Airport limits still irk firm

By Mark Leonard

An attorney for the West Side Co., which owns 70 acres of land near the Iowa City Airport, said Tuesday if the city restricts building plans the firm has for the site, the company will be entitled to compensation from the

Davis Foster told Iowa City Council members at a public hearing July 5 that the city's proposed airport overlay zones would limit the development of the company's property because the height of the land there is as high as the airport approach zone

"From the maps I've seen it's possible the only allowable building would be an underground building," he said at the time. "We are worried that it's going to prohibit the West Side Co. from doing what it wants to do.'

After the meeting, the city contacted the Federal Aviation Administration and established a higher approach zone. Even with the new height levels, however, Foster said on parts of the land owned by the company no building taller than 30 feet could

"This means it's less restrictive, but it still doesn't remove the word restriction," Foster said Tuesday. "And such a restriction would amount to a taking of West Side Co. property, entitiing the owners to compensation from the city."

FOSTER SAID the company, owned by Earl Yoder, Edward Thomas, George Nagle and Charles Barker, would like the city to provide accurate maps so it can see how the zoning will affect its property. "We feel the maps we were presented with are inadequate," he said.

Foster would not comment on what plans the firm has for the site or when any construction would take place. A moratorium on construction in that area expires Aug. 13.

Council members decided to continue the public hearing at their next formal meeting on

In other business, the council voted 4-1 to raise council members' salaries to $5,000 a year and the mayor's salary to $6,000 a year. The raise will take effect Jan. 1, 1984. Councilor John McDonald voted against the raises, while Councilors John Balmer, Larry Lynch, David Perret and Clemens Erdahl voted in favor of the increase in

Lynch will not be affected by the raise because he has announced he will not run for re-election when his term expires this fall. Perret and Balmer's terms also expire in the fall, but they have not yet announced whether they will run for office again.

Nicaragua calls for peace pact

Plan would halt arms shipments to El Salvador

LEON, Nicaragua (UPI) Nicaragua issued a six-point peace plan Tuesday on the fourth anniversary of Sandinista rule and accepted a call for negotiations among all its neighbors to end the threat of a Central American war.

The plan - which adopted some of the key peace proposals developed at a Latin American summit in Cancun over the weekend - marked a significant turnabout in the policy of the leftist-led nation. It previously had said it would only accept bilateral talks to avert hostility

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The United States has dispatched an eight-ship aircraft carrier battle group to the Pacific coast of Central America to emphasize U.S. interest in the region and support for friendly countries there, the Navy said Tuesday.

Parents told to work or lose ADC

By John Tieszen

A new Johnson County program starting this week will require unemployed parents to work in community service projects if they are to keep receiving grants from the Aid to Dependent Children Unemployed Parents Program.

If those required to work in the program do not, they may lose benefits for at least three months

Parents who are being trained for a job skill or who are physically handicapped will not have to participate, said Jeffery Johnson, unit manager of Hawkeye Area Community Action Program.

All other parents receiving grants from the ADC Program will be required to work in the Community Work Experience Program sponsored by HACAP, he said.

The program will involve between 20 and 25 parents and is "an extra labor force for the community," Johnson

The program's directors will begin this week to solicit jobs from public and private non-profit organizations, Johnson said. "Our workers will do anything that a job site needs as long as it isn't too dangerous.'

PARENTS WILL take a physical examination and a skills assessment test this week, Johnson said. Then they will be matched to one of the available jobs. "We try to match people with skills to a job that suits those skills," he said. Johnson said the new work force could be used for special county projects. "If a special project was being planned, but it wasn't in the regular budget, this program offers the chance to get that project done.' The employer is required to pay 45 cents an hour for the work completed. 'This is for our administrative costs only," he said.

The eligible parents will not get paid for their labor because the new program requires them to donate their time in order to receive their ADC is just a state of mind. Using some last-minute armtwisting Tuesday, Branstad won his personal choice for a state slogan, "A State of Minds," for the new catchword on vehicle license plates.

According to Gov. Terry Branstad, the Iowa Transportation Commission and plans for 1985 license plates, Iowa

The Iowa Transportation Commission unanimously approved the slogan, preferring it over the much-debated "Quality and Productivity" slogan suggested by Des Moines attorney David Belin.

The "State of Minds" slogan will be embossed on 1985's royal blue and white license plates, which will be issued in January 1985, and are expected to last for at least seven years.

The governor's press secretary, Susan Neely, said the slogan was favored by Branstad because "it points This story was written from reports by DI Managing Editor Tim Severa and United Press International.

up that the state has a lot to offer. It draws attention to our high literacy rate and it's a strong selling point to business and industry.

When asked about people who did not want the state's advertising on their plates, Neely said, "I know polls have been taken, but the majority of people asked want to promote the state.

"I think Iowans want to feel good about their state."

MAKING A LAST-DITCH effort to promote his suggestion, Belin had told the commission he would rank the "Minds" slogan as a one or two on a scale of one to 10, with 10 being the Later, he said he was disappointed that his suggestion for a slogan was re-"I don't think it's nearly as good as ours ("Quality and Productivity"), but at least it was reinforced by two groups who almost never agree. The Iowa Federation of Labor and the Iowa Manufacturers Association both urged its passage. That doesn't happen very role often," Belin said. "It's amazing to see business and labor agree on

After losing on his proposal, Belin came around to the idea of the new slogan. "It's a pretty good message about people who live here — that we are proud. ... Well, at least it's better than no slogan at all."

Transportation commission members initially were opposed to putting any slogan on state license plates, but Commissioner Robert Rigler said Branstad convinced him just before Tuesday's meeting that the "Minds" slogan would complement the state's development efforts.

"VERY FRANKLY, the governor's comments were very persuasive," he said. "It was good to see someone stick his neck out and take a leadership

He said a major reason for having a state slogan is to promote the state's image to non-Iowans. "The implication of the new plates is that we're pretty smart, that we're unique and innovative. Rigler said the slogan "would convey a wholesome message and create a favorable attitude for Iowa."

Suggestions from the public for a new slogan included such catchy phrases as "America's Breadbasket,"

"Land of Hoover," "Hawkeye State," "Corn State," "Bountiful Iowa," "A Place to Grow," "Peace and Freedom," and "Peaceful Iowa."

Among the more unusual offerings were "Iowa, A Place Where E.T. Feels at Home," "Corn and Beans for Cows and Sows" and "The Golden Buckle on the Corn Belt."

Senate Majority Leader Lowell Junkins, D-Montrose, was among the first to criticize the slogan selection Tuesday, saying the decision was improperly based on Branstad's preference.

"Regardless of whether or not the slogan is acceptable to Iowans, the decision was made for the wrong reason," he said. "License plate decisions, like those regarding our roads and bridges, should be made based on the facts presented, not the governor's

New truck route called for by Chamber of Commerce

By Merwyn Grote

The increase in the number of semi-trailer trucks using Iowa City streets has prompted the Chamber of Commerce to request renewed action for the completion of Scott Boulevard as an alternate truck route on the city's east side.

In a letter presented at Monday's city council meeting, Ward Thompson, vice-chairman of the transportation committee, asked the council to work with the state Department of Transportation "toward the expeditious completion of Scott Boulevard to I-80.

The project would involve a three-quarter mile addition to the north end of Scott Boulevard. This would join U.S. Highway 6 and Interstate 80 along the east side of the city.

Thompson estimated that 2,100 truck and trailer units go through Iowa City monthly and said that number will increase soon with the arrival of new businesses in the city's Industrial Park.

Thompson called the truck traffic a "serious safety problem to the citizens of Iowa City." The noise and air pollution caused by the large trucks "negatively impacts the Iowa City quality of life" and the trucks present an "undue risk" to residents because many of them carry hazardous materials, COUNCILOR JOHN Balmer said the boulevard would probably be connected to I-80 through the Highway 1 cloverleaf northeast of the city. The cost of extending and widening the boulevard has been estimated at $980,000, he said.

Balmer said the extension is necessary for the economic development of the city, because it would show potential industries that the city can adequately handle the burden of heavy traffic.

from Iowa City would take that route. Much of the truck traffic from Highway 6 to I-80 had been going east through Downey and West Branch, he said. However, the city of Downey has recently prohibited truck traffic from their bridge. As a result trucks have been using Burlington, Governor and Dodge streets as alternate routes, Ockenfels said.

THE EXTENSION of the boulevard is currently scheduled for construction in 1988. It had been set for construction in 1984 but was delayed because of the city's limited finances, Balmer said.

Balmer said the extension has been a "high priority project" for several years, but the city's finances and the economy in general had delayed it. Construction cannot begin in 1984 because the city has already begun its 1984 fiscal year, he said, but the project might be initiated by fiscal 1985 or 1986.

The boulevard marks the edge of the city limits, but Balmer said the city will probably not have to buy any additional land to widen the street. Although several housing developments are in the area, they will not be affected by the increase in traffic, he

The transportation committee surveyed several local industries with large truck traffic, including Moore Business Forms, Owens Brush Co., Proctor and Gamble, Sheller-Globe Corp., H. P. Smith Paper Co. and H. J. Heinz Co.

To date, there are nearly 3 million people who practice this effortless mental technique. Their experince as well as objective research show that TM meditators enjoy improved memory, faster reaction time, higher grade point average, greater creativity, clearer perception, reduced anxiety, better health and more harmonious social relationships. Convict to testify against defendant in take check case

Johnson County Senior Prosecuting Attorney Jack Dooley said Tuesday he is planning to call a witness who will indicate that 44-year-old Milton Feeney of Solon was involved in a counterfeit check scam.

Following the second day of Feeney's trial on two counts of false use of a financial instrument Dooley said, "We're going to call Earl A. Davis to the stand. He's on loan to us from Anamosa (State Prison)." Davis, 42, of Dubuque, was found guilty of cashing false checks in Black Hawk County and was sentenced to 10 years in prison following his trial there Dooley said Davis will be a witness for the state against Feeney, who is accused of producing two alse checks with a printing press and a camera.

The checks, called "special warrants," are used by the state as checks and were issued for more than $425 each, court records state. Dooley said "the checks in Johnson County were cashed at a Hy-Vee store and at Randall's at the Sycamore Mall.'

The counterfeit checks were discovered in Des Moines in January when a state computer rejected several bad checks.

Davis is currently being held at the Johnson County Jail pending his court appearance. The trial continues today at 9 a.m. in Johnson County District Court and "could last all week," Dooley said.

City proclaims today 'Bill' day

By Elizabeth Turner

The Iowa City Council has proclaimed today "Bill Sackter Day" to commemorate the man who became a beloved public figure for his efforts campaigning for handicapped people nationwide and for his friendly and helpful attitude.

Mayor Pro Tem David Perret signed the proclamation last night at the City Council meeting, calling for July 20, 1983 to be a commemorative day

The proclamation reads "For approximately eight years many residents of Iowa City and students of the UI enjoyed the friendship and inspiration of Bill Sackter. Bill was regarded with great love and admiration long before he received national claim and

"The City Council wishes to honor Bill ... to keep alive the spirit of love which was felt by all who knew him ... and urge all residents of Iowa City to keep alive the memory of this very special person."

Sackter, who died June 16, had been the manager of "Wild Bill's Coffee Shop" in the UI School of Social Work since 1975. He became a national celebrity in 1981 when a movie based on his life was broadcast on CBS, with Mickey Rooney starring as Sackter appeared on national television in 1982 when he accepted a Golden Globe Award for Rooney, who was performing on Broadway at the time.

Shawhan takes two-year NASA post

By Merwyn Grote

UI physicist Dr. Stanley Shawhan, has accepted an offer to become branch chief for space plasma physics in the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's division of earth sciences and applications.

Shawhan will take a two-year leave from the UI to oversee the development of the Plasma Diagnostic Package, (PDP), a satellite designed to study the earth's outer atmosphere.

Shawhan said NASA had been looking for some time for someone with the background and the ability to take the temporary position. He said several collegues had approached him about the position some time ago and NASA officially offered him the post last

He said that he took the position hoping to change NASA's tendency to emphasize the hardware involved in space exploration while work will benefit the UI as well as the space

SHAWHAN HAS previously worked with NASA as the head of a team of UI scientists that designed and built the PDP, which first went into space aboard the Columbia space shuttle in March 1982.

The PDP was used to study the effects that the space shuttle had on the plasma in the earth's ionosphere. Plasma is the positively charged gas that makes up the outer regions of the earth's atmosphere.

The PDP is now being re-designed as a free-floating satellite that will study the environment of the ionosphere, the effects that shuttle craft activity has on the ionosphere and serve as a lab that will conduct on-going

> The experiments the PDP will perform are designed to help scientists predict the natural reactions that might occur in other parts of the solar system or galaxy, he said.

SIX NASA ASTRONAUTS are currently visiting the UI to learn how the PDP functions and how to control it. The astronauts will have to repair the satellite if it malfunctions, Shawhan said.

The astronauts are Mission Specialists Tony England and Karl Henize and Payload Specialists Loran Acton, George Simon, John David Bartow and Diane Printz.

The PDP is scheduled to be released into orbit from the Spacelab II shuttle flight in March 1985. Shawhan and the UI scientists who helped create the satellite hope to con-

In addition to the PDP project, Shawhan will work on coordinating a satellite research project called OPEN - Origins of Plasmas in the Earth's Neighborhood. This proposed project involves the placing of four satellites in varying distances from the earth so that scientists can study solar flares and other activities on the sun.

OPEN might develop into a joint space venture between the United States and Japan. The project's estimated budget of $400 million is considered to be too high by NASA, but the Japanese have expressed an interest in either supplying one of the four satellites or possibly a fifth one, Shawhan said.

The Japanese have a "fairly active space program" and were the third country to launch satellites into space, after the United States and the Soviet Union, he said. Shawhan will discuss the project with representatives

New pillagers

Two events in Iowa this week point to a potentially deadly new War Between the States, one that would be purely economic:

Members of the United Food and Commercial Workers at FDL Foods Inc. in Dubuque were fired for honoring the picket line of another union at the plant.

Gov. Terry Branstad said he would not enter into a "no raid" pact with governors of neighboring states. Such a pact would commit the governors to not luring industry away from their neighbors. Branstad noted that Iowa has a very favorable climate for business, citing among other things a "right to work law."

As the economy has declined in recent years, a number of reactions have occured. Workers have been forced to take reductions in wages and benefits; businesses have reorganized without union contracts where they once had existed. Efforts to get rid of unions have intensified. What used to be the boast that the United States has the highest paid labor force in the world, now has become a complaint and the "reason" for current economic States have competed to lure businesses with promises of low or no taxes, reduced environmental protection constraints, and a docile labor force. The goal has been to claim a bigger piece of a shrinking pie. And in this war almost anything goes.

In the short run this can be a successful way to wage war, but as the revenue from business declines, more will be sought from citizens or services will be severely cut. Workers with lower wages will have less to spend and less to tax. And a polluted environment eventually exacts its own costs.

There are other ways to wage such a war, but they are, initially, more costly. An academically excellent and well-financed education system produces informed active citizens and skilled workers. A repaired and model infrastructure makes the movement of goods and people easier, faster and safer. High wages and clean cities reduce the breeding grounds for crime. And tough environmental laws produce healthier, more productive citizens and a nicer place to live and work.

But so far the war has been waged with a rape, pillage and move on attitude, in apparent belief that a business can move in, foul a nest and then move on to the next tax haven that offers acquiescent workers.

This is the trend, and it is a dangerous one.

After you? No way

At the conclusion of the 1980 elections, various leaders in the Democratic Party concluded the process used to select a presidential nominee was excessively drawn out. Subsequently, New Hampshire's first-in-the-nation primary was tentatively shifted from February to March, and Iowa's first-in-the-nation caucuses were rescheduled from January to February. The national Democratic leadership agreed these two states still would be first in the process.

But when various eastern states indicated they might hold caucuses close to New Hampshire's scheduled March primary, New Hampshire responded by asserting it would then shift its primary to February, and Iowa scrambled to retain its still earlier status by passing a law declaring that its caucuses would precede any other state's delegate selection - whether by primary or caucus — by at least eight days.

Now California's Democratic leaders, worried about their chances of defeating a reapportionment plan favorable to the Republican Party, are considering holding their presidential primary and delegate selection on the Dec. 13 date of the reapportionment vote in order to increase the turnout of Democratic voters. Such an action would push the Iowa caucuses up to Dec. 5.

If such me-first maneuvering gets extended any further, by the time the November 1984 presidential election arrives, Iowa may already be holding caucuses to choose its candidates for 1988.

Sordid sadness

American political scandals usually are pallid affairs. Greed, lust for power, spying on opponents - ho hum, lackaday. What we need is a good sex scandal, like those surprisingly yeasty British scamps have now and then, something with a bit of piquancy, bespeaking a yen for something a bit more tasty than just huge sums of money or mere unbridled power. For a time, it looked as if Sexwithcongressionalpagesgate, wherein congressmen were accused of having sexual relations with teenage congressional pages, would supply just such entertainment. Now, with the details of the sordid business exposed, it is not titillating at all. It's Liberal Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., has admitted to having relations with a male page 10 years ago, and conservative Rep. Daniel Crane, R-Ill., has admitted to having relations with a female page three years ago. Another congressman, Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., has since risen in the well of the House calling for the resignation of both men for "seducing" these unsuspecting teenagers. Of course, Gingrich has no idea whether a "seduction" took place; only Crane, Studds and the two unnamed pages know that, and it would be nice if the secret, such as it now is, dies with them. And one doubts whether a "seduction," born of the influence Crane or Studds or any other representative has over pages, took place, or whether four people who should have known better, because of their office and no matter what their age, did something that was plain stupid.

Gingrich has said Crane and Studds have shamed "the people's House." Perhaps. But it should be up to the people to decide the proper punishment for whatever shame has been inflicted as much as it is up to the House to demand more circumspect behavior from those who sit there. But it could also be argued that Crane's and Studds' continuance in public life should be decided on the basis of their public behavior, while their private life should have no bearing on this decision. Perhaps their greatest failing was mixing the two by having these truly foolish affairs.

Play with fire

To the editor: Was John R. Wilder ("An Interrogation, American-style," DI, July 5) really surprised that the Secret Service should take an interest in the little piece of self-fulfilling prophecy he calls a poem? Wouldn't he have been more upset if they hadn't?

Why should he feel such horror at their earnest efforts to determine if he constituted a threat to the life of the president, and therefore to the orderly operation of a government whose job it is to uphold and protect the very rights which he claims under the First Amendment? I would have been horrified if it had taken the Secret Service any longer than 24 hours to locate a suspect who was not in hiding. Wilder certainly must be aware that he is not the only man in recent memory to have written a little note about killing the president. Since in neither his interrogation nor his article has he explicitly denied the possibility that the fifth and sixth lines of his poem might be non-fiction in the first person, I have no argument with the implication of line seven.

If, as Wilder suggests, this is the Soviet Union, the Secret Service is the KGB, and he finds himself in Natalya Gorbanevskaya's place, then why is he still able to write, publish, and travel absolutely unhindered? Even supposing he were imprisoned, his First Amendment rights would not disappear. And where were Gorbanevskaya's Miranda rights and attorney at her investigation?

If Wilder wants to play with fire, he must expect to stand the heat. Only the First Amendment, and the fact that any collection of lower-case letters will nowadays pass for poetry, have kept him from getting seriously burned.

Cranston endorsed

To the editor:

After meeting Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., the other night, I am convinced that he is the man who as president of the U.S. will be committed to women's rights more than any other president or presidential candidate.

Cranston's commitment to equal rights is portrayed in his cosponsorship of the Equal Rights Amendment, his support for the woman's right to choose, his concern for homemakers' rights, and his concern about other inequalities. As president, Cranston will lead in the struggle to achief equal rights for women through statutory, regulatory, administra and judicial efforts.

I strongly urge concerned individ to support this candidate through the presidential race.

Heat doesn't wilt dancers' freshness

By Nancy Moore Special to The Daily Iowan

HE IOWA CITY Dance Center presented a free concert of dances by local choreographers last Satur-day in which hot, moist, motionless air competed with gravity for mastery of the human body

Works such as Jimmy Locust's "Tides of a Babylon Woman," danced by Susan Watzke, acquired additional significance when the choreography could be felt as "cool running through the wind.'

The Dance Center is a nonprofit studio and performance space supported by donations and student tuitions. Its resident dance company, I Works, directed by ballet teacher and choreographer Douglas Wood, provides an artistic outlet for Iowa dancers, composers, choreographers and visual artists who wish to produce collaborative works.

SATURDAY'S CONCERT, mostly created by I Works members, did not include sets or live music except as provided by the dancers themselves, who proved to be as versatile in sign language and music as they were in modern, ballet and jazz technique.

Dance

Occasionally, one wished for less versatility and more sense, particularly with a raucous group effort like "A Tribute to Gene Kelly and the Tap Fiasco," but usually the aplomb of these unpaid and overheated dancers outweighed such reservations.

One of the best choreographic ideas of the night was Laurie Sanda's preperformance improvisation on the College Street mall. Members of her Performance Workshop emerged from the Dance Center 30 minutes before showtime and formed a moving sculpture that wound around the fountain and up to the minipark. Bystanders, expiring from the heat, were suddenly greeted by a colorful line of agile bodies moving forward while changing shape.

SOMETIMES A DANCER running from the back of the line to the front found an onlooker or a wall to support her, so that the "line" drew into its design everything and everyone within close proximity. Such improvisation is way of making dance accessible to the public. Perhaps this was also the motive behind "A Tribute to Gene Kelly," which was put together by Performance Workshop members. This piece, however, did not pay tribute to anyone or any dance. Instead, it featured Mark McCusker gussied up as Ethel Merman, bound to a chair, and incapacitated by severe muscular spasms. "Ethel" sang snatches of old Broadway songs and shrieked when a dummy of Gene Kelly was rolled out (for unknown reasons).

A "narrator" tried to explain what was going on but was consistently upstaged by the spastic "Ethel" and two tap dancers who performed "I've Got Rhythm," partially in sign language.

At unpredictable intervals, Brian Neubauer rushed in with a flag and a parade of patriotic singers. Finally, three couples in white tried to pay serious tribute to the dummy, but the previous satire had been so heavy-handed that they looked more like another mistake.

THE KELLY FIASCO fortunately did not set the tone for the rest of the evening, which included two pieces by Douglas Wood (a variation for his Ballet II class and a work-in-progress, "Junk Cars"); an excerpt for Mark Demry's UI thesis, "Paraph"; and Susan Watzke's "Fusion," danced to an Evelyn King song

Brian Neubauer's jazz piece "Walkin' and Singin' the Blues" and Judith Moessner's solo for Neubauer, "Filigree," looked especially finished, displaying the musicality of dancers and choreographers alike. In the blues number, performed with a Duke Ellington recording, black-clad dancers skirted the studio in a pack, with Neubauer breaking out toward the audience, defiant and perfectly balanced in whipping turns.

In "Filigree," with its entrancing composition for brass and winds by John Surman, Neubauer filled the steamy studio with cool spinning, his movement accenting in its sudden dips and slicing arm gestures sudden changes of pitch and rhythm in the music. On a more pleasant night, Neubauer should be able to sustain the energy of spinning throughout, even when pacing between phrases, so that the dance doesn't wilt while the music keeps churning.

It is proof of these dancers' genuine interest in their art that more pieces didn't wilt during the course of this tropical evening.

Book of America' presents cliched accounts of 50 states

The Book of America by Neal R. Peirce and Jerry Hagstrom, Norton Books, 1983, 911 pp.

OHN GUNTHER looked inside Europe, Asia and Latin America before he took on that "greatest poem" in Inside U.S.A. in 1947. His purpose: "to show this most fabulous and least known of countries ... to itself."

Time changes things. The United States is hardly the "least known of countries" any more, and Neal Peirce and Jerry Hagstrom felt that "the time was ripe for a modern-day sequel" to Gunther's bestseller. The result: The Book of America.

Peirce is no stranger to books on our strange land. He has authored — books of this sort are not written nine other books on America in the last 11 years.

The first of these was called The Megastates of America; it was followed in turn by an eight-volume study of the country by region (The Pacific States of America, The Mountain States of America and so on), of which it's fair to say The Book of America is

It's not that there is nothing new in this onevolume portrait of our nation; Peirce and Hagstrom did, after all, "again traverse the United States to take the pulse of the states and cities of the 1980s." If you happen to own the regional volumes, though, you'll hardly need The Book of America.

WHEN YOU COMPARE the account of a state from one book to another, you find that the country's pulse rate is largely unchanged. Since I live here in Iowa, I looked at The Great Plains States of America (1973), in which Iowa's story occupies 31 pages (as opposed to eight in The Book of America).

Both chapters are entitled "Iowa: Agristate Extraordinary," and both begin with Roswell Garst describing Nikita Khrushchev's visit to his farm near Coon Rapids in 1959. This is followed by a section on agriculture in Iowa - the first paragraph in both books is identical, the second nearly so.

The similarities continue throughout the chapters on Iowa, and I suspect through other states as well. This may or may not matter to readers of The Book

The Book of America is 911 pages long, and its chapters range in length from seven pages (Delaware, Rhode Island, Maine, Nebraska, Wyoming and Idaho - low pulse rate states, clearly) to 75 pages for The Great Nation State (California, of What sort of information do Peirce and Hagstrom offer? "We have traveled to each of these states," they say, "to inquire of their growth over time, the geography, the ethnic and racial groups, the factories and farming and universities, the worlds of business, labor, the arts and communications.

"Everywhere we have sought to determine which people and groups hold the reins of power, what forces set the tone of politics and public life.'

GIVEN PEIRCE and Hagstrom's subject and method, it is impossible for a book like this to present a complete picture of anything. This is a quick fix book in which cliches and overdone modifiers abound: "Kentucky has always meant many things to America;" Montana "...is a place of infinite contrasts and contradictions:" Maine is "America's first place to greet the rays of the rising sun each "the very thought of Louisiana is evocative."

States "epitomize" or are a "microcosm" or are 'synonymous with America at large." States are also the "quintessence;" much is "sui generis." Because of all its generalities and its countless cliches, The Book of America has no point of view, informing consciousness. It's essentially an anonymous book, miles in spirit from, say, the quite personal Blue Highways of William Least Heat Moon, or the Special Places of Berton Roueche.

Moon and Roueche heard "America singing, the varied carols" and, like Walt Whitman, they blessed us with their own distinctive compositions. Peirce and Hagstrom, on the other hand, give us Muzak.

Hudson proves he is a unique kind of star

By Randy Wood Special to The Daily Iowan

HILE THE 1920s ended with a crash in August 1929 and the 1930s with a bang in December 1939, the 1950s didn't end until 1963. Much happened that year: John Kennedy was assassinated, the Beatles invaded, Walter Cronkite and Johnny Carson assumed their thrones in our living rooms.

1963 also marked the end of another 1950s cultural institution: the Rock Hudson-Doris Day movies. Those films presented a 1950s so claustrophobically perfect that the decade could conceivably have lasted out the century. The perfection and inevitability of the romantic formula Rock and Doris acted out led to innumerable tactless jokes about the aging Day's militant defense of her virginity.

Day has been re-investigated and to some extent rehabilitated by contemporary critics (Molly Haskell, for example) who have little respect for the "sexual revolution" that held Day in such disrepute. But Hudson is still taken very much for Wayne, but he was suitably stalwart in the role of the Texas patriarch in Giant. He could never be as elegant as Cary Grant, yet his combination of recklessness causes the death of a famous surgeon charm and guile was perfect for the role of the · and the blinding of his widow, Jane Wyman. Rock playboy in Pillow Talk (showing Thursday at 9 atones for his wasted life by becoming a doctor. In a.m. on WGN-cable 10). He could never be as sensitive as Montgomery Clift, yet the unmannered naivete he brought to the role of the gardener in All That Heaven Allows (showing at the Bijou at 7 p.m. tonight) was just gauche enough to work.

Rock was certainly no peer of Sir Laurence Olivier, but if he is seen as a compressed synthesis of acting styles just finding realization in the 1950s (James Dean in Rebel Without a Cause, the Duke in The Searchers), his exceptional popularity in the 1950s becomes much more explicable: Just as Pat Boone was called "a safe alternative to Elvis," Rock was a safe alternative to just about

AT THE BEGINNING of the 1950s, Hudson was a minor contract player at Universal whose best roles were as Indians. He was going nowhere fast, until his fortune became linked with a director whose future seemed similarly bleak. Douglas Sirk, who had signed his contract the same year as Rock, was caught in the typical paradox of an unproven director: He couldn't be trusted with important stars until he had made successful films; and he couldn't make successful films until he could work with important stars.

Sirk's only recourse was to create a new star, and Rock was his material. The break came with the second film together. In Magnificent Obsession, Rock played a playboy whose a new and dangerous operation, he cures Wyman's blindness. After this formidable box office success and one last Indian role, Wyman and Rock were

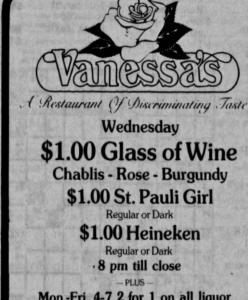

IN THAT FILM, All That Heaven Allows, Rock plays a sensitive gardener whose natural living serves as an example to his friends Nick and Alida. Nick was in advertising; now he's given it up to raise trees and read Thoreau. Rock hasn't read Walden. "He lives it," explains Alida to Wyman, again a widow destined to fall for Rock.

This film, a little too off-beat to be as big a success as Magnificent Obsession, shows Rock with more rough edges than he'd have later as a proven star in the Day cycle. Yet he's already the quintessential 1950s male: not a method actor, not a continental wit, just an affable hunk, a onedimensional star for a one-dimensional decade. Films would not need the likes of him again.

From personal experience, Bix is a hilly race which you don't want to attack too hard, too early. I found it better to run conservatively for the first two miles or so, where the steepest hill is located.

It is run through a very scenic area of town - the McClellan Heights residential section. The 8 a.m. start should, hopefully, be enough to avoid many problems with heat and humidity.

The race is in collaboration with the three-day Bix Biederbecke Memorial Jazz Festival, in honor of the late, great trumpeter, whose hometown was Davenport. Altogether, it will make for a great weekend.

GARLINE

BOSTON (UPI) - Edward "Buddy" LeRoux was alternatively portrayed as the unfortunate victim of a calculated power play and a hustler looking to get rich and get out in closing arguments Tuesday in the Boston Red Sox ownership trial.

Testimony lasted more than 34 hours over seven days and lawyers have until July 25 to submit more briefs. Superior Court Chief Justice James Lynch took the matter under advisement

"I've always avoided making promises because if they don't turn out, you look like a ham-and-egger. I'll get the decision out as fast as I can,"

According to a nationally-known New York City investment firm, Iowa City has one of the 20 best credit ratings in the nation of cities that issue municipal bonds.

A spokesman for Moody's Investors Service said Wednesday that Iowa City's bonds rate "Triple-A" with the firm. Ed Kerman, vice president and associate director of the municipal department at Moody's, said the 'Triple-A" designation is the highest rating the firm can give.

"Basically, it means they have our highest long-term credit rating," Kerman said. He added Iowa City has been able to achieve this rating because of its varied economic base. "The city relies on an important educational and medical service center balanced by diversified manufacturing, which affords them a strong and stable economy," Kerman said.

IOWA CITY ALSO has "competent" debt management and "excellent" tax collection services, he said.

Two other Iowa cities, Des Moines and Dubuque, are also listed by Moody's as having exceptional credit

Iowa City officials said the city's good credit standing comes from a conservative fiscal policy

"We've maintained basically a conservative fiscal policy which allows us the latitude not to borrow for shortterm obligations," Councilor John Balmer said. "I think with the economic problems focused on other cities in the past 10 years, it is a credit to the community that we've been able able to keep financing projects.'

Balmer said much of the success is due to the work of the city staff and City Manager Neal Berlin. "I think a lot of credit for this goes to them," he

He added that the city's good credit rating might help in the city's push for economic development, "It should be a very helpful ingredient in helping to try and get industry to locate here."

UI women's fund raising hits new high

By Thomas W. Jargo

Fund raising for the UI women's athletic department is based on the philosophy that "a talented woman student-athlete should have the opportunity to compete athletically," according to fund-raising Director Lucy

One way to provide those opportunities is in the form of studentathlete scholarships for women. Also, money is needed to secure the appropriate funds to meet the everincreasing cost of running each program, Broadston said.

For these reasons, the women's athletic department set up its own fund-raising campaign just over three years ago. The UI is one of only three Big Ten schools — the others being Minnesota and Purdue - which have separate fund-raising campaigns for men's and women's athletics.

"THEY ARE TWO different program. Iowa has a strong commitprograms, and it's only natural that ment to provide really good education they be separate," said UI Foundation and athletic opportunities to women." President Darrell Wyrick.

But fund raising has become vital to the 10-year-old women's athletic department, according to Iowa Women's Athletic Director Dr. Christine Grant. "It's the new programs that need the assistance to get going," she said. "It takes 10 times more effort."

The gathering of funds for women has made great strides during its short lifespan. Last year the women's athletic department raised $172,000, and it is "conceivable" it will increase that total to $200,000 by the end of this fiscal year, which ends July 31, Broadston said.

GRANT SAID the expected total of $200,000 fell short of the intended goal of $300,000, but is "very high for women's athletics across the nation. We've done some real pioneering work in this area. I would say we're in the top 10 in the nation.'

Wyrick said the total is "a good result. Although the program is fairly new, it is growing and prospering.

The money will go directly into the UI women's scholarship fund, which

THE MARKET for televising college football games should be fairly competitive, Lutz estimates. "I'm sure a lot of people will be looking at the

"If the NCAA fails to maintain its control, I think some schools, especially the independents, will begin looking rather quickly for a production company to produce their games," Lutz said. "But I think the majority of
