Regents back divestment legislation

Iowa City--The State University of Iowa--The University of Iowa board of regents Thursday gave its initial approval to a divestment bill aimed at companies conducting business in South Africa.

The divestment bill has been discussed for months, and the regents' hearing was one of the last items on the agenda for the board meeting, which was adjourned. The bill's sponsor, Regent Peg Anderson of Iowa City, said she was pleased with the university's actions.

The bill, which would require the university to divest any holdings in South Africa, would not directly affect the university's investments, Anderson said. Rather, it would force companies to divest their holdings in South Africa or face divestment by the university.

Anderson said the bill was a necessary step in the university's ongoing divestment efforts.

The bill was approved by a 12-0 vote, with Regent Ted Richey of Iowa City abstaining.

Richey said he was concerned about the bill's potential impact on the university's financial well-being.

"I think it's important to remember that we have a large investment in South Africa," Richey said. "We need to consider the long-term implications of this bill."
General Dynamics Corp. indicated in series of foreign bribery cases

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The Justice Department has informed General Dynamics that it is not planning to bring criminal charges against the company for its role in what is called "culpable conduct" in a case of foreign bribery.

The move comes a day after the U.S. attorney's office for the District of Columbia said it was considering bringing charges against the company, which is based in San Diego, California.

Justice Department spokeswoman Krista Mixon confirmed the decision, which was reached after an eight-month investigation into whether General Dynamics violated the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act.

"We have reached the decision that there will be no charges," Mixon said. "We have determined that the company did not violate the law." Mixon declined to comment further.

The company, which makes ships and space systems, denied the allegations.

"We have always been cooperative with the government and have been transparent in our dealings," said a company spokesman.

The case involves allegations that General Dynamics paid bribes to foreign officials to secure contracts for military equipment.

The Justice Department said it had found evidence that the company paid kickbacks to foreign officials in return for contracts to sell military equipment.

The bribes, which were paid in Argentina, Brazil, Indonesia, and South Korea, amounted to millions of dollars, according to the Justice Department.

The company said it had implemented a system to prevent such payments but concede that it could have done more.

"We have made significant changes to our corporate culture and practices to prevent such matters from occurring again," the company said.

The case is one of several involving U.S. companies accused of paying bribes to foreign officials in order to secure contracts for military equipment.

In 2010, the Justice Department and the Securities and Exchange Commission reached a settlement with Halliburton Co. in which the company agreed to pay $450 million to resolve allegations that it paid kickbacks to foreign officials to secure contracts for oil and gas services.

In 2016, the Justice Department agreed to a $500 million settlement with KBR Inc. in which the company agreed to pay the government to resolve allegations that it paid kickbacks to foreign officials to secure contracts for defense services.

In 2019, the Justice Department agreed to a $1 billion settlement with Boeing Co. in which the company agreed to pay the government to resolve allegations that it paid kickbacks to foreign officials to secure contracts for military equipment.

The General Dynamics case is being handled by the Justice Department's Foreign Corruption Unit.

U.S. Rep. Peter Welch (D-Vt.) said in a statement that the government's decision was "the right decision." Welch said he supported efforts to "end the practice of foreign bribery and to hold companies accountable when they violate the law."

Despite complaints from Moore and the other computer store owners, Board Executive Secretary R. Richey, however, said he expects UI officials will "be more cognizant of wanting to see no safeguards are observed" at university sales of computer equipment are not abused.

"Without the $600 to fund smaller rooms, we don't have a white umbrella," Lopez said.

If even proper routines can be found, if educational budget goes to $50, said Moore, it would reduce the number of rooms that could be taught in a single room. In all, third floor rooms, which currently seat 150, would be reduced to 90. The third floor rooms, which are to be used for administrative purposes, would seat 100.

UI service urges donation of organs

By Jerry Duncan

Recent medical advances allow physicians to transplant nearly every major organ, but ironically, educators in schools and colleges are often the last ones to hear about organ donors. New medical advances also mean that more organs are needed than ever before. The Iowa Organ Donation Council is now working on a plan to increase organ donations.

Iowa is one of the few states in the nation that have a "presumed consent" law. This means that if a person has not registered to donate organs, he or she will still be considered an organ donor. However, this law is not enough to ensure that enough organs are donated.

"It is very difficult to face," said a family member of a patient who had donated organs. "We had to make a difficult decision, but we knew it was the right thing to do." The family member said that the donation process was difficult, but that it was worth it to help others.

The Iowa Organ Donation Council is working to increase organ donations in Iowa. They are using a variety of methods, including public service announcements and workshops.

"We are trying to get the message out that organ donation is easy and important," said the council spokesperson. "We want people to know that they can help save lives by donating their organs."

Tulane students vow final effort to save program

The University of New Orleans (UNO) is the latest institution to face the difficult task of saving its intercollegiate athletic program.

The university announced plans to eliminate its varsity sports programs, including baseball, softball, men's and women's tennis, men's and women's basketball, golf, and track and field.

The decision was made due to budget cuts and the university's fiscal situation.

Today's decision comes as a shock and disappointment to many students, faculty, and alumni who have been involved with the sports programs.

The university has a long tradition of supporting athletic programs, and this decision will have a significant impact on the community.

Tulane students have voiced their concerns and have vowed to do everything in their power to save the programs.

They have launched a petition and are planning a protest rally to raise awareness about the issue.

The students are also reaching out to alums, local businesses, and community members to seek support for their cause.

Tom Petty makes it clear his roots are south of the Mason-Dixon line.

Dependent on MTV for its recognition, the solo Southern feeling is a bit really in the rock world these days. With Petty's roots so solid and strong, the South is ready for its turn in the rock world. A song like "Southern Accents" (IPT-12) will come out of the South soon.

The album's highlight, however, is a seemingly night marking in the middle of the second side called "Spike." On this song, Petty manages to put his music into the hands of a rock and roll band, but remains the focal point of the album. Petty's voice has been kind to the roots-conscious, Southern rock and roll scene. His voice is a sincere, Southern expression. The South is well known for its musical talent, and Petty has managed to bring that talent to the fore. The album's title, "Southern Accents," may be a bit too accurate, but it is a fitting description for this album.

PETTY, HOWEVER, has a way of treating Dixie/On Dixie, with a sense of humor and a bit of a Southern accent. "Southern Accents" is a poke at the South, but it is done with a sense of humor and a bit of Southern pride.

The album ends with a ballad, "Walter." This song is a bit of a letdown, but it is a fitting conclusion to the album. The album is a journey through the South, and "Walter" is a fitting总结.

The South is going to be a bit of a problem for Petty's next album, but he is not worried. The South is a strong part of Petty's music, and he is not going to let it go.

In conclusion, "Southern Accents" is a great album. Petty has managed to bring the South to the forefront of the rock world, and he has done it with a sense of humor and a bit of Southern pride. The South is a strong part of Petty's music, and he is not going to let it go.

Alabama returns to the Arena with country sound Friday night isimestone County music group Alabama will be the first band to perform on the new arena stage when it returns this Friday for a concert with country music band Montgomery Gentry. Alabama was formed in 1986 by singer and guitarist Randy Owen, lead vocalist and guitarist Jeff Cook, bass guitarist and vocalist SteveInclude Gentry, three groups who grew up in northeast Alabama, and the tour will include stops at the arena with a special guest, the Opry's own Randy Owen. The group is composed of three father-son pairs. The sons are all better guitar players than their fathers, who have been playing together for over 30 years. The group's music draws on a wide range of influences, from bluegrass to country ballads, and the two-hour show will feature a mix of old favorites and new songs. The show is not to be missed by fans of country music!

By Alan Hayg
