapolis.

The 12th rated Hoosiers, playing their first home game since leading scorer Ted Kitchel was forced out of the line-up by a back injury, came up with their best defensive game of the year.

INDIANA COACH Bobby Knight, emotionally hugging his starters at game's end, praised the crowd as well as his players following the decision.

"We need you Saturday night, too," yelled Knight to the crowd when the final buzzer sounded. He was referring to Indiana's game against Illinois.

Randy Wittman led Indiana with 16 points, but it was the Hoosier defense that sparked the victory. Purdue shot only 33 percent in the game and had 14 turnovers. "I'm not sure what you want me to say when you get your ass kicked," said Purdue Coach Gene Keady. "It was a great effort on their part. They played exactly like I like.

"Indiana deserves to be league champs if they keep playing like that. We may not have been able to plug dam against them if we had two days to play."

Douglas, a 6-foot-3 freshman, scored 16 of his points after the intermission and brought the Illini back from a 10-point deficit in the closing minutes of regulation play.

In Minneapolis, freshman Scott Skiles scored 25 points and Sam Vincent added 21 Thursday night to lead Michigan State to a 79-67 victory over Minnesota.

The Gophers led, 43-37, 4 minutes, 24 seconds into the second half, but Michigan State rallied for a 55-55 tie, fueled by Skiles' two three-point field goals. The Spartans took their first lead of the second half, 59-57, at the 10:00 mark on two free throws.

Nan Doak, a junior distance runner for Iowa, has been named to the United States cross country team that will compete at the International Amateur Athletic Federation Cross Country Championship in Gateshead, England, March 19.

Doak earned the sixth spot on the team by placing ninth amongst Americans last fall at The Athletics Congress national cross country meet in East Rutherford, N.J. She was actually an alternate based on that race, but when it was learned that two runners - Brenda Webb and Lesley Welch - who finished before Doak would not be on the team, she

"Basically, she was the ninth American," said Jerry Coleman, coach of the United States team. "But Lesley Welch (TAC and NCAA champ from Virginia) had a shoulder injury, Julie Brown won't be running, then Brenda Webb came up this weekend and gave me a call saying she couldn't go." Welch, Brown and Webb placed before Doak at the TAC meet. "It was Brenda not running that opened up the

DOAK'S TEAMMATES ARE, to say the least, elite runners. They start with Jan Merrill, one of the top runners in the country from the mile to the marathon. The American record-holder for the narathon, Joan Benoit, is the second runner Rounding out the United States team is Betty Jo Springs, the NCAA cross country champ in 1981, Margaret Groos, Kathy Bryant-Hadler and Doak. Coleman expects the U.S. team to fare well. "Obviously we won't be as strong without Lesley Welch and Julie Brown, that takes away some of the frontrunning power, but I will say that Jan Merrill is one f the old proven veterans, and after that, I can hold my breath from the time the No. 2 runner comes in to when the No. 6 runner comes in. That's how close ey are, and it's going to be our strong point."

COLEMAN SAID the team isn't losing much with Doak being added. "It sounds like she's really on top of the world, and hopefully she'll come down a little bit to the ground, but I think she'll be really sparked up for the race," he said.

Coleman, the women's track and cross country coach at Cal State in Sacramento, described cross country running in Europe. "Basically they are flat courses. Sometimes they even run in hippodromes, and a lot of times they are run indoors, but they include plowed ground and going over barriers, more running in the countryside...you have to be a very accomplished distance runner, which obviously Nan a knee which has sidelined her for the entire indoor track season. But she said she is logging 60 miles per week, and will be at full strength for the World Championship race. "I think I'm more prepared for it than if I had to get on the track, because I've been running a lot of distance.'

Doak is coming off a "slight case of tendinitis" of

And with the Big Ten indoor championships in the Jenison Field House on the East Lansing campus today and Saturday, he should be. "It will feature the greatest collection of track and field athletes ever in East Lansing," said the eight-year coach. "There are more elite athletes in the conference than there have been in quite some time.'

When talking about elite Big Ten athletes, in any sport, it's hard to overlook a trio from Indiana quarter-miler Sunder Nix, distance runner Jim Spivey and pole vaulter David Volz. They added up to 40 of Indiana's 93 points and last season's indoor NIX RAN the fastest 400 meters in the world last year and ended up with a No. 7 ranking. Spivey was the first-ever Big Ten Athlete of the Year. Volz was ranked No. 2 in the vault in 1982.

Not surprisingly, Sam Bell's Hoosiers are favored for the team title. "I don't think there's any doubt about it," said Michigan Coach Jack Harvey, whose team swept the indoor and outdoor titles in 1982. Harvey said the Hoosiers depth will overwhelm the Youth is certainly in the Hawk squad's favor. The roster is dotted by only three seniors - Steve Brewer, Cletus Howard and Chris Williams.

Some good news for Iowa fans is the return to full strength of sophomore Ronnie McCoy, who Bibbs said "everybody knows is a class athlete." McCoy missed the 60-yard hurdle finals in last weekend's Illini Classic by .01 seconds to teammate Williams. Williams went on to grab fifth in the finals, setting a Northwestern will be trying to secure an at-large bid to the NCAA women's basketball championships when it entertains Iowa tonight in Big Ten action at Evanston, Ill.

The Wildcats are currently in fourth place in the conference, just one-half game behind Minnesota. Northwestern must sweep Iowa tonight and Michigan and Michigan State next weekend to even be considered for a post-season

A nine-member committee will meet sometime next week to chose the 32 representatives to the NCAA Division 1 ournament, which begins March 18 and leads to the finals April 1-3 in Norfolk, Va. OHIO STATE AND Indiana are tied for first place in the Big Ten and are well ahead of Northwestern and Minnesota. Northwestern Coach Annette Lynch thinks the Buckeyes and Hoosiers will both make the national tournament with possibly a third conference representative.

But the women's tournament doesn't appear to have the luxury the men do. There are so many quality teams and so few berths, that there is a remote possibility that Oral Roberts, the only undefeated Division I team at 23-0,

Iowa Coach Judy McMullen says the Big Ten may only get one berth. "There will be a lot of top 20 teams, that haven't won conference cham-pionships, still available," she said. "There aren't enough at-large bids."

LAST YEAR, Big Ten teams didn't fare too well in the NCAA tourney, and McMullen says that could hurt its chances when the selections are made. Drake Coach Carole Baumgarten said her team's chances for a NCAA Conference). At one point six teams have been ranked in the top 20.

'It all boils down to whether they (the committee) will chose more teams from the SEC of the secondplace finisher in the Gateway. My guess is the former."

The NCAA became the sole sponsor of women's post-season play this year and 32 teams aren't nearly enough berths as far as Lynch is concerned. "Last year there were two tourna-ments," she said. "There was an AIAW tourney as well. Now there is only one and college teams are being penalized. I think the tournament should be expanded to 48 teams."

McMULLEN AGREES with Lynch. but Baumgarten doesn't. "The NCAA has to look out for expenses," Baumgarten said. "If you expand to 64 teams and start flying teams here and there, that's a great expense, and the gate isn't producing. "If you want to expand, you need a gate. It should stay select. Sure, we may not get in, but if it's harder to get in, it's certainly worth while if you do

If only one or two teams represent the Big Ten at the NCAA meet this year, there is an alternative called the National Women's Invitational Tournament, which will be held in Armarillo, Texas, March 17-19.

Even though Drake has already turned down an invitation to the NWIT, Baumgarten said. "It should be a good tourney because the NCAA is so small. she said. "Look at the (Southeastern There should be a good field of teams."

The United States Football League opens its inaugural season with five games on Sunday and a Monday night match-up as football fans get their first look at the new product after months of hype and talk of network television contracts.

Miller, who posted a 42-25 record with the NFL's Denver Broncos in five seasons before his dismissal, returns to Mile High Stadium for a 2 p.m. clash against the Philadelphia Stars.

Weekend television

Friday

Things are looking bad for J.R. tonight on "Dallas:" Bobby (Patrick Duffy), Ray (Steve Kanaly) and Holly (Lois Chiles) team up to stop J.R.'s (Larry Hagman) illegal Caribbean oil deal, while Sue Ellen's (Linda Gray) past could nip J.R.'s political career in the bud. Meanwhile, Pam (Victoria Principal) and Mark (John Beck) get closer as they try to help Cliff (Ken Kercheval). 8 p.m., KGAN-2; WHBF-4.

· Tonight's "Rockford Files" is one of the series' best: Jimbo (James Garner) is one of the nominees for the Best Detective of the Year Award, much to the amusement of the other p.i.'s in attendance. But he gets an opportunity to prove his stuff when a murder mars the banquet. And who should be there to help him? His old buddy and fellow nominee Lance White (Tom Selleck). Guess who cracks the case - and wins the award. 11 p.m., KGAN-2.

Saturday

Movie on cable: Chariots of Fire won the Academy Award last year for its stirring presentation of two runners at the 1924 British Olympics and their quests for gold and God. Movies about running and religion don't really send us, but we know a lot of people who would gladly apply their Nikes to our face for saying so. Find out why, if you haven't already. 7 p.m., HBO-4.

• Movie on cable: Alan Parker's hoot the Moon follows the decline and fall of a family, as the parents (Albert Finney, Diane Keaton) quarrel, cheat and destroy their children's lives. A tad bombastic, as is always the case with Parker (Midnight Express, Fame, The Wall), but more thoughtful and sensitive than most of his other films. 9 p.m.

Sunday

Gene Siskel and Roger Ebert play "Dueling Critics" over movies about which they have strong disagreements on tonight's installment of "Sneak Previews." We don't know what films they're going to talk about (Halloween III? Six Weeks?), but Rex the Greek sez always go with Roger. Always. 5:30 p.m., KCRG-9. Aficionados of TV sleaze will be in heaven tonight at 8. NBC (KWWL-7) is presenting a little ditty called "The Demon Murder Case," about a kid who claims the devil made him kill. There's even an exorcism. Andy Griffith and Eddie Albert star.

And ABC (KCRG-9) is treating us with "Baby Sister," the sensitive story of a poor guy who gets lured into the sack by his girlfriend's 18-year-old sister. Right. Sure. Ted Wass, Pamela Bellwood and Phoebe Cates (Fast Times at Ridgemont High) star.

• If that's not enough, there's always M-TV. Our favorite show so far has been one (surprisingly) by Styx about a Moral Majority rally (wish we could remember the name of the song); Thomas Dolby's "She Blinded Me with Science" is pretty good, too. On the other hand, you haven't even dreamed of bad video until you've seen Quarterflash's "Harden My Heart" tape. All day and all of the night, cable-

ICHARD ATTENBOROUGH has the face of an elf who's done duty for Santa Claus. It turns cherry red when he's excited, and the black bows of his eyeglasses cut across the ruddiness like squared-off question marks. His mind is quick and his laughter quicker.

"Gandhi has taken 20 years of my life so don't be afraid to say I'm obsessed," the Oscar-nominated director joked to a table of companions in Los Well over three hours in length, and with 400,000 people shoehorned into a single scene, Gandhi fits neatly into the epic category. But the film comes long after "epic" was automatically synonymous with success, as it was in the halcyon days of wide screens and Cecil B. DeMille. Any movie is a risk, but Gandhi was considered such a gamble it's still a wonder it was made. That it captured 11 Oscar nominations is Attenborough's sweet revenge.

"NOBODY WANTED TO finance it," he said of his two decades of struggle. "All the major studios both here and in Britain thought it wasn't a viable project and so I was eventually driven to nonindustry money. When we finally got to the shooting, I simply couldn't go over budget or schedule because there was no more money there - no studio to back us. Seventeen million dollars was the actual production cost, and there wasn't a frame of the film that wasn't used. The first cut was six minutes longer than the print you see.'

A long-time British actor (he's a Sir) who starred in the original London production of The Mousetrap (which is still running after 30 years), Attenborough's directing prowess was exercised only as a result of his battle to bring Gandhi to the screen.

"I had been in partnership with Bryan Forbes for several years in Britain where he did the writing and directing and I did the producing and acting. I didn't have any desire to direct - I only got interested after I had found Gandhi. I'm not fascinated by pyrotechnics or the moviola. I want to tell a story and the way I can do that is in cinema. I'm cocky about it - I want to do it my own way."

BEFORE A NATIVE Indian asked Attenborough to read one of Gandhi's biographies, Attenborough's knowledge of the slain leader, by then already dead for 15 years, was as sketchy as a schoolboy's. The more Attenborough read of Gandhi's use of passive resistance to achieve mighty ends, however, the more it touched his own liberal leanings.

"Much of what Gandhi has to say I care very deeply about. He rang bells with an extraordinary clarity for me. I'm an agnostic, but if anybody's persuaded me that there are other things in life, by God, Gandhi's done it.

'To think he had such insight and understanding of human behavior at such a young age was incredible. I felt that he had more to say and was more accessible than so many of the great thinkers, than anybody I'd come across. Gandhi had more influence over world affairs and world attitudes for good than any man has had for centuries. I said, 'My God, what a story! What a dramatic tale to tell.' I found it

The first chorus of "no's" from potential backers crescendoed as the years wore on. To stretch himself, Attenborough the actor became Attenborough the director of such efforts as Oh, What a Lovely War!, Young Winston, A Bridge Too Far and Magic.

THROUGH THE YEARS, scores of people touched on some aspect of the production. Alec Guinness was Attenborough's first choice to play Gandhi, and playwright Robert Bolt was tapped to write the screenplay before he grew too ill to comply. But no matter how prestigious the names, Attenborough met with studio indifference.

"They said nobody would go see a story about a wrinkled, little man dressed in a sheet who carried a

When at last enough money was raised from private sources and filming proceeded, Attenborough, brought a two-hour version of his film to Hollywood and offered sacrifices to the studio gods.

"I showed it to distributors and 80 percent of those who had turned it down for the last 20 years bid on it. Columbia outbid all the others, and since it's opened, business hasn't flagged a bit. In London, they had to put extra police around the theater because two and three and four hundred people had to be turned away every night. In America, the exhibitors are hammering on the door to take the movie."

Attenborough sees its success in terms of it offering something substantial for a change to the American movie-going public.

"I THINK THERE'S a change of attitude in what the public wants related to what it's been given," he said. "There's a desire for a cinematic 'event' again. They want to see the return of scale and epic.

"There's also a larger change on a philosophical plane. The criteria that we have applied to settle human affairs over the last X years should be reexamined. People are discovering there are other ways of settling affairs than blowing a man's head off and Gandhi's ideas are there to look at."

Now that the obsession of his life has been realized, what can Richard Attenborough possibly be

"I understand now," he said with a sigh of utter contentment, "what postnatal depression is."

ethereal music of the Inodnesian island of Java comes to Iowa City this weekend with a performance by the Friends of the Gamelan at 8 p.m. Saturday in Harper Hall.

A gamelan is an orchestra of percussion instruments including gongs, drums, metallophones and xylophones. The gamelan owned by the Friends of the Gamelan includes more than 100 instruments, thus making it the largest iron and bronze gamelan outside of Indonesia. Thirty musicians will play the instrument

There is no written score for gamelan music, but each piece is based on a single nuclear melody. Each instrument in the gamelan has a specific role in the performance of the melody: seven-keyed metallophones carry the tune; xylophones, gong-chimes and 18keyed metallophones elaborate it; hanging gongs and pot gongs punctuate the melody; drums function as timekeepers.

Gamelan music operates on the principle of cyclic time instead of the linear time that underlies Western music. For this reason, there is no stipulated duration for a gamelan piece. The musical phrases or cycles are simply repeated as many times as the situation requires, with each cycle signaled by the stroke of a large

THE FRIENDS OF the Gamelan is a diverse group whose common interest is a love of the gamelan. Their professions range from art and music to law, architecture, banking and psychology.

This is their first trip outside of Chicago, where the group was founded in 1978 and is directed by musicologist Sue Carole De Vale. The UI earned the privilege of this visit as the result of research into gamelan acoustics by UI faculty members William Savage and Edward Kottick, who collaborated with De Vale in a study of the gamelan at Chicago's Field Museum.

In addition to their concert, Friends of the Gamelan will also offer a public lecture at 11 a.m. and a workshop at 1:30 p.m. on Saturday. All events are free and open to the public.

IS VOICE IS LOUSY, yet he is an expressive, evocative singer. His guitar playing consists of seemingly two or three licks, yet he is one of rock's most powerful and distinctive guitarists. He spent more time than is humanly imaginable with three of rock's dippiest nerds, yet he exhibits no noticable signs of brain damage.

Neil Young, who will be popping the rock 'n' roll cherry of The House That Lute Built this Sunday, is arguably rock music's most impressive survivor. While most of his contemporaries have zoned out, mellowed out, dropped out, died or fallen into pitiful selfparody, the Canada-born Young has remained at the forefront of popular music with a wide variety of creative, passionate and humane stylings.

YOUNG'S GREATEST strengths are his impeccable taste, his humor, his humanity and his knack for picking over changes in rock's direction and then incorporating the finest essences into a style all his own. He is, you might say, one very cool guy.

After beginning his professional music career in Toronto with The Myna Birds (a band that included - I swear - funkpopper Rick James), Young trekked to sunny Southern California and met up with Steve Stills. The two formed the nucleus of Buffalo Springfield, a seminal (and occasionally brilliant) folk/country/rock

Three LPs later, their egos about to burst, the Springfields split to pursue assorted solo and band projects, as well as shacks in Beverly Hills. 1969 brought about an artistic blooming for Young as he released two stunning solo albums - Neil Young and the transcendent Everybody Knows This Is Nowhere. The next couple of years yielded what would prove to be Young's most commercially viable works - After The Goldrush and Harvest.

DURING THIS PERIOD Young also was/was not in one of the most revered/reviled acronyms (CSN and sometimes Y) in rock history. The addition of Young provided a much-needed injection of true rock 'n' roll fury - a cutting edge, if you will, to CS&N's gooey sweetness. But the relationship, tentative at best, finally crumbled due to the return of the mighty Ego and increasingly obvious differences in musical direction.

Young spent the early to mid-1970s as a relative recluse, recording albums and then

Neil Young

shelving them, granting veiled and cryptic interviews, making films and cutting uneven (if often inspired) records.

In 1975, Young released what would be, in many ways, his masterpiece - Tonight's The Night. Difficult, dissonant and angry, Tonight's The Night was a passionate attempt to exorcise Young's frustration and helplessness over the near-simultaneous deaths (by overdose) of Crazy Horse guitarist Danny Whitten and friend/roadie Bruce Berry. One would be hard-pressed to come up with a more honest, bitter and heartbreaking chunk of wailing rock 'n'

ALTHOUGH EXTREMELY powerful, Tonight's The Night was not well-received by Young's public, and Zuma followed that same year as a return to the more familiar Young style. Zuma contained some of the singer's finest tunes to date (notably "Cortez the Killer," "Danger Bird" and "Don't Cry No Tears"), yet overall it was uneven and lacked the unbridled fury of TTN.

A brief, unremarkable resumption of the partnership with Steve "You Talkin' To Me?" Stills in the Stills-Young Band resulted in Long May You Run. Young's contributions were predictably tasteful, but by this point it would have taken several megatons to dislodge Stills from the LaBrea Tar Pits of rock 'n' roll.

American Stars and Bars (1977) contained the brilliant "Like A Hurricane" but little else of note. In 1978, Young released Comes A Time, a folk-oriented mode. Though a beautiful record, Comes A Time fairly reeked of complacency, and many critics spoke knowingly of the old man's preparations for going out to pasture.

BUT YOUNG HAS always kept one ear to the ground, which was then fairly quaking from the shock of Britain's New Wave. This movement was summarily absorbed, and Young (with Crazy Horse) embarked on one of the most thunderous tours in

The resultant LPs (Rust Never Sleeps and Live Rust) were undeniable testaments to Young's resilience and undying rock 'n' roll spirit. Young responded to the critical and public acclaim by pulling off yet another about-face on the flaccid Hawks and Doves Reactor (1981) showed Young taking his explosive "Rust" sound into the studio - a successful reaffirmation of Young's newfound grunge-rock ability.

With Young's long association with Reprise Records ending, he was lured to the aggressive Geffen Records label in 1982. With his track record for shifts in direction, it would have been hard to imagine even being surprised anymore.

Incredibly, Trans, Young's 1983 debut on Geffen, unveiled electronically treated vocals, synthesizers and a fascination with the musical antics of Devo and the Europop of Kraftwerk (!). Young is determined not to be pinned down.

THE CURRENT TOUR is solo - the first set featuring material culled from the entire expanse of Young's impressive career; the second utilizing tapes, synthesizers and a variety of other electronic gizmos to enable Young to present his most recent work. In addition, a giant TV screen is used to show interviews, backstage action and alternate angles. Reports from earlier stops on the junket have been extremely impressive.

As of this writing, there are still some seats available at the Carver-Hawkeye Arena. And while a good number of the seats are behind the stage, we are assured by the Student Commission on Programming and Entertainment that the giant screen is indeed two-sided and transluscent so that those ticket holders will not, as a currently rampant rumor would have it, be left in the dark.

This is an all-too-rare opportunity to witness one of pop music's longest-running, most consistently surprising talents. Catch it if you can.

ST. LOUIS (UPI) - Tennessee Williams' estate totals about $10 million, the brother of the celebrated playwright said Thursday.

Dakin Williams, the writer's younger brother, said the amount of the estate was "much more than we had imagined.'

Dakin, whose unauthorized biography of his brother is to be published this month, said he was left "without a nickel" except for a $25,000 bequest he is to get after the death of his sister.

The brothers had been estranged since 1969 when Dakin had Tennessee committed to Barnes Hospital in St. Louis for alcohol and drug Despite his wish that he be buried in the Gulf of Mexico, the playwright's body Thursday was flown from New York to St. Louis, where he will be interred Saturday near his mother.

A funeral will be conducted at the St. Louis

A Catholic funeral was arranged because Tennessee had converted to Catholicism, Dakin said. Tennessee had not practiced the faith, but neither had he renounced it, the playwright's Price: 20 cents ©1983 Student

Uncommon Women' merits a look

By Roxanne T. Mueller

HE QUESTION is whether the 'uncommon women" of the University Theater production of Uncommon Women and Others are really so above the norm.

The eight women held up to scrutiny in Wendy Wasserstein's comedy, which opened Wednesday at Old Armory Theater, are a cross-section of young women with differing ideals and ambitions - or, as you discover shortly, their collective sexual hangups and rather meager ambitions.

Their alleged uniqueness stems from the fact that they're all sisters under the skin graduates, or survivors if you will, of Mount Holyoke, that ivy-covered nest whence the grossly divergent likes of Sylvia Plath and Joan Kennedy emerged.

AT HER FUNNIEST, Wasserstein lampoons the (real or imagined) cliquish snobbery of Eastern education; at her most wicked, she has one of her characters declare that all men should be forced to endure menstruation.

While Uncommon Women escapes a Vanities-type mentality, in which cheerleaders grow up to be either embittered feminists or embittered housewives, it eludes that play's greatest strength: You really don't get an idea of the true bonding that endures from female conviviality.

Though each of the five main characters reveals little bits of herself - make that very little bits — one rarely gets the feeling that they're friends because they really like each other. Instead, they've lived together for four years in a house because of circumstance. And their topics of conversation — mainly sex and men and how empty their futures look - don't exactly make this a play blazing with feminist fire.

Besides the splendidly funny caricature of Susie Friend (Robin Fawcett), the type of Miss Gung-Ho who cheers on anything smacking of tradition and triteness, and the deadpan Carter (Sali Nacker-Paul), the characters come across as relatively colorless. How are we supposed to care about these people when we don't know where they're coming from? God knows we don't know where they're going — they don't either, and they're the first to admit

FOR SOME REASON, the peripheral characters come off as more interesting than the five who open and close the play and whose reminiscences form the core of the segmented action. True, you remember Rita (Deborah Bremer) because of her outrageousness (and red-hot tights and highto tennis shoes), but Muffet's (Julia Ford Gibson) beauty problems and Holly's (Heather Zola Stanfield) wishy-washiness are hardly items of great, or convincing, magnitude.

Wasserstein's irony is rooted in an allfemale college's ideals of preparing great women for great things despite the fractured reasoning that emerges from the male voiceover reading from the college catalogue. Rita is about the only one who's convinced that they're all "incredible" women — the rest of the characters — and we - aren't so sure.

Director Thomas Babe keeps the action moving with swift blackouts and hurried scene changes, but the theater-in-the-round works only as well as you can hear. More than one line of dialogue is lost when a character has her back to you.

The musical interludes are more startling than endearing, sticking out like vignettes dropped from a TV commercial and not contributing much of anything, including comment.

While plays about women are not uncommon, plays about women written by women are. That's why Uncommon Women and Others is at least worth a look. The definitive play about exclusively female concerns, however, is still waiting to reach
