FAA thwarts city's $295,000 allocation

It appears Iowa City has lost all chance of receiving $295,000 in funds from the Federal Aviation Administration this summer for repairs at the Iowa City Airport, FAA officials said

U.S. newsmen killed in Honduras

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (UPI) -Gunmen in Nicaragua fired a riflepropelled grenade across the Honduran border Tuesday, killing three American journalists who were driving along the border, Honduran Foreign Ministry said.

The U.S. Embassy confirmed the attack occurred and the State Department in Washington said initial reports showed three people were killed.

Edgardo Paz Barnica, Honduras' foreign minister, said the three were near the border towns of Las Trojes and Cifuentes, less than 2 miles from Nicaraguan territory and 48 miles east of Tegucigalpa, when they were killed.

The embassy spokesman said the road the journalists were on has been the scene of heavy fighting between U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels and Nicaraguan troops in recent weeks, but that the area was "fairly well patrolled."

The Honduran government has filed a number of protests over Nicaraguan soldiers firing over the border. Nicaragua denies this.

Young's heart isn't gold — he cancels again

By Carlos Trevino Staff Writer

Rock 'n' roll artist Neil Young Tues-day canceled a concert scheduled for July 5 at the Carver-Hawkeye Arena. It is the second time this year that Young has called off a performance slated for afternoon of the cancellation by Young's agency, Contemporary Presentations of St. Louis. The previous concert was to have taken place March 6, but was canceled after Young collapsed during a performance in Louisville days earlier.

"The agency didn't give us any reason for the cancellation, but the low ticket sales probably had something to do with it," Conner said.

Young's contract also stated that a television or radio offer would supersede the Iowa City concert, Conner said. "That could also be a reason for his cancellation.

"We won't lose anything on the concert because the cancellation was no fault of our own."

Coordinator of Student Activities/Campus Programs Kevin Taylor said that ticketholders can obtain refunds by returning their tickets in person or by mail to the Union ticket office from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily, beginning Thursday.

Those who purchased tickets using Visa or Mastercard charge cards can return the tickets in person or by mail and their accounts will automatically be credited, Taylor said.

"We're real pros at refunding people," Taylor said, referring to the previous Young concert cancellation.

Ul program to focus on child sex abuse

By Don Miller Special to The Daily Iowan

If you see a child wearing a T-shirt that says, "My Body Belongs To Me," don't be alarmed. It's just a reminder for those who possess other intentions. This T-shirt came into existence through the considerate thinking of a sexual abuse program in Ohio.

Beginning Thursday, a similar program will be held at the UI, hosted by the Rape Victim Advocacy Program in conjunction with the Iowa Coalition Against Sexual Abuse. ICASA will be holding its second annual conference at the Union Thursday and Friday. Along with this year's topic, "Focus on Sex Crimes: Child Sexual Abuse," prevention programs and treatment for child sexual abuse will

"Teaching children that they have a right to say what happens to their bodies and (that) they have a right to say 'no' is very important," said Carole Meade, program director for ICASA in Des Moines. "Adults aren't always right, and children have an instinct about what feels comfortable, uncomfortable and scary. If anything is confusing to a child, he or she should go talk to someone," Meade said.

MEADE, THE FIRST staff person hired at ICASA seven months ago, previously worked at the Polk County Sexual Assault Center for seven years

"One out of four children are sexually abused before they reach the age 18." she said. "Statistics indicate that in 85 percent of the sexual abuse of children, the child is assaulted by a person known and trusted."

In her years as a counselor, Meade said she has known of teachers, softball coaches, baby sitters, Boy Scout leaders, parents and friends of parents who were child sexual abusers. 'That's why this conference is offering a variety of approaches; people have to pick one that best suits them,"

The conference will present current information regarding sexual assault crimes and offer an overview of child sexual abuse prevention programs, strategies and resource materials for parents, teachers, therapists, hospitals, law enforcement agencies, social service agencies and others.

Linda Tschirhart Sanford, author, therapist and former director of the Rape Prevention Forum in Seattle. Wash., will speak at the conference. Also at the conference will be the Illusion Theater, under the guidance of Cordelia Anderson, the applied-theater director whose theater currently serves as a national clearinghouse for prevention education programs.

WASHINGTON - The Environmental Protection Agency used an inadequate study last year to declare safe an area around the Love Canal toxic dump site in New York, a congressional report said Tuesday.

Des Moines (UPI) - Seven Iowans participating in a church-sponsored fact-finding tour of Central America Tuesday protested their treatment at the hands of Honduran authorities this week the group was stopped at two check-points. At one of the stops a security agent questioned the Americans closely and examined their passports. At the second check-point armed guards searched

Johnson County officials are looking into the consequences of the revised County Finance Bill approved by the Iowa Legislature in May.

Guidelines for the new bill call for Iowa counties to reorganize the county fund system to make county budgets easier to work with and understand. But the bill might also cause problems for some individual county funds, according to Supervisor Dennis Langenberg.

The bill, passed by the Iowa Legislature in May 1983, consolidates the 30 or so existing county statutory funds into four unds: General, rural services, secondary oads and debt services.

"I can see it creating problems among the funds that have their full allocation of fax levies," Langenberg said.

"There will be more funds competing for more money ... all from one pot." All of the individual funds will be consolidated, such is the conservation fund that funds the Johnson County Conservation Board, he fund as an example of where troubles may occur. The conservation fund now receives 27 cents on every $1,000 that is evaluated on property - the maximum amount that it can receive. Under the old system the conservation fund was independent of the general fund, but under the new bill it will be included in the general fund and funds from the general fund can be transferred to where ever they are needed.

As a possible consequence, certain funds could lose out in the event of an emergency. 'They (the conservation board) are scared. If we are short a few thousand dollars, they're afraid that we (the supervisors) will take it from them," Langenberg said.

"The bill gives county Board of Supervisors more authority to spend money, said Johnson County Auditor Tom Slockett. "It gives the boards more discretion over funding matters, but funding decisions will continue to be made on the pattern the community has gotten use to," he said.

"THE BILL IS a lot more flexible; all of the funds won't be earmarked," Slockett said. With the new bill, funds will be able to be moved around within the general fund to where they are needed, Slockett said.

According to the Institute on Public Affairs, the major advantages of the bill are that it will make county finances more available to the public and make available comparable data among counties. It also will reduce the statutory earmarking of property tax resources and provide more flexibility to respond to locally determined

Slockett said the bill was needed because the old funding system was "archaic". "It was over a century old and there was a common agreement that it was cumber-

The push for the bill came in 1979 when a newly appointed County Finance Committee was "charged with reducing the 30 odd county funds," said Victor Elias, Deputy Director of the Iowa State Association of Counties. Elias said that the tax limits would be the same as under the old system because "the existing individual limits will be added up to make the new consolidated fund limits.

The Board of Supervisors just has to justify exceeding the limits through a public hearing, but that is not probable," he

The Institute on Public Affairs said, "The bill allows supervisors flexibility to determine its needs and how to provide for those needs from the total available resources.'

Civil rights undone

President Reagan has long been a foe of most affirmative action efforts, so it is not surprising that his own efforts in the area have been woefully bad. Or rather, one should say he has been unfortunately successful in stalling or undoing affirmative action efforts by past administrations.

He is trying to turn the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, politically independent under past presidents, into a tame lap dog that will bark only on his command. The three people on the commission that he is trying to replace are all members of minority groups, and the replacements are all white males.

Reagan's displeasure with the commission is not surprising because it has pointed out his failures. Only 4.1 percent of his fulltime appointees have been black; in the Carter administration, 12 percent were. Only 8 percent of his full-time appointees have been women; under the Carter administration, 12.1 percent were.

Reagan's attitude is all the more unfortunate because affirmative action works. For example, companies doing business with the government are subject to special requirements. Between 1974 and 1980 the rate of minority employment grew 20 percent among those companies, but only 12 percent among companies not subject to the requirements. And the comparitive gain for women was even greater: 15.2 percent in the targeted firms, but only 2.2

Affirmative action is right - it is only fair that those discriminated against for hundreds of years be given some special encouragement to partially make up for that discrimination. And it's effective. If Reagan will not enforce the law, then Congress must compel him. That means refusing his new appointees to the commission and closer supervising of his enforcement of affirmative action.

Tots and the tube

One of the latest legal wrangles to be sparked by good old American technical know-how involves the potential use of electronic devices which could be attached to television sets. When triggered by an inaudible tone sent by the network, these devices would black out televisions until a second inaudible signal restored the picture.

Tuesday an organization named Action for Children's Television filed a petition with the Federal Communications Commission asking that such signals be required at the beginning and end of all commercials aimed at children. By acquiring the electronic device, parents could thus prevent their children from being "brainwashed" by televised commercials without any disruption of the actual program.

Hopefully the FCC will reject this nonsense. While many ads imed at children may be manipulative or misleading, the same thing can certainly be said of advertisements aimed at adults. While children may be more impressionable than adults, and therefore more susceptible to the techniques of advertising, it is still their parents who presumably determine what purchases are made. Finally, since it is advertising that pays the bills for commercial programming, the use of devices to block children's advertising would most likely result in a decrease of programming

Adults concerned — and rightly so — with the manner in which advertisers seek to manipulate youngsters should concentrate their efforts on educating children about advertising techniques, perhaps by encouraging local school districts to include such instruction. Parents concerned with how their children are affected by television should carefully monitor their youngsters' viewing and discuss it with them, and not rely on a mechanical device to assume parental responsibility.

Dumping dirty work

When Chief Justice John Marshall issued a ruling in the 1830s preventing the federal government from forcibly removing the Cherokee nation from their lands in the Southeast, President Andrew Jackson - who favored the removal - replied with customary unctuousness, "Mr. Marshall has issued his ruling;

An interesting parallel to that line of thought has arisen in a federal court in Minnesota. U.S. District Court Judge Donald D. Alsop has issued a permanent injunction against enforcement of the Solomon Amendment, which would have denied financial aid to students who could not prove they had registered for the draft, thus shifting part of the responsibility of draft registration supervision and enforcement to colleges and universities. Alsop, in effect, said that if the federal government would have young men register for the draft, the government itself - and no one and nothing else - should be required to see that they do.

Judge Alsop's opinion is correct on several counts. First, as he mentioned, the requirement of proof is a direct violation of the constitutional protection against self-incrimination. Second, the amendment violates the constitutional protection against bills of attainder, in effect punishing someone when they have not been convicted of any crime in any judicial proceeding. Third, it inflicts an additional burden of paperwork and a de facto law enforcement function on already overburdened university bureaucracies which often lack the time, staff or funds to fulfill such functions. And fourth, it could penalize students on the basis of where their registration was within the Selective Service process: If a student's registration acknowledgment letter was delayed or lost, processing of his financial aid application might likewise be delayed just long enough to make remaining in college economically untenable for that student in the meantime.

The merits, such as they are, of draft registration in peacetime aside, the federal government should at least have the kidney to enforce the laws it deems fit itself, rather than browbeating overburdened and underfinanced educational institutions into doing its dirty work by keeping a Big Brotherish eye on needy students.

The U.S. makes apartheid ammo

By Herb Boyd

This is the second in a three-part series on Africa and the arms race.

HE U.S. RELATIONSHIP with South Africa is a special one and in need of extended discussion

"Constructive engagement" is the term used most often to sum up U.S.-South African affairs. And it truly has been constructive for South Africa. As concocted by Chester Crocker, assistant secretary of state for African affairs, constructive engagement has not only meant a less critical approach to the menace of apartheid, but has made it much easier for South Africa to purchase U.S.-made products.

Seemingly without censure or difficulty. South Africa has been able to obtain everything from "shock batons" to computers to nuclear-related items from the United States - to say nothing of the U.S.-influenced $1.7 billion loan secured through the International Monetary Fund to help bolster South Africa's sagging economy. South Africa is suffering through an enormous balance of payments deficit that is due in part to the trough in the price of gold, but also is directly related to the accelerating costs of financing destabilization activities in sur-

To fully outline the collaboration between the United States and South Africa is a considerable task, but suffice it to know that beyond the reported $21 million in U.S. military aid is a rather intricate web of relations - and whether military or non-military, no aspect of South Africa's infrastructure functions without support from one of the 500 or more U.S. corporations with investments there. High-tech equipment - navigational systems for aircraft and data-encryption devices among others — is among the articles on the U.S. munition list that are available to South Africa.

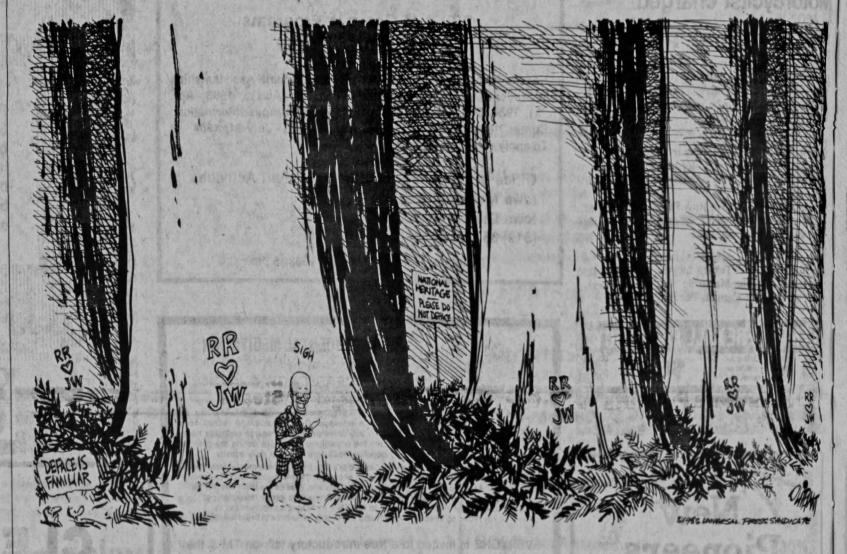

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to believe that South Africa could have developed its first nuclear power station at Koeberg without the assistance of the United States (It was this same station that was apparently bombed by African National Congress guerillas in retaliation for a South African commando raid in Lesetho, during which 42 blacks were killed). In fact, it has been the unchecked flow of American technology towards self-sufficiency in military arms and equipment. This growing self-reliance is obviously making a mockery of the so-called arms embargo enacted against South Africa. An important outgrowth of South Africa's growing arms industry is its role as a supplier of arms to other Third World nations. From 1977 to 1980, South Africa was surpassed by only Brazil and Israel as an exporter of weapons to the Third World. All three of these countries, by the way, have close political ties to one another and to the United States.

How extensive is the stockpile of arms in Africa? There is no way to know for certain, but according to one report there are more than 750,000 Africans under arms. Besides South Africa, says author David Lamb, 'Only Angola and Ethiopia - two Marxist states armed by the Soviet Union — can assemble 500 or more pieces of heavy artillery, tanks and rocket launchers."

A war-weary dean never forgets

MAY HAVE bought tickets for the Neil Young concert at Carver-Hawkeye Arena next month, but the CSN&Y albums are stashed in the closet. Like my younger peers, I wear knit shirts and loafers in the summertime. When I glance at the skyline on the west side of the river, I see the hospital complex hovering over the Quadrangle; for years, I saw the ghosts of those Quadrangle-dwellers who, in the spring of 1971, built catapults on top of their dormitory to pelt the police when they came rushing up Grand Avenue on those very strange spring nights.

But then I go visit a university dean. You remember what campus unrest did to the nation's deans, don't you? Whenever there was a photograph of students taking over a university building, there was always that hapless dean in the picture, getting handcuffed, chastised by students, or just plain looking forlornly out of his Ivory Tower. Deans, for some reason or another, were the kicking dogs of protesters. This didn't make much sense, but then not much did.

Well, not all university deans have buried the hatchet from those years, and we have to humor them. Anyway, that's how I justified a recent visit to the Dean of Where-Graduate-Students-Are-Browbeaten-On-The-Carpet-

Having not been solvent the last month of the spring semester, I dutifully, and cheerfully, went through the aforementioned motions in order to register for summer school.

And dutifully, and cheerfully, I visited the Dean of the Where-Graduate-Students-Are-Browbeaten-On-The-Carpet-Department, gloating over how well, at the ripe age of 31, I carried off such bureaucratic chores. Ten years earlier, such running around sent me up the wall.

IOWA CITY HAS the wonderful opportunity to honor a famous admirer, and now is the time to do it.

A while back, Donald (O.T. Coffee) Kaul mentioned in a column that while dedicating the Lucas Fountain downtown, he rather whimsically hoped the plaza might be named for him. This is a splendid idea. "O.T. Coffee Plaza" - has a ring to it, yes? Time is of the essence; Kaul recently swore off RAGBRAI, and he's not go ing to be around forever ...

Actually, naming our plaza "0.T. Coffee Plaza' will accomplish something else, too. If one delves through Kaul's writings, one cannot help but note his peculiar obsession with naming things. Think of the feet of newsprint dedicated to naming the Iowa State football facility Jack Trice Stadium. Naming our plaza after Kaul may cure him once and for all of this

What we need is public support. We need a mailbox. Folks, mail those letters to the Dean of the Where-Graduate-Students ... only joking, only joking.

Good ships leak

To the editor:

Let's look at the building boom in Iowa City from a different angle. Let's look beyond the obvious, and no doubt most motivating, reason for the construction of these multi-unit dwellings: money.

You can't argue with it - tearing down old homes and old buildings and "densing" the building sites with as many units as possible makes sense from the viewpoint of the builder/landlord. In keeping with the Orwellian prediction, history is in the way so it has to be changed. Tear it

We can see that aesthetics are being ignored in this new construction, but I doubt very much if the builder/landlord sees it that way. What he may be seeing is this:

Instead of crooked stairs and cubbyhole apartments (in general a kind of "curvature of the property"), he is seeing clean lines, a leakless roof, and lots of square apartments placed in exceedingly neat stacks. He is seeing his $300 apartments here and his $500 ones there. Because of the extreme orderliness of these dwellings, he is seeing anything out of place. To the landlord, aesthetics means that he is sleeping at night, knowing that the Lord is in his house and his blocks are neatly stacked.

I imagine the idea of refurbishing an older home is quite repugnant to him. The fact that it doesn't maximize a property's profit potential is obvious.

but again we're looking beyond that. Refurbishing would mean the layering of history, and as anyone knows, the layers of history are a labyrinth. To the pragmatic eye of the builder/landlord a labyrinth is not only confusing, it is imperfect. Put this way, a repaired roof is less perfect than a new roof, and thus more prone to leaks. These potential leaks can play havoc with a landlord's sleep (aesthetics).

If this underlying psychology is right it strikes me as more than a bit obsessive, not unlike my mother's vacuuming the rugs twice a day. Neatness has gotten out of hand. When a realtor speaks of a "tidy little property," he's not kidding.

For my money I prefer the oftquoted seacaptain's phrase: A good ship leaks a little.

And although the local stations have agreed to help NPR pick up the pieces, Klingler said the incompetence of top management has made him feel "we misplaced our trust. "The staff at NPR gave us reason to believe that things were pretty good. We (NPR) got a clean bill of health and we shouldn't have. To say I was unhappy is an understatement.

KLINGLER SAID he hopes that the stations will find their way out of the budget crisis with the help of two new fund-raising methods: underwriting of programming by local businesses and on-going fund-raising appeals to Underwriting is an agreement by which a business provides money to a station without asking the station to provide a specific advertisement in return. While some NPR programs are underwritten by national corporations, no programming is currently underwritten by local firms, Klingler

Soliciting funds from listeners, a significant change from past WSUI policy, will also probably become an annual event. Klingler said he had hoped to avoid on-air appeals for funds, but the tight money situation has made it the most promising alternative to grant money

The current fund-raising drive is using direct mailing to listeners and short broadcast appeals between programs. Compared to the massive fund-raising "festivals" commonly seen on public television, the interruption of regular programming is minimal, Klingler said. "We're not raising money on the air, really."

The ads will be taken off the air soon, Klingler said, because starting in July donations to the station will no longer qualify for matching federal funds. For every $3 given by listeners this month the station will receive one dollar from the federal government.

If enough money cannot be found somehow, somewhere, then programming cuts will have to be made, Klingler said. Due to previous budget cuts "we're more efficient than we used to be. But we really can't cut anymore without affecting what's on

And although it could mean losing some of their more popular programs, Klingler said the station will have a balanced budget. "We will balance our budget, one way or another."

Zehr said the city would have received the money for this summer's project in September if the FAA had decided to reallocate the $295,000 to Iowa City. If the FAA decides to finance the project in next year's budget, he said the city would receive the funds in October, delaying the city's plans by only a month.

"I'M STILL trying to look at this situation optimistically," Zehr said.

Mayor Mary Neuhauser said the city will continue until June 30 to try to convince the FAA of the city's good will. "I don't know what will happen," she said. "We'll just have to keep on working and do the best we can.

Sasser said communication between the FAA and the city should improve in the future. "I would certainly hope we have improved communications with the city," he said. "I think we understand better what they're trying to do and they understand better what we want them to do."

As for future allocations to Iowa City, Sasser said he is not certain what will happen. "Our budgeting takes place on annual basis," he said. "There has never been any commitment to anything past this year's allocation." The FAA told city officials in March that not only was this summer's funding in jeopardy, but also at stake is funding for the city's 10-year, $2 million master plan to upgrade and repair the airport's facilities.

SANFORD, A THERAPIST in private practice in Brookline, Mass., is the author of: "The Silent Children, A Parent's Guide to the Prevention of Child Sexual Abuse," "In Defense of Ourselves, A Rape Prevention Handbook," and a booklet, "Come Tell Me Right Away.

Sanford will discuss different approaches on the prevention of child sexual abuse. Her main goal is to help parents understand how they can rear a child to be aware of dangers without being apprehensive or paranoid.

Anderson is the coordinator of the original child sexual abuse prevention education project. More than 900 training seminars and theatrical presentations on child sexual abuse prevention have been conducted by Anderson and her troupe, which is based

Also on hand at the conference will be Michael Tallman of the Illusion Theater in Decorah, Iowa, whose adaptation of TOUCH will be highlighted as a model program.

'TOUCH is a concept, a good theatrical presentation for kids that doesn't put sexual abuse in sexual terms," Meade said. She said she feels the strategies TOUCH provides help make children aware of the possibilities of abuse. "If you give a child a system to react to if it happens, they will know what to do. TOUCH examines this and helps increase everyone's awareness."

KARLA MILLER, of the Rape Victim Advocacy Program and consultant of a new therapy program for incest victims, said she feels this conference is one more way of training for the parent and child to prevent child abuse.

'A child sexual abuser puts the responsibility on the child by telling him or her to keep a secret. Kids don't have to have the responsibility of dealing with this alone," Miller said.

The conference is open to the public with a registration cost of $35.

'TN2' debut brings missing humor to prime time

By Jeffrey Miller Arts/Entertainment Editor

HE NEWS Is the News" follows NBC's traditional line of topical, satirical comedy.

Based heavily on the old "That Was the Week That Was" (right down to its "TN2" logo), with liberal dashes of "Laugh-In" and "Saturday Night Live" thrown in, "The News Is the News' (9 p.m. Wednesdays, KWWL-7) features a team of five "newscasters" and guest commentators working over the week's headlines and stories.

Last week's premiere episode was fitful at best. The several technical mistakes that occurred could be forgiven, the show being a live debut (although you'd think that Dave Wilson, who has directed "SNL" for lo these many years, would have these matters under control).

Television

But the work of both the writers and the performers was less excusable. Most of the one-liners and set jokes were less subtle than what you might encounter at a high school talent show. And those lines that worked were consistently ruined by actors mugging, looking at the monitor and stumbling

THE FUNNIEST, IF not the naughtiest bits came from people responsible for their own material.

Juggler/comic Michael Davis, familiar to "SNL" viewers, threw around a knife, a cleaver and an axe while explaining the dangers of the arms race ("If I miss with one of these, I can give disarmament an entirely new meaning ... ") in a sketch that was as pointed (no pun intended) as it was funny.

And guest Michael Palin explained

Maggie Thatcher's mandate in a Monty Python-esque commentary that dealt more with the opening of Return of the Jedi and Shirley MacLaine's latest autobiography than it did with Britain's own Darth Vader. Unfortunately, since MacLaine's book has raised a good deal more interest in Britain than it has here (she describes at length her affair with a prominent but unnamed Labor Party member), a

As for the rest; well, Simon Jones is an appropriately doughty Briton who acts more like he's on stage at the Old Vic than in front of a TV camera; Charlotte Moore does her best to impersonate Jane Curtin's spunky newsreader and manages to miss even more lines; Lynne Thigpen enunciates well; Trey Wilson is still trying to figure out why his parents named him

FOR ALL ITS initial problems, however, "TN2" is worth a look. One can only assume that the writers and performers will find themselves as the series progresses (just take a look at the first "Saturday Night Live" if you want to see bad television).

More important, the kind of humor drastically thanks to a policy that that "TN2" offers is something that's been sorely missing from network prime time for well over a decade. NBC deserves credit for trying something new, even if it's flawed as much as the first "TN2" was, even if it's something that's really quite old.

NBC's progressive strategy seems at last to be paying off. The network finished the May sweeps with the best performance it's had in five years, beating out ABC and coming within .5 rating points of defeating CBS.

While NBC executives are "cautiously optimistic" about the network's chances in the fall race, NBC's advertising is up, while leader CBS' advertising has dropped promised advertisers "no demographics.'

CBS seems to have misread completely what NBC has accomplished. Advertisers have been attracted to low-rated but surviving shows like "Cheers," "St. Elsewhere" and "Remington Steele" not because they promised no demographics but because they provided very specific demographics.

The outcome of next fall's ratings. race will probably depend as much on unseen developments now transpiring in board rooms on Sixth Avenue in New. York as it will on anything we see on our boxes come October. And those, developments seem more hopeful for NBC than they have in a long time.

Disney version of Bradbury novel can't find right ending — or audience

By Craig Wyrick

ALT DISNEY Studio's latest foray into the PG arena is Something Wicked This Way Comes, a movie that is certainly not for impressionable

Too scary for kids, too "soft" for adolescents, and too hokey for adults - these are the problems that have often destroyed Disney's attempts to create a new image and that burden Something Wicked This Way Comes. This film has a built-in Ray Bradbury following, but past that, it lacks any real audience.

The Disney Studio seems to be caught in a time warp, both stylistically and emotionally. This isn't necessarily bad, since their films have served the purpose of morally educating children who would be devastated by the ambiguity found in most of today's films. But it does make for often confusing brews - Tron used the latest laser technology while using a 1950s-style romance as one of the subplots.

Something Wicked doesn't lack moral steadiness, but it does have an inappropriate amount of tarantulas and terrifying sequences that might turn a child into a nervous wreck and an arachnophobe.

BASED ON Ray Bradbury's 1962 novel, the movie is Will Halloway's remembrance of his big childhood adventure. On a windy October evening, Will (Vidal Peterson) and his dark-haired friend Jim (Shawn Carson) sneak out to watch the carnival train come into town. Things happen to the kids at night that seem like the overactive imagination in daylight. The idea's a nice one, and the mood sustains itself well through magic to exploit the dreams and hopes of local yokels, turning them into wax figures and freaks in his carnival. Will and Jim accidentally stumble onto Dark's plan, and it takes the courage of Will's father (Jason Robards, in a touching return from the insipidness of Return of Max Dugan), the town librarian, to send Dark back from whence he came. Ray Bradbury claims this is the closest adaptation of one of his novels, and it should be - he wrote the screenplay. What Something Wicked lacks mostly is a satisfying ending. There is no apocalyptic catharsis, but it does have all the trappings of a typical fight between the Good and Bad sides of the Force. If one could find an easy way to end this film, Bradbury didn't.

JACK CLAYTON has only directed five films over the last 24 years, and it shows. His properties have invariably been novel adaptations, including Henry James' Turn of the Screw (as The Innocents) and F. Scott Fitzgerald's The Great Gatsby (1974), his last film before Something Wicked.

Clayton's style is the type of literary respectability that was common in the late 1950s and early 1960s (and sometimes turned out quite good films). The almost archaic feeling that Clayton brings to Something Wicked is a nice reflection of the theme and mood of reminiscence, but it also limits the possibilities of the film, particularly in the action sequences.

The cinematography, always a glowing orange, and the rest of the production values are consistently fine, and one wonders if this film might not have been better off without a climax. Unfortunately, Disney Studios can't afford much more speculation - Something Wicked This Way Comes is not paving gold roads at the box

Robert Aldrich's Vera Cruz matches the master of action-oriented films with an ideal group of stars: Gary Cooper, Burt Lancaster, Ernest Borgnine and Charles Bronson. The Coop and Burt are buddies whose quest for gold - and the same woman - in war-torn Mexico leads to a showdown. Will the Coop's six-shooter take the day? Or will Burt's chest? Find out tonight. 7 p.m.

· What better movie to show the night after the Junior Miss Pageant than Michael Ritchie's Smile? Made the same year as Robert Altman's Nashville, Smile uses the same means — a large number of characters gathered in a specific place — to achieve the same ends - the savaging of American middleclass hypocrisy, this time at the Young American Miss beauty contest instead of the Grand Ol' Opry.

The cast features no big names, but a number of good performances: Bruce Dern, not crazy for a change, as a hyped-up used-car salesman; Barbara Feldon as the contestants' protective den mother; choreographer Michael Kidd as a down-and-out

Well, we're usually not wild about nature documentaries, having seen The Living Desert one. too many times at the age of 5. But we have a friend who has this thing about penguins, so we'll go ahead and recommend CBS' "King Penguin: Stranded Beyond the Falklands.'

Photographers Cindy Buxton and Annie Price spent six months in Antarctica following the cute leetle fellers around, and their work is supposed to be state-of-the-art in documenting the lives of a species. Now, if they could just move on to "King Fluffy: Stranded in the Falklands". ... 7 p.m., KGAN-2; WHBF-4.

• PBS tonight presents Gillian Armstrong's acclaimed My Brilliant Career, the Australian film based on the autobiographical novel of Miles Franklin. Judy Davis portrays Sybylla, a young woman growing up on the Outback who is determined to leave her strict family behind and become an independent novelist.

But she meets a dashing young man named Harry (Sam Neill), and the problem becomes the standard (and none too progressive) does-she-choose-love-orcareer storyline. Iowa State cager transfers to lowa

By Thomas W. Jargo

In what could possibly be the quietest transfer ever, former Iowa State forward Cerita Cain is now attending classes at the UI and is contemplating joining the Iowa women's basketball team next fall.

Cain, calling the UI her "personal preference," is changing schools but not necessarily basketball teams. In fact, she has yet to meet with new Iowa Coach Vivian Stringer about joining the squad next fall. If she does join the team, she will have to sit out a year under NCAA transfer rules.

"I haven't decided yet," Cain said, concerning her basketball future at Iowa. "I haven't thought about it." She said the possibilities are good that she will attempt to join the Hawkeyes.

REACHED AT HER HOME in Wilmington, Del., Monday morning, Stringer said she had not yet been contacted by Cain about a possible transfer, but heard from a source at Iowa State Sunday night that "a player from Iowa State transferred" to Iowa.

Stringer didn't ask for Iowa officials to confirm the move because "it's just a rumor as far as I'm concerned. I don't know her reasons for transferring, perhaps for personal or academic reasons. I'm quite surprised. I heard she's a pretty nice player."

Cain, a 5-foot-10 junior-to-be from Des Moines, scored eight points in the Cyclones' 64-59 loss to Iowa last Nov. 23. She said there was no friction between her and the coaching staff at Iowa State, adding that the only reason she transferred to the UI was her personal preference in schools.

Cain's father is Carl Cain, who was a starting forward on the 1956 Iowa "Fabulous Five" squad which finished second to San Francisco in the NCAA tournament

Media coverage extensive for VIP

Quite a few members of the media will join thousands of golf fans at the Amana VIP next Monday on the Finkbine Golf Course, but television coverage of Iowa's golf classic will be toned down a bit this year.

KGAN-2 has decided not to telecast live cut-ins from the VIP during the day, but KCRG-9 will continue its live reports this year.

We will be doing our sports segment live on the news at 6 from Iowa City and we'll have a wrap-up at 10," said Tim Noonan, KGAN programming director. "We have found that the audience just isn't there at that time of the day to do the cut-ins. Most of the people who would watch don't get home on a weekday until 5."

KCRG-9 WILL BEGIN its live reports at 9:30 a.m., with Sports Director John Campbell handling the duties. Other cut-ins are scheduled for 10:30 a.m., 11:30 a.m., 1 p.m. and 3 p.m.

"We like doing them, but we aren't sure that there is much of an audience for them," Campbell said. "The sales staff was able to sell them though so we'll be there.

In addition to doing a live sportscast on the 6 p.m. news, KCRG co-anchor Doug Krile will likely anchor part of the evening news from Finkbine.

KWWL-7 plans coverage in its 6 and 10 p.m. news broadcasts. In addition, local radio stations are gearing up for complete coverage of the VIP festivities.

KRNA-FM Sports Director Bryan Harlan will broadcast live reports from Finkbine at five minutes before Marks, who was a professional skateboarder for Dave's Pure Energy team in California, moved to lowa a few years ago and now only skates once or twice a week.

Hansen seen as high pick in pro draft

If the opinion of Indiana Pacer assistant Coach George Rubin is any indication, former Iowa guard Bob Hansen stands a good chance of sticking with an NBA team for the 1983-84 season.

Rubin said he would be "surprised" if the 6-foot-6, 210-pound guard lasted into the third round of the June 28 draft. "I've got him rated higher than most," he said. "He has good size and a good body to play the big guard position but a lack of quickness may hurt him in the long run.

Hansen seemed unaffected when told of the scouts' feelings about him. "I really don't care what team takes me," he said Tuesday evening from his parents' home in West Des Moines. 'Some think it better to go to a winning team while still others would rather play for a weaker team. I just want a chance to prove myself."

THIS TYPE OF ATTITUDE impresses Rubin. "Hansen is a tough, hard-nosed player and I like that," he said. "If I had to compare him to somebody in the league now it would be Jimmy Paxson out at Portland. We would definitely be interested in him if he lasted into the third round."

Detroit Piston assistant General Manager Will Robinson calls Hansen "an in-betweener. What I mean is that at his height he would be switching back and forth from guard to forward," he said. "But Bob is definitely a very good basketball player. I see him going in the second

The former Hawkeye says he hasn't been contacted by any of the scouts. "I'll just be happy to be drafted," he said. "From what I've heard it will be the second or third round.

JOHN SAMQUIST, a Seattle-based agent, will handle Hansen's negotia-

Former Iowa and current Arizona assistant Coach Ken Burmeister believes an impressive rookie camp might get Hansen an invitation to the Southern California Summer League. "If Bobby can make it out there I would say his chances are real good to make a team," he said. Burmeister also added that if Hansen and another former Hawk, Mark Gannon, are drafted, it will mark the seventh-straight year that a senior starter from Iowa has been drafted.

SPEAKING OF GANNON, the 6-7, 220-pounder from Iowa City has apparently decided to pursue a career in Spain. According to his mother, Gannon is currently in Spain making arrangements for the upcoming Rubin said the Pacers had some interest in drafting Gannon. "We had a slight interest in him for the later rounds," he said. "But it would be tough for him to make it in this league. He doesn't possess great quickness but he is intelligent and makes the most of the ability he has.

Two other former Hawks will be heading in different directions. Forward-center Jerry Dennard may be a low-round draft choice, but according to Burmeister, he was approached by some European teams last season.

Meanwhile, Kevin Boyle, a 1982 sixth-round choice and a late cut of the Philadelphia 76ers, may be in line for a couple of tryouts. Sixer assistant Coach Jack McMahon said it is too early to know for sure, but the former Iowa forward may be given a second Boyle's performance in the Sixer camp also caught Rubin's eye. "I'm not positive we're going to extend (Boyle) an invitation but he's somebody we've had our eye on.

Heat exhaustion a runner's most dangerous foe

The scene was the 7.1-mile Falmouth Road Race along Cape Cod a few years ago. Some 4,000 runners were trying to outlast the 73-degree, 70 percent humid

Among them was the current world record holder in the marathon, Alberto Salazar, who was then a junior at

He was pushing at a grueling fourand-a-half minute mile pace when suddenly, as told to Kenny Moore from Sports Illustrated: "Everything went out of me. The world looked strange. It was fuzzy and had dim patches. About four or five people passed me. I can't ample, but if heat exhaustion could be pefore, during and after a run. Don't be afraid to stop in the middle of a run, to drink at a water fountain.

· Wear as few articles of clothing as you can get away with. The more skin surface exposed to the air, the more likely sweat will evaporate. · Crave the shade. Whenever possible, run in shady areas. Also, I've found that it is cooler to run at night when it's hot, if possible, than in the morning or afternoon.

• Cool yourself externally. When I'm out on a hot run, I make it a point to run under lawn sprinklers. It feels good, See Running, page 8
