Act should be invoked

The Reagan administration's continuing attempts to ease Middle East tensions have now stirred a Middle East tensions have now stirred a domestic conflict of As violence flared again last week in the Lebanese capitol of Bervit, the American contingent of the multinational Beruit, the American contingent of the multinational peacekeeping force - set in place last summer to aid the struggling Lebanese army - came under increasing fire from anti-government forces. By mid-week two U.S. Marines wer dead, the first American casualties of the crisis in Lebanon. The deaths have prompted charges that the continued presence of the 1,200 U.S. troops in Beruit should undergo full congressional review under the terms of the War Powers Act of 1973 . The act -a legislative response to escalation of troop deployment in Vietnam - provides that American troops deployed "into hostilities or into situations where imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated by the circumstances" must be withdrawn within 60 to 90 days unless Congress approves continued deployment. Clearly, the terms apply to the American presence in Lebanon. While admitting, euphemistically, that a "generalized pattern of violence" has occurred, Secretary of State George Schultz has violence has occurred, Secretary of State George Schultz has denied that the War Powers Act should be invoked. At the same denied that hever, he says the president is complying with the Act by time, "reporting" to Congress.
Such inconsistencies can only compound an already complex situation. Instead of agravating the issue and provoking internal situation. Instead of aggravating the issue and provoking internal tension, the administration should invoke the act, recognizing tension, the administration should invoke the act, recognizing Congress' wisdom in deciding (in light of the Vietnam experience) that decisions concerning American lives are better made collectively than by presidential mandate.

Ideologically correct?

The shouting match between the Reagan administration and feminist groups that took place when former justice department aide Barbara Honneger denounced the administration's policies work best in eliminating discriminatory laws anainst women Rather, it has demonstrated the vested interest each side has in ideology.
Both groups handled the situation in a very tacky manner. The administration, eager to undermine Honneger's credibility, informed the press that she had previously engaged in such ridiculous actions as dressing up in a "bunny suit" and also resorted to casting doubt on her motivations for denouncing the president's programs. Leaders of the National Organization for "smoking gun" proving Reagan's policies have hurt women, not only maintained that Honneger had selfless motivations just short of sainthood, but also gave the former aide credit for an extraodinary amount of knowledge and insight on both women's issues and governmental policy.
It is easy to imagine what would have happened if Honneger had said at the press conference she thought Reagan's policies were working. The administration would have put her on a pedestal and no mention of her "bunny" escapade would have ever been made. Reagan lackey and rated her credibility as soming less Reagan lackey and Honneger's claims may be completely true, completely false, or lie somewhere between the two extremes. However, neither the administration or NOW has reacted to them with even the semblence of objectivity. Rather, both have shown themselves to be eager to smear or praise a person, regardless of the circumstances, depending on whether what they say is circumstances, depending on ideologically "correct" or not.
