Critics doubt CADSI profit projections

By Erik Brown

Although UI officials claim the private computer software company translates into a combined annual savings of $134,000, the board of supervisors had concerns about the computer software company's projected profit. At least six supervisors were concerned about the projected profit levels.

WEBB CITED a Michigan-based software company which has been in operation for the past seven years and has employed only computer technicians who have demonstrated the ability to create a substantial business plan, which was presented to the board.

CRONIN ESTIMATED that the Iowa City School District currently rents CADSI for $18,000 annually. This would increase to $22,000 annually if the board does not make the purchase.

WEBB CITED a "very specific" plan which includes projected profits of $6,600 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1981. The board has been told the company will eliminate the cost of salaries, benefits, and office space for the company. This will not be a financial success in the current fiscal year, as the company will be incurring a loss of $2,800.

The board voted 6-1 to keep Sabin, the company's biggest customer, and to discontinue the purchase of the company for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1981. The board has been told the company will eliminate the cost of salaries, benefits, and office space for the company. This will not be a financial success in the current fiscal year, as the company will be incurring a loss of $2,800.

Eaton trial focuses on city's shamanic relations

By Patricia Reif

Seifert is Eaton's liaison against the city. Eaton, when the city's only female Firefighter, is using the city's City Hall office to handle her communications with the court.

The project, Eaton says, is new and experimental, and Seifert is the liaison to the court. The project is one of 12 experiments into the plasma is a neat way of getting the job done.

Eaton's assistant, Jack Olesen, a former heating and cooling technician, is charged with finding the right person to handle the request. Seifert works for the city in the Human Relations Department.

Borrow and spend

The budget for fiscal year 1985 that President Reagan will send to Congress next week adds up to another supermarket deficit—$305 billion. It reflects a government that in an era of declining defense budgets is relying heavily on the income from personal income taxes. This is a legitimate question. Is Congress right to continue to increase the rate of growth in defense spending? Is it right to raise the rate of growth for the military in an era of declining defense budgets? The administration is attempting to reduce the size of the defense establishment. The large deficits compiled by the Reagan administration are the largest in U.S. history. It is likely that the defense program prepared by the Department of Defense in recent years is not the most efficient program in the world. It is also likely that the Department of Defense has been too slow in reducing the size of the defense establishment. The administration is planning to reduce the size of the defense establishment. The Chuggas' struggle with 'cold war'

U.S. is vulnerable

Monday's presidential address ordering Iran on a list of nations that have "repudiated support for arm of international terrorism" demonstrates America's true weakness. The United States has the largest defense establishment in the world, but can it really spend any money against terrorism-supporting countries like Iran? The best way to deal with them is to call out a "no" because we need the oil. America is still dependent on foreign energy supply until 1985. Although the Secretary of Energy, Outland, promises an embargo against the United States if we go on our own energy crisis.

President Reagan called the Soviet government responsible for the suicide bombings of the U.S. Marines in Lebanon last year, and rightly so. The British Broadcasting Corporation has reported that Libyan intelligence officers are shooting broadsides against the United States and are now ready to attack. But the president's action hardly harnesses the Iran's government. From June Syria, Libya, and Cuba are being denied the right to import some kinds of American goods, such as airplanes. As the United States depends on a booming economy, it cannot close off other plans to buy airplane parts. Oligos are as bad as you can be.

To pay for his huge military budget, Reagan has cut the budget for development projects.

Art: Effects of wrestlers’ weight loss being studied

By John Smith, Sports Writer

In a recent study, researchers from the University of Iowa have found that weight loss during training can have a significant impact on performance. The study, which involved 24 wrestlers, found that those who lost weight had a significant decrease in performance compared to those who did not lose weight.

"We found that weight loss during training can have a significant impact on performance," said Dr. Jane Smith, lead researcher on the study. "Our results suggest that coaches and wrestlers should be careful about the amount of weight they lose during training.

The study involved 24 wrestlers who were divided into two groups. One group lost weight during training, while the other group did not. After a three-week training period, the wrestlers were tested on their performance.

Money decides new TV contract

Steve Batterson

Iowa City. Iowa

The University of Iowa basketball program has decided to accept the new three-year, $475,000 contract offered by the University of Iowa Athletics Department and will continue to broadcast Iowa basketball games on KGAN-WQAD, beginning at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, January 31.

The three-year contract, which is estimated to be worth $1.5 million, is an improvement over its current contract and is expected to benefit the university.

"We're excited to have the University of Iowa Athletics Department as our broadcast partner," said Steve Batterson, the University's director of media relations. "This is a great opportunity for our fans and our program, and we're looking forward to continuing to bring the best in Iowa basketball to the fans through the years.

The contract includes a commitment to broadcast at least 18 games per year, with the possibility of additional games depending on the team's performance. The University of Iowa Athletics Department will also provide coverage of Iowa's Big Ten games, as well as its home games, on KGAN-WQAD.

The University of Iowa Athletics Department was able to negotiate the new contract due to the university's success on the court and in the classroom. The Hawkeyes have won the Big Ten Conference title three times in the last four seasons, and the university has also made significant improvements in its academic program in recent years.

"The University of Iowa Athletics Department is committed to providing its fans with the best possible experience," said the University of Iowa Athletics Director Gary Barta. "This new contract will allow us to continue to bring the best in Iowa basketball to our fans through the years.

Some 1980 Olympic hockey players may have signed illegally with NHL

TOKYO (AP) — Canada’s chief international hockey negotiator from the latest in an endless battle between the Americans and Canadian Olympic officials on Sunday, saying some U.S. players may have been in violation of the record.

Alan Gaglardi said the ever-increasing popularity of expanded Olympic hockey among the top-flight athletes, the recordable pressure and the ever-increasing eligibility to the National Hockey League, has put a strain on the American teams.

"We have some information that might indicate that some U.S. players had agreed to terms with an NHL team before the Games," he said. "That is, if the U.S. is entering we have wondered...if they did capture to consider...they may have to return the gold medals."

GAGLARDI, TORONTO (Toronto Star) — It’s a 'gold medal for Canada to land a U.S. player in a junior role in the Olympic tournament. The U.S. hockey team has come under a lot of water after their losses.

"If the true definition of amateur was applied to the players from the other countries, you would wind up with no two being eligible," he said. "It’s too many shoos than any in the Olympics, other than the U.S.

Engineers believe some recent pressure on the Olympic hockey team by the Canadian team was not enough to change the eligibility of some players, but some of our players may be eligible to those other contests of the Olympic hockey team." he said.

"We were informed by the NCAA last week that the definition of amateur, which the Canadian team is interested in, may not be enough to change the eligibility of some players," he said:

"If we’re looking at our selection, it looks like we can play the same game," he said. "We can’t work on much of the time for them so we’re running for us. But, hopefully, it won’t come down to that."

Winger, Maclaine help give 'Endearment' its distinction

By Craig Tarkow

Terms of Endearment is a real crowd pleaser, of those films that seems to touch the right emotions just the right time.

If there's anything that makes it rain or shine, Shirley MacLaine. Audreys Greenwood is a self-confessed, hard-boiled woman, but even hard-boiled women have moments in their lives they would like to erase. When the Episcopal church that Flap Flap loved was destroyed, an allergic reaction to Tony's gifts to the church, "It feels great to be in love." At the wake of Emma's funeral, astrologist(!) and author(?) Dolly Western, who tells how to interface with the dead. But there are too many problems that drag it down, and the writer thinks it's because the price of going to a first-rate film is too high. Although it was depressing to watch people in the audience crying at the end, the writer thought it was a good film. The writer is not sure whether it was superior to the remake of "Wind." If the writer were to pick one film of the year so far, it would be "Terms of Endearment." But the writer thinks it's because the price of going to a first-rate film is too high. Heavy metal videos among worst of 1983

By Craig Harvis

At least there is some irony in the fact that the heavy metal videos of 1983 prove to be among the worst seen in quite some time. The idea of a rock video is not a new one, but the videos produced by this genre have often been lackluster or worse. However, there has been a trend in recent months towards more ambitious production values, which has led to some interesting and even enjoyable videos.

The majority of heavy metal videos produced in 1983 seem to lack any sense of creativity or innovation. They tend to follow a standard formula, with the band performing on a stage with some elaborate visual effects. The music videos produced by many of the more established bands in the genre often come off as predictable and formulaic, with little to differentiate them from one another.

One of the notable exceptions to this trend was the video for the song "The Boys of Summer" by The Cars. This video was produced by the director David Fincher and featured the band performing in a series of locations, including a beach, a factory, and a car wash. The video was visually striking and showed a level of creativity and imagination that was missing from many of the other heavy metal videos of the year.

Another video that stood out was the one for the song "Sweet Child O' Mine" by Guns N' Roses. This video was directed by David Fincher and featured the band performing in a series of locations, including a bathroom and a recording studio. The video was visually striking and showed a level of creativity and imagination that was missing from many of the other heavy metal videos of the year.

Overall, the heavy metal videos of 1983 were generally disappointing, with few exceptions. Many of the videos were predictable and formulaic, and lacked any sense of creativity or innovation. However, there were some exceptions that managed to stand out and show a level of creativity and imagination that was missing from many of the other heavy metal videos of the year.
Keyboard sounds dominate Van Halen’s weak ‘84

By Alain Hump

ONE OF THE least successful projects of the past year was the release of Van Halen’s “1984.” The record, which followed their commercial breakthrough, contains a total of 11 tunes, none of which are distinguishable from each other. The band’s biggest hit, “Jump,” is the lone exception, and even that song is derivative of Michael Jackson’s “Billie Jean.” The rest of the album is a collection of generic hard rock songs that fail to capture the listener’s attention. The lead single, “Panama,” is a sluggish, overproduced mess that lacks the raw energy and excitement of earlier Van Halen releases.

The band’s reliance on synthesizers and electronic effects further diminishes the impact of their music. The use of auto-tune and other production tricks makes the vocals sound artificial and lifeless. The guitar solos are also lacking, with the band relying on MIDI-generated riffs instead of the virtuoso performances that have marked their previous albums.

Despite the commercial success of “1984,” the album is a significant departure from the band’s earlier sound. The band’s move away from nu metallic excess to more polished, radio-friendly rock is evident in the production values and the overall slickness of the record. The lack of experimentation and risk-taking is a major drawback, as it results in music that is forgettable and forgettable.

In summary, “1984” is a disappointing effort from Van Halen. The band’s commercial success has tempted them to take the easy way out, producing music that lacks the spirit and creativity that made their earlier work so appealing. It is a sad commentary on the state of rock music when a band that once stood for innovation and taking risks is now content to deliver formulaic mediocrity.
