Officials, landlords battle over 'no kids' ordinance

By Scott Fiene

Iowa City landlords and local housing authorities are saying that no matter which way the Iowa City Council votes on a recently proposed housing ordinance, the city could end up allowing discriminatory practices.

The Iowa City Human Rights Commission proposed an ordinance Feb. 21 that would make it illegal for landlords to deny housing to people who have children, or to homosexuals.

Local landlords believe the ordinance would discriminate against apartment owners and tenants who do not want children in apartment buildings.

The ordinance will be discussed at a public hearing March 12. The council is scheduled to vote on the ordinance later this month.

Councilors were split on the ordinance at their Feb. 21 meeting, with William Ambrisco and Ernest Zuber opposing the ordinance, while councilors Kate Dickson, Clemens Erdahl and George Strait supported it. Councilor Larry Baker and Mayor John McDonald do not favor the ordinance in its present form.

Paula Klein, civil rights assistant for Iowa City, said the measure is necessary because many of the discrimination complaints filed with her office come from people who belong to the "unprotected classes" — people who have children, and homosexuals.

IT IS ILLEGAL for a landlord to refuse to rent on the basis of age, religion, sex or disability. But it is not illegal to deny housing to people with children, or to homosexuals.

The controversy, however, is centered almost completely on children.

According to Klein, family ghettos are forming on the city's outskirts, because families often cannot rent in the downtown area. She added that many people have requested changes in the learn

A survey conducted by Iowa City's Department of Planning and Program Development found that approximately 14 percent of all rental housing units within one mile of the central business district are currently rented to families, while 69 percent are rented to students.

Phyllis Williams, Iowa City's civil rights specialist, said those figures should be more balanced.

She noted that because of the proximity of shopping and employment, "this (downtown) area has a higher demand" for housing and should be available to everyone on an equal

But Norman Bailey, president of the Greater Iowa City Apartment Association, said the Human Rights Commission has "overcompensated" to protect the rights of people who have children.

BAILEY SAID although the council might approve the ordinance, "This issue is clearly one-sided." He added that many people do not want to live in complexes that allow children.

Expanded insurance plan may cut costs

By Susan Yager

UI faculty and professional and scientific employees could have more comprehensive insurance coverage by next fall, for nearly the same price they pay now, if UI plans for a new insurance package meet favorable bids from insurance companies.

After 18 months of considering insurance packages that include outpatient coverage for the 5,500 employees under the plan, the UI-funded retirement and insurance committee has developed a new package and is ready to accept bids.

Alan Widiss, UI College of Law professor and former chair of the committee, said he hopes the new package will help control rising medical costs by providing compensation for medical procedures performed outside the hospital and for use of a second opinion.

"We think we have built into the program a number of cost containment procedures," Widiss said.

MARILYN ZWENG, co-chair of the committee, said the new package intends to keep the insurance rate down by forcing the customer to incur more out-of-pocket expenses while still broadening coverage. "Because the cost of insurance has been escalating very rapidly ... we're trying to keep that (the premium rate) in line and at the same time to increase coverage."

She said the new package is designed to cover cost of prescriptions, medical office calls and dental coverage — none of which are covered by the existing plan.

Widiss said the current plan provides basic hospitalization and surgical coverage under Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Iowa, and major medical coverage under Bankers Life Insurance Company of Des Moines.

"What we are aiming for is one comprehensive plan instead of two separate plans," Zweng said. The two separate plans are difficult to administer and difficult for the insured person to understand, she added.

Widiss said the bidding process will begin in late spring or August. Then the committee will review bids from various insurance companies and decide which incorporates the most coverage at the best price.

"IF THE BIDS come in very, very different than we hope they will, then we'll have to think about it," he said. However, he said he doesn't anticipate that happening.

Oxford — It's a jungle out there By Emily Nitchie Staff Writer Bird lovers usually can't been

Bird lovers usually can't keep cats, but Calvin Colony, "the largest exotic bird dealer in Iowa," keeps his lion separate from his parrots.

Samantha, a 10-month-old African lion, lives on Colony's farm in Oxford, Iowa, in a trailer and spends the day outside on a leash, pouncing on the dogs, chickens and ducks that come within her range.

The parrots, macaws and cockatoos live next door in the new building Colony's successful bird business has already paid off.

The 400-acre farm — about nine miles from Iowa City — is where Colony was raised, and where he still grows corn and soybeans, but "farming is not a profitable proposition."

Selling exotic birds, however, is proving to be a profitable proposition for Colony, 27, who said, "I decided I wanted to be a millionaire by the time I was 30, and it looks like this year I'll make it."

Colony began dealing in birds a year and a half ago. He anticipates that pet birds will become even more popular "because people want pets and they usually can't keep dogs and cats in apartments."

BECAUSE COLONY lives in the country he has had no problem keeping his lion. He said his neighbors "think it's funny I got a lion. I don't trust her with kids, though."

Although Samantha pounces and tries to catch Colony's chickens,

"She doesn't hurt them," he said.
"She doesn't know how to kill."
Samantha was declawed shortly after Colony bought the lion, and he expects to have her fangs removed when necessary.

"She'll get maybe two-and-a-half times bigger, but she'll never get so you can't handle her," Colony said—but he is Samantha's favorite per-

"Just pull on her ears when she gets out of hand and she'll stop what she's doing," he recommends.

"She's real rough on clothes," Colony said. "I'll get her defanged when she's as rough on skin."

COLONY PREDICTS that although lions are endangered in Africa, "in 30 years, all the lions around will be domestic. They have so many lions breeding in the zoos now, they're selling them for around $100."

Colony plans to fence in part of his yard for his "guard lion" and for several rhea — large ostrich-like birds from South America — that he will hatch this spring.

Colony is also breeding Amazon parrots, sulfur-crested cockatoos, Hyacinth macaws, quail and doves.

By breeding his parrots in Oxford, Colony is able to lower their overall cost and the trauma the birds suffer from travel. Handraised chicks are spoonfed, which makes them fond of humans and used to being touched. "When the bird is cuddling up to someone and already talking, you don't need to sell the bird. The bird sells itself," Colony said.

Because they are "more of a guaranteed good pet," he is ordering more spoonfeds from his dealers in California, Florida and Texas.

Colony said his prices are the lowest in the area because he deals in volume.

"I got people coming from a four-state area — Illinois, Minnesota, Nebraska, and Iowa."

With a successful bird business and a farm large enough for any of his future pets, Colony said, "I just want to retire and sell birds."

"She's real rough on clothes. I'll get her defanged when she's as rough on skin," Calvin Colony says of his pet lioness Samantha. "She only likes raw meat. I tried to give her a McDonald's hamburger and she wouldn't eat it."

African lion, playfully chews on the hand of her owner Calvin Colony, of Oxford, Iowa. Samantha is de-clawed, but her teeth are still in place and she uses them to chew the raw meat she subsists on. Colony buys scraps from a local meat locker and can feed the lioness for about one dollar a week. Samantha occasionally stalks chickens but doesn't hurt them when she catches them. # Ul given ultimatum in records dispute

By Kirk Brown Staff Writer

The attorney for a UI Student Senate committee told UI officials Thursday they have one month to release information detailing what type of defense-related research is being conducted on campus or he will take "appropriate actions" to settle the dispute.

"We are requesting that the university turn over the material we have requested by April 1," said Duane Rohovit, attorney for the student senate committee on UI Research, refusing to specify what "appropriate actions" will be taken.

Julia Mears, administrative assistant to UI President James O. Freedman, said UI officials "will give it (meeting the deadline) their best shot."

Last July student Sen. Kate Head requested the UI release copies of U.S. Department of Defense-sponsored UI research contracts, texts of research proposals of UI faculty members and correspondence between the DOD and faculty members.

Wednesday Rohovit and members of the senate research committee charged that the UI administration's refusal to release this information violates state public records law. Mears said she wasn't sure whether the UI was violating the law.

Rohovit justified his use of an ultimatum by saying: "A bureaucracy will fill up as much time as there is given to it. All we are trying to do is set a time to bring all of this waiting to an end."

MEARS STRESSED the UI "is not offended by Rohovit's ultimatum," but added she "can't promise anything."

"I don't have any interest in stalling this situation," Mears said. "But I don't think they (Rohovit and the research committee) appreciate the complexity of the situation."

The UI is waiting to release the information until changes in the UI Operations Manual concerning public access can be implemented.

"The proposed changes to the Operations Manual are presently being reviewed by the (UI) Research Council," Mears said. "We'll probably ask the council to finish their review in the near future."

But the chairman of the research council, UI Associate Dentistry Professor Murray Hill, said Thursday he is still working on an initial draft of a report on the review compiled by a subcommittee of the research council.

subcommittee of the research council.

Hill also expects to be out of town for two weeks in mid-March. "It is impossible to tell at this time how quickly we can complete this review," he said.

Following its review of the proposed changes the research council is expected to send its recommendations to UI Vice President for Research and Educational Development Duane Spriestersbach.

SPRIESTERSBACH said after he receives the council's view on the proposed changes in the Operations Manual it will be forwarded to Freedman's office.

Both Spriestersbach and Mears expect Freedman to submit the proposed changes to the UI Faculty and Staff Senates for consideration — a process that could take several months.

UI officials also say the state Board of Regents may need to approve changes in the Operations Manual.

"We are following through with proper procedures and threats of legal actions will not change that," Spriestersbach said.

Lloyd-Jones to seek fourth House term

State Rep. Jean Lloyd-Jones, D-Iowa City, said Thursday she will seek a fourth term in the Iowa House of Representatives.

Lloyd-Jones was first elected to the House in 1978. She was re-elected in 1980, and again in 1982 when she ran unopposed.

"I think that every year I've been down here that I learn more about how things work," Lloyd-Jones said. "I think I've become more effective over

"I also think that, up to a point, the longer a person is here the greater the chance there is to influence the end product."

Lloyd-Jones is currently the assistant majority leader in the House. She serves on four committees: Local and State Government, Rules and Administration, Transportation and Corrections and the Mental Health budget subcommittee.

SHE WORKED extensively for the passage of three pieces of legislation affecting Iowa railroads. In 1980, the Iowa Rail Finance Authority was created in an effort to purchase unused

In 1982, legislation was passed that increased that agency's bonding authority and that same year another bill gave IRFA a $15 million loan for it to purchase the bankrupt Rock Island Railroad company.

She also worked for legislation that became state law which required that children under the age of three riding in an auto, van, or pick-up truck, must be restrained in federally-approved car seats. Children aged three to six must either be in a car seat or be restrained by a seat belt.

Lloyd-Jones said she is currently concerned about Gov. Terry Branstad's proposed 2.8-percent budget cuts and their implications for the UI.

"I think people at the university would obviously like to see us able to increase the appropriations more," she said. "We're going to keep trying. But given the economic situation in the state, I think we've done as good a job

Compromise of in faculty disp

By Robyn Griggs

Despite a protest that the UI Faculty Senate is "merely spinning its own wheels," the senate Thursday settled on compromise wording for the controversial faculty dispute procedure "reasonableness clause."

The new clause - drafted by UI Associate Law Professor Peter Shane — is a rewording of a proposal accepted by the senate Jan. 17, intended to "have the same impact as the original proposal" he submitted and which was adopted by the council Feb. 21.

But UI Faculty Council member Donald Sutherland said this compromise wording is "nothing new," and added that the senate is being "mired in indecision" because "people have never made clear why such changes must be made."
Shane's wording "attempts, specifically, to respond to three questions posed implicitly by the FDP (faculty dispute procedure) standard: what must a faculty member assert to prevail?; how persuasive must the faculty member's evidence in support of such an assertion be?; and is any particular evidence entitled to special weight?" HOWEVER, SUTHERLAND said, "I would like to

does not purport to offer any answer to this ques-"It is very much to be suspected that this change in wording will not, in practice, make any difference

The year-long controversy over the faculty dispute procedure wording stems from a decision made by UI President James O. Freedman last year to overrule a faculty dispute committee and send UI Assistant Anatomy Professor Asa Black's tenure dispute back to his department. At that time, Freedman based his decision to deny tenure on the "reasonableness clause" presently in the dispute procedures. The clause presently states tenure can be denied "if reasonable persons could disagree" whether the faculty member has a "clearly adequate record of achievement."

Compromise clause adopted in faculty dispute procedure

Despite a protest that the UI Faculty Senate is "merely spinning its own wheels," the senate Thursday settled on compromise wording for the controversial faculty dispute procedure "reasonableness clause.

The new clause - drafted by UI Associate Law Professor Peter Shane - is a rewording of a proposal accepted by the senate Jan. 17, intended to "have the same impact as the original proposal" he submitted and which was adopted by the council

But UI Faculty Council member Donald Sutherland said this compromise wording is "nothing new," and added that the senate is being "mired in indecision" because "people have never made clear why such changes must be made."

Shane's wording "attempts, specifically, to respond to three questions posed implicitly by the FDP (faculty dispute procedure) standard: what must a faculty member assert to prevail?; how persuasive must the faculty member's evidence in support of such an assertion be?; and is any particular evidence entitled to special weight?'

HOWEVER, SUTHERLAND said, "I would like to suggest to you (the senate) that this measure is unnecessary and unprofitable and it would be in the best interests for us to set it aside. We have worked on this in the senate and the council for about a year and even after a year's work, it has not proved possible to come up with a satisfactory draft of the state-

"Shane's proposal, though the best effort so far, does not purport to offer any answer to this ques-

"It is very much to be suspected that this change in wording will not, in practice, make any difference

The year-long controversy over the faculty dispute procedure wording stems from a decision made by UI President James O. Freedman last year to overrule a faculty dispute committee and send UI Assistant Anatomy Professor Asa Black's tenure dispute back to his department.

At that time, Freedman based his decision to deny tenure on the "reasonableness clause" presently in the dispute procedures. The clause presently states tenure can be denied "if reasonable persons could disagree" whether the faculty member has a "clearly adequate record of achievement."

SHANES'S NEW WORDING, accepted by the council and senate, states: "Thus, the panel shall sustain the challenged decision unless the panel is of a firm and definite conviction based on the faculty member's record that denying the faculty member such tenure, promotion, or reappointment was manifestly unjustified."

The new wording will now be reviewed by the UI administration before it goes to the state Board of Regents for approval.

The UI administration has been receptive to the new wording. "I personally have no differences with this and would be surprised if my colleagues had any differences," UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Richard Remington told the faculty council

Faculty tables action against budget cuts

By Robyn Griggs

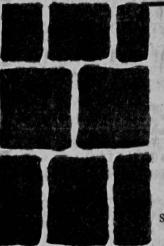

The UI Faculty Senate decided Thursday not to take any action against proposed state budget cuts following presentations by UI administrators.

Gov. Terry Branstad's recommended 2.8 percent budget cut will strain the UI's resources but is "not going to be anything like what was predicted" by UI faculty members during the recent departmental budget-making process, UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Richard Remington told the UI Faculty Senate Thursday.

In light of statements from Remington, UI Vice President for Finance Dorsey Ellis and UI President James O. Freedman, the senate decided not to act. 'We'll experience a setback, a real setback." Remington said. "But we're going to stumble, we're

He said some of the budget proposals submitted by the department heads will be revised by the UI administration. "It's not a question of disregarding them (the proposals), but there were some that did not meet our criteria of not having any layoffs." Remington has stated that the UI will suffer no loss of current faculty members because of the cutbacks and said Thursday, "Generally, our (the administration's) watchword on this is to maintain the academic programs for this time.'

BRIBERY-Face it. $5.99 isn't much, no matter how meager your professor's present salary. However, a well intentioned gift of the new Eurythmics' album, "Touch", may sway the T.A. He's probably lonely and looking for a little kindness in the academic world. A sure bet-offer to type his thesis. Record Bar knows he'll be charitable.

THE BIG LIE-With a few variations, the old excuses work well. Your roommate ate your notes. How can you possibly take a test when the nuclear arms race is heating up. A shadowy figure liberated your take home exam in the name of oppressed third world nations. The new album, "Jungle" from Dwight Twilley has redefined your educational goals. These excuses should buy you precious time.

Gemayel, Assad end summit talk

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) - President Amin Gemayel ended a Damascus summit with Syrian President Hafez Assad Thursday without announcing an expected agreement to Syrian demands that he scrap Lebanon's peace accord with Israel.

In Paris, the French Foreign Ministry said the presence of its forces in Beirut was no longer "appropriate" following the collapse of a Frenchsponsored resolution to replace them with U.N. troops.

But French Defense Minister Charles Hernu said France would not "for the moment" withdraw its 1,300man contingent.

The plan to send U.S. troops to Beirut was vetoed by the Soviet Union Wednesday in the Security Council out of Moscow's desire to bring a "just and lasting peace" to Lebanon, the official Soviet news agency Tass said.

Gemayel described his four-hour meeting with Syrian President Hafez Assad as "quite excellent" but did not capital, state-run Beirut television

Official Syrian television said one government source described the talks as "positive and fruitful."

The TV commentator also said. "President Assad assured Mr. Gemayel that Syria will help Lebanon retain its Arab character and the unity of its territory and people."

THERE WAS NO immediate official word on Lebanon's May 17 peace agreement with Israel, which Gemayel has been expected to abandon under pressure from Syria and Syrian-backed Moslem rebels fighting his minority Christian government in Lebanon. A Beirut television reporter who returned from Damascus said Gemayel was expected to arrive Friday in Beirut, but did not say where the president was staying overnight. Some reports had him headed to Saudi Arabia, a mediator in the Lebanese Jumblatt, who made a surprise return to the Lebanese capital Thursday after 10 months of self-exile, called Gemayel's visit to Damascus a "victory for Syria over the United States."

The Syrian-backed rebel leader, who narrowly escaped assassination in Beirut in December 1982, also repeated his call for Gemayel's resignation.

'We cannot have respect for Amin Gemayel because he bears responsibility for the Shouf mountain war, the massacres of Sabra and Chatila and the destruction of the suburbs," Jumblatt told Druze radio. Jumblatt also said abrogation of the

Despite the diplomatic activity aimed at quelling nine years of civil war, persistent sniper fire erupted along the "green line" that separates Beirut into its Christian and Moslem

The warring factions also traded mortar rounds and rocket-propelled grenades exploded over the capital and rained shrapnel on the streets.

One person died of shrapnel wounds and more than five were wounded in various parts of east Beirut, the Central News Agency said.

At least one Sunni Moslem militiaman was killed and another wounded when a shell hit their position in west Beirut, Sunni radio said.

Despite the renewed outbreak of fighting, casualty figures remained far below Wednesday's toll when seven people died and 67 were wounded in a car bomb blast and factional fighting in Beirut and the Shouf mountains

Iraq takes action to sever Iranian lifeline

Iraq said its warplanes and ships sank seven Iranian ships Thursday in the Persian Gulf in a new attempt to threaten Iran's economic lifeline by blockading its oil shipping route.

Iran said its forces in the 42-monthold Gulf War launched yet another ground attack Wednesday night, seizing a strategic bridge on the southern front and wiping out an Iraqi brigade.

The official Iraqi news agency INA said Iraq's air and sea attack took place in the narrow Khor Moussa inlet, a narrow channel in the approaches to Iran's Bandar Khomeini port.

"Iraqi naval and air force units destroyed today seven enemy naval targets in the Arab Gulf and shot down two enemy jets elsewhere in the battlefront," a military spokesman said.

"As before, it's a case of claim and counter-claim. We have no direct word from shipping in the area because tankers observe radio silence in the Gulf beyond the Strait of Hormuz," a spokesman at Lloyd's of of London in-

"THE DESTRUCTION of the naval targets is a further demonstration of the capability of Iraqi armed forces to continue blockading enemy ports," an Iraqi military spokesman said.

The reports raised new concern that Iran might close the Strait of Hormuz to shipping - cutting off Western oil supplies not only from Iran but Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates as well.

Some 20 percent of the Western world's oil flows through the 40-mile wide strait in giant supertankers. Iran has said that if its oil shipments are hampered "not one drop" of oil will be allowed to pass through the strait. President Reagan has said the United States would not allow the strait to be closed. The air war also escalated. Iraq said it shot down two of Iran's U.S.-built

Phantom fighters on the southern battlefront. Iran said it shot down an Iraqi Sukhoi-22 fighter early Thursday. Reports from both sides indicated fierce fighting raged in the southern marshlands to the north and east of Basra, Iraq's second largest city and the gateway for the country's imports.

Fred Krause, chairman of the Iowa City Housing Commission, said the Human Rights Commission is "completely sincere" but the ordinance could be "damaging" to elderly people who want to live in apartments that prohibit children.

Cindy Geyer, a coordinator at the Protective Association for Tenants, a student organization that works to resolve disputes between tenants and landlords, said the association receives very few complaints but speculated

"I realize the students are interested in getting the information they want," Mears said. "They have been very insistent about that, but I don't think they have been unreasonable.'

Head said her committee decided to issue the administration a deadline now because "there is a lot of force behind this issue right now. ... We think the time is right."

Rohovit said another reason for the ultimatum is so the research committee "can receive the information it requested last July by the end of the a Bankers Life plan now covering Iowa State University employees to include in its desired insurance package.

"The difference between that approach and the Blue Cross approach is that it is geared toward covering medical expenses that aren't necessarily being incurred in a hospital," said Widiss. "It is a more comprehensive plan" and will cover all expenses medically necessary, either in or out of a hospital, he said.

Widiss said the committee has reviewed the ISU policy and other policies available to state employees to 'come up with a design that is an improvement over those systems."

Mary Jo Small, UI associate vice president for finance, said the committee has drawn up four deductible options, a principle one on which the insurance companies must bid and another three on which they may bid. This principle deductible allows a max- premium rate.

The committee has adopted parts of imum of $100 per individual and $300

She said the committee can use this principle deductible to compare to the other three proposals.

THE OTHER THREE alternatives are a deductible equal to a one-day hospital stay or $100 on other medical services, a $200 deductible instead of a $100 deductible and a deductible figured as a percentage of the individual's income

Also included in the new plan is a coinsurance concept, which states that after the deductibles, the company and the customer each pay a certain percentage of the medical cost.

Small said the new package also sets $400 as the maximum amount an individual would pay and $600 as the maximum amount for a family - including the deductible amount and coinsurance payment, but excluding the

Timid on transport

By ruling to leave intact a federal regulation that permits nuclear waste materials to be tranported through heavily populated urban areas, the Supreme Court Monday exhibited the same inaction as everyone else who has been asked to take a stand on this risky issue.

Before the high court said it lacked jurisdiction on the matter, the decision had been shunted from town to state and from federal agency to agency. While the reality is that no one feels qualified to rule on the problem, the court's decision not to hear New York City's challenge to the Department of Transportation's regulation requiring the city to open its highways to nuclear-waste tranport trucks tells cities and states the risks don't merit further

The disputed regulation, which was drafted by the Carter administration and adopted by the DOT in 1981, sets the standards for radioactive material transport throughout the country. It was adopted without preparing the formal "environmental impact statement" required by law for all federal projects having a "significant" impact on the environment. And New York, which has banned the transportation of nuclear waste on major roadways since 1976, sued to block the regulation, charging the rule violated both the National Environmental Policy Act and the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act.

Since state and local regulations are preempted by the federal rule, the court's rejection of arguments that the federal government failed to adequately explore the potential "catastrophic" impact on the environment and its inhabitants grows in significance.

With the presence of hazardous materials a part of everyday life, the country can't afford blind adherance to ill-defined policy on nuclear waste transport. The radiological risks that accompany travel on the country's roadways demand close scrutiny. The court's refusal to overturn a ruling enacted without more investigation could be disastrous.

Earlybird politics

An angry exchange between television network representatives and some congressmen about projecting election results before polls close failed to deter the networks in the New Hampshire primary this week.

The media attempt to justify their practice on first amendment grounds and on the basis of the public's right to know. Both arguments are hogwash.

There is no public service reason why the public needs to know the projected results of an election before it is over. Delay in projecting the winner hurts no citizen and no candidate.

There are a number of theories about what early projections do accomplish. Some argue it depresses supporters of the supposed losers and keeps them home. Others argue it makes voters decide to prove the networks wrong and sends them to the polls to support the apparent losers. Both theories suggest that early projections could have an impact on voter behavior.

The networks want to project the winners early because they are competing with each other for viewers. They believe that being the first will attract the most viewers and bring in more advertising

No one who understands and believes in the Constitution suggests any limitations on the press. Clearly, sanctioning bad press practices is safer in the long term than placing controls on the press. But if those who run the networks are going to act as good citizens and gain public respect, they will have to behave more responsibly on this issue than they have.

Trudeau's legacy

When Pierre Trudeau relinquished his role as prime minister of Canada — this May or June, after his Liberal Party has chosen his successor - the Western world will be losing one of its most experienced and fascinating leaders.

With the exception of the nine-month period (May 1979 to February 1980) that the rival Progressive Conservative Party held sway in Canada's parliamentary system of government, Trudeau has filled his country's top leadership position since April 1968 - a point in time when Lyndon Johnson was still U.S. president.

Trudeau was, and remains, a leader with considerable style, wit and flamboyance. He was able to provide the necessary leadership to nurse Canada through its greatest crisis of this century. Himself a French-Canadien, his vocal opposition to Quebec's French separatist movement rallied voters to the cause of a united Canada; a referendum proposing sovereignty for Quebec was defeated in 1980 largely through Trudeau's efforts.

Trudeau's personal life was often stormier than his political one. That his political career could survive not only separatist sympathies but also spicy gossip surrounding his May-December marriage and its very public breakup were testaments to his

Among other remarkable attributes — his opponents might say "deplorable" instead - was the amount of energy he devoted not to Canada's domestic problems, but to the problems facing Third World countries. Trudeau often acted as the conscience sometimes an annoying one - of the West, in urging that industrial nations do far more to selflessly aid underdeveloped

Ironically, many of Trudeau's problems in office were created by his giant ally to the south. The Canadian economic situation has always suffered unfairly from fluctuations in the U.S. economy; mild recession here has often led to severe recession in Canada. Furthermore, one of the still unresolved contentions between the two nations is the issue of acid rain, the severest effect of which are felt north of the border.

Trudeau's departure will be as much celebrated as mourned in Canada; his present poll ratings are dismal, and the stock exchange in Canada jumped substantially following news of his resignation. But here in the U.S., one can only hope that Canada's next prime minister will be as fluent a spokesman for a liberal Western internationalism as was his predecessor.

States Constitutional Convention for the second day of August, 1986. The Hon. Randolph Crank presiding.

Mr. Crank: The chair recognizes the distinguished delegate from Virginia, the Rev. Billy Joe Smugg. Rev. Smugg: Well, God just bless you 'til you're dizzy, Mr. Chairman. I rise today in all humility to present to this distinguished assemblage an amendment to reintroduce prayer in public restaurants. Now, it is true we have recently passed a great amendment reintroducing several hours of voluntary prayer each day into public schools, with the necessary safeguard of preventing school districts from compelling little children to pray by the use of any form of coercion that ignores religious freedom, involves psychologigal conditioning or leaves permanent scars. But shall our crusade to put the Lord back into American life end there? Shoot, no.

Now, I have dined in restaurants all over this great land and sampled all sorts of food, from the tacoritos of our Mexican-American friends, to the fried bird nests of our Chinese-American brethren, to the lamb's quarters in grape leaves of our Greek-American chums, to the real American food we all prefer. And I have been shocked, Mr. Chairman, and I have been saddened to see so few saying grace, setting a good example for all the idolkissing little outsiders who work in those places and taking them into the loving bossom of the Lord's word if they know what's good for them.

I DON'T think anyone here has any doubts as to why this mournful situation has arisen. There is a direct connection between taking prayer out of the school lunch room and out of the restaurants, from forbidding it around woodshop bench and from around the salad bar. This amendment will remedy that, guaranteeing voluntary prayer in public restaurants, reassuring Christian diners of their absolute right to bow their head in silent prayer

INCE LAST October, reporter ymour Hersh has lectured on his favorite topic, the moral turpitude of Henry Kissinger, to audiences on 42 college

Though Hersh says his listeners have treated him politely, the author of "The Price of Power" remains unimpressed by their response. On one hand, he's found few students who agree with his thesis that Kissinger is one of history's true villains. But there don't seem to be many collegiates willing to disagree with that notion either. With the former secretary of state continuing to wield significant influence over U.S. foreign policies, Hersh is especially exasperated at the indifference college students show toward Kissinger's past. But he finds that apathy extends to public affairs in

"From what I've seen, there's an acute case of passivity on college campuses," Hersch says, with typical disgust. "No one out there is asking any tough questions." Indeed, no one seems to be asking any questions at all. Hersh, of course, isn't the only one to have discovered that today's campus crowd comes from a mold different Glen & Shearer from the one he knew as a political reporter in the '60s. The evidence comes almost regularly. Last week, for example, The New York Times reported the major topic of conversation at Yale University was the dress required for job interviews.

MEANWHILE, Patrick Connolly of the Associated Press wrote in a dispatch from Seattle, home of University of Washington, that he couldn't find a single fad on a major college campus today. "I discovered that no one had time for fads," he said regarding a survey he did there.

Two common explanations for the absence of activism come to mind. One, widely shared, is that students worry about two things: jobs and their social life. The other is that they're simply bored and less imaginative than students were 15 years ago.

But the problem may lie in such comparisons. Fifteen years ago, American to Vietnam had a wonderful way of sharpening one's perception of right and wrong. So did the environment and civil rights, which included students' Political issues back then matured

But the end of actual military conscription and blurring of the issues has probably exposed students for what they are: pampered adolescents. Non-political organ To the editor:

We are writing The Daily Iowan because we do not feel The Hawkeye Review is the appropriate forum for discussion of Free Environment. We are, however, responding here to comments made in the February 1984 Hawkeye Review. Jeff Renander, in a story headlined "First Amendment Endangered at the UI," claims his organization is "similarly situated to Free Environment" in that both groups publish newspapers. Therefore, he argues, The Hawkeye Review should be "recognized" by the Collegiate Associations Council, as is Free Environment. Though the question of "recognition" is not our concern, we are alarmed at being called "similarly

Though we publish a newspaper, our organization is not focused on that operation. Indeed we are right now primarily involved with a study project centering on the Iowa River. We also maintain a library of environmentallyfocused periodicals and books, have a speakers' bureau providing discussion leaders on environmental issues, and try to focus attention to possibilities for outdoor activity in the nearby area.

situated to" The Hawkeye Review.

Unlike The Hawkeye Review, a newspaper and political action group only, FE is non-political, is dedicated to furthering understanding rather than political goals. That such an understanding of environmental issues does cover political issues is a fact we do not deny, but we do not promote candidates or try to defeat others, as does The Hawkey Review. And we are supported by no outside group at all, let alone by extensive national political money. Our purpose is of local focus only, and we are based only on local funding. Our intent is to help people in Johnson County learn to appreciate what we all have and to use it with care. We are not "anti" anyone. Even when we participated in the "Dump Watt" campaign (something we, perhaps, should not have done), we were doing so to promote concern and discussion, not polarization. It should be easy to understand our concern at being placed in the same category with an organization whose stock-in-trade is anger, hatred and the baiting of opponents. After all, the environmental movement covers a wide spectrum of "political" opponents, from the leftist Greenpeace to the conservative National Wildlife Federation - and we welcome them all into Free Environment, whatever their other concerns.

Perhaps a walletsize photo of Greg Stokes during one of his many slam dunks could be slipped between the eight pages of professionally covered sports. Stokes, incidentally, shot an all-time high of 33 points and the DI failed to mention this. Murky past

Once again the Rev. Jesse Jackson has insulted the Jewish population of this country. Over the weekend, Jackson finally admitted he used the ethnic slur "Hymie" when referring to Jews and called New York City "Hymie-town."

From the beginning of Jackson's campaign, many Jews have been extremely critical of Jackson, not because he is black, but because of his past record. In 1979, he met with Yaser Arafat, probably the best-known terrorist of the Middle East, if not the world. Jackson has been known to speak for and endorse many pro-PLO groups here in the United States. More recently Jackson has been quoted as saying he is sick of hearing about the Holocaust and that Jews don't have a monopoly on suffering. Is this the kind of person who should be seeking the presidential nomination of the U.S.? In the past, any officials who have made an ethnic or racial slur have been relieved of their duty, with James Watt being a prime example.

Jesse Jackson, who at first denied he had said "hymie," says he is being "persecuted" by members of the Jewish faith. But as one looks more closely, the Jews are only looking into his murky past and showing the voters his past record.

Northwestern 'shaking in their shoes' about lowa

By Thomas W. Jargo Assistant Sports Editor

The Northwestern Wildcats should be "shaking in their shoes" when they come to Iowa City tonight to take on the Iowa women's basketball team in the Carver-Hawkeve Arena.

"Northwestern is going to have to be shaking in their shoes because of the two wins we just had," Iowa point guard Lisa Anderson said, referring to ast weekend's home victories over Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Those wins raised the Hawkeyes' record to 8-7 in the Big Ten and puts them just one game behind Northwestern in the race for fourth place. Both teams are 14-10 overall.

Northwestern has never lost in six outings against Iowa, and the Wildcats were a 59-51 victor over Iowa eariler in the season in Evanston, Ill.

BUT IOWA IS 8-2 at home and avenging early losses on the road has been a trademark of this youthful Hawkeye squad, which is another reason why the Wildcats should be "shaking in their shoes," Anderson said.

"We owe them some revenge a really picked up game from us.

"We're at a peak right now — an emotional high," the senior guard said. "Coach Stringer is a winner and she's developing that winning attitude in all of us. There can't be a letdown. We're at such a peak right now, I don't know what it would take to kill us.

"I think we can really take it to them. We're up there now, and I think we're going to finish really well."

The answer to stopping Northwestern is twofold, according to

"We're going to have to be ready to break their press and really rebound," Anderson said. "They've got Anucha Browne inside who is very, very good, a very good shooter, very good rebounder. We have to keep her off the boards and control their point guard Connie Anderson will take the job of trying to stop Erickson. "She's a senior, very experienced," Anderson said, "but nothing we can't handle.

Anderson, along with senior teammates Angie Lee and Robin Anderson, close out their home careers tonight.

"It's going to hurt because there have been a lot of good times and bad times," Anderson said. "I'm going to try as hard as I can not to cry, but I know it's not going to work.'

Patton's tankers leading Indiana

By Greg Anderson

Iowa's race to the Big Ten men's swimming championship may be a little easier than they expected.

Hawkeye Coach Glenn Patton was hoping his squad would be within touching distance of defending Big Ten champion Indiana, which had some of its strongest events scheduled for the first-day of action.

But with the final results tallied from Thursday night's competition, Iowa, behind the performances of winners Tom Williams and Mike Curley, unexpectedly leads the second-place Hoosiers,

Bodies bang in Hawkeyes' easy victory By Steve Batterson

EVANSTON, III. - Iowa's 57-48 basketball victory over Northwestern would have pleased Hawkeye wrestling Coach Dan Gable.

"Inside there was no question the bodies were banging," Iowa Coach George Raveling said after the Hawkeyes picked up their fourthstraight win. "Both of the big men (Greg Stokes and Michael Payne) worked hard to get their offensive and defensive positions.

Raveling added the Hawkeyes lacked some of the enthusiasm they have been playing with lately until near the end of the game.

Senior Steve Carfino paced Iowa with 19 points, including seven of 14 from the field. Raveling called it Carfino's "best offensive performance of the

"HE GOT HIS 14 shots because they spent so much time trying to shut us down inside," Raveling said.

While Carfino was firing in points from the outside, Stokes' six-point output was well earned against a tough Northwestern defense. "When you take something away from a team, something else usually becomes available," Raveling said. "While they were cautious of shutting Stokes off, they left Carfino open.'

Wildcat Coach Rich Falk said, "We just tried to get (Stokes) inside so he wouldn't have any power moves to the

Individuals key for Hassard's women's squad

By Melissa Rapoport

The Iowa women's track team will travel to Illinois this weekend to compete in the Big Ten Championships, a meet which Iowa Coach Jerry Hassard's Hawkeyes will aim to fulfill

"We have two objectives," Hassard said. "One is to improve our seventhplace finish at last year's indoors and the other is to score more points than we did last year, which was 43."

These are realistic goals, according to Hassard, since the Hawkeye squad will be competing without the help of last year's indoor Big Ten pentathalon

American Nan Doak and second-place Houston Marathon finisher Jenny

"CONSIDERING THE FACT that we don't have three very important people participating, I think these are good goals for us," the Iowa mentor said. "We're losing in the neighborhood of 30-plus points without their help.
That's a lot of points in the Big Ten championship, especially when the teams are so competitive."
Wisconsin Coach Peter Tegen agreed

key losses will hurt Iowa and added that these losses will make it impossible for Iowa to win the title. "They've been really strong," Tegen said. "It (Iowa's finish) depends on their injuries ... There are some people missing off their roster, especially looking at the distance (events). That will hurt

BELIEVING THE TITLE is up for grabs, Indiana Coach Carol Stevenson said Iowa is in contention for the crown. "Jerry (Hassard) has done a tremendous job with his team," Stevenson said. "They pose a tremendous threat. There are five or six teams that could take this title and Iowa is definitely one of them."

Five-time indoor champion Wisconsin is the favorite and will try to regain the crown from defending champion Michigan, which is in a rebuilding stage after several key graduation losses. An improvement on last year's eighth-place finish is the main goal of the Iowa men's track team as they head into the Big Ten Indoor Championships this weekend.

Iowa, Purdue, Illinois and Wisconsin will probably battle for the third place

Ed Nuttycombe said. Wisconsin finished third in last year's league meet. "We will be very satisfied with a third place finish and that's what we will be shooting for,"

Nuttycombe said. "I don't know how things are going to go, but we hope to improve over last year's fifth-place finish," Purdue Coach Mike Poehlein said. "Things will definitely be more spread out this year, and I'll tell you that Purdue and Iowa are the most improved teams in

Rare coed meet faces gymnasts

Gymnastics fans will receive a double dose of entertainment when the Iowa men's and women's gymnastics teams compete in a coed meet Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in the Carver Hawkeye Arena.

The coed meet is probably the most exciting gymnastics meet a spectator could see, said Iowa women's gymnast Linda Tremain. "It's one of the most exciting meets to watch," she said.

"There's always something going on."
Both the men's and the women's teams will compete at the same time during the meet. The women will take on Illinois-Chicago, which has been seoring in the high 160s to mid 170s this season, while the men compete against Houston Baptist, Illinois-Chicago and

Iowa women's Coach Diane Chapela said the meet will be interesting to watch for fans because there will be gymnasts competing on three events at the same time. The men will work two events at the same time and the women will compete on one.

The atmosphere at the coed meet will also help the women prepare for the Big Ten Championships. "It will be a dress rehearsal for next weekend," Chapela said. "It's the same sort of setting we'll have next weekend and an ideal situation to prepare us for next weekend.

"WE HAVE A BIG task at hand in

'We're not concentrating on obtaining particular scores," she said. "We're concentrating on giving our best effort."

The Hawkeyes have been developing all season and Chapela said she is looking for everyone to do well in the last dual meet of the season. "We've been building up the momentum in the last two meets going into the Big Ten meet," she said.

Chapela said she also hopes the seniors on the team, Tremain and Holli DeBoer, do well in the meet. "I hope the seniors finish up to what their own personal expectations are," she said. 'They've done a great job this year."

Chapela said the loss of Meighan would put a little more pressure on the rest of the team to perform up to their capability. "But whether we have Kris or not, we have the capability to score as well as in the past," she said. "It'll just be that much tighter."

plans to introduce a similar bill, her office said, and believes it will pass. Last year, the House approved, 414-8, a resolution against restricting Title IX.

Title IX, passed in 1972 as part of the Education Amendments, is the only federal legislation prohibiting sex discrimination in education.

Luckily, women athletes have a number of factors on their side in their fight to maintain Title IX.

First, the Court ruling was not directly related to athletic programs and there are a number of unanswered legal questions. Second, there is strong congressional backing for a broad interpretation of Title IX. Third, and perhaps most important, women's athletic programs will fight to retain what they have won in the last decade.

"The implications of the decision are not really clear," said Margaret Dunkle, co-director of the Equality Center in Washington, D.C. "What we'll probably see is women and civil rights groups seeking clarification through the courts and legislative acted to win few events, but with nearly every event covered, the Badgers are expected to accumulate points with lower-place finishes.

Lopiano said the economy would also be a big factor in the future of women's, athletic programs.

"THEY ARE NOT a phenomenal team," Hassard said. "They are in the driver's seat, though. They have everyone healthy, everyone is running well and they have everything covered. Wisconsin is a good team."

The Hawkeyes could finish in the upper division with a good rally, Hassard said, which would fulfill one of the team goals. "We had a team meeting a couple days ago and I think it set the tone for productivity. I'm confident that the team members will rally around each other this weekend," the Hawkeye coach said.

'Despite the fact we probably can't win a title. I'm still really excited to see what our team can do this weekend ... We're starting to build a very solid unit again. We're back on the road to success.

ELAINE JONES, the defending indoor Big Ten 60-yard dash champion, and Mary Mol, seventh-place high jump finisher at The Athletic Congress national track meet last weekend in New York, are favored to take top honors in the 60 and high jump events, respectively.

Hassard said he believes the few Iowa athletes involved in this year's Big Ten meet will place and win enough points to put the Hawkeyes in the upper division

'Both Jones and Taylor will run the 300-yard dash and we should score fairly well in that event as well. Mary Mol (should do well) in the high jump, of course. Gail Smith in the shot put ranks near the top of the field (fourth), and Davera Taylor is ranked fourth in

"Shelley Reides in the shot has a chance to score and Janna Houtz has a shot in the high jump and the triple jump," Hassard said.

'Aloes' reflects the arid life of South Africa's resisters

By Alex Wilding-White

HE OPENING SCENE of A Lesson From Aloes, which opened Wednesday night at the Old Armory Theatre and will continue this and next weekend, creates such a portrait it almost gives the story away.

The scene is the backyard and bedroom of a house in Port Elizabeth, South Africa. Everything is arid. colorless, devoid of life. The lights go down and when they come back up again, a bearded man, Piet Bezuidenhout, is examining a plant of no distinct character while a somewhat frail and nervouslooking woman wearing dark glasses sits on the other side of the yard, staring off into the distance.

This image of barrenness, even when life is present, forms the theme of Aloes; South African playwright Athol Fugard's work of cruelty, isolation and betrayal in a country ruled by oppression. Centered around a farewell party for a close friend (a colored man active in the resistance), the play contrasts external appearances against internal tensions and liberal values against human realities.

Piet and his wife Gladys, the couple that the play centers on, represent two different sides of a tricky situation. Both Afrikaners, they are externally of the privileged class in their society, but they both have a personal involvement in the resistance (and have paid the price for having it).

evening's party, while on his bus route many years back when he was a driver. Coloreds were boycotting the bus line over an increase in the fare, and Piet admired their steadfastness. Piet saw Steve on a street corner speaking to a small crowd and passing leaflets. His initial anxiety with being the only white in the group was overcome by their acceptance of his honest interest in their cause.

But (as Steve brings up later) in explaining why he is moving, he said just the simple, physical fact that one person is darker than the other determines how one reacts to a social condition, and the misunderstandings in rationale stem from this.

The action of the play, as in most of Fugard's, develops through the character's recollections, and these memories come to bear on the moment. Piet's stoicism and Gladys' neurosis constantly clash, sometimes violently, in their struggle to cope with their pain and isolation.

Gladys, played by Deborah Bremer, forms the heart of play, around which Steve and Piet's actions seem to revolve. Bremer does a magnificent job in capturing not only the embittered feelings she has for the society that has violated her, but also in her dramatic shifts in mood. Steve is fortunate; he is leaving. Piet has his aloes and his poetry, having formed a world he can hide in. But Gladys, so long as she remains in this drought-stricken land, will always feel the pain of society's twisted logic.

AS DIRECTOR Gordon Edelstein commented. Aloes shows "how politics can be so poisonous, so diseased, that it infects everything. There are three relationships in the play ... and all three have been contaminated by society.

Ray Holloway as Steve and Brian Poteat as Piet also turn in commendable performances. Because there are only three characters and because the subject matter is so highly personal, the actors must dig deep within themselves in order to bring the message across powerfully enough. Both Holloway PIET MET Steve Daniels, the guest of honor at the and Poteat display a vigor toward their roles that is both convincing and thought-provoking

> It is possible to see parts of one's self in the characters because of the vividness of their portraval. Edelstein said, "It's a tremendous challenge for the actors because they're people in their mid-20s portraying people in their mid-40s. But more importantly, there has to be emotional honesty; it can't be performed through, it has to be real. In the process, it takes exceptional bravery, a certain courage, to bring this across."

> Bravery and honesty it certainly did take. A Lesson From Aloes has a lesson for all who see it. Though interpretations may vary because of one's own experience or expectations, all will come away moved by what they have seen.

ing a financial comeback, with 15 percent more productions showing profits in 1982-83 than the legendary theater district saw the year before, a report said Thursday.

State Attorney General Robert Abrams, whose office receives filings of theatrical syndications, reported the number of profitable Broadway productions increased from 46 in 1981-82 to 53 last year and the number of productions that lost money last year actually dropped by 10 percent.

The report also said that, according to advance information on the 1983-84 season, this year's figures are likely to be even better.

"The signs of increased activity and vitality in the New York theater are reassuring to everyone who cares about the contribution our theater makes to the city and the nation," Abrams said in a statement accompanying his statistical report, "Review of the 1982-1983 Theatrical Season.'

Abrams said Broadway's financial winner last season was still the hit musical Annie, which showed a profit of $2.2 million for the year and closed Jan. 2, 1983 with a total profit of $15.6 million.

Dr. Demento and Weird Al bring musical mania to town

By Merwyn Grote

URING A revolution, it's customary to capture the radio stations first. So seemed to be the case on Wednesday, as the anarchists overtook the small but mighty KRUI, the UI radio station buried deep beneath the earth, below the building with the quizzical name of the South Quadrangle.

My assignment seemed simple enough: seek out and interview a visiting disc jockey and aspiring rock star. No big deal, I thought, though I was struck with some sense of foreboding when the names of my quarry were revealed: Dr. Demento and "Weird Al" Yankovic. "Aren't they characters in the Bloom County comic strip?" I thought to myself. Little did I realize that I was closer to the truth than even I

On my arrival at the student-run radio station, I was greeted by a small army of would-be Johnny Fevers and Andy Travises, each more friendly and outgoing than the last and each eagerly awaiting the arrival of the Guest from the West. Despite this exceptionally warm greeting, I wondered if they trusted me, for soon I found myself being interrogated. Did I know what was Howard Hawks' first Western? Who was Captain Kirk's brother? Who were the other five commanders of the Starship

HAVING PASSED the test by trivia. I was allowed to enter the broadcast booth, where the ceremonies to honor the mighty visitors from the West were being held. It was a rite of joy and reverence. For Dr. Demento is no ordinary run-of-the-mill DJ. Indeed, he is the mad messiah of musical malarkey, a pied piper of puddin'-headed opuses such as "The Three Stooges sing the Alphabet Song" and Spike Jones' rinky-tink rendition of "The Blue Danube." Acting as a rock 'n' roll Ripley, the good Doctor broadcasts weekly surveys of the bizarre, the unusual and the unexpected that his listeners are dared to either believe or not. Having conquered the West Coast, he has taken to scouring the very heartland of America in search of converts to his off-beat tastes in music.

Accompanying the mad Doctor was his trusted sidekick, protege and main disciple, "Weird Al" Yankovic. Weird Al, who looks like an architectural student who might play the accordion, was an accordion-playing architectural student when he fell under Demento's spell and was converted to a life of musical madness. While the Doctor specializes in rummaging through the musical gold to find the golden dregs of popular music, Yankovic specializes in insidiously undermining rock 'n' roll at its very roots. With a rock 'n' roll soul and a MAD Magazine mentality, he boldly parodies that which has not been parodied before.

HIS LATEST ASSAULT is a swift kick in the pants to the holiest figure now reigning in rock 'n' roll, Michael Jackson. Taking Jackson's riveting "Beat It," Yankovic has skillfully perverted it into something called "Eat It" ("Eat it, eat it/Open up your mouth and feed it") This is accompanied by an audacious video that fiendishly mocks Jackson's down to the most absurd detail. Indeed, there was cause for much rejoicing in the studio as Weird Al announced that "Eat It" had entered the Billboard Top 100 at number 59 with a bullet. To celebrate this and to further the cause of musical mayhem, the staff of KRUI serenaded Demento and Yankovic with their own recording of the "Dave Haus Shuffle," the melodic saga of the romantic exploits of one of their compatriots. Demento listened intently and gave the number a thumbs up, causing unbridled joy amongst the faithful. perhaps the best performance of the

But the best adaptation of a McMurtry novel is still Peter Bogdanovich's The Last Picture Show, showing tonight at 7 and Saturday night at 9 at the Bijou. McMurtry's novel gave us a close look at a small Texas town in the early '50s — a town that was dying.

Bogdanovich, adapting the film and gifted with an excellent cast and crew, focused on the lives of three young people in Anarene (McMurtry's hometown) and how they dealt with the emptiness of their lives and their town. The "picture show" of the title symbolizes the passing of time; small-town movies were dying out with the introduction of television.

Software company can't find investors

By Kirk Brown

The UI's first venture into private business, Computer Aided Design Software Inc., hasn't been able to land definite investors and will probably fall behind in its loan repayments.

According to the company's confidential business plan, CADSI is scheduled to repay a $100,000 loan it received last fall from the UI Research Foundation by April 1 - but UI officials said last week it is "highly unlikely" the debt will be paid on time.

"Things are not going as well as we had expected," said UI Engineering Professor Edward Haug, who is the chief executive officer for the company.

Since early December a negotiating team comprised of UI Vice President for Finance Dorsey Ellis, former UI Vice President for Finance Randall Bezanson, CADSI's three-member board of directors, and consultants from the Cedar Rapids-based Mor-America Capital Inc. have been searching, thus far unsuccessfully, for venture capitalists interested in investing in CADSI.

Despite the fact CADSI probably will be late in making its first corporate payment, company officials say they are not concerned.

"WE WILL JUST have the loan extended," William Trease, one of CADSI board of directors, said Friday. Trease is also executive director of the research foundation.

CADSI's acting-president, UI Vice President for Research and Educational Development Duane Spriestersbach, agreed that missing the loan payment will not pose a critical problem for the fledgling corporation. "That is the norm. A company like this rarely starts out at full steam."

Ellis said, "One of our very savvy advisers told us in the beginning to set a very conservative time-line and then multiply it by a factor of three.'

UI officials had been planning for the past several months to ask the state Board of Regents to formally approve CADSI at its March meeting in Ames. But Friday Ellis said because attempts at finding investors continue, the UI will delay going to the board at least one more month.

ALTHOUGH THE UI has yet to snare anyone willing to invest in CADSI, Spriestersbach and Ellis both claim interest in the company "has been high.'

"We are exploring possibilities with a whole host of parties," Spriesterbach said, adding he is anxious for a final deal to be made so he can step down from his position "and ride off into the sunset.'

"We haven't had any reaction from any of the venture capitalists we've talked to that this idea isn't a goer," Ellis said.

However, Trease said he is not worried about CADSI running out of money. "I think we have an adequate amount, at this stage, for a couple more months," he said.

• Best Director. Ingmar Bergman, the Swedish master, is the sentimental favorite, and since Fanny and Alexander is supposed to be his last film, it's more than likely that he'll win. First-time director James L. Brooks poses a threat with Terms of Endearment, and the exclusion of Philip Kaufman (The Right Stuff) seems to give him a better shot at unseating Bergman. Australian Bruce Beresford (nominated for Tender Mercies, he also directed Breaker Morant in 1981) amazed everybody by producing the most accurate portrayal of American life in a while, but it's obvious that's not reason enough for the Academy to give him the Big O.

• Best Supporting Actress. Currently a battle is being fought in the DInews room over Cher's nomination for her role in Silkwood. I tend to side with the nays; her role is too meager to give us more than a taste of character. Just because a singer can act is no reason to start handing out Oscars. But, being a superstar, she just might beat the better performance, that of Linda Hunt as male Indonesian dwarf in The Year The overlooked and neglected include Lindsay Crouse and Amanda Plumber in Daniel, Tess Harper in Tender Mercies, and Sandra Bernhardt in King of Comedy (if the Academy had thought about giving any awards to King, it would have been to the highly-touted Bernhardt). Prediction: Hunt, followed closely by Chemistry take followed closely by Cher - we'll take

• Best Supporting Actor. This is probably the most bountiful category nomination here. John Lithgow was nominated for his performance in Terms of Endearment, when the Academy really meant to nominate him for his performance as a panic-stricken plane passenger in Twilight Zone - The Movie. Jack Nicholson deserves his for Terms, as does Sam Shepard as hero Chuck Yeager in The Right Stuff, though Charles Durning's nomination, which is becoming a perennial event for him, is debatable. Rip Torn (Cross Creek) is one of those pulled out of the hat because the Academy had too difficult of a time deciding between the rest of the choices. Prediction: Nicholson will win (any time a star does a bit role, the Academy thinks he's making a sacrifice for Art); Shepard will be hot on his tail. Alternate list: Nicholson, Lithgow (for Twilight Zone), Jerry Mike Nichols (there are some major miscalculations with certain scenes of Silkwood) and Peter Yates (The Dresser is reportedly strong in acting, not such outstanding directing) are safe fillers for the category, but it would have been nice to see some real strong directors receive the nomination. Martin Scorcese (King of Comedy) and Paul Brickman (Risky Business) are easily the better directors, while Woody Allen (Zelig), Peter Weir (The Year of Living Dangerously) and John Sayles (Baby, about a posthumous award for Rainer Werner Fassbinder?
