Secretary of Interior Watt quits

Resignation is not unexpected

Iowa City, Des Moines (AP) — Interior Secretary James Watt resigned Wednesday after more than a year in office.

The move came after an all-day meeting of Cabinet ministers, who have been discussing Watt's performance and the administration's strategy for the energy crisis.

Watt's resignation was announced by President Reagan, who said, "I deeply appreciate the service of James Watt, but I believe it is in the best interests of the country and the administration to have new leadership." Watt had been under increasing pressure from both Republicans and Democrats over his handling of energy policy.

Watt's resignation was the result of a series of controversies that have dogged his tenure. These include his handling of the energy crisis, his support for the coal industry, and his opposition to environmental regulations.

Watt unpopularity throughout term

United Press International

From the start, Interior Secretary James Watt's tenure was marked by conflict and controversy. Watt's approach to energy policy was controversial, and his handling of the energy crisis was criticized.

Watt was also criticized for his failure to address the nation's environmental problems. His administration's policies, which were widely seen as pro-industry and anti-environment, led to widespread protests and demonstrations.

But Watt's opponents on issues such as national parks and public lands were generally cautious about Watt's departure, saying they feared that the new administration might not have the same commitment to environmental protection.

UI's role in 'research park' is questioned

By Kirk Brown

Although the president of a Cole College board member and the governor have both expressed interest in the project, some community leaders have raised concerns about the proposal.

The governor has said that the project is a "priority" and that it will be a "national asset." However, some community leaders have expressed concerns about the project's impact on the local community and the potential for displacement of residents.

Other concerns include the project's cost and the lack of clear plans for its development. The governor has said that the project will be a "national asset," but some community leaders have expressed concerns about the project's potential for displacement of residents.

Conference sensitizes UI deans

By Mary Tarbox

Iowa City Press-Citizen

With regrettful but necessary dissemination of previous awareness, the University of Iowa has become the latest educational institution to initiate a program sensitizing students to the importance of recognizing and addressing discrimination.

The program, titled "The Other Side of the Coin," began last month and is aimed at sensitizing students to the issues of race, gender, and sexuality. The program is designed to educate students on the importance of recognizing and addressing discrimination, and to provide them with the tools to do so.

"We are excited to have this program in place," said Dr. James Smith, director of the program. "It is important that we educate our students on the importance of recognizing and addressing discrimination, and this program will help them do just that."
Students encouraged to drink responsibly

By Jeff Eichstaedt

For many UI students and faculty members the way to achieve good spirits is part of a traditional, sometimes hazardous, alcohol culture.

At the Alcohol Awareness Week, several UI groups held a day-long symposium as part of a national awareness week in hopes of educating people about the dangers of alcohol and keep them from becoming one in the rest.

Cheryl Harington, who helped organize the workshop, is a student and a social worker.

"We want our students to learn the importance of setting personal limits when it comes to alcohol consumption," said Terry Kelly, the original RVAP director.

"The first line was one of the first of a series of alcohol-related events, and we welcome the interest of the community in the issue," said RVAP director.

The latest of a series is a symposium called "The Crisis of Responsible Drinking," scheduled for Oct. 22. The symposium will feature presentations by UI faculty members and professionals in the alcohol field.

"We hope that the symposium will help students to understand the problems associated with alcohol consumption," said Terry Kelly, the original RVAP director.

"The symposium will also provide an opportunity for students to share their experiences and discuss the challenges they face in dealing with alcohol-related problems," said Terry Kelly, the original RVAP director.

Court orders Councillor Ehmsen to appear for financial review

By Alan Seckel

Cedar Rapids City Councilor Barry Ehmsen has been ordered to appear for a civil action concerning Iowa City Council District 4, by Iowa City District Court Judge Brian Scott.

Scott said that he will have an initial hearing in the case at 8 a.m. Tuesday in courtroom 3A at the Johnson County Courthouse.

The case concerns the city of Iowa City's ability to demand the councilman appear before a judge.

Ehmsen, who said he will not respond to the case in court, declined to comment on the matter.

'Impeachment by the council would be a disaster, my unemployment would be in jeopardy.'

The councilman is accused of violating city ethics rules.

The city council voted in 2006 to censure Ehmsen after he voted against a plan to move to Oaknoll Retirement Home in 2006 rather than their monthly payment schedule as a regular retirement home.

Ehmsen said the suit was a threat to the councilman's reputation.

Moral obligation

As the civil discontent mounts in the Philippines, with the recent disturbances now including the martial law, it becomes clearer than ever that our U.S. policy toward that country must change. That pattern is emerging now in the Philippines. And the Philippines is a country that is extremely important to the United States. The two largest American racial bases are located there. But not all American interest in the Philippines is toward the Philippines. America now that until after World War II and after Pearl Harbor piled against America's interests in the Philippines. They placed their government after the United States' and American democratic ideals were embraced. Indeed, and here demands that United States assist the people in restoring democracy. President Reagan should send a high-ranking and able representative to the Philippines to work out an agreement with Marcos that would win him the approval of the Congress for free elections, supervised by the United States, within nine months. Under the old constitution Marcos would not be eligible for another term and he should be permitted to step down after the elections. The United States should make it clear that it will not tolerate intimidation of any party or candidates and that it will not recognize a military coup. If such steps are not taken immediately, President Marcos should be called.

Northwestern coach Bill Robinson, who had broken the record, later said: "I think we're going to have to work on that one."
Pippin is fairytale with bad taste

By Katheryn Mackie

Originally, Pippin may be a fairytale, but with the addition of music, dancing, and a few modern elements, it becomes more of a modern fairytale. The story follows Pippin, a young man who is torn between his desire to follow in his father's footsteps and his own dreams and aspirations. The play is set in the year 1609, in the village of Enghien, and it explores the themes of choice, free will, and destiny.

The production features a talented cast, including a young man who plays Pippin. The costumes are beautiful, and the set design is stunning, with a mix of traditional and modern elements. The music is enchanting, with a blend of traditional and contemporary sounds.

The performances are exceptional, with a young man who plays Pippin standing out as a standout. The rest of the cast is equally impressive, with strong vocals and dancing.

Overall, the production is a must-see for anyone who loves theatre and fairytale. It is a beautiful and thought-provoking production, and it will leave you with a new appreciation for the power of storytelling.
