Army thwarts rebel ambush

By Greg Miller

U.S. Student Senators President Lawrence Shapin and U.S. Senator William Birnbaum, both of whom were on the evening's program, found themselves at the center of a violent confrontation in Iowa City, Iowa, on Saturday, when a group of armed rebels stormed the Student Senate meeting and took over the Student Senate building.

Shapin, who was speaking on the topic of student affairs and university governance, was set upon by a group of rebels who forced him to flee the building. Birnbaum, who was giving the keynote address, was also taken hostage.

The rebels, who identified themselves as members of the National Council of Students Against Imperialism, had been planning the attack for weeks. They had been working closely with members of the local revolutionary movement, who provided them with information on the Student Senate's meeting schedule and the building's security systems.

The attack began with a coordinated assault on the building, with rebels storming the entrance and forcing their way inside. They were met with resistance from the Student Senate's security team, but were able to overcome them with their superior numbers and equipment.

Once inside, the rebels took control of the building and began to demand the release of several political prisoners who were being held by the university. They also called for the abolition of the Student Senate and the establishment of a new, revolutionary government.

The invasion lasted for several hours, with the rebels occupying various parts of the building and engaging in violent confrontations with the university's security forces. At one point, the rebels set fire to several rooms, causing extensive damage to the building.

Eventually, the rebels were forced to retreat when the university called in the Iowa State Police and other law enforcement agencies to help clear the building. The police were able to disperse the rebels with tear gas and other crowd control measures.

Several people were injured in the confrontation, including several rebels who were arrested and taken into custody. The Student Senate building was left in ruins, with many of its rooms and offices destroyed.

In the aftermath of the attack, the university announced plans to immediately begin an investigation into the incident. A state of emergency was declared, with all university campuses placed on lockdown.

The incident has sparked widespread outrage and calls for justice. Many have called for the arrest and prosecution of those responsible for the attack, while others have criticized the university's response to the incident.

The outlook is uncertain, with tensions high and the situation remaining volatile.
UI asks city to share in expenses for construction of swimming pool

By Jeff Richardson

In an attempt "to reduce the public's share" of the $1.5 million defense budget, the Iowa City School Board and the Iowa City Recreation Commission are considering a partnership with the city to help fund the construction of a new pool. The plan would require the city to contribute $500,000 of the estimated $7 million cost of the project.

The "Join the Fight for Metro UI" campaign, which has already raised $5 million, has been met with skepticism by some residents. Critics argue that the city should not be required to foot the entire bill for the new pool, which would serve as a "luxury amenity" for the athletes and coaches at the University of Iowa.

"We are not asking the city to pay for the entire pool," said Board member Charles Hahn. "We are asking for a partnership in the costs, recognizing that the city has a stake in the success of our athletes and the university as a whole."

Another important issue mentioned by the board candidates is the completion of approximately $1 million in county facilities from the county budget over the last fiscal year. Both Myer and Ockner said they would work to ensure the county’s facilities are completed as scheduled.

Republicans face ‘proportional’ obstacle in county

By Wendy Bacque

Ann and Robert Mitten have little competition from the other party these days in this first-ballot race for one of the influential seats on the county board.

The major obstacle facing potential Republicans on the county board is the so-called proportional representation system, which ensures that a diverse slate of candidates, including independents, is represented on the county board.

Ann and Robert Mitten have been leading in the polls for most of the campaign, with little sign of their opponents gaining ground. However, the county board race is far from decided, and both candidates are working hard to secure the necessary support to win.

Ann and Robert Mitten have been leading in the polls for most of the campaign, with little sign of their opponents gaining ground. However, the county board race is far from decided, and both candidates are working hard to secure the necessary support to win.

We try to get as many of those Independents as we can," says James Jenkins, a Republican candidate for the county board.

The proportional representation system has been a significant obstacle for Republicans in recent elections, with the system's reliance on proportional representation making it difficult for Republicans to win a majority on the board.

However, Ann and Robert Mitten have been working hard to secure the necessary support to win the race. They have been running a vigorous campaign, reaching out to a wide range of voters and working hard to secure the necessary support to win.

The county board race is far from decided, and both candidates are working hard to secure the necessary support to win. Ultimately, the race will be decided by the votes of the people, and Ann and Robert Mitten are working hard to secure the necessary support to win.

"We've saved $152 for resident students - we claim a victory," said the Student Senate's President Larry Lander. The senate had voted to increase tuition by $12 for students and $24 for non-residents.

The decision was made after a long debate among the senators. Some members argued that the increase was necessary to cover the cost of operating the university, while others believed it was too much.

"I'm glad we were able to find a solution," said Lander. "We're all in this together, and we have to do what's best for the university."

Casa Without Class, Donna Summer, Saturday, May 7

Th
day, April 1989

This year has been a hard one for the music business. There have been a few good records, but overall, it's been a tough year. Many bands have struggled to get their music heard. Some, like Donna Summer, have been able to weather the storm and continue to make great music.

One of the most interesting acts on the Casa Without Class stage this year has been Ross. They have been able to build a strong following and continue to grow as a band. Their sound is a mix of pop and rock, and they have been able to appeal to a wide range of listeners.

Donna Summer is also making waves this year. Her latest album, "Ego," has been well-received and is generating a lot of buzz. She has a powerful and soulful voice that has been compared to Aretha Franklin's. Summer's music is soulful and danceable, and she has been able to attract a large audience.

Razor’s Edge just doesn’t cut it

By Bill Murray

The Razor’s Edge is based on the novel by W. Somerset Maugham, and like the novel, it is a story of a man who searches for personal enlightenment. In the United States and Europe the film is a box office hit, but in Iowa City, Iowa, it just doesn’t cut it.

The main idea of the film is that the character, Larry Darrell, discovers in the Tibetan monastery what he believes to be the answer to his problems. But Murray’s portrayal of the wandering monk is a performance that doesn’t make a special movie, but it just doesn’t cut it.

The Razor’s Edge is a film that has won several Academy Awards for its direction, acting, and cinematography. But Murray’s performance is so broad, it makes it particularly odd that he tries to act in the dramatic style that has served him so well in his comedy roles.

Theresa Russell, who plays the character of Sophie, the man he also loves, gives a performance that is so sincere, it is a performance that is really hinges on the character’s motivation.

It is a performance that is a remarkable display of the actor’s ability to act in a dramatic style that has served him so well in his comedy roles. It is a performance that is really hinges on the character’s motivation.
