Thatcher calls early elections

LONDON - Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher Monday called national elections for June 9, a year before her term ends, hoping to triumph with her popularity from the Falklands war and Britain's improved

The election campaign will be just under four weeks, giving the opposition Labor Party and the Social Democratic-Liberal alliance little time to wipe out the commanding lead of Thatcher's Conservative Party, which now stands at between 8 and 13 points in opinion

Stern files fraud charges

BONN, West Germany - Stern magazine, publisher of the forged Hitler diaries for which it paid $4.1 million, filed fraud charges Monday against Gerd Heidemann, 51, the reporter who claimed he found the documents.

Stern said when Heinemann was pressed to identify the person who gave him the diaries purporting to be the journals of Adolf Hitler, he named a man who "most probably does not exist." But there was no suggestion Heidemann forged the documents himself.

Galileo a 'victim of errors'

VATICAN CITY - Pope John Paul II, in an indication the Vatican may overturn the 1633 condemnation of Galileo, said Monday the astronomer who held that the Earth revolved around the sun was the victim of "regrettable" errors and misunderstandings by the church.

"We certainly recognize that he suffered from departments of the church," the pope told 200 scientists, referring to the Vatican's heresy condemnation and sentencing of Galileo Galilei for his theory that the Earth was not the center of the universe as had been believed.

EPA to pay for relocations

PHOENIX, Ariz. - The residents of a trailer park built atop a mound of graded asbestos tailings should be relocated with Environmental Protection Agency Superfund money, an EPA consultant recommended Monday

In a report prepared for the EPA, a national engineering firm recommended relocating the 130 residents at the Globe, Ariz., park instead of removing the contaminated soil or covering it with a deep layer of clean soil. The report concluded permanent relocation would be cheaper, easier and safer than the two alterntives.

Fireworks explosion kills 21

SANTA CRUZ TLAPACOYA, Mexico - A town festival with fireworks and ferris wheel turned into a nightmare when a stray flare ignited an explosion of aerial rockets, demolishing a church and killing at least 21 people inside, officials said Monday.

Jaime Traats, Red Cross director in nearby Chalco, said the number of dead would probably increase because so many people were seriously burned. He said 153 people had been treated for injuries. They were injured when about 35 pounds of aerial rockets stored in the backroom of the church were ignited by a stray flare from a fireworks display and blew out three walls of the church in Santa Cruz Tlapacova.

Trade law revisions wanted

WASHINGTON - House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., saving it is time to "quit complaining and start rebuilding," Monday called for a revision of U.S. trade laws. Rostenkowksi, whose committee has primary jurisdiction over trade issues in the House, presented a major speech on the subject to the Mid-America Committee in his hometown of Chicago.

Johnson County Magistrate Leon Spies said because justice is the aim in the courtroom, no person involved in a small claims dispute without attorney representation is disadvantaged. But he did qualify that an attorney's help is an asset in more complex cases.

Johnson County Magistrate Nancy A. Baumgartner said the small claims court, in existence since 1973, was designed so people wouldn't need an attorney. This fosters a more relaxed environment, she said. THE JOHNSON County Small

In the small claims court, where an average of six cases per day and 200 cases per month are filed, it's possible that many have no merit, because anyone may sue for anything, Frantz said. # Report: Central building is in reusable condition

By Susan E. Fisher

The Central Junior High School building, to be closed at the end of this school year, should be kept in use, an architect's report commissioned by the Iowa City School Board states.

The board will examine a feasibility study conducted by Wehner, Nowysz, Pattschull and Pfiffner at a meeting at 7:30 tonight at the board office, 509 S.

In April, the board commissioned the study to examine alternative uses of the 80-year-old junior high. The closing was decided as part of districtwide reorganizational plans made because of declining enrollment.

The report stated the three buildings comprising the junior high have adequate space to house the school system's administrative, special education and physical plant facilities.

Ul Campus Security recruits

students for 'people business'

By Sarah Stewart

UI faculty members are still complaining about low salaries and overcrowded conditions, but they are not as vocal with their complaints as they have en in previous years.

David Cater, president of the American Association of University Professors, summed up the prevailing attitude by saying, "A lot of people are of the opinion that it's hopeless. After all, if the highway patrol doesn't get a raise ...

Cater said this attitude, along with an increased trust in the state Board of Regents, has resulted in he faculty's being less vocal about such problems. "I think the regents have worked hard toward improving faculty salaries," he said.

HOWEVER, FACULTY have not always felt as onfident or trusting in the regents. In 1981, they pined together and formed opposition to what they considered unfair salary appropriations by the

Some of the most effective lobbying for the cause was done by the Organization for Faculty Action, an ad hoc group of faculty members which appealed to the Iowa Legislature for increased funds, called for higher salaries and helped push for a $14 million institutional vitality fund — which was never approved. The group has been defunct since 1982.

three years, faculty members say they are now past the "crisis" period and are satisfied with the job of the legislature, the regents and the administration.

John Harper, former treasurer of the OFA, feels the group was no longer necessary after the crisis period subsided. Now such problems are handled by a special committee of the UI's Faculty Senate.

"CERTAINLY THERE is a high level of ongoing dissatisfaction with the nature and level of salary compensation and problems brought on by high enrollment," Harper said, but "in problems of that sort I think you now find a willingness to cooperate with the administration," he said.

One of their practices this year has been to invite various state legislators to campus. Donald Heistad. former Faculty Senate President, said it has had positive results. "We felt that if the legislators knew us better and knew our needs better, we'd be better represented," he said.

Heistad said faculty tension was predictable at this time because of the current arguments over faculty dispute procedure, but, "I think in some ways morale isn't as bad this year because some gains have been made and there is a feeling we're more active."

EVEN SO, the general consensus of faculty members is one of dissatisfaction. Howard Laster, the UI's dean of Liberal Arts, said he feels faculty members have been slightly more vocal this year than in the past and that, "There are real problems associated with the extraordinary enrollment boom and the financial crunch," he said.

Governor signs bill; law school gets bonds

By Susan E. Fisher

After seven years of planning, the new UI College of Law building will become a reality.

Gov. Terry Branstad signed a bonding bill Monday providing $24.6 million for the construction of the law building. The approval of the UI facility is part of a $64 million bond package which will back major construction projects at each of the three state univer-

"It's the fulfillment of six years of dreaming and three years of political effort," William Hines, dean of the UI law school.

The present law school facility is "sorely inadequate and the library is extremely overcrow-ded," said Randall Bezanson, UI vice president for finance.

Although the new law school had been a top priority for the state Board of Regents for the last three years, several hurdles obstructed the effort to get financing for the new building, Bezanson said.

Despite optimism that backing of the bond package would be approved during the 1982 state legislative session, the bill was trapped in committee.

LAST YEAR'S disappointment made "us work all the harder." Bezanson said. But, he said, even as the efforts of UI officials and alumni mounted, the success of the project was never completely

The bill was approved by the Iowa Senate in March and by the House of Representatives in April.

Bezanson said low-increase rates for the bonds, the need to create employment opportunities and the lower cost of construction made the project more attractive this year.

Bids for the construction of the round five-story facility will be accepted in mid-June, Bezanson said. The law building, which will be located on a bluff south of Hillcrest Residence Hall, could be completed by early 1986

The new facility will be one of the most modern facilities in the country, according to Hines. In the building, the law college will be able to offer individual-oriented instruction and "state of the art" technology.

Now that the new building has moved beyond the planning stage, Hines said, "It makes putting up with the congestion of the old law school a little easier.'

City's strong-tasting water is necessary

By Karen Herzog

While the tap water that spouted from your faucet this morning may have tasted to some people like a witch's brew with a twist of chlorine, a UI Water Plant official said he can't remember a spring when it has tasted better.

And he's been around here for nearly 20 years.

"We were rather surprised this year," Alen Balgaard, a UI Water Plant operator, said. "We take what nature gives us."

Nature didn't dish out any toxic chemicals, so don't be alarmed. UI and Iowa City water plant officials say the liquid brew isn't hazardous to your health.

The disgusting taste is chlorine, and it is used to kill bacteria that is carried by the Iowa River, according to Balgaard.

THE BACTERIA count is usually higher during the spring because melting snow and high waters carry decomposed leaves and grass to the Iowa River. An increased amount of chlorine must be used to disintegrate bacteria before the water is drinkable.

"Every year is unique," Balgaard said. "We used less chlorine in the water this year than last year."

Nature was good to Iowa City last winter. The mild weather and late rains freshened up the water, Cleo Kron, Iowa City Water plant superintendent, said. And because there wasn't a lot of snow this year, there wasn't a lot of decomposed material floating in the river.

But a few farmers have caused added expenses for the water plant. While the chlorine content in the water was lower this year, the nitrate level was higher, Kron said.

THAT MEANS more farmers must have used fertilizer on fields last fall because there was an increase in nitrate run-off this year, he said.

Because the early part of last winter was mild and rainy, a lot of soil washed into the river before the ground froze, Kron said.

"Normally we get nitrates in the spring when farmers plant their crops."

The solution to this problem did not affect the taste or smell of drinking water, though, he said. Between December and April, water plant officials pumped water water plant officials pumped water from an underground stream to dilute the nitrates.

"The quality of the river with that in it is just as bad," Kron said. "At least we didn't have any seaweed or other materials lying around on the ground to get into the water."

Senate votes for lowa job package

DES MOINES (UPI) — The Senate Monday approved on a 31-17 vote a $22 million jobs package that supporters say will create employment for 9,000 Iowans.

The wide-ranging bill spans 10 different programs and includes public works jobs, a mortgage buy-down, highway bonding and even soil and energy conservation.

The measure contains almost every pet Democratic jobs proposal that has sprouted this session both in the House and Senate, a fact that prompted Republicans such as Sen. Edgar Holden, R-Davenport, to criticize the bill as a wasteful "grab bag."

Senate Majority Leader Lowell Junkins, D-Montrose, participated in floor debate for the first time this session by chiding the Republicans for their failure in coming up with an alternative.

The 28 Democrats picked up support from three Republicans to advance the bill to the House, where Junkins predicts only minor changes will be made.

HE POINTED out to the Republicans that the measure contains several of the ideas proposed by Gov. Terry Branstad in his inaugural address, including a high-technology commission, conservation loans and weatherization programs for state buildings. The plan also contains some provisions

Conservatives publish newspaper

Citing the need "for an alternative voice" at the UI, a group of selfproclaimed "vibrant young conservatives" ave started publishing a newspaper called The Hawkeve Review.

The first issue of the newspaper came out last Friday, and Jeffrey Renander, editor of the Review, said thus far response to the newspaper "has been favorable

"We have received a lot of compliments," Renander said. "People have really liked our layout and design for the paper as well as the variety of articles

Kevin Frei, a contributor to the newspaper, agreed that the first issue was a success. "I think this is definitely the beginning of a new conservative voice on campus that hasn't been represented by the DI or any other press.

An editorial appearing in the first issue of the newspaper calls The Daily Iowan "a mish-mash of slanted and biased writing indicative of a tired and stale liberalism " and promises the Review will contain "arlocal, state and national affairs."

RENANDER DEFENDED the editorial, saying that the DI does a poor job of covering conservative events and opinions at the UI.

"It seems as though the DI wants to ignore conservative events unless there is a large protest planned," Renander said. "Furthermore, I feel their editorial pos-tion is disgustingly predictable."

Renander said he believes it is important that there is "a educational journal capable of alternative analysis of what is going on." But not all reaction to the new publication has been postive.

Eric Pauls, a member of the student political group New Wave, criticized the newspaper for "using isolation against certain individuals" in its criticisms.

Pauls also was upset by an article that appeared in the first issue dealing with allegations that "heterosexuals were hanging out in a gay bar ogling the clientele.'

Later in the article the name of the bar is ambiguously mentioned and Pauls said, "Putting the name of the bar in the article

RENANDER DENIED the article acted as an invitation and said it "was only a commentary." Renander said he is glad to see the

However, the Student Senate awarded STAF only $400, which the group later refused to accept, and until recently plans for the newspaper had been put on hold.

Renander said the newspaper finally found life "independently" after receiving a grant for $865 from the Institute of Educational Affairs and using "money out of our own pockets."

Renander said he is uncertain how many issues the paper will publish during the semester, but "beginning next fall we hope

Bill makes tampering a federal crime

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The House and Senate, approving almost identical measures in swift succession Monday, voted to make tampering with food and drugs a federal crime with penalties up to life in prison.

The bill was prompted by the deaths last fall of seven people in Chicago who took Tylenol poisoned with cyanide. No one has been charged in the case, which prompted several copycat poisonings and attempted poisonings in the next few months.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said the Tylenol deaths and the resulting copycat crimes around the country "have seriously undermined public confidence in the safety of consumer products and have sent chills through respected manufacturers all over the WASHINGTON (UPI) - The chairman of a House health panel accused the Reagan administration Monday of neglecting the "most significant epidemic since polio" a deadly disease that primarily strikes homosexual males. Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., told a congressional hearing the administration has spent a woefully inadequate amount of money to combat the mysterious illness, Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, Waxman specifically called for increased

Waxman is chief sponsor of a bill to establish a $40 million contingency fund for

Dr. Edward Brandt, an assistant secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, opposed the legislation, saying his agency already has the mechanism to obtain emergency funds.

"WE ARE STRONGLY committed to a vigorous research program on AIDS and other diseases that create public health emergencies, and to a quick direct response in all other ways to the public health," he said.

"While we disagree with the specific technical mechanism proposed in this bill, we welcome the subcommittee's attention to this question," he said.

Brandt defended the administration's record on AIDS, noting that overall the government spent more than $14 million last year to combat the illness.

Brandt called AIDS "a complex problem" but said, "there is no doubt we will solve the problem."

Said Waxman, "Your words are one of resolve. But the action of the administration is one of neglect."

New voice on campus

It's called The Hawkeye Review — a newspaper produced by "a group of vibrant young conservatives at the UI who deeply feel the need for an alternative voice on campus." Several of its editors and contributors are already familar names, as members of Students for Traditional American Freedoms, the Student Reform Party and other conservative causes.

We at The Daily Iowan welcome the arrival of this new journal. We are impressed by its professional appearance and the care that has gone into its production. And more important, we welcome the expression of all viewpoints. Although our editorial page is open to all opinions — many of the journal's writers have written for the page, and others have declined offers to contribute — the DI's editorial board itself takes a liberal stand on most issues. So a voice of opposition may well be needed.

The Review is one of more than 30 similar newspapers that have sprung up all over the country, ranging from the fairly sober and balanced Morningside Review at Columbia University to The Dartmouth Review, which was so blatantly racist that conservative Republican Jack Kemp felt obliged to withdraw from its advisory board.

It will be interesting to watch the direction chosen by The Hawkeye Review's editors. The first issue contains some substantive pieces, such as Jeffrey Renander and Michael Waller's discussion of the United States Student Association, and Steven E. Landsburg's analysis of affirmative action policies.

But the editors also choose to hide behind anonymity in a "continuing struggle" section that contains such "humor" as a report on an Iowa City gay bar: "It's too bad a Mary Kay Cosmetics girl hasn't heard of this establishment. She could make a fortune selling to the guys there alone." To call this satire would be a misuse of the language; to call it sophomoric would be

This childish tone is carried through in Renander's editorial, which admirably pledges to offer "articulate and reasoned commentary," but in its second sentence wittily calls the DI "The Daily Idiot or The Daily Worker." Maybe the editors will develop a sense of the difference between cheap name-calling and "reasoned commentary" - we certainly hope so.

The Review's editors claim to represent "American freedoms and values," and we are always a little suspicious of any group that claims to have a monopoly on those. But one American (though not exclusively American) tradition we value is tolerance and free speech. As John Milton wrote nearly 350 years ago, "where there is much desire to learn, there of necessity will be much arguing, much writing, many opinions."

So we welcome this new voice, however much we may disagree with what it says. There's room for us all, and there's no need to be anything but "reasoned and articulate." Those at The Hawkeye Review might well pay heed to their own contributor. Dartmouth Review editor Dinesh D'Souza, who in light of his experiences, advised that the conservative newspaper's "scalpel must not only be sharp, it must also be wielded with care.'

Morality of arms jobs

In World War II the men and women who staved home to work in the factories, turning out tanks, submarines, planes and ammunition, could be proud of their contribution to the war effort. They knew that their work, like the war itself, was just and necessary.

The men and women who now work in similar factories, turning out nuclear weapons and machines to carry and deliver those weapons, have no such comforting assurance. In fact, with the anti-nuclear movement and the recent passage of a pastoral letter by U.S. Roman Catholic bishops, condemning nuclear weapons and suggesting that such defense workers may want to quit their jobs, many must now consider whether the work they do to support themselves and their families is immoral.

The Norwich Diocese in Connecticut (Trident submarines are made in Groton) has made plans to help, financially and with counseling, those who do feel called to quit. And a bishop in Texas has for about a year now counseled his flock who build nuclear weapons to consider quitting their jobs. The questioning of the morality of nuclear weapons work is undoubtedly one consequence the Reagan administration feared when it lobbied the bishops to reject or weaken the pastoral letter.

Such workers are right to question the morality of their work. They are also right to be afraid to quit a job, any job, in today's economy. They should consider that such work is immoral. There is no way for nuclear war to be just. The very things man seeks to defend by war - life (for example the Jews in World War II), liberty, property — would in a nuclear war be destroyed. Thus a nuclear war would destroy what it seeks to save. It cannot be moral to create the means for waging a war that would destroy all humanity and everything we value.

But if nuclear weapons workers are asked to resign from such work, they will be acting for those who are not in a position to act, and they should be supported. Funds should be established to support them until they find other work. Employers who share their concern about nuclear war should offer such workers employment. If they act for others, others should bear the cost of their action.

Cyclists and drivers can co-exist

By Gregory Kovaciny

HIS IS IN response to Tim Copeland's letter (DI, March 29) and Diane B. Cornwall's reply (DI, April 12), though it is of concern to everyone who uses our traffic system.

I can understand Copeland's frustration and anger at bicyclists who disregard intersection signals and the like. They seem to be saying that bicycles as vehicles should not be taken seriously, though they are using them as a serious means of transportation.

"Rude" is not the correct word. And I can understand Cornwall's frustration in being grouped with bicyclists who disregard vehicle laws. when she obeys these laws (as do,I would hope, all our 600 plus bicycle club members, of which she is one). Copeland seems to feel the errant bicyclists he mentions constitute the entire class of bicyclists.

As a cyclist who rides over 300 days each year - rain, snow, or sunshine, either to work or for recreation - I have a pretty fair grasp of how to ride effectively and legally in virtually any kind of traffic. I would like to restate my organization's position, offer a few additional thoughts and perhaps correct a few errors in Copeland's perception of the relationship between bicyclists and motor vehicles.

BICYCLISTS OF Iowa City has, since its incorporation in 1976, consistently supported the following of traffic regulations by bicyclists, and has requested the due respect of motor vehicle drivers regarding our legitimate road needs. We have also sought to discuss with the appropriate officials local ordinances and laws that we feel are inconsistent with the safe operation of the vehicle traffic system. BIC was instrumental in obtaining legal (and logical) access for bicycles in the westbound transit interchange on Washington and Clinton Streets.

We have supported the regular warning and ticketing of those bicyclists flagrantly violating traffic laws. These people, many of whom are adults, pose threats to others and themselves by their ineffective, inconsiderate and dangerous riding ing on bicycle for bicycle violators, and citation of these riders, coupled with bicycle education seminars for repeat or flagrant violators, would also be logical means of reducing this problem. Other means, such as more appropriate signing, can help obviate misunderstandings and problems between bicyclists and motorists. Lane position striping and directives for bicyclists at intersections, and bicyclesensitive traffic signal loops are facility improvements that should positively affect bicycle compliance.

THESE APPROACHES have had great success in a number of places with large bicycle populations, like Iowa City. Madison, Wisc., and Niles, Ill., are two examples of towns with respected and successful bicycle patrols.

The bicycle is a vehicle whose rightful place is in the vehicle system. Bicycling in the vehicle system involves more than simply getting on the bike and going. It stands to reason that bicvclists should obey the rules of that traffic system and it also follows that operators of other types of vehicle should respect the needs of bicyclists who are using the system in a logical, lawful manner. It further follows that those not obeying the vehicle laws should be cited and instructed as to their error. Those who "change back to bikers at intersections so they can cruise through without looking," as Copeland observes, are not "changing back to bikers," but are changing to lawbreakers and traffic hazards, plain and

Cyclists like myself, and members of Bicyclists of Iowa City, who support and practice effective cycling according to the logical application of the vehicle laws, are not disguised as, or pretending to be cars when we may need an entire lane to avoid a hazard potholes, large rocks and glass usually do not affect cars as much.

AND WHEN WE MAKE our left turns from the left-turning lane, with the turning light, or when we take our place in the center of the right lane behind cars stopped at the light, to avoid having cars behind us planning right turns from turning into us, we are responding to our safety needs as all bicyclists and all other vehicle operators should - considerately and correctly.

Kovaciny is a past president of Bicyclists of Iowa City.

To the editor:

In recent weeks the DI has focused on two major subjects that appear to be unrelated: the issue of Lute Olson's financial interests in UI athletics and the discourse of Phyllis Schlafly. Both matters illustrate the forms in which an economic system influences the values and ideas of its society.

The matter of Lute Olson allows us to examine the relationship between a politico-economic ideology and the institution of sport. On one hand, some sports exist per se as forms of cooperation and enjoyment. But it is only through commoditization into the economic sytem of capitalism that sport acquires the pretense of stardom, the potential for financial success and the subjugation in status of women's athletics (even though women's athletics strives for equality in this system). There is no question that capitalism propagates the values of individualism, consumption and oppression. Is it so surprising then that Lute benefitted from this social configuration? We can not blame Lute or the Athletic Department for directly participating in the exploitation of sport and of the UI student body to further the interests of a few. It is the American way. Rather, we must share the blame as members of a society which perpetuates these capitalistic values through

In a similar way, the rhetoric of Phyllis Schlafly allows us to examine the perpetuation of capitalistic ideology. Ostensibly, she advocates the maintenance of a social system where men control the means of production and define the place for women. Moreover, her rhetoric confounds the development of a sense of cooperation in the community by inducing class conflict. It seems to me that Schlafly, like Lute, benefits from the capitalistic social configuration by receiving hefty fees for her oppressive speeches. Is Phyllis's success so surprising? Taken as a whole, these articles featured in the DI focus on the symptomatic problems of capitalistic ideology where the values of individualism (through exploitation) and financial success (through consumption and/or oppression) are configured. I am not advocating a ban of UI athletics, nor am I advocating a ban on the discourse of Phyllis Schlafly. To the contrary, I believe that a society should encourage the development of cooperation and a sense of community without societal restraint. Perhaps, if all of us encouraged this development, we might set an example for Lute and

As a total and obsessed Hawk fan, I would first sympathize with our most noble leader Lute Olson and agree that the move was the best one for him under the circumstances. So what if four years ago he demanded and received a $21.7 million arena (at taxpayers like myself's expense) and also received a new 10-year contract with a nice raise. Well, Lute, if you can't take the cold, don't sign the contract!

Now let the truth be known. I am not a Hawkeye fan, and especially not a fan of "Mr. Excitement" himself -Lute Baby. Lute, you did us a favor! No more 63-52 blowouts, no more 15 passes before every jump shot — maybe a few slam dunks, and by George, someone may even penetrate the middle for a layup once in a while.

Painless science

To the editor:

This is in response to Jim McNeish's criticism (DI, April 19) of my defense of animal rights.

That humans have a right to live a life free from pain is, I believe, an opinion that most humans hold A much smaller number of humans, and I am among them, believe this right must also be granted to non-human animals because, like us, they suffer from pain. Because the only reason humans have a right to live a life free from pain is the fact that human life is improved by the lack of pain, and because the same may be said of nonhuman animal life, it follows that nonhuman animals, too, have a right to live a life free from pain.

What, then, are we to do with animal experimentation which inflicts pain upon non-human animals? The obvious answer is that we must find means of relieving this pain either by reducing it or by substituting other types of experimentation which will produce the knowledge desired. Such means do exist. There are alternative experimentation methods which can be utilized to reduce animal suffering or to eliminate the use of animals in experiments. Those wishing examples of such alternatives need only read Alternatives to Pain in Experiments on Animals by Dallas Pratt, M.D. - a book that analyzes 300 individual experiments in which animals are used and suffering caused, matching these experiments with specific alternatives to the methodologies utilized.

Dr. Pratt has shown that the experimenter can find alternatives to painful animal experiments if he/she will only look for them in an active manner. Just as we have progressed from the day of the horse and buggy to more modern means of transport, so will a research policy that actively pursues alternatives to the use of animals in experimentation lead to more efficient and more productive

Wisenberg offends

This is in response to the article by Sandi Wisenberg, titled "A feminist thinks about gays," (DI, May 4). I don't think Wisenberg thinks about gays, if she does think at all. The closing of her four-column, selfrevealing statement of nothing much offended me very much. I was not offended because I am gay, but because I was the facilitator of the Human Sexuality group that was tabbed in the column as "gawking." Wisenberg also threw in a quote from a self-conscious man who said he wouldn't have minded if we had gone to other bars, too.

Well, I am happy to say that this is not an original idea. Although bar visits are not a part of the course curriculum, the following week our group went to the Field House bar (you know, where all the "heteros" hang out). While at either bar we did not take notes, as was suggested in this shabby column. I did, however, suggest that those who had not gone to a "gay bar" should experience it, and that this would hopefully dispell some unfounded stereotypes.

I find it a sorry day when I have to defend myself for going into a public place with a few friends to have a couple of beers. I think it is a shame that the aforementioned gentleman didn't come over and speak to us about his discomfort. And I find it a journalistic sin that a member of the press did not do her homework before writing her column.

By the way: You remember the reference to the men that were getting hassled by fraternity men? Well, I'm an ex-fraternity man, and I happened to be one of the ones hassled by four closed-minded jerks (they thought I was gay.) Pretty funny, huh?

Ida Beam program attracts professors

By Robyn Griggs

The Ida Beam visiting professor program has brought famous and highly respected scholars to the UI campus over the last four years, but most of them, as well as the UI faculty members who invite them, have no idea who made their visits possible.

Fredrick Woodard, UI associate dean of academic affairs, said the question of who Ida Beam was is "a question that is often asked."

Ida Beam was a retired schoolteacher from Vinton, Iowa, who wanted to do something for the university and was counseled into setting up the program."

Beam was not a UI alumnus, but simply "wanted to help the state and education within the state of Iowa," Darrell Wyrick, president of the UI Foundation, said. "She felt (contributing to) the university would be the best way to do that."

UPON HER DEATH at age 92 in 1976, Beam left her 291-acre farm in Vinton to the UI. The visiting professor program was set up in 1978 with income from the sale of the farm.

"That amount, of course, has been put into the bank, and the income realized from that is used" to fund the program, Woodard said.

'The income varies a bit every year," he said, estimating about $50,000 is spent annually. The sum total of the account now stands at $650,000.

"What she's left to the university has gone a very long way in bringing some of the best visiting professors in the world," Woodard said.

Professors from throughout the United States and several foreign countries specializing in countless academic areas have visited the UI because of the gift.

dividuals who are likely to have an impact on the liberal arts field or areas where the professor's specialties interact with liberal studies. The nominee is generally a teacher and scholar of some distinction."

EACH DEPARTMENT usually submits a number of nominations for Ida Beam professors, but several of these are "weeded out" by the department chairman or a department committee.

The nominations next pass through the dean of the college for "further winnowing out," then go to Vice President for Academic Affairs Richard Remington, who makes the final decision as to who will be invited.

The decision is made through "a combination of things," Woodard said. It is "certainly based on the merit of the scholar," but an attempt must be made to keep a balance in the number of visiting professors to each depart-

The professors are not paid a set amount of money for their visits, but usually set their own salary, based on their set honorarium.

WOODARD SAID it is "often the case" that "these distinguished scholars will sometimes, of course, lower their honorarium to take part in a program like ours.

"I am left to imagine, and I guess from some of the names of the scholars and their background, that some have, in fact, lowered their honorarium to participate in the program."

The Ida Beam program is "certainly a unique program in Iowa," Woodard said, and differs from others in the Big Ten Conference in that it is administered by the central administration instead of separate departments.

The program gives the UI the opportunity to bring "truly outstanding Woodard said there is no set number scholars" who "greatly inspire stu-of professors who are invited to visit, dents and faculty," he said.

Man's statue is reported stolen

A.F. Tauber, 624 Kimball Road, reported to police Monday that a statue of a boy sitting on a tree stump, wearing a blue shirt, red pants and reading a book, was stolen Saturday night.

Tauber told police the statue has been painted twice in 25 years of ownership and the book was put in the statue's hands after a fishing pole in the hands broke years ago.

Three meter heads, valued at $211 each, were reportedly pried off their stands and stolen Monday, according to UI Campus Security. The meter heads were on the west side of the UI Main Anti-Semitic acts still erupt in Iowa City. Last year, UI sophomore Michael Fishman's dormitory door was decorated with Nazi swastikas, an emblem offensive to Jews since their persecution in World War II.

"THERE ARE anti-Semitic people here," Fishman said, "but they aren't Retish said anti-Semitism in Iowa City occurs in "isolated incidents ... but no more than in any other place."

Anti-Semitic prejudices are "an academic problem, both from schools and parents and churches and mosques and synagogues," Retish said. "I know there are still Catholic churches teaching that the Jews killed Christ." But Jonathan Simon, UI professor of mathematics cautioned, "Some of us from cities with large Jewish populations may be paranoid. We may see offenses where there really aren't any."

Although there are a number of pro-Palestinian organizations at the UI, they are considered to be politically, more than religiously, motivated.

"I don't think the Palestinian students, as a group, are anti-Semitic they're anti-Israeli," Rabbi Jeff

Despite his belief that opposing Israel is "synonomous" with being anti-Semitic, Braverman said he un derstands the Arabs' feelings.

"I like the Arabs. I know they have a case," Braverman said. "We Arabs and Jews are closer to each other than to any other race in the world. And we could build a heaven instead of (the) hell that exists right now."

The president stopped in Ohio on his way back to Washington from a fourday trip that also took him to Texas, Arizona and California. Each of his public speeches had the overtones of a candidate. He sought support for his Latin American policy in San Antonio and in Phoenix, the National Rifle Association warmly applauded his stand against gun control.

Reagan hailed Ashbrook as "a new kind of conservative" who was ahead of his time in helping push conservatives into political power. He noted Ashbrook helped begin the 1963 movement to draft Goldwater, longtime Republican senator from Arizona, as a presidential candidate, but was not dismayed by Lyndon Johnson's landslide victory. "He looked at the Goldwater campaign as a first step towards the eventual triumph of his political principles," Reagan said of Ashbrook. "Those principles are in the ascendency today.'

Panel okays more world loans

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The House Banking Committee Monday passed a bill to increase contributions to the International Monetary Fund by $8.4 billion and bar U.S. backing of any loans to South Africa because of its apartheid policy.

On a voice vote the legislation was approved and sent to the House. Fernand St. Germain, D-R.I., chairman of the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, acknowledged "a long haul ahead" despite administra-

"This bill is not vanilla ice cream in the eyes of the American people," agreed Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., who said it is difficult to justify adding so much in contributions to the IMF in the face of domestic needs.

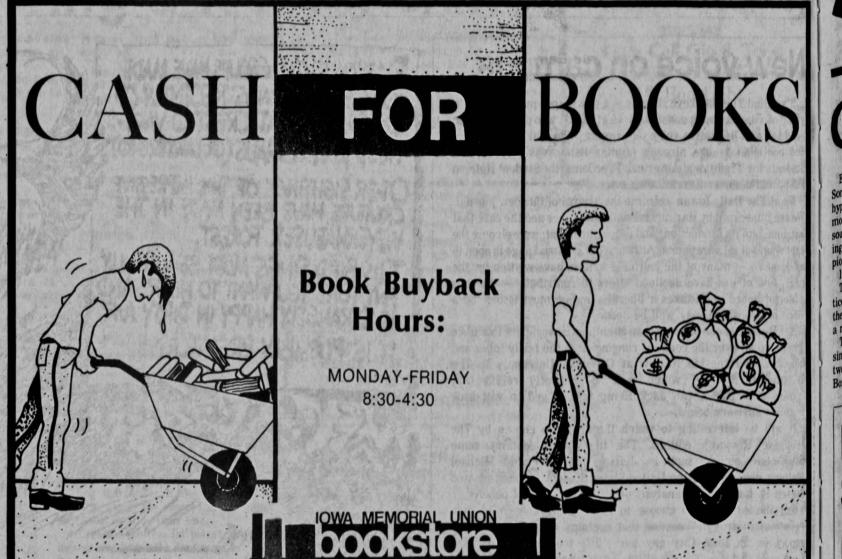

The apartheid amendment would require the president to instruct U.S. delegates at the IMF "to actively oppose any credit by any country which practices apartheid.'

IN NOVEMBER the IMF decided to loan South Africa $1.1 billion to help meet balance-of-payment deficits caused by last year's drop in gold prices. The loan was opposed by 60 congressmen in a letter sent to the administration last fall.

Gretzky of the Oilers.

That done, there were still enough riddles to last through the best-ofthe day was that questionable pursuit of the so-called psychological edge.

IF THE ISLANDERS listened to the Oilers for long they would expect to play a squad of farmers with pitchforks in one hand, straw between the lips and overalls for uniforms.

"It's the Big Apple against the poor country boys," said Edmonton Coach Glen Sather, glossing over the fact that Edmonton acquired steamed heat at least 20 years ago, has at least one Vietnamese super market and all the dog sleds are motorized in this city of

'We are shooting against the biggest city in North America. The city with the most fans in the richest part of North America and all the tradition. They are the Stanley Cup champions three years in a row and here we are the new kids on the block. We are definitely the underdogs."

THE OILERS, should they listen to the Islanders, would get the idea the New Yorkers despise them.

Duane and Brent Sutter, two of the sport's endless collection of Sutter brothers, come from nearby Viking, with hearing Gretzky touted as a hero

"Hockey is so big there, it's like religion," Duane Sutter said. "I wouldn't say Gretzky is God there, but he is pretty well-liked. A lot of people from Viking will be at the games. They won't be rooting for us.

"You go home and all you hear about is Gretzky but we had the last laugh the last three years.'

The Islanders also profess to be getting a little tired of Edmonton's cocky confidence and hope to silence it with harsh forechecking

Coach Al Arbour would disclose which players would be responsible for shadowing Gretzky and Bossy.

Gretzky has tried to steer away from the build-up as much as possible, being the first off the ice and first out of the dressing room at each practice.

"I don't think there is any great amount of pressure on us," said the 22year-old center. "They are the defending champions and if they want to do it four times in a row they have to beat us. There may be some butterflies but that is natural. This is our first

Spurs poking at referees

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (UPI) -No, the San Antonio Spurs didn't get a single free throw in the final quarter of Sunday's opening game of the NBA's Western Conference finals. And yes, the Los Angeles Lakers did go back to the line more times in that period than an absent-minded shopper in a grocery store.

And sure Spurs' Coach Stan Albeck was ejected with two technicals and the team trainer was whistled for another for slamming something down on the court.

But Albeck, the eternal optimist, looked - with cynical eyes - at the bright side of the officiating by Jack Madden and Hugh Evans

'Hey, we didn't miss a single free throw in the final period," he said. "That's pretty good."

ıan

THE MAIN THRUST of the complaints from the Spurs, who will try it again Tuesday night in game two (10:30 p.m.), was the way Lakers' center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar was able to rumble his way to 30 points and eight rebounds while the other 7-foot-2 center in the game, the Spurs' Artis Gilmore, got more whistles than a pretty woman walking past a construction crew.

"It's absolutely amazing to me how Kareem could go through the whole game and get only two fouls (three actually), the way this game was played," Albeck said. "He moves on every single pick he sets and it's illegal every time. He sticks his butt out and knocks somebody off balance and they never, never call it."

San Antonio forward Gene Banks, nursing a cut lip and a bruise on the side of his face after Sunday's game, said he might have to re-check the NBA rule book under the "Setting picks" section.

"THIS IS ONLY my second year," he said, "but I always thought that was illegal. As you can see, I've got some lumps and bruises to show for it."

The only players who fouled out of the rough game, Gilmore and Spurs' scoring machine George Gervin, didn't want to make much of an issue of it.

"Obviously, there are certain things I'd like to say," said Gilmore, who was held to just seven points.

Loss has lowa snatches win in last inning

By Mike Condon

WEST BRANCH, Iowa - The old baseball adage about games not being over until the final out was proved not once, but twice Tuesday in a softball double-header between Iowa and Minnesota.

In the first game, it took a throw to the plate from Gopher third baseman Diane Lenninger, on a relay from left-fielder Barb Solberg, to cut down Iowa's Lisa Nicola for the final out of the game to preserve a 2-1 Minnesota win. The victory was the 200th for Gopher Coach Linda Wells.

It appeared that Wells would leave town with win No. 201 as the Gophers held a 2-0 lead heading into the bottom of the seventh. But Iowa used four straight hits, combined with two errors on Minnesota center-fielder Julie Zieminski, the second coming on pinch hitter Linda Barnes' fly ball to center with the winning run on third

WITH THE SPLIT, Iowa closes its season at 20-18, 9-10 in the Big Ten. Minnesota ended conference play at 12-7. The Gophers, 32-17 overall, will play in a tournament in Lincoln, Neb., in two weeks.

Iowa's Diane Renyolds and Minnesota's Mary Lee Hanson were in a pitcher's dual for the first five innings of the first game before the Gophers took advantage of two Iowa errors in the sixth to score two unearned runs.

Right-fielder Gretchen Larson started the inning with a single to left. But Solberg's sacrifice attempt was hit to Renyolds who threw to Nicola, forcing Larson. Judy Oliverius followed with a bloop single to right, sending Solberg DESIGNATED HITTER Kelly Callahan then hit a sharp grounder that third baseman Karla Downes fielded cleanly. After checking Solberg back to third, Downes overthrew Cherie Andersen at first, allowing Solberg to score with Oliverius advancing to third. Lezlie Anderson followed with another grounder to Downes, who faked the throw to first and trapped Oliverius off third.

In the ensuing rundown, Downes ran the Gopher second baseman toward the plate and when she finally threw to the plate, the ball deflected off the runner's back for an error. Reynolds then retired the next two batters to end the

"Those runs really hurt us," said Iowa Coach Ginny Parrish. "But our real problem was our bats. We just haven't been hitting."

The Hawkeyes made a late rally in the seventh. Liz Ryan led off with a single, but was forced on Barnes' sacrifice attempt. After Andersen popped out to short, Nicola singled Barnes to third. Catcher Melanie Ruth then doubled to left scoring Barnes, but Nicola was thrown out trying to score from first, ending the game.

THE SECOND GAME started much like the first. After four scoreless innings, Minnesota got two runs off Iowa starter Julie Kratoska. Lenninger led off with a single and was sacrificed to second. After a walk to Solberg, Kratoska hit Oliverius with a pitch to load the bases. Callahan singled home Lenninger and Solberg scored on a sacrifice fly to left by Zieminski.

M.F.A. candidates display studio art exhibition of M.F.A. studio thesis works, the UI Museum of Art is displaying paintings, sculpture, prints, photographs and multimedia and video pieces created by artists awarded the Master of Fine Arts degree from the UI School of Art and Art History.

The exhibit is entitled M.F.A. 1982-1983, and it runs through June

Approximately 30 artists are showing their work in the museum's Carver Gallery. Artworks have been submitted by degree candidates for their final degree review.

Professor Wallace Tomasini. director of the School of Art and Art History, said: "The M.F.A. thesis exhibition ... is like the Ph.D. dissertation — the moment of terminal degree and evidence of professional attainment."

Tomasini went on to say that many of the graduating students have already attained professional status and have exhibited their work in the Iowa Artists Exhibition and galleries throughout the

"IT'S AN EXCITING exhibition for both the students and the museum," said Joann Moser, acting director of the UI Museum of Art. "Students see their work hung in a museum, and the public can view the group's work as a whole - work of artists who are just beginning their careers and are sure to be heard from again."

Unlike the M.F.A. program of other institutions, which can be completed in one or two years, the UI degree takes at least three years to complete. All M.F.A. students must first complete an M.A. with a written thesis and then be invited into the M.F.A. program. Tomasini said that this procedure was developed to affect a balance between academic work in art history and studio work.

M.F.A. candidates showing in the exhibition are: Joanna Axtmann, Hartini Bahr, James Dashcund, Devin Dougherty, Ingrid Harper, Kevin McAllister, Paul Pearson, Paul Steuerwald, Carol Veth and Paul Weber (painting); Rebecca Crutchfield and Michelle Edwards (printmaking); Karin Connelly and Shirley Wyrick (sculpture); Alexander Kutchins and Frank Pitcher (ceramics).

Also: James Costanzo Jr., Thomas Drew, Molly Lusk, David Reed, Vincent Smith, James Sorensen and Terri Warpinski (photography); Nancy Bartusch, Allen Greedy and Beth Tauke (design); Charles Raney (drawing); and Barbara Bianchi, Susan Carter, Gary Reynolds and Allan Schwartz (multimedia).

The UI Museum of Art is sponsoring its second annual "Tour of Artists' Studios," a special event from noon to 5 p.m. Sunday, June 5 that will provide the public with a closer look at the work and working environments of five local ar-

Mixed-media artist Jane Gilmore, painter Clayton Gorder, fiber artist Naomi Schedl, photographer David Van Allen and printmaker Alan Weinstein will open their work spaces to tourgoers.

"The tour is an invitation to consider how the creative process works and how the work spaces artists have created for themselves find their way as influences into the artwork," explains

Painter Gorder, for example, writes in his tour notes that his recent paintings include "... interior forms and objects viewed against the sky as seen through my studio left door."

GILMORE ADDS in her notes: "There is always an interchange between my art and my life .... Myths are created out of our lives by day-to-day experiences.'

A preview show of the artists' work will be on display at the Museum May 21 through June 12, and a reception will be held at 2 p.m. May 22 to introduce the ar-

Tickets for the tour are $5 for the general public, $3 for UI students and $1.50 for a visit to an individual studio. Advance tickets will be on sale at the UI Museum of Art through June 5: individual tickets will be available at each studio the day of the event

He made ends meet by acting in New World Pictures productions like Rock 'n' Roll High School and Hollywood Boulevard, but, like Paul Bland, he found it nearly impossible to finance the project of his dreams, having to almost hock his mother's Fabulous Fifties furniture to get enough of Eating Raoul on screen to convince a major Iowa, is an intermittently hilarious and distributor that the project had com-consistently sick rib-tickler that, with mercial potential. Eating Raoul is a different kind of film that could also be read as a comment on entrepreneurship, misanthopy, the eroticism of food, the gluttony of sex and a dozen other facets of contemporary culture. But, unlike a lot of multi-level comedies, it doesn't sacrifice belly laughs for high seriousness. In Eating Raoul, Bartel has served up a real treat and given motion pictures its first real black comedy since the heyday of Billy

'Detroit' comparable to TV comedy

'Eating Raoul' gnaws funny bone

F MOVIES were medics. Doctor Detroit would be a quack.

It's an impostor, a TV skit impersonating a major motion picture, with a comic scale that's appropriately small. Doctor Detroit. playing at the Campus 1, consistently settles for less, and sometimes it settles for nothing.

As a showcase for Dan Aykroyd's cinematic talents, it begs the question: Does he have any? He plays a dual role, but neither personality requires much more than such TV staples as an odd walk and a silly voice.

For Clifford Skridlow, an assistant professor of comparative literature who unwittingly becomes the kingpin of Chicago crime, Aykroyd adopts an officious, clipped voice and an equally have been published as paperback originals - an unusual thing for a writer of serious fiction - because Wideman feels he can reach a larger audience with them. With 19,000 copies of Damballah (1981) and as many of The Hiding Place (also 1981) in print now, he appears to be right.

In fact, Wideman's last three novels

Sent For You Yesterday has a number of interesting characters, but it is primarily the story of a place: Homewood, a Pittsburgh ghetto that, says Wideman: " ... wasn't bricks and boards. Homewood was them singing

It's hard to convey what Wideman's novel is like because it's so many things: the language is street wise, funky, full of dialect; while legend, myth and pieces of the Afro-American oral tradition crowd in, too.

Sent For You Yesterday is not an easy book either to read or to summarize, but don't let that put you off. Wideman's writing is vital and vivid, and his novel takes us to a place where we've never been but in which our imaginations soon feel at home. Wideman's Homewood, in fact, is a home place.
