Some are 'nervous' about UI law funds

By Mary Tabor

Despite strong support for funding for a new UI College of Law building, legislators warn continued delays may postpone the project another session.

A bonding bill providing for a major construction project at all three state universities easily passed the Iowa Senate and faces little opposition in the House, advocates say.

The House may begin debate this week on the bill, which would provide $24.7 million for a new UI College of Law building. Approval by that body is the final action needed before the law school funding can be called a sure

Still, a memory of the final days of the 1982 session continues to haunt them. Despite optimism for the project a year ago, a bonding bill for a new law chool failed to find its way out of committee before that session ended.

At that time a disappointed Randall Bezanson, UI vice president for finance, said, "We'll be back next year and we'll get that law school.'

Tuesday Bezanson said, "Barring unforeseen circumstances the bill should pass by the end of the session. By all indications we have, there is substantial

LEGISLATORS EXPRESS more worry. "Obviously I am disturbed and concerned they've been procrastinating so long," said Sen. Art Small, D-lowa City. "A bill sits around long enough and it grows barnacles."

This sentiment was echoed by Rep. Richard Varn, D-Solon, "My concern is, if we keep fooling around with this thing it isn't going to pass."

Varn also said more delays could be caused by many amendments being tacked on the bill. He said he didn't consider many of these germane, "Unless they are very necessary to the bill I'm going to resist any amend-

One amendment directs the state Board of Regents to use any money beyond the cost of the contract to pay off the bonds and that the money not be used for other purposes. "We've had bondings go through lower than we estimated, because of the economy contracters make lower bids. I would like to retire the bonds as quickly as we can." said its sponsor, Rep. Jack Woods, D-Des Moines.

Steinem: Feminism has grown up

By Susan Fisher

DES MOINES - Often called the 'glamour girl'' of the feminist movenent, Gloria Steinem continues to be active in women's causes, although she said Tuesday the role of the activist calls for a more mature outlook.

The editor of Ms. magazine, who spoke as part of the Des Moines Young Nomen's Resource Center Fifth Anniversary Celebration Tuesday night, recalled the attitude of many activists turing the mid-1960s. "It was sort of revolution tomorrow' or 'I'm going home to my father's business,' " she Steinem, whose reputation as a political and social critic grew as a result of her work as a writer, said she said. "The movements today are what was called the "good old days of activism" has been exaggerated.

"The 60s were very shallow, and once the draft was gone the movement was gone," she said in an interview with The Daily Iowan.

The need to root out conflict, she said, is reflected in the defeat of the Equal Rights Amendment. # Panel rejects El Salvador aid package

Foreign Affairs Committee Tuesday narrowly rejected an administration request for $50 million in additional military aid for El Salvador in 1983.

In a separate vote, the panel unanimously approved the administration's request for an additional $251 million in economic and military aid to battle-scarred Lebanon this year.

Three Republicans joined the majority in the 19-16 vote rejecting additional military assistance for El Salvador, while six Democrats voted for the aid. The vote was on a substitute amendment that would have provided $25 million in increased aid solely for training Salvadoran troops.

"That was a little bit too close for comfort," one aide to the Democratdominated committee said after the roll call vote was announced.

REP. MICHAEL BARNES, D-Md., chairman of the Latin American subcommittee, argued the administration already is expected to get $60 million in additional aid this year from Congress through reprogramming of other

But Rep. Clarence Long, D-Md., chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations, reiterated Tuesday that he wants Reagan to agree in writing to back negotiations in El Salvador and press for human rights reforms before he acts on the request to shift the $60

In addition, Long, who recently visited Guatemala, served notice that in view of human rights abuses in Guatemala, he "cannot possibly" support military aid to that country unless he finds a "very strong justification.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee also deleted a provision that would have allowed only $94.5 million in economic assistance this year to the Central American country. This left intact the $140 million figure the administration requested.

BARNES' SUBCOMMITTEE had inserted a stipulation that would allow no more than 25 percent of total funding for Latin America to go to one country, which would have put El Salvador at the $94.5 million figure.

The actions came on a bill that would provide supplemental 1983 assistance for all countries and organizations that receive U.S. aid. It was sent to the full House after several other amendments were acted on.

The panel is expected to act on the 1984 foreign aid bill next week.

On the subject of Lebanon aid, the committee inserted the condition that the president must obtain permission from Congress to send U.S. armed forces into Lebanon once an agreement is reached providing for withdrawal of all foreign troops from that country

Need for changes in system told

WASHINGTON - Attorney General William French Smith said Tuesday changes in El Salvador's criminal justice system are urgently needed to ensure future American aid, and he told that country's leaders so.

Smith, who is only the second Reagan cabinet member to visit El Salvador, said he told top officials in the Central American nation last week that making the country's legal system more workable is a "matter of substantial urgency."

Smith spent two days in El Salvador last week, the last leg of a 13-day trip that included stops in Mexico, Peru and Bolivia for talks on curbing narcotics production and traffick-

I I DO NOIEC

The attorney general noted there have been no convictions in the murders of eight U.S. citizens in that country, although seven Salvadorans have been jailed in connection with seven of the slayings - including four U.S. churchwomen.

We are supporting the government of El Salvador. It is a democratic system and therefore it is very important, not only from the standpoint of the U.S. citizens who have been involved there, but also from the standpoint of our support of that government, that they have an effective working criminal justice system," Smith said.

ALSO TUESDAY, the State Department said it expects El Salvador's new defense minister to be committed to the country's economic and political reforms and to respect human rights.

Spokesman Alan Romberg said that under Gen. Jose Guillermo Garcia, who resigned Monday as defense minister, the Salvadoran armed forces became "firmly committed to social and economic reforms.

The administration expects Gen. Eugenio Vides Casanova, a political moderate named to succeed Garcia, to follow his example, Romberg said.

Vides Casanova currently serves as head of the National Guard, members of which are blamed for the murders of four American churchwomen in 1980.

Conditions for continued U.S. military aid to El Salvador include substantial progress by the government on political and economic reforms, human rights and the investigation of the murders of U.S. citizens.

State vs. Two Cats:

Now free, they can hold their tails high

By Mark Leonard

Six-year-old "Boots" Saur and fiveyear-old "Tabby" Smith were finally given their walking papers Tuesday af-ter doing two weeks of hard time at an Iowa City "detention" facility.

Boots, a black and white short-haired cat, and Tabby, a domestic tiger cat, were rescued from an abandoned house at 927 S. Van Buren St. after a search warrant was issued on the feline fugitives April 4. The cats were then shuttled over to the city's Animal Con-

Because the owner of the property could not be found, the city said the cats had to be detained under a section of the Iowa City Code pertaining to abandonment of animals.

COURT DOCUMENTS on the case read, "... this matter came before the court for hearing on claims for property seized pursuant to a search warrant .... The property seized was

"We couldn't think of any other legal way to get the cats out," Assistant City Attorney Richard Boyle said.

Tabby and Boots apparently entered the house through a basement window, but were unable to exit. Animal Control officer Leslie Henry discovered the feline frolickers after receiving a complaint that they were trapped in the vacant house.

After being vindicated by Johnson County District Associate Judge Joseph Thornton, the cats were free to once again strut the streets of the city with their tails held high.

Owners Barbara Saur, 903 S. Van Buren St., and Tom Smith, 917 Gilbert Court, said before the hearing they were confident their pets would be ac-

HIS VOICE FILLED with emotion while looking at a photo of Tabby playfully rolled over on her back, Smith said, "That poor little cat, I bet she's bored to death.'

Saur also made a plea for Boots' case. "She's innocent," she declared. See Cats, page 6

'911' number is for emergencies, but many of the calls are routine

By Jeff Eichenbaum

Iowa City's 911 emergency call system enables quick response to people in desperate situations, but at least half the calls that come in are far from urgent.

"The problem is, people think it's the routine number and it's not," Iowa City police dispatcher Nancy Sereduck said. "I bet 50 percent of the calls I answer aren't for an emergency, but are to report things like dogs running loose or parking violations.

ber to report serious accidents, fires, "breaking and enterings in progress, when an ambulance is needed - things we need to get to right away," Sereduck said.

Callers are supposed to use the 911 num-

BUT PEOPLE freely call the emergency number because it's printed at the top of the inside cover of the phone book, while routine numbers are "down on the bottom of the page in much smaller print." Sereduck and Iowa City Police Chief Harvey Miller agree that there are problems with the system, but that it's still "ex-tremely effective."

"I think over a period of time there needs to be some modification (in the system)." Miller said. "There's problems on any system."

The system is set up with five incoming lines. At the push of a button, the dispatcher can switch the caller to the Coralville police, fire department or any emergency service necessary

And if the person calling hangs up before all the needed information is recorded, the system provides an instant recall of the number. If the person doesn't answer, the number can be traced in three to five

IN ONE CASE, "a woman called and then dropped the phone, but I could still hear fighting," Sereduck said. "Then her husband pulled the phone out of the wall." The system was still able to trace the number and police were able to respond.

"Usually, the longer someone stays on the phone and the more information I get, the more I can help them," Sereduck said. Then whenever possible, "I talk to the person in danger until the police get there.

"A frustrating thing can be trying to get an address," Sereduck said. "Someone will call and say, 'My husband's beating me up send the police,' and then hang up.'

Sereduck said, too, that "a person might have just moved to town or might be at their boyfriend's and not know the address.

The 911 system is "helpful because it saves people from having to learn police, fire, sheriff and ambulance numbers,' Sereduck said. "Also, I can interact well between all agencies because if an ambulance is needed, we need to send a squad car with them and I just stay on the line to decide if that's necessary."

Along with a praise-filled review of a top UI administrator, the UI Faculty Council Tuesday received the students' perspective on crowding problems in assrooms, dormitories and libraries. Philip Hubbard, UI vice president for student services and dean of academic affairs, was credited by an ad hoc committee for making "substantial strides in giving focus and direction to the office" he administers.

Prior to Hubbard's tenure in the office, the report said, the UI's image repelled prospective students, the number of dropouts was high, the residence halls had an unpopular reputation and counseling and advising

Also in the report, UI students interviewed by committee members suggested several changes. Noisy, overcrowded libraries caused by record enrollment "leave many students frustrated," the report said. Stubuilding at night and making more study space available in the Union.

THE COMMITTEE also heard complaints from crowded dormitory dwellers, many of whom live with two or three roommates. "If this is not voluntary on the part of the students involved, more dorm space may be needed," the report said.

Another concern is that the Union is not a base for extensive student gathering, as is the case at other universities. The report suggested the 800 students who hold board contracts but do not live in residence halls should eat meals in the Union. "It might make the IMU more a center of student activities and also, incidentally, increase its revenue," the report said.

Many students were displeased with the number of teaching assistants and graduate students who lead classes, the review committee found. George Kalnitsky, a biochemistry professor, said students told him it was possible dents suggested opening an academic to take a class and never see the professor.

The report cited two examples: an introduction to business law class frequently taught by third-year law students and "Principles of Formal Reasoning," a course with between 40 and 45 students offered by the Philosophy Department and taught by a TA.

KALNITSKY, CHAIRMAN of the six-member ad hoc committee that reviewed Hubbard and the Office for Student Services, told the council that Hubbard has continued to be a dedicated teacher and has been looked upon as a mentor by many students since taking the vice president's position in 1971.

Hubbard's review complimented him for "enhancing the quality of life for students and eliminating problems which inhibit the ability of students to devote full time and attention to their academic pursuits.'

Directors of various UI programs for students were interviewed for the review, including Special Support Services, University Counseling, Orientation, Handicapped Services and Planning and Programming, Also, Frank Wilderson Jr., vice president for student services at the University of Minnesota, spent two days in Iowa City last fall interviewing Hubbard and the people he works with. Wilderson said Hubbard's fellow administrators suggested he "take charge of the internal planning apparatus in the Office of Student Services so as to provide for a thorough integration of planning across all units whose plans need to be reconciled with those in Student Services."

The Faculty Council, which was not required to take action on the report, decided copies of the report would not be provided to the media unless UI President James O. Freedman chose to release the information.

Group seeks to be students' voice

By Kristine Stemper

Members of the United Students of lowa, a new student organization joing students at Iowa's three state universities, hope the group will become "a vehicle for expressing student con- iversities," McMulin said.

Sharon McMulin, chair of the sixmember USI board of directors, said, "I'm just so convinced that the group can be a major voice for students.' USI joins students at the UI, Iowa State University and the University of Northern Iowa

Some of the group's goals include stabilizing faculty salaries and making them more competitive, stabilizing tuition and increasing the funds needed for educational programs within universities. USI also hopes to deal with issues affecting students directly such as maintaining the current drinking

Because the money to accomplish these goals comes from the state Board of Regents and the Iowa Legislature, USI hopes to educate and work with the two bodies to tell them future the group will be funded as a what student concerns are.

"OUR GOAL is to work on all types of issues that affect the students of Iowa, and provide effective communication between the three state un-

Approximately $46,000 will be given to USI by the UI and ISU.

The UI's two student governing bodies approved putting 65 cents of the mandatory student fees, or about $36,000 for the next accademic year, into a trust fund to be released when USI's budget is submitted for approval. The regents, who must also approve the allocation, will discuss the funding

Iowa State University is also "trying to scrape up some money," according to Iowa State's USI board member Michael Keller.

The request for $10,000 must be approved by the Iowa State student government, Keller said, but the amount allocated will probably end up between $5,000 and $10,000.

Members of USI hope that in the separate organization, so it will not have to go through the student govern-

McMulin said USI will initially ask for about $1 from each student, while also giving those who do not want to fund the group the chance to check a box on their U-bill stating so.

JIM HESSBURG, USI board member representing UNI said, "Eventually all three universities will probably have to go to this" method for funds. "We want this student association to be separate of the student governments.'

Students can become involved driectly with USI by becoming a legislative assembly member, which is essentially the organization's governing body.

Each university is allowed one legislative assembly member per 2,000 students plus one additional member. ISU board members have already appointed their 13 legislative assembly members, and UNI has picked five of the six it is allotted. The UI will begin to choose its 15 legislative assembly

members within two weeks. "We encourgae everyong to apply," McMulin said.

Legislative assembly members are able "to determine policy (for USI)," she said. They will work on finding out what students' opinions are, will approve the group's budget and help with on-campus and public education.

Hessburg is "elated" that USI may be receiving so much money, and does not think the UI contribution of $36,000 is too much for a new group to handle. "Eventually it's going to be amounts well over $36,000."

A MAIN PORTION of the funds will go to a full-time executive director and to coordinating the three universities.

"In order to be effective and get the people in power to listen to you, a lot of times it takes organizations," McMulin said, giving trade unions and teachers associations as examples. "This is sort of like a teachers' association, only it's a students' association."

Keller said, "The larger amount (of funding) we get, the quicker we will get into action.'

Kaplan touts test-prep program

By Suzanne Johnson Staff Writer

Stanley H. Kaplan, the man whose schools prepare students to take college entrance tests, Tuesday defended the exams and said his centers do not give the rich an unfair advantage.

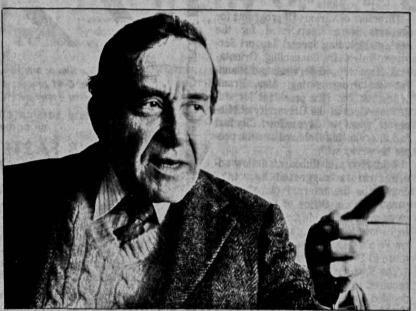

The founder of the 122-branch Stanley H. Kaplan Educational Center visited his Iowa City and Des Moines centers. The Brooklyn, N.Y., native, founded his test preparation school in 1938 after tutoring students during his college years. Since then, the schools have sprouted in the United States and abroad, with four on the drawing board.

The Iowa City branch, at 232 Stevens Drive, opened in November 1982, after many students complained of the long drive to Des Moines, which was the location of the nearest test-preparation

Kaplan entered the local Kaplan Center half an hour late, and was quickly surrounded. His Des Moines administrator hovered at his elbow, and several Iowa City branch employees waited eagerly to meet him. Minutes before he arrived, one employee said she had never met him and was rather

LITTLE ABOUT Kaplan was intimidating though. He was friendly, relaxed and warned the woman who took his tote bag to handle the bag carefully, lest she break his bottle of

Despite criticism standardized tests have faced in recent years, Kaplan, whose success has fed upon insecure test-takers, defends the tests. He said exams like the SAT, the Law School Admission Test and the Medical Stanley H. Kaplan, founder of the Kaplan Educational Center, speaks at the lowa City center.

College Admission Test are valuable because they uncover skills required in law and medical schools that gradepoint averages don't reveal.

"If the tests didn't have any point to them, they wouldn't have them .... I have a lot of belief as far as - I mean confidence and faith — in the testing system, not because I prepare for the tests, but because I talk to people in the colleges, the med schools, the dental

Kaplan insists the College Entrance Examination Board is not guilty of cultural bias, although he said some educational bias does exist in the United States. Blacks and Hispanics living in homes without books are victims of educational bias, he said.

HOWEVER, NEITHER the students nor the standardized tests can be blamed for that, he said. The solution, according to the master tutor, is to establish a network of Headstart Programs, and to siphon some funds from President Reagan's defense budget into education.

"If these tests are culturally biased, then colleges are culturally biased." Kaplan did qualify his conclusion that college entrance examinations don't pose unfair problems for the culturally disadvantaged.

"It depends what you mean by culture. If you're, say, not bilingual, and you speak only Spanish, and you get a test in English, that definitely is culturally biased. You can't argue

Although Kaplan says his students have a median LSAT score eight points higher than the national median, and MCAT scores two points higher, he offers no guarantee.

"You know there are guarantees that you read of and there are courses that say 'guarantee.' You know what the guarantee is? You can take the course over again.

THIS RESULTS in larger classes, gives little help to the students and is really no guarantee, Kaplan said.

He defended his high prices, which range from $35 for three lessons to $1,000. "It's all based on number of hours and the hourly charge - and that's what it boils down to - is something like $1 an hour, which is pretty cheap.

Ten percent of his students recommended by their advisors are receiving scholarships, Kaplan said. "I'm differentiating beween reluctance to pay and inability to pay. I don't want somebody who parks his Mercedes around the corner, comes in and says, 'I can't afford (it)' and uses the extra money he saved to buy a stereo set.

When I say inability to pay, I'm talking about disadvantaged students. But for you to pay, say $1,000 a year for tuition, you can pay this tuition too." Although Kaplan only makes a five percent profit, he said, "You have 122 centers ... that builds up to a lot of

The UI's decision to start a program allowing faculty and staff members to buy computer equipment at a discount has upset a couple of local computer

The UI Office of Information Technology recently announced the formation of a Faculty-Staff Computer Equipment Discount Program and published a catalog featuring a variety of computer equipment available to UI staff and faculty members at discounts of 30 percent or more.

Jeffrey Cohen, a software development analyst for Iowa Data Systems of lowa City, said he was angered when the UI stepped in as middleman for computer sales.

"I DON'T THINK the UI should be devoting resources to a function not involved in running the university," Cohen said. "The university is doing something that should be the job of the American capitalist system.

However, James Johnson, director of the UI's Office of Information Technolgy, believes the UI is acting in responsible manner.

"We carefully considered the facts before initating this program and we feel this program will definitly be a great aid to the faculty," Johnson said. 'A lot of the faculty does work in their homes and with this program they will e able to do this work on affordbly priced equipment that is compatible to what the university has.

Johnson said the idea of a university providing an opportunity for its faculty and staff to purchase computers is common. "There are hundreds of schools doing this. In fact, I would say our program is a fairly moderate one mpared to some others."

der the rules of the new program the UI would not actually be buying or selling any computer equipment.

"We are acting strictly as a broker," Johnson said. "We contacted the vendors on our bidding list and simply published the prices of the equipment that they quoted us."

Cohen said he still wasn't satisfied with the program. "How would people react if the university was acting as a stockbroker."

Jeff Larson, owner of Renaissance Computers, is also troubled by the UI's new program. "I am concerned the university's plan could hurt the local economy. They are offering computers at a 27 percent discount and there's no way we can possibly compete against

Larson said, "the lack of definition the university has made about its future plans" is the most bothersome aspect of the new policy

"I was planning to start selling IBM software but I am hesitant to do so until they make clear their future intentions," Larson said.

JOHNSON SAID he sympathizes with Larson's view and plans to meet with him Thursday. "I can see his point but it is impossible to define what are future plans are at this point."

"We tried to consider the welfare of the private sector when we created this program but ultimately you have to remeber that we are the University of Iowa, not the University of Iowa City,' Johnson said.

"Besides if I was a local businessman I would be rubbing my hands together because this program will allow for the purchase of computers by people who ordinarily wouldn't being buying them and as a result it will create a larger demand for computer equipment in Iowa City."

Married housing demand rises

By Sarah Stewart

Tim and Alicia Dunn applied for University Family Housing in October last year and they were put on a waiting list and told they might be able to expect housing by April.

On Jan. 17th, two days after their wedding, someone from the housing office called and said the list had moved along faster than they had anticipated. The Dunns were given two days to claim the apartment which was being offered to them or, in Alicia Dunn's words, "Boom, be back at the bottom of the list, just like that.'

Since the Dunns had just signed a lease for their current apartment which wouldn't expire until April, they were forced to pass up the apartment.

The difficulty in getting into married student housing is one faced by many couples attending

The UI has 799 units available for family housing, and the demand for placement is increasing every year. This year the office of family housing stopped taking applications in March, because 350 applications had already been received for the 100 spaces available.

LAST YEAR'S 100 openings fell far short of the usual number, according to UI Family Housing Manager Robert Sokol. Sokol said the tight job market is forcing more students to stay in school. Dunn believes it was unfair to expect the couple to make a commitment and downpayment im-

"These right now are some of the most cherished friendships we'll ever have," says resident Susan Anderson.

"We just don't understand why they couldn't have let us know more in advance," Tim Dunn said. Now the Dunns are back on the list and hoping to get an apartment this summer.

"We can't make any definite plans. If it's anything like the last time, we're going to have to make up our minds and put up the first month's rent two days after they call," he said.

Alicia Dunn added, "We can't even put any advertisements out to sublet, since we have no idea when they'll call."

The cheapest efficiency apartment Family Housing offers is $104 per month and the most expensive two-bedroom unit is $187. These rates are a dream come true for married students on a tight

IN ADDITION to the savings, family housing offers an opportunity for couples and parents to meet others like themselves. "These right now are some of the most cherished friendships we'll ever have," Susan Anderson, a four-year resident of Hawkeye Trailer Park, said.

She and her husband Bob have lived in Family Housing for five years, and "I can't think of one thing to complain about, the people are fantastic,"

Bob Anderson has been studying microbiology, holds a part-time job and will graduate soon. Meanwhile, Susan postponed her studies and works nights at Randall's to help support Bob and their four-year-old son, Matt.

Susan said, "It was kind of a blow in the gut to realize 'Hey, I've got to quit school so I can make some money,' '' but that the sacrifice was necessary and, since Bob was closer to finishing, the decision was fairly easy.

The Anderson's believe communication is the key to surviving the stress that comes with a college marriage, and Susan Anderson said this is where many couples fail.

"We've had quite a few friends who have gotten divorced, been separated or just had a lot of problems," she said. "There are lots of marriages around here where the stress is astronomical."

As for Smith and Saur, they picked up their misguided animals Tuesday afternoon. "I feel pretty good," Smith said. "I just want to get my cat home." He added that it might take some time before Tabby would be able to readjust to civilian life.

Smith's wife, Marilyn, said she and her husband were allowed visitation rights while their feline felon was incarcerated. "The things they need to take care of, they don't; and the things like a poor little innocent cat - why, they didn't even read her her rights," she said

THOSE DWINDLING weeks and extra amendments have William Hines, dean of the UI College of Law, fidgeting a bit. "We are getting less confident as the legislature winds down. Clearly there is some nervousness about this.

Hines criticized the amendments, saying they didn't go toward the merits of the project. He emphatically outlined what these merits are. "The benefits are hard to estimate, they will be so significant."

Educational quality

Everyone's becoming used to regular warnings that if something isn't done soon about enrollment, the UI's "quality of education" will suffer. Nothing much is ever done. Now, UI administrators are again agreeing that things are getting worse, but are again holding out few promises for action.

According to Randall Bezanson, UI vice president for finance, ... it would be folly to say it hasn't affected it (the quality of education) to some extent already." And Howard Laster, dean of the UI College of Liberal Arts, says that "the whole picture ... is one of a significantly overcrowded and overworked group of

So far, the UI has got by with stopgap measures - giving more classes to teaching assistants, assigning former storerooms to professors - while waiting for the perennially-promised enrollment decline. One problem is that the whole idea of "quality of education" is very elusive - it's not possible to quantify or even perceive easily, as is, say, the quality of workmanship in an automobile. So taking action never seems that urgent; as long as there are classes available and buildings to put bodies in, we get

But something is wrong when students have to take classes simply because they're not closed out yet, or to live in "temporary housing" for months. And as William J. Bennett, chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities, writes, "colleges and universities should make sure that their best teachers spend at least part of their time teaching freshmen and sophomores," in order to stimulate students' interests. Inexperienced teaching assistants, good though some may be, are not always a substitute for such formative influences. It is in such subtle ways that "quality of education" is undermined.

Measures have been suggested that may improve things, such as hiring more visiting faculty. But the only real solution is to cap enrollment by instituting more stringent entrance requirements. Certainly it's desirable to provide education for as many students as possible, but there seems little point in providing that education if we face a constant struggle to keep standards above the level of mediocrity.

American hypocrisy

The visit of Soviet diplomat Georgi Arbatov to Iowa has unfortunately raised an ugly bit of American hypocrisy.

By refusing to allow Arbatov to hold a press conference upon his arrival at Grinnell College Monday, the State Department has resorted to rationale and tactics reminiscent of the worst of the Cold War era.

Whether or not Arbatov is a clear and present danger to American democracy because of what the State Department calls his "... stature and ability to use the media to present Soviet positions ... " is beside the point. Only the most naive or paranoid of us thinks that American media are going to be used to dupe us flagrantly with Soviet ideology.

What is the point is the right Arbatov has to speak while he's here, and the right of Iowans and other Americans to hear what he has to say and judge for themselves the worth of it.

Americans have long held that the provisions of the Bill of Rights, among which is the freedom of speech, separate us from aristocratic and totalitarian states like the Soviet Union.

In denying a representative of the Soviet Union the right to state his views and to let the public hear what he has to say, the government has effectively shut down the First Amendment, making us no better than the country whose ideology is being

The government claims that its decision was based on a simple tenet of Realpolitik: retaliation for lack of access given American diplomats to the people of the Soviet Union.

But this eye-for-an-eye policy, an amoral decision made with an allegedly moral underpinning, instead furthers the idea that the only way to deal with the Soviet Union is in the most hostile way

George Kennan and other astute observers of American diplomacy have noted that the race to Armageddon is only being hastened by the failure of leaders on both sides of the Iron Curtain to consider the other side's point of view: Do the Soviet people any more than the American people see themselves as potential rulers of the world? And do they want to blow it up any more than we do?

The State Department's action in the case of Giorgi Arbatov, instead of protecting us from alien propaganda, merely moves us one step closer to that eventual breaking point.

What you'd expect?

During the recent mayoral election campaign in Chicago, Republican candidate Bernard Epton received a number of unfavorable reviews in the Chicago press. Among the accusations were that Epton, a millionaire lawyer, did not really understand the problems of working class Chicagoans and did not relate particularly well to people. As everyone knows, Epton eventually lost a closely contested and bitter election to rival Harold Washington. Now, with some unwanted spare time on his hands, he is making a serious effort to put a group of fellow-millionaire investors together to acquire The

Why would Bernard Epton want to own a newspaper, especially considering his frequently stormy relationship with reporters during the campaign? Why would he want to become employer of some of the same journalists he once categorized as "slime"? Or associate with individuals in the press he claims to be preparing

For revenge, it appears. Epton has already announced that one of his first executive actions, if successful in his bid, would be to fire columnists Roger Simon and Mike Royko, the latter a Pulitzer

Since Chicago press assertions that Epton doesn't relate well to people are so obviously absurd, this seems like a reasonable

Are Baha'is victims of genocide?

By Timothy M. Gabrielsen

OR THOSE concerned with international human rights, a distressing signal continues to be received from Teheran and the government of Ayatollah Khomeini. A practice closely resembling genocide is responsible for at least 135 deaths and many "disappearances" since the Iranian Revolution.

The victims have been members of the Baha'i faith, a minority religious sect which, unlike Iranian Jews, Christians and Zoroastrians, is not protected by tradition or the Iranian Constitution. Just recently, 22 Baha'is were condemned to death for spying and links to Israel; three of them have already been executed. Only world opinion expressed through governmental and non-governmental bodies, the world press and citizenry can persuade the Khomeini government to cease this persecution.

The persecution of Baha'is in Persia and later, Iran, dates back to the 19th century, 20,000 Baha'is having been executed in the period since then. The Baha'is can only be termed scapegoats because they are apolitical and adhere to a philosophy of nonviolence and humanitarianism.

The Baha'i faith evolved from the Babi movement with the preachings of Mirza Ali Mohammed. He came to be called "the Bab," meaning the gateway (through whch flows divine truth). The Bab, originally a member of the Islamic faith, announced that a messenger of God was to come whose prophecies would supersede those of Abraham, Moses, Krishna, Zoroaster, Jesus and Mohammed. He was proclaimed a heretic by the Shiite clergy and Shah for attempting to subvert the true religion, and was executed in 1850.

THIRTEEN YEARS later in Baghdad, the Bab's doctrines were developed into a universal religion of pacifism and humanitarianism by a disciple who adopted the name Baha'ullah or, Glory of God. He was exiled and imprisoned in what today is known as Haifa, Israel. He died in prison, his followers, the Baha'is, believing him to be the latest revelation of God's word.

The Baha'is, while shunning violence and abstaining from partisan politics, advocate such lofty principles as universal compulsory education, economic justice, and the elimination fundamentalists. Baha'i women do not of prejudice based on race, religion, sex, nationality and class.

Guest opinion

Officials in Teheran view the sect as further evidence of the impurity of the regime of the Shah, which it overthrew in 1979. The government particularly cites contributions of Iranian Baha'is to the Baha'i shrines at Haifa and Acco, Israel, as proof of Baha'i collusion with Israel, one of its perceived enemies. Ironically, these shrines were constructed before Israel was recognized as a state in 1948. Israel remains the Baha'i holy land.

IRAN'S CONTEMPT for the sect is increased by religious differences. The Baha'is do not respect the distinctions based on sex demanded by the Islamic wear veils and they are not segregated

Furthermore, the Baha'is are accused of being immoral because their marriages are not recognized as valid in Iran and there is no civil marriage. This places them in the anomalous position of either betraying their faith and marrying according to Moslem precepts, or remaining faithful to Baha'i and being accused of adultery and prostitution.

Many of the estimated 400,000 Iranian Baha'is have lost retirement pensions, homes, crops, businesses and personal property. Cemeteries and shrines have even been destroyed. Perhaps of greater significance is the fact that the future of the Baha'is has been jeopardized by the refusal of the Iranian government to educate the 50,000 to 70,000 Baha'i children, their schools having been closed.

These practices can only be termed gross violations of human rights. Iran is obligated under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to provide for its people, including Gabrielsen is a UI graduate student and a religious minorities, freedom of case-worker for Amnesty International.

religion and association. Clearly Iran is derelict in this regard.

WE MUST ALL join the United Nations, the United States Congress, the European Community and Amnesty International in condemning the Iranian government for its practices.

Congressman John Porter observed, "The 'final solution' planned by the Khomeini regime for the Baha'is and other oppressed minorities in Iran is not unlike the genocide of Hitler's final solution. We cannot allow the persecution of a people due to their religious beliefs to continue.

HDDADIEC

In urging that the Iranian authorities exercise compassion and commute the death sentences, Congressman Jim Leach said, "Every individual is entitled to freedom of religion and association. This possible bloodshed implies the triumph of human prejudice over reason and justice. It must be stopped."

Thoreau-ing down gauntlet to IRS

N A RECTANGULAR homemade cabin in the woods west of Mount Vernon, there's a man who didn't pay taxes this year. Or last year. Or the year before, and for most of the years since 1944.

His name is Walter Gormly and he's 68, and part of the reason he didn't pay was his income was below the minimum taxable level. But even if he'd earned more than the some $1,000 to $2,000 he makes now from selling wood, newspaper columns and organic vegetables, he still wouldn't have paid taxes April 15. Non-payment is a deliberate decision for Gormly. He doesn't believe in war as a way to solve disputes, and he doesn't believe in sending money to Washington to pay

"We're told the Soviet Union is a serious threat to the United States," Gormly said Tuesday in his rammed earth house. "They started saying that after World War II. They said the Soviet Union could fly across the North Pole and bomb us seven or eight years before they had planes capable of making such a flight."

HE'S BEEN skeptical of government war plans a long while. He first refused after refusing to fight in World War II. He didn't want to pay for "crimes against peace." After serving three years, he worked as a self-employed consulting engineer. And didn't pay taxes. and loitering in front of the U.S. Courthouse in Des Moines. According to the War Resisters' League, which keeps track of this kind of action, Gormly is one of only 16 tax resisters who've been jailed in the last 40 years. The other tens of thousands have either been ignored, or harassed by the Internal Revenue Service, which brings suits, fines, audits, garnishees from their returns (total military costs, which include veterans' benefits and payment for past wars, are about 60 cents on every tax dollar) and others, like Gormly, figure any tax money would be used for defense.

GORMLY LIVES A solitary, Thoreau-like existence on 70 acres of woodland next to Palisades Kepler State Park. On Tuesday, his blue jeans were patched and smudged and his flannel shirt under his sweatshirt was frayed. He sat smiling at the kitchen table, in a background of Mason jars and vitamins and a woodburning stove. He's living the good life of contemplation and self-sufficiency, but has sacrificed the comforts he would have accrued over the years as a regular 9-to-5 worker and taxpayer. He reminded me it's one thing to take part in street demonstrations, and it's another to refuse to register for the draft or pay taxes. There, you're acting alone. The government has it down, on paper. They come to get you. The IRS came for Jean Hagen two years after she withheld about $600, and explained, by letter, that she didn't want to contribute to the military. An Some resisters deduct a percentage IRS agent showed up at work at the

Emma Goldman Clinic, to collect. He did collect and he left.

And he left her intimidated. She still doesn't pay the federal tax on her monthly phone bill, which goes entirely to the military. Resistance experts say this is a fairly safe way to protest.

INCOME TAX resistance becomes less risky the more people are involved. The Conscience & Military Tax Campaign is collecting signatures of people pledging they will refuse payment after 100,000 people sign up. The campaign is also working to pass a bill that would let taxpayers pay for peace education instead of the military.

Henry David Thoreau had visions of resistance in numbers: "If a thousand men were not to pay their tax-bills this year, that would not be a violent and bloody measure, as it would to pay them, and enable the State to commit violence and shed innocent blood." If people had had the courage to listen and act then, resistance might not be necessary now.

So much for Athens

To the editor:

When I tuned in to the taped delay broadcast of Phyllis Schlafly addressing students and the public in the Union, at first I thought it could only have been an angry crowd shouting down the likes of Idi Amin for extolling the virtues of cannibalism or death camps or some such thing. However,I have come to find out that Schlafly wasn't talking about, much less recommending, anything of the

No, she was only talking about her stand on a variety of issues, a stand many people do not happen to agree with. Yet does that mean that she should not be allowed to speak without harassment? One can scarcely imagine Ralph Nader or Simon Wiesenthal both of whom have spoken at Iowa putting up with so much odious and illmannered behavior from so many.

What one can imagine is Schlafly telling her cohorts back wherever it is she came from if asked about the women's movement in Iowa. "Oh them," she'll say, "we don't have too much to worry about from them. They know how to stamp their feet, and scream, and boo, and hiss, but they'll never get anything done, at least not legislatively. They seem mostly unintelligent, inarticulate, rude, and uninformed. Rather sad, actually. I had expected much more from the 'Athens of the Midwest'. So much for spurious appellations, I suppose.'

What causes acid rain? Acid rain is caused by coal burning factories. In 1970, Congress passed the Clean Air Act to control pollution. The act is only for certain states. But don't they know pollution carries across states?

Envoy Habib cited as attack's target

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) - The bomb that killed at least 34 people - including a CIA analyst and seven other Americans was driven into the U.S. Embassy by a suicidal attacker trying to assassinate special Middle East envoy Philip Habib, a Lebanese news agency said Tuesday.

Seven more Americans were missing and presumed dead and officials warned the death toll could rise to 62.

The discovery of more victims in the wrecked embassy cafeteria raised the death toll to 34, including a CIA analyst, an embassy first secretary and five other Americans.

Lebanon's Central News Agency said Habib and other U.S. Middle East peace negotiators narrowly escaped death because a meeting delayed their arrival at the eight-story embassy

THE PRIVATE but well-connected news agency, quoting government sources, said Habib, his assistant Morris Draper and aides were scheduled to be at the embassy at the time of the 1 p.m. explosion.

The U.S. negotiators were delayed by a meeting with Lebanese President Amin Gemayel at the presidential palace in suburban Baabda, the agency said.

"The explosion aimed at the American envoy and the American delegation mediating between Lebanon and Israel proves that those behind it are not amateurs but belong to a group of specialists," the agency said.

A U.S. spokesman said he could not confirm the Lebanese agency report.

U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon, vowing that Habib's mission and the work of the embassy would continue despite the blast, said investigators believed a suicide attacker drove a van packed with explosives up to the front of the embassy.

"We have two competent eyewitness reports that a large van forced its way into the area you see behind you," Dillon told reporters as he stood in front of what was once the embassy portico.

"THERE WAS a report that the driver of the vehicle was killed," he said.

In Washington, State Department officials said the attacker was able to penetrate the heavily-guarded embassy grounds because he was willing to die in the

"You can't seal yourself off from the world," State Department spokesman Alan Romberg said. "You do what you can, but there are compromises in being a fortress and being an embassy. You have to function.

About 20 Lebanese embassy employees were missing and unaccounted for, he said. At least 105 Americans and Lebanese were injured in the explosion.

Immediately after the explosion, responsibility for it was claimed by the Islamic Struggle Organization, an extremist group linked by U.S. officials to the Iranian regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Wildcats serve a dual loss to lowa

By Mike Condon

MO

If Sandy Stap was worried about her No. 12 Northwestern tennis team having a letdown in Tuesday's meet with Iowa, her squad put her at ease - quickly.

The Wildcats used an unrelenting attack and superior talent to defeat the Hawkeyes, 9-0, in the Recreation Building. The win puts Northwestern at 19-4 on the season while Iowa drops to 5-14 for the spring.

Northwestern is looking towards a showdown with defending AIAW champion Indiana for the Big Ten title. The Wildcats will have even more incentive to drop the Hoosiers because Indiana Coach Lin Loring refused to play the Wildcats in favor of some tougher national competition.

INDIANA IS the only team that doesn't play a round-robin Big Ten schedule. Loring says the reason is so his squad can play other national powers. Big Ten coaches are trying to develop a strong tennis conference, but claim it's difficult because of Loring's lack of commitment to a round-robin

"They sort of think we're an upstart," Stap said of Indiana's refusal to play Northwestern. "Ohio State used to be the Big Ten power until Indiana took over and now I think (Loring) is a little afraid of us.

As for Tuesday's meet, Stap was pleased with the performance of her line-up and said her squad is rounding into shape for conference meet next in Chicago.

IOWA COACH Cathy Ballard called the Wildcats an "unforgiving" team. "I don't mean that they are nasty," she said. "In fact, they are one of the nicest teams to play. Even though they are much better than their opponents, they don't give off that cocky attitude.

"When I say unforgiving I mean they take advantage of every mistake. If you hit a short ball they are in on it and they have the pressure on you. They force you to think about every shot because they can put away any mistakes for winners."

The Hawks will next be in action on Saturday at Ohio State and Sunday at Bowling Green.

Boston can eliminate Atlanta from the playoffs by winning Game 2 of the best-of-three series Friday night in Atlanta. A third game would be played Sunday in Boston.

The Celtics, playing their first important game in nearly three months.

BOSTON (UPI) — Larry Bird scored trailed 85-81 when Bird re-entered the game with 6:38 to play after a short breather. Kevin McHale hit a turnaround banker and Bird fed Nate Archibald for a lay-up to tie the game 85-85 with 5:11 to play.

THE HAWKS PLAYED the Celtics even in the first 22 minutes, twice building leads of six points, the biggest cushion of the first half. The Celtics outscored the Hawks 8-4 over the final two minutes of the first half to take a 48-45 lead at halftime.

Boston used a 7-0 spurt early in the third quarter to take the first of two eight-point leads in the period, the biggest margin until the final nine seconds of the game. But Atlanta bat-tled back behind Wilkins and Davis and trailed 72-70 entering the final quarter.

There were six ties over the first eight minutes of the final period until Bird gave Boston the lead for good with two free throws with 3:23 to play.
Atlanta, fifth in the NBA in team defense and winner of 18 of its last 28, did not qualify for the playoffs until its final regular-season victory over Milwaukee.

Denver played at Phoenix in another first round game late Tuesday night.

Hawkeyes walk past error-plagued Luther

By Thomas W. Jargo Staff Writer

For Iowa baseball Coach Duane Banks, it was a chance to get a look at next year's Hawkeye squad. Seven freshmen received extensive and critical playing time Tuesday in Iowa's double-header sweep over Luther, 12-3 and 18-2, on the Iowa baseball diamond. In fact, all the second-and-third-string players saw considerable action while the regulars received the day off, following an emotional four-game series with Illinois last weekend.

"We needed something like this," Banks said. "The line-up that started the first game is the one we'll be using next year. We needed to get them (reserves) to play a lot and get some experience. They work as hard as anybody else, and we wanted to get them into game situations and be a part of the program. That's why we schedule games like these."

Iowa hammered out 14 hits in the opener, putting the game out of reach with a five-run sixth inning. Jeff Nielsen capped off a perfect three-forthree day with a two-run home run in the inning. He also scored four times to go with his three RBIs as the Hawks pounded a weak Luther pitching staff.

Slebos could not reveal the design of the other entries, but said he could describe some of the vehicles that were entered last year.

"Last year, one guy had a bicycle with patoons on both sides, and he just paddled his way down the river," he said, "Another one was a raft made out of milk cartons with floating devises." Slebos said that although some of the vehicles are well constructed, the steering usually leaves a lot to be desired. Last year, one vehicle swerved and side-swiped a car, grinding a 6to 8-foot scratch in the car, according

Students battle waves, wilderness as they earn extra credit outdoors

By Greg Anderson Special to The Daily Iowan

The UI Division of Recreational Services has expanded its summer outdoor wilderness trips this year, including an excursion to Michigan's Isle Royale and a backpacking and trout fishing trip to the Silway-Bitterroot Wilderness in Idaho and Montana.

In addition, Rec Services is offering its traditional Boundry Waters canoe trip to northern Minnesota.

Along with the opportunity to experience the wilderness, students can receive university credit for going on a trip. Participation in any of these trips gives the student one hour of credit in the physical education department.

REC SERVICES Program Coordinator Warren Slebos, who has been on over 50 of these trips in the past 20 years, will again lead the Boundry Waters excursion. This trip has always been booked in the past and the second trip for this year has already been filled. Slebos said there are plenty of openings for the first (May 15-24) and the third (June 15-24) trips.

Activities that are planned for the Boundry Waters trip include fishing, canoeing, and camping. The trip starts at the Nina-Moose River in Northern Minnesota and the group will canoe through a chain of lakes, camping at designated spots along the way.

According to Slebos, this trip, and the others, "are ideally suited for the fisherman." Slebos is extremely familiar with the area and feels this is a definite advantage when it comes to catching fish.

HE ALSO ADDED that fish will be their prime source of food, although they will bring about three days worth of freeze-dried food along.

Slebos will also be guiding the new Isle Royale trip this summer. The Isle Royale is located in Lake Superior near Michigan. Participants in this trip will be boated out to the island, where they will canoe and fish the inner lakes. Slebos pointed out that one of the unique things about this beautiful area is that different types of fish can be caught in each lake. He guaranteed that many walleye and trout would be caught. Another interesting tidbit about the Isle Royale is its balanced equal system. Moose and wolves are abundant in those surroundings and they live in a prey-preditor relationship. This trip will be taken only once, from June 5-13, and there are still plenty of openings available.

STEVE ERICKSON, a graduate assistant at the Recreational Services office, will be guiding the Silway-Bitterroot Wilderness trip. Erickson is very familiar with the area, living in Montana prior to coming to Iowa this year.

He worked for the forest service in the area, which he describes as "40 miles of pure wilderness," for the past four years. The area is thick with wildlife, including such animals as bear, deer, elk, fox and earlies

The Silway-Bitterroot has "dozens" of wilderness lakes and Erickson described the area as a "fly fishermans' paradise." He pointed out that trout will be the main fish of the region but that salmon, all the way from the Pacific Ocean, can be caught in certain parts of this area.

Along with fishing, backpacking will be a major part of the trip. Erickson said that participants will need to be in shape, but they won't need to be "advanced backpackers because the elevation will not be that great."

He expects to do about 42 miles of backpacking on the trip, which will be held from July 30-Aug 6, and still has many openings

Cost of the Silway-Bitterroot trip is $160, while the other two are $150. Transportation and necessary equipment are provided. The limit for participants on these trips is 10-12 people and they will be accepted on a first-come, first-serve basis. More information on these summer trips can be obtained at the Rec Services office, Room 111 in the Field House, or by calling 353-3494.

When I read last week of the tragic news that Wisconsin cross country and track Coach Dan McClimon had died in a plane crash, I was taken back to the Big Ten cross country meet at Finkbine last ovember.

Wisconsin had just overwhelmed the rest of the conference for their fifth title in six years. The exciting story, at least to the Badgers and their following, was that their nheralded fifth man - Scott Jenkins had fought Indiana's great Jim Spivey to the finish line, just missing the individual

A few minutes later, I approached the victorious team members, who were gathered near the clubhouse. It was a reserved gathering - typical of the personality of most distance runners.

SUDDENLY, FROM THE middle of the team emerged the slightly-built McClimon. He was enlivened. "You've got to find Jenkins a picture of himself crossing the finish line," were his first words to me. "Just send it to me...Can you believe it? He almost got Spivey.'

To me, this said a lot about the character of this man who had built a cross country dynasty. He cared for his runners. You don't become a runner for extrinsic rewards. Reporters didn't hound Jenkins after the race of his life. He would get very little publicity. McClimon knew this and felt it was important to give Jenkins something that would remind him of this

People who don't know much about the sport might think cross country is an individual sport — one runner trying to beat the others. But actually, to be successful in cross country is to run as a team.

IT MEANS LOGGING hundreds of practice miles together and running as close to each other in races. The 1982 Wisconsin team epitomized that team effort.

It presented the best example at the Tom Jones Invitational in Madison. In the 157runner field, eight Badgers finished before anyone else - an unheard of display. Iowa's Ted Wheeler said simply: "The kind of thing they're doing is the kind of thing we're trying to do.'

For every foreign athlete who has been here, there probably have been 15 that were sought after for one reason or another who couldn't make it over here. That is especially true with the emergence of cable television during the past decade. In some areas, people are paying per view for the privilege of viewing sports events, but the question for the next few years is - are all Americans willing to pay for sports on

Do they want to shell out $20 to see the Iowa-Iowa State football game or an NCAA playoff game? That question has yet to be answered but some people think so, including Lou Falcigno of Momentum Enterprises in New York

Falcigno, in an article in the March issue of Washington Journalism Review, thinks the future of pay television lies with sports. "Sports is what's going to make it happen," he said.

"THE THINGS PEOPLE send money on are the things they can bet on. You know that in 'La Boheme' she dies at the end, so I think you'd be hard-pressed to get people to watch opera and pay $20 or $15. But people would pay to see sports on TV. They will accept it that way."

Falcigno estimates that an event like the Super Bowl or the World Series could make the leagues as much as $20 million dollars.

Network executives aren't looking for it to happen soon, if ever. CBS' Neil Pilson says "the networks are secure for the plannable future. When it comes to investing money, I think I'd stay with the networks.'

He added that he wouldn't consider it conceivable for the networks to broadcast the regular season NFL games if they took away the big prize — the Super Bowl. It is estimated that the total NFL package will be worth $800 million annually by 1990.

And those figures represent a whole lot of Penzoil and Chevrolets. Don't look for the networks to give up the fight easily.

Video games

This seems to be a week where those people paying the cable bill will be pleased. If you aren't hooked up to the wire, it may well be worth your time to hit the books because this week's best are on cable.

CBS (KGAN-2) also owns some rights to NBA playoffs and will air a game at noon on Sunday. WHBF-4 (Cable-14) will show a delayed broadcast of an opening round game Friday at 10:30 p.m.

And what about hockey? It's on cable, too. The USA Network (Cable-23) owns rights and will take you down the road to the Stanley Cup tonight at 7 p.m. The network will also begin its Thursday night baseball action Thursday at 9:30 p.m. as California hosts Oakland

The NFL draft is scheduled for next Tuesday in New York and ESPN will broadcast the event live at 8:30 a.m. If you want to find out what is going to happen before it occurs, the network will air a preview to the draft at 7 p.m.

Smythe Division final against the Edmonton Oilers, Calgary Flames Coach Bob Johnson's enthusiasm for the series finally became contagious. For Game 5 Wednesday night, he's hoping it will reach epidemic

The Flames staved off elimination with a 6-5 victory over Edmonton in a determined effort on home ice Monday night, and Johnson realizes they're going to have to continue to play with a great deal of intensity to prolong their summer vacations.

"They've got a much better hockey club than we do, they skate better and we have to play emotionally just to keep up," said Johnson, who berated his players for lack of heart after a 10-2 loss to the Oilers Sunday night.

"IT TOOK US TO the 79th game to get second (in the Smythe) and then the emotion carried over gainst Vancouver. If we don't play with it, we can't

Defenseman Paul Reinhart, who has scored six goals for Calgary in the series thus far, agrees the players can't afford to give anything less than 100 percent if they want to push the best-of-seven series

"We had nothing to lose (Monday)," he said, "The way to look at it is that we play seven games and somewhere along the line you have to win four of them. The effort and pride was there. What we have to do is keep it going.'

Goaltender Don Edwards, who backstopped the Flames' victory, says he isn't ready to dust off his golf clubs just yet.

"MONDAY IT SNOWED a little bit," he said. "Maybe it'll grow into a snowball and then a blizzard. According to history it's tough to come back,

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Ralston Purina Co., the owner of the St. Louis Blues, said Tuesday the executive committee of its board has authorized the sale of the NHL team to a group that will move it to Canada. In a three-paragraph news release, the company said the committee authorized it to "consummate the sale" of the Blues to Coliseum Holdings Ltd. of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. Coliseum Holdings, the new name for the group formerly known as Batoni-Hunter Enterprises, has said it plans to move the Blues to Saskatoon for the

"The company also announced that it would proceed with steps to obtain authorization of the National Hockey League Board of Governors for the transfer of the franchise," the news release said.

THE NHL BOARD must approve the sale and transfer, and previously had indicated it favored the team remaining in St. Louis. The next regular meeting of the board is scheduled for June 20-21 in Quebec City, although a special meeting to consider the sale could be called earlier.

John P. Baird, senior vice president of Ralston, said members of the Saskatoon group "are convinced they can sell themselves to the board."

A group of local investors, headed by Mayor Vincent C. Schoemehl, had attempted to raise money to keep the team in St. Louis. But Baird said the group failed to make a firm offer.

"It is regrettable that no way was found to keep the team in St. Louis," said the Ralston news

AVING NEVER traveled to Canada, I've always pictured its cities as vast prairies where the highlights of the day are revealed by Scandanavian types as they discuss earmuff quality or fish lengths.

After listening to the Toronto-based band Martha and the Muffins' latest record, Danseparc, however, my image of Canadian culture has shifted. The rocky plain has turned into one big club, linked by the sparkle of glass and steel and moved by a population of electric, modish French-looking women and nervously lanky men.

Dansepare is the Muffins' fourth LP. the second released on an American label. Their first, Metro Music, was full of the punch and promise that magnetic new bands are made of, while This Is the Ice Age, their second, played with ambience and a sort of dreamy energy in the grooves.

Trance and Dance, their third endeavor, fell apart simply because the band could not be 100 percent pop. The move to achieve marketability was bland, repetitious and far from

But with Danseparc, the Muffins have regained their best sound with an intelligence sure enough to throw backbacon into the category of brain

THE STUDIO is an extension of a fine band for M & M. Too many groups have yet to learn that you can't make an Armani suit out of a Hawkeye jacket, as they try to cover up deficiencies in material and ability with excessive knob-twiddling.

But on Danseparc the studio is a playground: Guitars are inverted and 'treated" to become the percussive tools they are in Talking Heads' music. Vocals are given new depth with processing, while conflicting musical genres and note structures are balanced with the band's admirable self-production ability. Lyrically, the Muffins may be our continent's keenest band. They dissect institutions not in an attempt to be tritely insubordinate but so the listener can see the inner workings of such universal fixtures as the church, the ofThe Muffins have regained their best sound with an intelligence sure enough to throw backbacon into the category of brain food.

fice, the danceclub and the bedroom.

There are only hints as to how vocalists Mark Gane and Martha Johnson actually feel about the subject matter. The two masquerade behind the roles they play, sometimes torn by the quickness and pain of societal paradoxes and at other times perfectly at ease in the eye of the storm.

AS INSTITUTIONS become progressively more social, they turn all the more frightening for M & M. Clubland is the void that fills the gap between desktop veneer and linen pattern. It is amid the flash of lights and the flow of alcohol that we tend to lose our modern sense of ethics for something as primal as the subsonic beat of the music.

On Danseparc's title cut, Johnson loses the present for a more exciting tomorrow. The synthesizer breeze (Martha's favorite way to tease you into a song) is chopped by Nick Kent's random punch drum machine, Jocelyne Lanois' independent bass spectrum and Gane's serrated guitar edge. The night and the club are exits from the routine: "Into the thick, into the night/Into your arms in the failing

'Several Styles of Blonde Girls Dancing" tells another more basic story in the form of a pick-and-choose, win-notlose, look-back-feeling-sleazy-and-lost trilogy. Gane is the nervous, hot and bothered danceclubber, searching for an avenue to release his tension, his frustration and himself. "I respect you, I inspect you," he assures his prey as he fumbles for any kill; any woman. His venture is highlighted by nearly subliminal chanting and a heavy, treatment-charged guitar lick.

HIS MOVE MADE, Gane and his mate (for that night) leave one dance retrieve me, you reprieve me," he adds, telling himself that he "should know better." The following morning he chastises himself, "I calculate the buildings' change and there I go again/Emerging from the underground not knowing where I am/My living all these filthy dreams is breaking all the rules/The music that we danced to wasn't anything like this."

"What People Do For Fun" knocks, once again, the one-nighter and the club (are they synonymous in the Muffins' book?) and follows our childhood games into the "adult" magnet of perfume, the choreography of our movements - "I am using you, am I amusing you?" sings Johnson - and right down to the post-act cigarette.

"Obedience" is a quick and jerky tune lead by the arrogant-clerk tone of Johnson. The superior-subordinate role follows from the queue to the "right" way to behave in all walks of life: "It's much too fun, they rule/It's much too much to handle./They close their eyes, turn off the light/The naked truth could cause a scandal.

"WALKING INTO WALLS" rises above the clubs and into the fourwalled closeness of urban living. The hectic pace builds alongside the punches thrown by Ron Allen's sax solos. During the bridges, soap-opera quotes are linked together in a clever and kinky sort of way, high-rise claptrap at its best. 'Sins of Children' deals with the lifelong implications of rigid faiths. 'Down on bended knees words are whispered/Confessing sins they must invent/ Harmless fantasies, penance they must pay/And their souls must all be saved." This is a slower song, linked together with the lazy slink of bongos, the intermix of Gregorian chants and the unpleasantly rigid fuzz-buzz of a rhythm synthesizer.

The title cut of Danceparc has been released on a 12-inch dance-single with boosted bass and heavy drum drama: it's perhaps a nice way for the reader to test the scope of the album as a whole.

But this is not a pop album. Pop never delves so deeply into the real dramas constantly evolving around us that it can't sell. There is no beating around the bush on Danseparc, but rather a beaty dive into a bush of social

This ink and acrylic on paper, titled Open Edge Series, is one of Ulfert Wilke's works on exhibit at the UI Museum of Art. The works displayed give a biographical account of the route Wilke has taken in his own creative exploration. The show includes works from 1927 to the present. The museum has organized more than 100 of his works for the show Ulfert Wilke: A Retrospective Exhibition, which will continue through June 12.

RETROSPECTIVE art exhibit, aside from the obvious trait of directing the viewer's mind to one artist. satisfies art fans who enjoy exploring a personality in-depth. Such an exhibit exposes the artist in the same way that a biography does, except that the events depicted are creative moments revealed through the medium of art forms and techniques

In the extensive retrospective (over 100 works) that now hangs in the UI Museum of Art, Ulfert Wilke's works give a biographical account of the route he has taken in his own creative exploration. The show covers works from 1927 to the present, and the changes it presents - from realism to abstraction to calligraphic designs to the recent collages - indicate that Wilke not only noted various movements in art along the way but that he incorporated them and made his own unique responses to their impulses.

And in the case of the calligraphy, his works reveal a singularity of style marked by influences from areas as diverse as medieval Europe and Japanese writing.

The museum has organized the several canvases according to some plan other than chronology, with a resulting effect like flashbacks in the movies. Though in some cases that might prove successful, in this exhibit the sense of one form growing out of another gets muddled as the viewer leaps back and forth through several

SOME OF THE EARLY pictures. brightly colored abstractions in which daubs of paint contend together on the canvas, seem far removed from the later works. During one period in 1964, for example, the artist painted some large canvases with emphasis on the spaces seen through conglomerations of single-hued circles. The shift from the earlier multicolored abstractions have followed more logically if the works themselves more nearly led from one to another.

Throughout the exhibit, however, the fascination with the appearance of letters, numbers and symbol shapes turns up in many unusual variations. Two 1960 views of a balcony focus on the patterns in the iron railings, and a painting of a group of three trucks along with a delightful rear view of two "Street Sweepers" concentrate on the brilliance and curve of the signs. A late 1950s series of calligraphic pieces, "Music to be Seen," represents the artist's early work with forms of writing. Done in ink on paper, the compositions impart a rhythmic sense of design whether seen as forms from a distance or in detail up close.

THE LARGE PIECES of the 1970s may embody the most familiar aspects of the artist's style (Hancher Auditorium has displayed the dramatic "Red Was the Beginning"). In some of them Wilke enlarges the calligraphic forms until they become bulky and almost unrecognizable. One acrylic, "Pentimenti," however, is a linear composition of black on white that makes use of narrow horizontal lines to lend a grace and freshness not always apparent in the weightier pieces.

Color as a background for the calligraphic shapes enlivens another group of smaller paper works. In "Overall Blue," one variation in the group, the black line symbols undulate in the deep blue ground. And in a set of paper works from "Series Without Words," the bold calligraphs vie with textured papers from France, Germany and Japan.

In the recent Viking series, Wilke returns to the multicolored pallette using paper collage and watercolor to make Matisselike works that in their seeming simplicity include elements from many of his earlier periods.

Ulfert Wilke: A Retrospective Exhibition will continue through June 12.

Did Chuckie Baby pave Dave's way?

By Jeffrey Miller First in a two-part series.

VEN WITH ALL THE stupid things the network has done over the past five years, NBC has at least managed to do two things right. First, they gave comedian David

Letterman his own show and told him to do with it what he wanted. Second, when they found that what he wanted wasn't what viewers at 10 a.m. wanted, they moved him to the much more amenable time slot following Johnny Carson's "Tonight" show. 'Late Night with David Letterman"

(11:30 p.m., KWWL-7) started slowly and unsurely. Dave had obviously toned down his act after the cancellation of his Emmy-winning daytime show, and he too timidly felt his way through the demographic shift he

But in the year-plus that "Late Night" has been on, Dave has regained his confidence, and the show has regained its quirky, we'll-try-anything sense of humor. With "SCTV" in decline, "Late Night" is, at least on its good nights, the funniest, most original program on TV right now.

IN REVIEWING "Late Night" the way one normally reviews TV shows, however, all I can come up with are negatives. Dave's opening monologues are almost always embarrassingly bad; his skits and forays into the audience or out onto the street are iffy at best and dreadful at worst; his interviewing is little more than letting people talk about what they want to (he's always ill-prepared).

So the success of "Late Night" would appear to be much more a matter of style than it is of substance, of form and spirit over content. But that greatly oversimplifies Letterman's achievement. "Late Night" is one of those rare cases in which style is substance and form is content.

To examine this further without getting terribly pedantic, let's do what Dave would do. Let's climb in the Carl Sagan Memorial Ship of Television and travel back through the billions and billions of shows that occupy the infinite realms of TV history to "The Gong Show" - the place where the evolution of this amazing program

TV has, since the 1960s, tried to address itself on its own terms. At first, this self-referencing came as spoofs and parodies on variety shows - Carol Burnett's "As the Stomach Turns," for instance - and as knowing winks and nudges on sitcoms — characters from "Peter Gunn" and "Bewitched" showing up in Bedrock with "The Flintstones"; Alan "Skipper" Hale leaving a six-episode guest shot on "The Wild Wild West" by telling Robert Conrad he was taking a vacation on a desert island.

As the medium continued to grow, that self-referencing took on two forms: the repetition of old plots, characters and situations that has come to define - and destroy - most prime-time TV, and the development of shows that took the form of television (quick camera movement, in-timate framing, the idea of genre conventions rather than those conventions themselves) and made something new

"SCTV," which used to be produced by current "Late Night" producer Barry Sand, at its best was able to accomplish this regularly; "Saturday Night Live" more occasionally could do the same.

BUT THE FIRST show to make TV itself the sum and substance of its existence was the reviled, feared and

Television

loathed "The Gong Show."

For years, critics had assailed "Gong Show" creator/host Chuck Barris for the alleged lack of respect he displayed toward the TV audience with shows like "The Dating Game," "The Newlywed Game" and "Three's a Crowd.

What was overlooked in all this genteel handwringing was the fact that it wasn't so much the audience Barris didn't respect but the arbitrary conventions of the medium he had to work

Little more than a sleazy hustler at heart, Barris had little use for the hypocritical morality of post-payola game shows, much less the fake social consciousness of prime time. Television was a way to make a buck, pure and simple, and Barris, alone producers, was willing to take TV on at its basest level.

With "The Gong Show," Barris created the ultimate attack on what TV was supposed to do by playing with what it did do. Though the idea of a cheap talent show featuring ridiculous performers was radical enough to begin with, it became downright revolutionary as the series

HOST BARRIS became "Chuckie Baby," a perpetually stoned-acting (and you couldn't convince most viewers that it was an act) party animal who climbed on his podium with lampshade-sized hats on his head. Regular celebrity judges Jaye P. Morgan and Jamie Farr, who barely had more talent than most of the bimbos they had to score, became "Juicy" and "Long of Nose," the party host's amiable friends and assistants.

Barris then introduced new regular "characters" - the Unknown Comic, Gene Gene the Dancing Machine, singer Matt Idol, musician Larry Spencer - who, along with the contestants, joined the fun. And, at the show's finest, the studio audience was dragged, throwing balloons and dancing in the aisles, into the melee.

Mainstream critics, of course, had about as much use for this lunacy as they did for botulism - and, even-tually, NBC did as well. When "The Gong Show" disappeared in 1978, both groups screamed a cheer of relief.

But they ignored — or, perhaps, they were too aware of - the singular form of democracy Barris had brought to the tube: Anybody could be a star, and everybody could come to the party.

"THE GONG SHOW" became, in the end, much less a putdown of goony far-mers who yodeled than a TV show about the tightness of the relationship between TV and its audience. It never would have worked without the show's fast cameras and ridiculous visual effects on radio, and the failure of The Gong Show Movie proved its inapplicability to the big screen.

In two years, Barris ripped out the underpinnings from any understanding of television that assumed the dominance of the medium over its viewers. And with no genre was that understanding more essential than the talk show, given its reliance on "celebrities" who knew little more in most cases and a good deal less in many than those who were watching, but who were invested with authority by the mere fact that they were there.

That brings our Ship of Television back to the present and back to David Letterman. Tomorrow: Why Chuck was more pain than humans should be allowed to endure, while Dave is more fun than humans should be allowed to

Pulitzer poet opens festival for writers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) - Gwendolyn Brooks, first black to win the Pulitzer Prize for literature, opened a writers conference address with congratulations for Alice Walker, whose award was announced Monday for her novel, The Color Purple.

"I feel that she and a number of others should have gotten one between now and 1950. Think of that, 33 years later and we have another black woman Pulitzer Prize winner.' said Brooks, who received the 1950 award for her book of poetry, Annie Allen.
"I hope that I'll be able to write some poems that are relevant to blacks," Brooks said of her own still-evolving style.

The materials of life are the proper materials of poetry," she told those assembled for the University of Missouri's Kansas City Spring Writers Festival.

"Shakespeare wrote" for another culture. one highly unified and expressively nondemocratic. While Americans tend to reject that sort of absolute authority, there is a lot of backward looking for European forms. A Shakespeare play ... gives a sense of investment in the privilege of kings and queens and nobility." - Paul ttis, director of the UI production of Measure for Measure.

OWANS HAD ample opportunity for an appreciation of culture past present during the recent Iowa Shakespeare Festival — the first of a promised annual event. Kings and nobles strutted with ceremonial dignity and recklessly hacked at one another's armor with sword and axe during the memorable battle scenes of the University of Northern Iowa's Henry IV, Part I. And amateur performers waxed poetic, for the most part with surprising competence.

I admit to having had considerable doubts about a Shakespeare festival when it was officially announced. There is something pretentious about the festival concept, which implies a special competence and an ongoing close relationship between directors, performers, and the chosen subject.

Shakespeare is particularly challenging because so much in his plays is open to interpretation, and the world's best are constantly trying their hands at it. With so many Shakespearean productions available on film and stage, and with audiences more aware of what to expect, the less experienced may lay eggs of ostrich proportions.

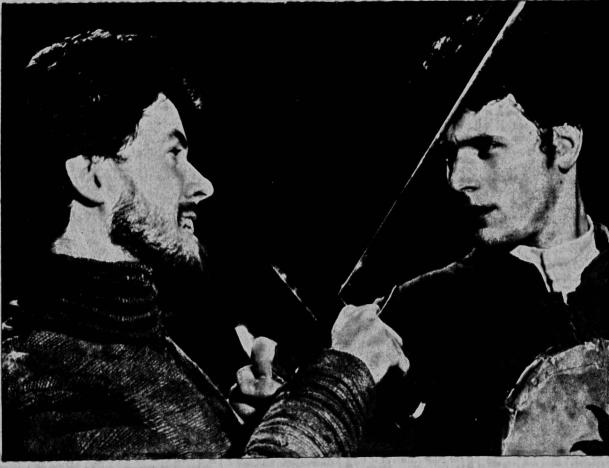

AS, FOR INSTANCE, Iowa State University's Macbeth did. The performers knew their lines, but the performance never came alive. It started with an actor dousing himself onstage with a bottle of "blood" - an unfortunate prop that was used throughout, achieving unwanted comic relief rather than any tragic symbolism. Another example of what went wrong with Macbeth occurred during a speech by Malcolm: "But there's no bottom, none,

In my voluptuousness. Your wives, your Your matrons and your maids, could not

The cistern of my lust ... " hands regrettably clasped together over his crotch. The performer did not Lucio's role mean anything by that pose - and that lack of connection between Shakespeare's words and what they meant typified the production.

The style of this production had a tendency to upstage the language that is the principal pleasure of Shakespeare ... there was too much "business" for the quality of darkness inherent in Measure. - Bonnie Inscho, graduate student in English.

The most daring, unconventional and controversial performance was the University of Iowa's production of Measure. This critic thought the modern Eastern European setting and sense of surrounding intrigue added a lot of vitality to the production and created a nice contrast to the traditional Elizabethan-period approaches being taken to the other

Others have complained that the background business was overdone and Malcolm spoke these lines with both distracting, or that too much liberty was taken in giving the Provost part of

But any play people take time to discuss later must have had considerable merit. It would be a shame if festival directors relied only on "safe" interpretations, which also often become stale performances.

Shakespeare doesn't have to be updated or rearranged to be interesting. Without question the best single production was UNI's Henry IV. The acting was terrific, as might have been expected by the presence of professionals Geoffrey Carlisle and Steve Shaffer as Falstaff and the King.

ALTHOUGH FALSTAFF is perhaps the most entertaining of any of Shakespeare's characters, Russell Anderson's Prince Hal refused to be overshadowed by Carlisle, a remarkable feat; top notch performances were also turned in by Steve Young as Hotspur, Leo Bertelsen as Owen Glendower, Greg Schrader as Douglas, and Lisa Paulsen as an all male cast one year, and an all female cast the next. - Robin Fawcett, "Mistress Overdone" in Measure.

There are still problems that must be overcome for the Iowa Shakespeare Festival to become a complete success. Because young boys took female parts on the Elizabethan stage, Shakespeare wrote far fewer roles for women than for men - and theater departments will need to compensate their actresses somehow.

The stage, which is a permanent design for the festival, created some awkward single file exits and entrances and difficulties with moving props which will need solution. And better coordination is also needed between the theater, art, and music departments to create a more complete festival. But the festival seems headed for success.

Poets hold 'Shoot-out at the lambic Corral'

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (UPI) - The Poetry Society of Tennessee, better known for rhymes than rowdiness, hired armed guards to maintain order

Letter-writing campaigns were waged for Dr. Wanda Rider, a high school English teacher seeking to move from the vice president's post to the presidency, and her opponent, Ken Beaudoin, an elderly blind poet.

The vice president alleged threats received during the campaign forced the special security measures for the April 2 election at the public library.

"WHEN WE GOT to the meeting. there were two security guards there in full uniform with large pistols on their hips and bullets in their belts," Hatchet said. "One or two of our little old ladies became so alarmed they turned around and left the meeting." Rider said the guards were there to maintain order.

"It was thought to be a precaution to have the guards," she said. "We wanted the meeting conducted in a quiet, peaceful, poetic manner.

She said the guards were hired by outgoing president Ken Thomas, a move Hatchet termed silly because the society's membership is mostly elderly and not prone to violence

"I mean, this is a poetry society," he said. "The most violent thing we could do would be to throw our teeth at each

Theater

The Classics Department's production of Plautus' Amphityron, or the Birth of Hercules continues at 8 tonight in Macbride Auditorium. The play is free and open to the public.

Two events are submitted for your

First, the Crow's Nest is presenting Reggaefest '83, featuring the Killer Bees, the group that opened for Bowwowwow earlier this year and knocked the ganja out of the audience, and the Trinidad Exotic Steel Band, which plays calypso as well as reggae on their steel percussion instruments and is the best in the world at it. Jamaican DJ John T (no relation to Mr., we assume) dubs the whole affair.

• If old style swing and big band is more your style, however, then pop into Gabe's to catch the moonlight serenades of the award-winning Johnson County Landmark Band as Europe. The swingin' and swayin' starts at about 9 p.m.

At the Bijou

When you're part of a lost generation, how can you avoid being a loser? That's the question faced by the characters in John Huston's The Asphalt Jungle. A bunch of hustlers try to pull off a heist and find that though it's hard to be a saint in the city, it's even harder to be a sinner. Huston's stylish urban filming makes the depressing story all the more so, and the cast, featuring Sterling Hayden, Louis Calhern and Jean Hagen is perfect. 6:45 p.m.

'Dancing Bear' a powerful story

of a novel PI By James Kaufmann

Special to The Daily Iowan Dancing Bear by James Crumley. Random House, 1983, 228 pp.

THEN JAMES CRUMLEY'S Milo Milodragovitch first appeared in print, in The Wrong Case (1976), it was obvious that here was a different sort of private eye, a private eye who worked the relatively wide-open and distinctly western spaces of Meriwether, Mo., who knew the virtues of personal vice and whose "code" was nearly indecipherable. Milodragovitch has gone off whiskey for the most part, but he's gotten into peppermint Schnapps and cocaine. He now has five ex-wives; he's no longer a western songs; he's still five years away from his In Dancing Bear, he gets a case that seems to be a simple tail job at first. Sarah Weddington happens to have been one of Milo's father's many former lovers, and she wants Milo to satisfy her curiosity about a couple she's been spying on.

IF THIS SOUNDS odd to you, it sounds odd to Milo

as well, especially when the case explodes - private eye but an employee of Haliburton Security;

his social life reads like any number of country-and-

literally: The car of the man he's been tailing has a bomb in it, and under the seat of Milo's rented car is From these simple beginnings, the case becomes hyperkinetic, leading Milo to the Benniwah Indian Reservation, to Seattle, on a paper chase through dummy corporations, into abrupt but erotic onenight stands, through snowstorms, away from sophisticated four-car tails, into poaching game and,

The heavy and confusing action takes its toll on Milo. He periodically goes on binges, one of which leads him out of the case for three days and ends as he vomits blood in a nowhere bar, "The world," Milo says, "was simply too crazy for me to handle sober." But in spite of - or, perhaps, because of - his excesses, he does finally puzzle out the case.

Dancing Bear is a novel of unrelenting visceral power. Crumley's prose is lyrical in the manner of

Horace McCoy and crazy like Michael Herr's

Dispatches, while his violence recalls the Dashiell

finally, into serious environmental wrongdoing.

Hammett of Red Harvest. But these prose analogies exist only to plot Crumley's work on a literary map. His themes are as American and contemporary as can be, and he explores the American west and its mythology as well

Dancing Bear is simply a terrific book, a novel of incomparably degenerate grace and relentless vitality. It's the real thing.

THANKS I THINK YOU

HAVE GREAT TASTE, TOO!

To these it's comfort from being alone
We've groups from every school
And some proficient just with tools
It's nice to know your neighbors's near,
So it you call, he will hear,
Or it you happen to need a friend,
The way's been paved,
an ear to bend
