Disparity exists in penalties

NEW YORK (UPI) - The National Football League, claiming gambling goes "to the heart of the on-field integrity in the game," Tuesday explained the disparity between the suspensions of Baltimore quarterback Art Schlichter and the four players penalized Monday for violating NFL drug policies.

On Monday, NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle suspended Cincinnati defensive end Ross Browner, Bengals' running back Pete Johnson, New Orleans defensive back Greg Stemrick Junior through at least the first four games of the 1983 regular season for admitted drug involvement.

Two months ago, Rozelle suspended Schlichter at least a year for "violating longstanding rules regarding gambling on league games and associating with illegal gambling activities." Rozelle said Schlichter acknowledged placing sizeable bets on at least 10 NFL games during his rookie 1982 season and the post-season.

"Schlichter's suspension was harsher due to gambling's direct attack on the integrity of the game," said league spokesman Jim Heffernan Tuesday. "We do see a degree of difference between gambling and drugs. Gambling goes to the heart of the onfield integrity and public confidence in the game.

City's apartment-building boom is far from over

In the two blocks of South Johnson Street between Burlington and Bowery streets there are 16 three-story, lookalike apartment buildings, all but five built in the last year or so.

The area around Johnson Street has become a showcase for an unprecedented boom in the Iowa City multiple-unit housing industry. And with record UI next three years, and an eager group of Iowa City investors, the no-holdsbarred construction is expected to continue for at least another year, according to Michael Kucharzak, director of the city's Housing and Inspection Department.

Right now we have more people looking for apartments than we have units available, so I don't think we're in any danger of overbuilding before we Kucharzak's office show that 1982 was a busy year for apartment builders; building permits were granted for 50 new structures with a total of 594 separate units. In contrast, only 373 new units were built in the preceding three years combined. The same statistics for 1983, enrollment figures projected for the reach the end of this cycle," Kuchar- however, indicate that the real building boom is still to come. In the first six months of this year, the city okayed the FIGURES RELEASED from construction of 48 new apartment buildings containing 538 units - 90 percent of last year's total. Norman Bailey, president of the Iowa City Apartment Owners Association, said he thinks the recent flurry of apartment construction will help bring the supply of available housing up to the level of demand.

"We're certainly going to see a if we overbuild," Kucharzak said change in the character of the housing "If ... we achieve some kind of market in Iowa City," he said. As more apartments are built, Bailey said, the market will "loosen

"If ... we achieve some kind of vacancy ratio (the Iowa City metropolitan area currently has a vacancy ratio of only 1.6 percent), it will make it so a person with cash in hand can make a choice of where he is going to live," he said.

The other winners in a housing glut, Kucharzak said, will be the owners of the newer "luxury" apartments

Dairy may expand, despite objections

By Mark Leonard

The Iowa City Board of Adjustment Wednesday decided not to revoke Home Town Dairies' building permit, which will enable it to expand its refrigeration storage facilities.

Two neighbors of Home Town Dairies, which is located at 1109 N. Dodge St., appealed the building permit because they feared the expansion plans at the dairy would increase noise problems in the area.

"They're a noisy operation," Andrew Isserman, 9 Caroline Court, said of Home Town Dairies. "And the issuance of this building permit makes us afraid the new construction will make it much noisier in the neighborhood." He added, however. that the dairy has taken steps in recent months that have reduced the level of noise in the area.

HOME TOWN DAIRIES sued Iowa City last year for $14 million, questiondinance. The case is still in litigation

When it came to a vote on revoking the building permit, board members Lea VanderVelde and Peter Fisher voted in favor of revoking the permit, while board chairman R. Scott Barker and Marcia Slager voted to uphold the issuance. The fifth member of the board, Robert Randall, did not attend. At the June 22 meeting of the board. Attorney Roger Colton, who represented Isserman and Anthony Frey, 15 Caroline Court, asked that Barker "voluntarily decline" voting on the appeal because of a potential conflict of Barker's father, Charles, owns approximately 10 acres of land near the airy and Colton argued at the time that if Barker and the board were to rule against the appeal, it would monetarily benefit Barker's father by increasing his property value.

At Wednesday's meeting, Barker said he had decided that no conflict of interest existed. "I have determined in my mind that I do not have any conflict of interest," Barker said.

He said any property owned by his father would not "sway or influence (his) vote or decision.'

THE ISSUE BEFORE the board was whether Home Town Dairies is conducting activities on its property that are not allowed under its present CH, commercial/highway, zoning. Under that zoning, a retail store is permitted, while industrial use is not.

Isserman said the dairy is not a 'creamery' because it no longer See Dairy, page 6

McGuire said Wednesday the release of Bakker on a charge of second-degree sexual abuse was "both a fortunate and unfortunate event.'

Sept. 6 as the sentencing date for Feeney, who could receive a maximum sentence of not more than 20 years in prison.

Jack Dooley, senior prosecuting attorney for Johnson County, said Wednesday that he would recommend the maximum sentence.

Dooley said that a new sentencing limit of five years for each count of the crime was established on July 1 by the Iowa legislature. Dooley said, however, that "Mr. Feeney was charged before that new date was established and should therefore be sentenced by the standards in existence at that time.'

DOOLEY SAID FALSE use of a financial instrument is currently listed as a Class D felony and said he expects Feeney's attorney, Sixth District Judge William R. Eads set Michael Kennedy, to argue the sentencing provision when Feeney returns to court for sentencing.

"The (maximum sentencing provision) changed after he was charged." Dooley said 'He was charged, tried and convicted so he should be sentenced under the penalties as they were (at the time of his hearing)," he

"I think the verdict was a just one," Dooley said. "We tried the case and he was found guilty. That's my job," he said.

Feeney could post a $5,000 bail today to avoid being held in the Johnson County Jail pending his sentencing date.

Feeney's attorney could not be reached for comment Wednesday.

SHIRES SAID THE fair is different from other county fairs. "First, there is no admission. The fair is also strictly a youth fair as far as the exhibits go. We also provide a lot of entertainment," he said. Shires said the large attendance at the fair might be due to it being one of the few free fairs left in the state. "There are not that many (counties) that have a fair with our attendance," he said. The livestock show will include exhibitions of Iowa City police statistics show an average of 36 arrests a month in the first six months of this year, with the driver's average age being 26. Statistics indicate that 118 men were arrested, compared with 32 women.

Coralville police have arrested approximately the same number of people each month this year as they arrested in all of 1982. Records show only nine arrests in 1982, compared with 55 arrests this year.

Coralville Police Chief Don Ewalt said part of the reason for the increase in OWI arrests is "because since the beginning of the year we've had an extra officer on the road. Normally we ally have two men on patrol."

Ewalt said the department's new policy regarding the patrol division includes having a "power shift" consisting of an officer working between the hours of 8 p.m. and 4 a.m. Since Coralville hired three new officers this summer, "we'll have an extra

The DOT has also reported that since July 1982, 17,094 Iowa drivers have lost their licenses for repeated drunken driver arrests and 80 percent of the arrests made by police in Iowa were of first-time offenders.

"I'd assume the number of arrests will increase as the year goes on," DOT spokesman Gus Horn said. "This situation is on every police officer's mind - not that it wasn't before - just now more than ever."

"POLICEMEN ARE becoming better-trained on knowing what to look for in traffic," Horn said. "Finding a probable cause for stopping drunks and then arresting them.

Horn said some Iowa areas have Alcohol Safety Action Program officers on duty who "just watch for drunk drivers in their areas." But the closest area with an ASAP division is Cedar Rapids, Horn said.

Iowa City had an ASAP unit three years ago, Miller said, and "it was turing in the highest conviction rate for OWI's in the state. When granting was done the state said we were too costly per unit and didn't refund us," he said.

'The ASAP was very successful for us and I thought losing funds because our cost per unit (patrolman) was high was a poor excuse," Miller said. "I thought the idea was to get the job done and we were doing that.'

Miller also said he expects the number of arrests to increase in proportion to the Iowa City population, which will expand considerably this fall with the return of UI students. "There's a direct relationship between the number of people in an area with the number of drunks on the road," he said.

Hanley has a strong biomedical background and was formerly a technician in an immunology lab. She was awarded the fellowship to help "hasten the society's 'countdown to cure' of the leukemia family of diseases," according to the Leukemia Society of America.

Leukemia is the overproduction of the body's white blood cells that fight disease within the body. The white blood cells don't respond to the body's control signals, resulting in the bone marrow producing too many cells, Hanley said.

THE OVERPRODUCTION OF the white blood cells throws off the body's delicate balance, making the leukemia victim more susceptible to disease. The cancer is highly toxic, depleting other cells of nutrients, and often there are not enough red blood cells in the bloodstream to carry oxygen through the body, Hanley said.

"If we can figure out what the chemical measures are and what they do, we might be able to supersede artificially to deliver the right signals to cells," she said.

Hanley will begin her research Monday. She will be trying to find out why white blood cells don't shut down antibody production during leukemia.

IN HERE Newspaperland are always enjoined against making the news "our personal toy." Yet for columnists and editors, there is one time - the time of leavetaking - at which such injunctions can be put aside. And so it is with this column today.

After tomorrow's TGIF, my tenure with The Daily Iowan ends. Ordinarily, this would be no big deal, but since I've been associated with this paper longer than most of the furniture here, a few parting comments and kudos seem ap-

IN THE ALMOST five years since I began working here, The Daily Iowan as grown from a frequently irresponsible and inordinately irascible college rag into a remarkably professional paper that exercises a significant voice in the community — no small achievement for what prospective employers still sniff at as "just a university

Granted, with those gains there have been some losses. Growing up all too often means shedding the irrational exuberance and the joy of newness that goes with youth in favor of a worldwiseness that merely inflates one's sense of self-importance while boring the hell out of others. I sometimes think that the DI has stepped too far down this road of "maturity" - while the DI of five years ago was usually bad, it was also usually, er, interesting.

I'd like to think that the arts/entertainment part of the DI has somehow trod between these extremes of fun and responsibility, that what we've been able to offer in the three years I've worked in this branch of the news has included a sense of excitement and arts/entertainment department with sideration of the art and entertainment available to us.

IN A COLUMN at the beginning of my year as arts/entertainment editor, I wrote: "Our job is to describe that relationship - a relationship between the observer and the observed that is itself as much a fact as any objective information about a work - as best we can, and, we would like to think, to create a similar relationship with our readers."

Judging from the comments I've read and heard over the course of this past year, we succeeded in that goal. A number of people thought that we in arts/entertainment were complete jerks; that was expected. A number of other people stopped to tell us that they liked what we were doing; that wasn't expected. In either case, we were happy to have made contact with our audience in some way. It's good to know that, bad or good, you're thought of as more than filler.

There are always people to condemn and to thank in these farewell missives. Fortunately, the former category is sparsely populated, and my southern Protestant upbringing leads me to believe that those few will rot in hell anyway. My words will add little to their future misery.

The latter category, however, is so full that it's impossible to do justice to all who deserve it. Nonetheless, some must be publicly acknowledged.

MY PREDECESSORS here both contributed immensely to my work here. Judith Green, though her name is still greeted with opprobrium in many places, was extremely generous in encouraging me to write and in making criticism that improved my work. Roxanne T. Mueller was equally generous in showing me the editorial ropes (if Judith were to see that metaphor, she'd have my skin) when I inherited Thanks must also be extended to the editors during my time here: Mike Connelly and Cindy Schreuder when I was a writer; Craig Gemoules and Derek Maurer when I was editor. Craig and Derek have put up with a great deal of "nitpickiness" and difficulty on my part, but they have always been helpful when I needed it and friendly when I didn't. I have profited from knowing both.

There are several people in the local and university community without whom this job would have been infinitely more difficult. No list would be complete without mentioning Tom Gesell of the Crow's Nest, Jim Harris of Prairie Lights Books, Randy Wood of the Bijou, Chuck Calmer and John Herbert of University Theatres and Connie Brothers of the Writers' Workshop. And the contribution Winston Barclay, of Arts Center Relations, has made to these pages has been immeasureable.

BUT MOST IMPORTANT of all are the people who have worked in the me this year. A full list would take up the rest of this page; I certainly hope all those who wrote for this department know my appreciation.

I owe more than I can say, however, to those seven who have worked as staff writers throughout the year, and whose talent, tolerance and good humor have made this job the pleasure it was: Marcia Butzel, Tom Doherty, Richard Panek, Suzanne Richerson, Paul Soucek, Craig Wyrick and, last but not least, John Voland, who will occupy this seat when the fall semester

I will be off for Sweden in a matter of weeks, where I will be instructing beamish young Swedish university students in the wonders of American literature and culture (not, as one local rumor has it, to pilot Russian submarines into Sundsvall harbor).

This goodbye, then, is more final and more scary than most. So much has to be ended; so much has to be left behind. But there are those things love, friendship, memories, imagination - that never end and that provide fertile space for new beginnings.

Iowa City and The Daily Iowan have given me all of those. I shall miss them

NYC Ballet is strong as ever

By Marcia Butzel Special to The Daily Iowan

ARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. - With the ecent death of choreographer George Balanchine, artistic director of the New York City Ballet and indisputably the principal force in 20th-century dance, the vitality of the company he co-founded with Lincoln Kirstein in 1941 might seem endangered.

But the NYCB's current season here at the openair Saratoga Performing Arts Center has been strong as ever, though perhaps more poignantly so, in the wake of their loss.

The future of the NYCB now rests on the shoulders of Peter Martins, ballet master-in-chief along with Jerome Robbins. Originally with the Royal Danish Ballet, Martins joined the company as principal dancer in 1970 and has choreographed over 14 ballets for it since 1977.

Martins' succession to the directorship is unusual in that, at the age of 36, he is at the peak of his dance career. But he will retire from dancing this fall. "I feel my performing career is not as important as the New York City Ballet," Martins has told the press. "There are 100 dancers there who need direction, support and help."

ROBBINS, 65, WILL in turn continue to choreograph but will have minimal administrative responsibility.

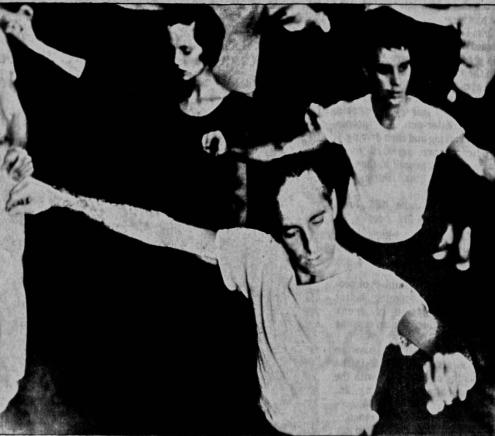

Every summer, the unique qualities of the Saratoga setting filter through the footlights and seem to urge the NYCB on to its greatest performances. Since the troupe's seasons began here in tandem with the Philadelphia Orchestra 17 years ago, the company has followed a progressive New York-style programming (the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy was notoriously conservative in scheduling for the Many dance evenings this summer followed a scheme of irreproachable classicism (Balanchine's "Concerto Barocco" to the music of Bach, for example) leading into musical modernism (Martins' choreography for Stravinsky's "Concerto for Two Solo Pianos") and finally into frothy entertainment ballets (Balanchine's "Who Cares?" performed to the music of Gershwin).

BALANCHINE, FOR WHOM dance was 'beyond the genre," worked in all these categories, infusing intense dramatic range into the most abstract of his modern works (the Webern "Episodes") or demystifying musical structure when at his most Hollywood ("Who Cares?"). The repertory he either created or encouraged others to contribute to the NYCB is the largest active repertory in the world.

It seems, then, that one of the two major questions the NYCB faces today concerns the creation and reconstitution of choreography. Will Robbins, Martins and others be able to work in (and beyond) extant genres, preserving yet not emulating Balanchine?

A second question, more problematic than the first because it concerns an entirely untested situation, is whether the company will continue to attract the kind of dancers that made

Dance

Balanchine's art possible.

THE EXEMPLARY EVENING for considering these and other questions was July 16. "Rossini Quartets," for Suzanne Farrell and Adam Lueders, showed Martins engaging the scores Balanchine encouraged but heading off into motifs and dancer relationships of his own. Lueders frequently spun Farrell in arabesque on flat supporting foot; instead of the conventional promenade of the ballerina en pointe, Farrell became a creature connected to a dimension usually denied females in ballet.

Martins has cultivated the idea of this "new woman" primarily through his work with Heather Watts, presently the strongest, wiriest, uninjured dancer in the company. Given the roles she has the workout with Ib Anderson and Jack Soto in "Concerto for Two Solo Pianos" or the pas de deux with the Dance Theatre of Harlem's Mel Tomlinson in Balanchine's "Agon" - she appears to thrive on physical extremes and overcasting. In addition to the streamlined cachet she gives the abstract ballets, Watts also appeared in Robbins' nostalgic "'I'm Old Fashioned'/The Astaire Variations," a tribute to the incomparable hoofer.

WHILE MARTINS SEEMS to be highly academic in his dance designs, elder statesman Robbins commutes between genres and creates new ones on the way. The difference from Balanchine, though, is that Robbins slowly works on enormous projects (the major Chopin piano works for "Dances at a Gathering;" the entire

"Goldberg Variations"), which makes it impossi-ble for him to cut his losses the way Balanchine ballet master-in-chief, along with Jerome Rob-did by burying flops under rapid production. The problem with "I'm Old Fashioned," though, is that Robbins reverses his usual practice of tackling a musical colossus and restrains himself to the single Jerome Kern song, which is woefully diluted into a score by Morton Gould. Nothing could be less worthy of Fred Astaire than unmusical music and an uninspired orchestra.

Still, the ballet has wonderful audio-visual potential, for it ends with a huge projection of Astaire and Rita Hayworth in the "I'm Old Fashioned" sequence from You Never Were Lovelier. The NYCB cast dances with the screen phantoms as the sound source switches from the larger-than-life screen to the louder-thansoundtrack live orchestra.

Except at this penultimate moment, the dancers seemed uncertain of the tradition they evoked. This made me wonder whether the same might someday happen with Balanchine, who, like Astaire, was inseparable from the dancers and the contexts with which he so instinctively yet so inscrutably made dance happen. And made people want it to happen.

Vacation is time for a summer read

By Ken Harper pecial to The Daily Iowan

TITH SUMMER school drawing to a close and beaches beckoning, the required article for the conspicuous seaside (lakeside?) sitter may not be a suit of seemly means, but a book. Let me suggest several, some new, some back in print.

Publisher Robert Giroux remarked earlier this year that aside from certain Russians or Latin Americans, the most exciting, the most urgent writing in the world today was coming out of countries where German is the literary

His appraisal seems apt, particularly considering the work of Swiss novelistplaywright Max Frisch. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich has brought out Frisch's latest novella, Bluebeard, which concerns an aging physician on trial for the murder of his sixth wife, a call girl.

Testifying both for and against the accused are his five ex-wives. The crime that Herr Doktor Schaad has committed is not as clear as the various guilts that surface in the course of examination. The question arises: What did he do vs. what does he think he did?

The idea of Bluebeard is arresting, but no character emerges to match the portraits, cameos or sketches that Frisch provides in Sketchbook 1946-1949 or Sketchbook 1966-1971 (both Harcourt Brace Jovanovich), recently reissued in paperback.

FRISCH'S SCENES of post-World War II Germany and his deliberated opinions of such politically active German writers as Bertolt Brecht and Gunter Grass make the sketchbooks compelling mosaics of thought. Frisch has a light, deft stroke capable of cutting through various human densities.

Books

"Dense" is one word that applies to Thomas Mann's writing, although "thorough" might be more to the point. To wit: Reflections of a Nonpolitical Man (Ungar), adroitly translated into English for the first time by Iowa State's Walter D.

Mann originally published the book in 1918 as his contribution to the German war effort. The title is deceptive, at least for contemporary readers. Mann was by no means a disinterested observer; he was, at the time he wrote the book, a stolid defender of German culture over and above the politics of popular

His thorough discussion of the connotations of words so glibly chucked about these days -'politics," "democracy," "civilisation" have the comprehensive sweep of, say, Hannah Arendt, but with Mann's own pronounced Nietzchean bias.

HE BEMOANS THE attempts of intellectuals to westernize Germany, the shift from "music to democracy," the dissipation of clarity into the cacophony of the crowd. Although Mann later came to support the Weimar Republic and fled Nazi Germany, eventually becoming an American citizen, he never recanted these observations, which are acute, probing, and in Mann's characteristic

Vladimir Nabokov's Lectures on Don Quixote (Harcourt Brace Jovanovich) are droll and then some. The book, based on Nabokov's teaching at Cornell, is a companion to the previously published Lectures on Literature and Lectures on Russian Literature. Whether you agree that Sancho Panza is the "Pig Belly on Crane Legs," you'll savor Nabokov's "sensuous thought which is another term for authentic art."

And then there's a Persian Russian; that is, a Russian from Abkhazia. Where? Read Fazil Iskander's Sandro of Chegem (Ardis/Vintage), and Abkhazia will live in your eye in the form of Uncle Sandro, a dervish of a man, dancer (until that proved politically unhealthy), lover of nobility (until her husband shot him, but not dead) and storyteller

SUSAN BROWNBERGER'S translations should promote Iskander to the front ranks of Russian literature available in English - an act of cultural good will in a time when there is a tendency to "regard them" as bogeymen

Turning to native literature, Richard Farina's Been Down So Long Looks Like Up to Me (Penguin) has recently returned to paperback form. It's the 1960s novel that many folks have tried to write only after forgetting - or ignoring - that Farina had already written it.

Farina's protagonist, Gnossos Pappadopoulis, should attain the stature of a stoned Holden Caulfield, flipping out over the golden girl in knee socks as the campus (Cornell) rocks out in rebellion. Actually, Been Down So Long has more to do with hopped-up beatniks and the 1950s than with Vietnam and campus protest, but so what: It's a frenetic, energetic whistle of a book.

(It also has an introduction by Thomas Pynchon, Farina's good buddy from Cornell, who gives the lowdown on a party the two attended, one as E. Hemingway, the other as F.S. Fitzgerald. The stuff legends are made Straus Giroux) is a slower novel than Farina's, but it has a "texture" that sets it apart. McLanahan's Harry Eastep is 15 going on horny, and the novel sways between his sweet ineptitude and Monk McHornung's gross successes in Needmore, Ky., back a couple of decades when, I suspect, McLanahan lived through both. Ah, youth.

SOBER UP. You will when read Jean Thompson's My Wisdom (Franklin Watts), a novel of the decade just past, when a simple M-80 mindlessly thrown could become a political act when shoved down a toilet of a rip-off institution.

Thompson's main character, Mary Anne, logs a couple of thousand miles and more heady experience than any of her male peers. The tone is patient, the mood measured, and the net feeling far more pensive and provocative than novels covering similar territory and similar times.

The slow miseries of Midwestern family life mark Rebecca Hill's Blue Rise Sycamore Mall (Morrow), a novel following the breakdown of domestic conventions. The "I" of the novel is brooding much in the manner of a Walker Percy narrator, but more acerbic, and the brevity of Hill's prose gives it a vigor underscoring the sharp ironies between her vision and the world that intends to absorb her.

Finally, anyone who hasn't attended to Alice Walker's The Color Purple (Harcourt Brace Jovanovich) should. The first-person narrator (again) is a woman from the wrong side of the tracks for whom life as poor, black, young and pregnant is anything but a divine comedy. Oh, youth. Oh, help.

The moral of the story? Read and be happy, giggling; read and be sad, snarling. But read. Any or all of the above.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Cuba (UPI) President Fidel Castro's support for other Latin states trying to stave off U.S. intervention in Central America shows the limitations of Cuban support for Nicaragua.

In a major speech Tuesday commemorating the 30th anniversary of his revolutionary movement, Castro fulminated against U.S. threats to Cuba and the U.S. naval maneuvers off Nicaragua. Castro said he was increasing Cuban militia forces by another 1 million people, so that 6 million of the nation's nearly 10 million population would have military training by the middle of 1984.

In his 90-minute speech, however, Castro never offered more than moral support for Nicaragua, a sister socialist country whose leaders have close ties with Cuba.

Washington also has charged that Cuba already has 2,000 military advisers in Nicaragua, a charge that deputy Foreign Minister Ricardo Alarcon vigorously denied only hours before Castro spoke.

WITH U.S. NAVAL battlegroups steaming toward both coasts of Nicaragua and with joint maneuvers involving up to 4,000 U.S. troops in neighboring Honduras — Nicaragua's bitter enemy - scheduled for August, Castro's speech provided him the platform to announce concrete support for Instead, Castro only said that the U.S. moves amounted to "a true spreading of American troops in Central America.'

Castro recounted how Nicaragua conceded to the call of the so-called Contadora group for multilateral negotiations to solve Central American tensions only three days after the appeal was issued.

The four Contadora nations - Mexico, Venezuela, Colombia and Panama - since January have been seeking a way to bring peace to the entire Central American region. The group is named after the island where the nations met in January.

Castro also cited his agreement with the Contadora Group's appeal to Cuba to become involved in easing Central American tensions

"We are in open agreement with the pronouncements of Nicaragua ... and express our willingness to work with that country with the aim of achieving a negotiated political agreement for the conflicts in the area," Castro said.

CASTRO'S ANNOUNCEMENT that he was willing to work for peace was expected, but his failure to follow up, by warning that Cuba would support Nicaragua if the United States attacked, showed that the nation does not want any confrontation with

With the U.S. government openly saying the naval exercises are a practice run for a possible blockade, Castro must be aware that President Reagan would respond quickly to any attempt to break it.

There would be few other options available to assist Nicaragua if Reagan does decide to stage a blockade, thereby tightening the noose he is now dangling in front of Managua's ruling Sandinistas.

Construction

located near the UI campus.

"I don't believe there will ever be a problem renting the new units with all the amenities like air conditioning and microwaves. Look, the students at the university are bitching to the city that rents in these places are too high, but they're paying them anyway," he said.

Many of the complexes within walking distance of classes had been completely rented before ground was broken for construction.

The city has already cashed in on the benefits of the housing boom by getting rid of old buildings to make room for the new complexes. The new construction "has done wonders for our tax base," Kucharzak

THE SMALL INVESTOR who depends on rental income to supplement retirement or teaching income would be the loser in a housing glut, Kucharzak said.

'It's the older, smaller complexes without all the amenities that will have problems. And the other ones suffering will be the ones at a distance from campus because the problem of transportation will always be there for students. You'll probably see rent reductions in some of these units," he said.

Kucharzak said the larger,

'professional" investor has a chance to escape a housing glut relatively unscathed.

"First of all, you have to realize that those who understand the market will always make money," he said. "There are still some 'white elephants' out there, but the fact remains that if they can't adjust to changes in the market, they're gonna

But many Iowa City landlords are not looking to make money when they build apartments - they're looking to lose it, he

Current tax laws allow these investors, usually groups of professionals with other sources of income, to invest large amounts of money into housing projects, accelerate the building's depreciation, then show large losses that can be deducted from income

"IF A BUILDING is used as a tax shelter, it can show a loss as soon as it's built." Kucharzak said.

Robert Hibbs, a past president of the Apartment Owners Association, said the tax situation in Iowa City "encourages the construction of apartments that might not otherwise be built here.

"Many investors wouldn't consider building here if it wasn't for tax purposes," he said.

An interesting situation will develop in five or six years, Kucharzak said, when the current crop of new complexes has generated enough sustained income to start

When the buildings start to show profits instead of losses, they will become tax liabilities instead of tax shelters. At that point it will no longer benefit landlords to raise rents because higher rents would only mean more taxable income.

SEVERAL APARTMENT BUILDINGS in Iowa City are now entering the five-year profit zone," and, as a result, rents for those buildings were not increased this

The willingness of Iowa City's student population to pay high rents has also placed burden on families and elderly persons who want to live close to campus or the business district, Kucharzak said.

"As long as students will pay $550 a month for a two-bedroom apartment, there's no way a family can compete. Everything's being built for multiplestudent occupancy, so the small families, the elderly and low-income people are now being forced to look elsewhere for housing. And these people are finding that they need government assistance to pay rent."

Arms-loaded ships sailing to Nicaragua for delivery

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Soviet freighter carrying transport helicopters is the first of about a dozen ssian and other East Bloc vessels that are bound for Nicaragua loaded with military equipment, Pentagon officials said Wednesday.

President Reagan made the disclosure about the Soviet ship at his news conference Tuesday night and Pentagon officials identified it as the 13,150-ton Alexander Ulyanov, a 460-foot vessel built in East Germany and flying the Soviet flag.

The officials, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said the Ulyanov is the vanguard of about a dozen cargo ships, some of them Soviet, that are headed for Nicaragua carrying tanks, helicopters, howitzers, rockets, trucks and electronic gear. They will arrive "in the next few weeks," one official

THE NUMBER OF ships represents a vast increase in the amount of military supplies destined for Nicaragua, which so far this year has received nine seaborne deliveries of weapons, the officials said. They said there were only five shiploads of arms unloaded in the Central American nation last

The Pentagon officials said there is no indication whether the buildup is geared toward preparations for a major Nicaraguan offensive against U.S.backed Nicaraguan rebels based across the border in Honduras or a neighboring country.

At the same time, officials have said the Soviet supply of arms to Cuba has decreased markedly, with only 20,000 tons of materiel arriving on the island during the first six months of the year. About

THE OFFICIALS SAID there are about 7,500 Cuban advisers in Nicaragua, an increase of about 500 during the past month. Of the total, 5,500 are civilian and the remainder military, they said.

But Miguel Bolanos, identified as a former Nicaraguan intelligence official who defected to the United States in May, told several reporters at a two-hour meeting arranged by U.S. officials that between 1,500 to 2,000 Cubans in Nicaragua were trained military personnel acting undercover as teachers.

"They would act, in a time of emergency, as the first foreign troops in Nicaragua," he said. "The teachers really are regular troops who are undercover. They already could be fighting" against the Nicaraguan rebels, known as "contras."

BOLANOS SAID THOSE advisers are based in an apartment complex about eight miles outside Managua, the capital, where Soviet-made Kalachnikov rifles, communications gear and other equipment are stored in two apartments.

As teachers, he said, the advisers go into the countryside to instruct peasants in reading, writing and Marxist ideology

Bolanos said the presence of the contras along the Honduran-Nicaraguan border has been "breaking up the channels" of weapons supply for leftist in-surgents fighting the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador. The arms are sent from Nicaragua.

"They have trouble now. They cannot send 40 to 50 guerrillas with a shipment - only squads of six or seven members," each one carrying four or five ri-fles slung over their shoulders, he said.

U.S. maneuvers could turn to mission of attack — Stone

U.S. envoy Richard Stone told a group of Salvadoran legislators Wednesday that the mission of U.S. battleships off the coast of Nicaragua could change from a military exercise into a mission of "The presence of the flotilla of ships is for the defense of the region but it could also serve for attack," Stone told the legislators in a meeting overheard by a group of journalists. "Nicaragua is concerned and confused, and our mission is to help the Salvadoran government and to pressure Nicaragua," he said. Two of the legislators at the meeting with Stone confirmed the envoy's comments. They asked not to Stone did not say what occurrences could transform the mission of the battle group from its stated purpose of conducting military maneuvers into one involving actual combat. HIS REMARKS SEEMED to contradict comments President Reagan made in a nationally televised press conference Tuesday. "We're not planning a war and I don't think that's going to happen at all," the president said, adding that the naval maneuvers off the Nicaraguan coast The president also disputed charges the U.S. military exercises in the area were a prelude to war and chided critics for creating a "drumbeat of confusion" about U.S. intentions and military moves in the The White House had no comment on Stone's discussions with Salvadoran legislators. "The president's viewpoint is obvious," said White House spokesman Peter Roussel. "The exercises are not directed at any other nation. The president's position on this is well-known. President Reagan's Central American policy has centered on pressuring Nicaragua's leftist government into halting its support for Salvadoran guerrillas and into fulfilling promises to hold free

STONE MET EARLIER in El Salvador with Panamanian President Ricardo de la Espriella, Colombian President Belisario Betancur and Salvador's Provisional President Alvaro Magana to discuss several efforts to bring peace to the region. Stone later told reporters that "a dialogue with the guerrillas" was possible, but he refused to make any omments about his two frustrated attempts to meet with the left in Costa Rica and Panama. "I do not have pessimistic or optimistic predictions. The search for peace is very complex and very difficult," Stone said.

The administration requested $8 million for improvements to an airfield in La Cieba, Honduras, but the legislation withholds the money until the Pentagon provides Congress a report outlining all military construction planned or completed in Central America.

Last year, the Senate provided $13 million for a similar contingency base at Comayagua, Honduras, but according to Sen. Jim Sasser, D-Tenn., some of the money actually was used for another location in northwest Honduras.

In addition, Sasser said the Air Force is building a radar site south of the Honduran capital, using money from another Pentagon budget account. And he said there are reports the administration wants to build a $150 million air and naval base on the Atlantic coast

MacPhail to rule today on Brett pine tar controversy

NEW YORK (UPI) - American League President Lee MacPhail will rule on the George Brett bat controversy Thursday, four days after umpires nullified Brett's two-run, ninth-inning homer in Yankee American League spokesman Bob Fishel said MacPhail will announce his decision at 10:30 a.m., Iowa time, today at the American League offices.

Brett, Kansas City's All-Star third baseman, slammed a dramatic two-out home run against New York ace reliever Rich Gossage on Sunday that appeared to give the Royals a 54 lead in the ninth. But the Yankees protested and home plate umpire Tim McClelland invalidated the homer, ruling Brett's bat had pine tar above the 18-inch mandate found in the baseball rulebook.

The Royals filed an official protest Monday, claiming baseball rules do not support the nullification of a home run because of excessive pine tar on the bat.

Cubs' Durham sidelined

CHICAGO (UPI) - Chicago Cubs outfielder Leon Durham will be hospitalized for at least two days after suffering severe back spasms before the start of Wednesday's game against the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Durham was taken to Northwestern Memorial Hospital about an hour before the start of the game suffering what team doctor Jacob Suker described as 'severe back spasms.'

We're going to see what happens. Anytime you get anything like that it's going to take some time for rehabilitation," Suker said. "It's a thing that hits you right away.

The Cubs, who already have outfielder Gary Woods on the disabled list, have not decided whether to do the same with Durham.

BROKEN ARROW, Okla. (UPI) - The U.S. Women's Open begins in the heat and humidity of suburban Tulsa Thursday over a rugged golf course made even tougher by temperatures expected to soar past the 100-degree mark on each of the tournament's four days.

A field of 152 players will test the rolling Cedar Ridge Country Club course.

Many people believe one of the younger stars on the women's tour will have a chance to break through and win the prestigious championship.

That group includes defending champion Janet Anderson and 1980 Rookie of the Year Patty Sheehan, who has won twice this year and is third on the money winning list.

Strock may leave Dolphins

United Press International

The Miami Dolphins may soon have no choice but to discontinue "WoodStrock," their two-headed quarterback system. Miami Coach Don Shula has used the cool professionalism of Don Strock to bail out a struggling David Woodley numerous times in the past few seasons, but conditions seem ripe for a new Dolphins' situation at quarterback.

At Tulsa, Okla., officials said Wednesday Strock is considering contract offers from both the Dolphins and the Oklahoma Outlaws of the U.S. Football League and may make a decision this week. Dolphins' owner Joe Robbie said Strock was offered a two-year contract. Robbie also announced that Jim Jensen signed a multi-year contract with Miami Tuesday. Jensen is a third-year quarterback from Boston University. The Dolphins already have Woodley and first-round draft choice Dan Marino un-

Club Muscatine outfielder Mike Baker beats the throw on intramural softball final, Wednesday. Art Majors defeated an infield hit in the bottom of the first inning of the men's Club Muscatine, 13-10, to win the summer title.

Protest mars IM softball men's final

By Steve Riley Assistant Sports Editor

The summer men's intramural playoffs were supposed to wind down to an end Wednesday night. And they did ... well, they sort of did.

Before this starts sounding like it was written by Mr. Kimball of Green Acres fame, here's the story:

Art Majors defeated The Dogs in one semifinal game, 5-4. The other semifinal appeared to been won by Club Muscatine over Contenders, 12-2, until Contenders filed a protest.

According to IM summer softball coordinator Bob Denney, Contenders filed the official protest over who they thought was an ineligible player. Denney said: "In order to be eligible, the player has to be a member of the faculty/staff or have been enrolled in summer classes, be registered for next fall, or have attended classes last spr-

THE PLAYER IN question was Club Muscatine's shortstop and clean-up hitter, who was indentified as Ian McCloud on the score sheet. But Denny said the Contenders team was "saying he was Larry Silverstein." Contenders claimed that Larry Silverstein is Club Muscatine left fielder Lee Silverstein's

"They just filed a protest," Denney said. "We'll make the decision tomorrow. We figured we might as well play the game until we find out if the guy meets intramural eligibility re-Contenders Captain Sam Moskowitz offered no comment on the situation. Club Muscatine pitcher Joe Cuddy said: "I don't know anything about it." He later added, "We're just out here to have fun. Fun is what it is all about."

plicated situation was Art Majors' 13-10 win over Club Muscatine in the last game, at least for now considered the championship game.

Intramurals

After both teams scored four runs in the first inning and none in the second. Club Muscatine unleashed a three-run attack in the third.

Then the slap-hitting, aggressive-running Art Majors struck for their big inning - five runs in the third. They strung together three singles, a double and a triple in the inning.

But a three-run fifth inning, and then a single run in the seventh buried Club

CLUB MUSCATINE came into the final with a 5-2 record, if the semifinal win over Contenders is counted. According to catcher Rick Spear, the team's "organizational base" is where four of the team members live, at 1924 Muscatine Ave., in Iowa City.

Chicago rookie hits press with 'Kittle-isms'

By Joel Glass Special to The Daily Iowan

CHICAGO - The Chicago White Sox' Ron Kittle has made headlines throughout the baseball world this season in his bid for American League Rookie of the Year honors. The Sox slugger is among the league leaders in home runs, RBI's and was selected to play in the 1983 All-Star game.

A tremendous success story follows Kittle on his road to fame and some of the headlines have read, 'Kittle released from Dodgers,' 'Crushed ver-tebrae found in Kittle's back,' 'Tryout with Sox for Kittle' and 'Kittle named to All-Star squad.'

Kittle is making the most of his second life on the diamond, after a crushing blow ocurred when Los Angeles released him and he went back home to work in the steel mills with his father. That was before a tryout with the White Sox and after he had two vertebrae fused back together.

NOW, HOWEVER, he has fun once again playing the game. Besides letting his bat do his talking, the 25-year old Gary, Ind., native has the up-most fun in handling the media with his own special style. He is one that has the quality Casey Stengel and Yogi Berra had in providing the press with what has now adopted the name of "Kittle-

On facing new pitchers: "I swing at everything, that way the pitchers don't know how to pitch me.

As Kittle has been receiving more attention, the press inquires more about his past and Kittle keeps adding to his growing list of quotable quotes.

"It must have been from playing baseball, because I don't remember getting hit by a car." Kittle said about the injury that nearly ended his playing
