Lowell would twitch in his coffin could he have seen the fallout and viewership spewed by The Day After, the made-for-television movie broadcast Sunday night on ABC-TV.
Ever since the fireball of the nuclear age burst, science fiction writers and filmmakers - always concerned with our gravest nightmares - have had a powerful subject matter to mix with their established combinations of overgrown insects, space adventures, Peter Lorre-esque scientists, alien invaders, out-of-

Dark-horse gitt

Iowa's Democratic leaders took a strong step Saturday to promote dark-horse candidacies for the presidency. In violation of national party rules and with much fanfare, state Democratic leaders voted to hold their party's 1984 precinct caucuses on Feb. 20, a week earlier than national party rules caucuses on Feb. 20, a week earier than national party rules allow. But who will win the fight over first-in-the-nation primaries or caucuses remains to be decided.
Of more significance in the grand scheme of presidential campaigns is the state party's vote to change caucus rules to say that a candidate must get votes from just 15 percent of people attending to qualify for delegates. The state Democratic committee crafted a way for lesser-known candidates to come to the state, campaign and turn out less than 20 percent of caucus something less feasible in 1984 with eight announced candidates vying for votes - and stiir quaiify as something more than a non-viable group." viable group."
The old rul
necessary 20 percent to regroup with supporters of one or more of the other candidates or to form an uncommitted group, thus understating the real support of some candidates while overstating the support of the top two or three.
The new 15 percent rule will give underdogs, such as Ernest Hollings or Gary Hart, a better chance in lowa. And with all the caucus media hoopla, the dark horse - like Jimmy Carter in 1976 and George Bush in 1980 - again has a chance to walk from the Teresa Hunter

| Antonin Dvorak's "American" Quartet for strings returns home to lowa on Dec. 1 , as the renowned Cleveland Quartet brings the work to Hancher Auditorium for an 8 p.m. recital that also includes performances of works by Schubert and contemporary American composer Samuel Adler.  During the years 1893-4, Dvorak was working in New York as director of the newly-founded National Conservatory of Music, but he spent his summers in the Czech village of Spillville, Ia., where he felt right at home among his compatriots. The composer was so glad of the national reinforcement that he immediately set to work on a string quartet, and he finished it a mere two weeks later.  The work incorporates several Indian themes which Dvorak heard from natives living in a nearby reservation. It is for this reason that ine work is duv-ter the quartet is quintessentially Czech - and Dvorakian as well. |
