Student leaders' deal yields free bowl travel

By Robert Mann
Staff Writer

Eight UI student leaders could get free trips to the Rose Bowl for helping a travel agency organize tours to the New Year's Day game.

If the student leaders, who will be chosen by Student Senate President Steve Grubbs, don't want to go to the game, the travel agency — Conlin-Dodds Bowl Tours Inc. — will donate part of the travel money to the UI.

ROSE BOWL

But the student leaders probably won't pass up the free trips.

"Conlin-Dodds has done this every year for the past 30 years for whichever team goes to the Rose Bowl," Grubbs said, adding it is customary for student leaders to accept free trips rather than the money.

He also said the agreement with Conlin-Dodds, which is similar to deals offered by most travel agencies, stipulates that an undetermined number of student government representatives must go along with the UI tours.

A REPRESENTATIVE from Conlin-Dodds Bowl Tours, Inc. in Champaign, Ill., declined to comment on the free trips being offered to student leaders, saying the package details are private.

Although as many as eight student leaders are expected to take advantage of free trips that are costing students more than $730 each, Grubbs said, "If we didn't use the package tour, we would get money." He added he was unsure how much would be donated if the students don't go.

Joe Griffin, a student leader from Ohio State University, said only about three student leaders received free trips from Conlin-Dodds when they went to the Rose Bowl last year.

When Iowa went to the Rose Bowl in 1982, a similar deal was made between Conlin-Dodds and the senate. But on that occasion the full senate passed a resolution allowing selected senators to go.

Grubbs said he didn't feel it was necessary to bring the issue before the senate this year. He

McFarlane resigns security position

WASHINGTON (UPI) — National security adviser Robert McFarlane has resigned from his top foreign policy post after a protracted feud with White House chief of staff Donald Regan, administration officials said Tuesday night.

White House officials maintained an official silence on administration developments, and it appeared they planned to make a formal announcement when a successor had been selected.

Possible successors include David M. Abshire, the U.S. ambassador to NATO, Adm. John M. Poindexter, McFarlane's deputy, and Lawrence Eagleburger, former assistant secretary of state.

The Washington Times reported that Poindexter had been selected as McFarlane's successor.

Poindexter, reached at his Rockville, Md., home, refused to confirm the report.

"I just don't have any comment on such rumors," he said.

Earlier Tuesday, White House spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters the president would abide by the wishes of any staff member who wanted to leave office, indicating he had accepted McFarlane's resignation.

MCFARLANE TOLD United Press International "no comment" when asked about his resignation Monday night and the president declined Tuesday to discuss the matter, telling reporters: "I'm not taking any questions."

CBS News reported McFarlane was expected to announce his resignation later this week, and that he had informed President Ronald Reagan of his decision last week in California. McFarlane aides were urging him to announce his resignation Wednesday, the network said.

A senior administration official also told NBC Nightly News McFarlane's resignation was expected "shortly."

Since Regan moved to the White House in a swap of jobs with Treasury Secretary James Baker, there has been friction between McFarlane and Regan. Aides say McFarlane has resented Regan's "take charge" style and his intrusion in foreign policy making.

Regan, on the other hand, has taken exception to being bypassed by McFarlane and calling Regan directly in times of crisis.

Regan declined to comment Tuesday on reports that Robert McFarlane is quitting as national security adviser because of a protracted feud with White House chief of staff Donald Regan.

"I'm not taking any questions," said Regan following an East Room ceremony in which reporters asked him if McFarlane had decided to resign.

Council approves parking ticket hike

By Gretchen Norman
Staff Writer

It may soon cost $1 more to park illegally in Iowa City.

The Iowa City Council Tuesday approved for the second time increasing current parking fines to $3, one of five city fees the council agreed to increase. The fine would be an incentive for motorists to put money in parking meters, according to the proposal.

"The parker has control over whether he or she receives a parking ticket. In addition, they can park in a parking ramp and avoid parking tickets completely," the city Finance Department told the council earlier. The fee increases must receive three approvals before becoming a city ordinance.

Other fee hikes initially approved include increasing fees for copies of fire inspection reports from $1 for the first copy and an additional quarter for each additional copy to $3 per copy.

The council approved increasing many Board of Adjustment zoning application fees to about $450, up from fees ranging from about $150 to $300.

An approximate 114 percent increase in infant burial fees was denied, but the council approved increasing such other burial fees as child and adult burials, cremation, tent and equipment use and added a new fee for locating lots on weekends and after hours.

Some other fees approved so far by the council include:

- Second consideration of an ordinance passed to continue assessing garbage collection fees of $4.30 per month for each home and $2.15 per month for apartment tenants. The ordinance will provide proper authorization to collect the fee.
- Landfill fees be will increased Jan. 1, 1986, by 25 cents per ton, up to $7.75 of waste.
- Iowa City police will begin charging $5 to unlock vehicles.

- Alarms at the Iowa City Police Department will cost $3.50 per month, an increase of 50 cents. More than five alarms per calendar year could cost up to $45, up from the previous ceiling cost of $30.
- Animal licenses for altered pets will increase from $2 to $5 and for unaltered animals from $10 to $15. The fee to license a kitten or puppy will increase from 25 cents to $1.
- The cost to reclaim an animal from the Iowa City Animal Control remained the same unless an animal is impounded four times in one calendar year. The council increased that fee from $30 to $40.
- Daily boarding at the Iowa City Animal Shelter increased from $5 to $8 for dogs and $3 to $6 for cats.

"The prices may be higher than commercial kennels; that's because the city does not wish to be in the business of boarding animals," the Finance Department reported.

The council is approving user fees to meet budget demands without increasing property taxes, and to make the services more self-sufficient.

Council votes down salaries

By Gretchen Norman
Staff Writer

The Iowa City Council voted unanimously Tuesday night to deny itself a pay increase for at least two years.

The proposed ordinance would have increased the mayor's salary to $7,210 and the councilors' to $5,763. The Iowa City mayor currently earns $6,011 annually and the councilors each receive $5,012 per year.

According to City Clerk Marian Karr, the last council pay increase occurred in August 1983 with the agreement to assess the salaries every two years.

"At that time, we didn't see real problems of this budget session," Mayor John McDonald said. "We're asking the citizens of Iowa City to squeeze their belts."

"At the time we made the decision, the budget was not as bleak as it is now," Councilor Kate Dickson said. "It's a time when the city needs all the help it can get."

"As we went through the budgeting process, there was unanimous agreement that compensation should be increased a little bit," McDonald said of the increase two years ago. "I think the comments received from the public indicated they are aware of the time it takes."

MCDONALD SAID with the city facing a $500,000 deficit and cutbacks on service, he opposes any salary increases.

"Even though we're only talking about a few hundred dollars, I'm going to vote against an increase at this particular time," he said.

"If nothing else, we need to be examples and work with the city to bring the budget under control," Dickson said. Councilor Bill Ambrisco said even if the council approves an increase, it would not take effect for this council.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House approved a bill to limit textile, shoe and copper imports Tuesday and sent the controversial measure to President Ronald Reagan who has threatened to veto any protectionist legislation.

But the 255-161 vote on the measure, which the Senate approved last month, fell short of the two-thirds vote that would be needed to override a veto, leaving doubt whether the bill will ever become law.

If it survives a veto, the bill would cut textile imports from the nation's three major suppliers — Korea, Taiwan and Hong Kong — and freeze imports from the next nine biggest exporters: China, Japan, Pakistan, Indonesia, India, the Philippines, Thailand, Brazil and Singapore.

REP. HAL DAUB, R-Neb., called the bill "a kick in the teeth" to American consumers who will pay higher prices for clothing.

"A veto of the bill may be one of the most damaging things we could do for American agriculture" because U.S. trading partners may retaliate by turning to other countries for farm products, Daub said.

But Rep. Ed Jenkins, D-Ga., a leading supporter of the textile measure, warned the United States would become "a second rate nation" unless it protects its industries and workers from cheap imports.

Tax reform bill advances

WASHINGTON — The House Ways and Means Committee formally approved a massive tax reform bill Tuesday which conformed to some of the primary guidelines of President Ronald Reagan's reform proposals.

The committee, which spent more than two months hammering out the complex revision of the tax code, completed writing the bill late last month. The formal vote Tuesday was needed to send the measure to the Rules Committee and the full House, where a vote is likely to come next week. The committee's bill includes Reagan's goals of cutting back tax breaks in return for lower tax rates.

Military giveaways alleged

WASHINGTON — Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., charged Tuesday the Reagan administration has replaced its policy of selling weapons to allies at fair market value with "a foreign military welfare program."

Foreign military "giveaways" will total $8.6 billion during the current fiscal year, Proxmire said, twice the amount given away in fiscal year 1983, but, taking into account inflation, such giveaways have increased by 92 percent since that time. Proxmire said Israel and Egypt together got $2.575 billion in waived loans and $3 billion in grants for the current fiscal year.

Latin American aid debated

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, trying to salvage half of a multimillion-dollar foreign aid package, proposed Tuesday that a police counterterrorism program in Central America be restricted to civilian forces.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., said the administration had dropped the idea of training military security forces as part of a $54 million aid request. There was strong opposition in Congress to including government military forces because of concern they abuse human rights, using torture and assassination. Lugar drafted legislation to spend $24 million to train and equip civilian security forces in El Salvador, Costa Rica, Honduras and Guatemala.

Soviet boycott of Nobel ends

OSLO, Norway — The Soviet ambassador to Oslo will attend this year's Nobel Peace Prize ceremony, breaking a 10-year boycott started when Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov won the prize, a Soviet official said Tuesday.

Ambassador Dimitri Polyansky will attend next Tuesday's award ceremony in honor of Yevgeny Chazov of the Soviet Union and Bernard Lown of the United States, the official said. The two doctors will accept the award on behalf of International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War. West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl and other European political leaders on Sunday urged the Nobel Committee not to honor Chazov, saying he had taken part in Soviet harassment of Sakharov.

Iowa blast leaves one dead

CAMANCHE, Iowa — A natural gas build-up in an industrial furnace apparently caused Tuesday's explosion at the Hawkeye Chemical Co. Plant that killed one man and left another worker hospitalized.

Richard Barber, 44, of DeWitt, was killed when a furnace-like piece of equipment exploded as he and a fellow worker tried to light it, company spokesman Jim Fay said. Ron Ott, 45, of Clinton, was hospitalized in stable condition with neck and leg injuries. The explosion was the second in the past five months at the plant. A July 6 accident in the same area of the plant — where ammonia is produced — left eight people hospitalized.

Weather causes traffic jam-ups

By Julie Eisele
 Staff Writer

Iowa City police are blaming the weekend's winter storm for 10 traffic accidents reported within the city limits since Monday. No injuries resulted.

Traffic on downtown streets was backed up for blocks during rush hours Tuesday. Iowa City police Capt. Donald Strand said the most dangerous intersections included Dubuque Street and Foster Road; Melrose Avenue and Mormon Trek Road; Burlington Street and Muscatine Avenue; and First and Muscatine avenues.

Police

Strand said residents of Forest View Trailer Court, 1205 Laura Drive, experienced problems when turning onto Forest Road from Dubuque Street as traffic flowing south into the city was backed up because of ice.

"Then when they do turn they get stuck," he said.

Police officials said streets remained slick because sand scattered by road crews is ineffective in extremely cold weather.

"It's so cold that when they put sand down it doesn't do any good because the tires spin it all away," Strand said.

Two of the accidents reported to police involved three vehicles. One occurred Monday on Lower Muscatine Road when a car, turning left, was struck by another vehicle attempting to stop. The second vehicle was rear-ended by a third.

Students change their majors in search of interesting fields

By Perry Meier
Special to The Daily Iowan

UI senior Stacey Carmichael thought she knew just what she wanted to do with her life — hospital administration.

After spending a week observing several hospital administrators on the job, however, she changed her mind — just as many other UI students have.

According to the Liberal Arts Office of Academic Affairs at the UI, 6,768 such changes of major were made in 1982. Eight thousand major changes were made in 1983. And 3,345 such changes were processed in 1984 before the office stopped keeping track of major changes in December 1984.

UI orientation counselors tell incoming freshmen that college students today change their majors an average of three times before graduation.

SHERRIE GRIFFIN, a UI graduate, should know. She came to the UI with a declared major in computer science, changed to accounting, then changed to finance.

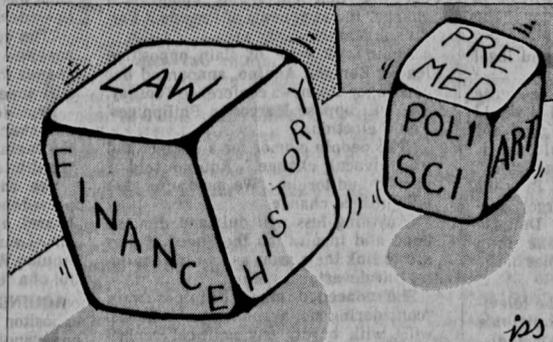

Becky Manthei has had an even more varied experience. The UI graduate began in English, switched to pre-nursing, then to medical technology and finally back to English. She also completed the Teachers Education Program and planned to teach after graduation.

Changing career goals in such a way is not a new development, nor one that ends upon graduation.

Manthei recently started working as an executive secretary with Walker Parking Consultants in Chicago and is training for a position in marketing.

THE REASONS FOR such changes are as varied as the individuals and the situations themselves.

Griffin changed from computer science to accounting for several reasons. "Actually (computer science) was too difficult and I didn't want to work just with machines," she said. "I wanted to have more interaction with people than interaction with a computer."

Carmichael made the switch from hospital administration to accounting after spending time with hospital administrators on the job. She now thinks the field is too stressful and too time-consuming for her.

"Before, I wanted to be the head of a big hospital," she said. "This experience brought me down to earth."

The director of the Undergraduate Advising Center, Juliet Kaufmann, said there are four main reasons that students change their majors.

MANY STUDENTS change majors because they discover they were not familiar enough with the major before they choose it or because they do not have the ability, according to Kaufmann.

Other students change because the initial choice was not their own. They may have followed their parents' choice, for example. As a part of the "natural development" of students during college they become more independent and establish their own goals, Kaufmann said.

Still other students decide the "drudgery" of the work necessary for a particular major is not worth its benefits, according to Kaufmann. She said the advisers are supportive of decisions like these; they want students to major in something they enjoy.

"That way their grades will be better and college will be a positive experience for them," Kaufmann said. "And college should be an enriching experience."

A SMALL NUMBER of students cannot decide where their interests and abilities lie, according to Kaufmann. These are the most difficult students to counsel, she added.

"I wish I would have taken some business classes," Manthei said. "I have a good clerical background and the opportunities for women in business are really good right now."

"I wish I would have stayed open as a freshman and tried a bunch of different classes," she said.

It's not uncommon to regret declaring a major early, according to the Undergraduate Advising Center. When students are not sure of what they want, it is to their advantage to remain open, Kaufmann said.

"Many students think that having an open major is a sign of weakness," Kaufmann said. "Actually it is an admission of strength because it says 'I need to explore the options and I realize that.'"

Counselors prompt students to investigate career needs

By Chris Peters
Special to The Daily Iowan

Some students just can't see themselves putting on suits, going to work at 8 a.m. and coming home at 5 p.m.

Some can't cope with the pressure from home to find a job right after graduation. And others, particularly women, have been told for too long that some jobs just aren't appropriate.

Enter the UI Counseling Service. "One problem is the expectation a lot of people have of some sort of divine intervention as far as their future career is concerned — the 'It'll just come to me some day,' kind of attitude. It rarely does," Bruce Etringer, a staff psychologist at the counseling service, said.

The office is best known for psychological counseling. But the counseling service also helps students confront barriers in their career decision-making.

"Low self-esteem is one problem we see often," Etringer said. "A lot of college-age men and women simply can't picture themselves functioning on a highly responsible professional level, leaving a gap between what they think they can do and what they really want to do which often leads to their winding up in an unfulfilling career."

Social biases can be another big problem, Etringer said. For example, many female students have been "steered away from careers in mathematical or highly technological areas, regardless of what their actual aptitudes are, simply because those are often thought to be areas that women are not suited for."

While some students struggle to figure what will come after graduation, others have thought a lot about their careers, but don't have a system for sorting out how to get what they want.

Choosing a career is more than looking for the jobs that pay the most money, said Kathleen Staley, senior staff psychologist for the counseling service.

"We try to get students to sit down and inventory their interests, values and their psychological needs," Staley said. "From these we want them to be able to work out a more complete picture of themselves and, we hope, make more confident and knowledgeable career decisions."

Group sessions offered by the counseling service this fall covered decision making and goal setting, assessing skills and abilities, awareness of work and personal values and information on the work world.

THE LATTER session consisted of an hour and a half long program. The participants first listed the types of work environments they envisioned themselves in and methods of obtaining information on careers. The participants were encouraged to make a connection between personal goals and activities in which they participated.

Additionally, as a useful background for the other career issues programs, the counseling service administers the Strong-Campbell Interest Inventory and an interpretation of the results.

All of the services are free except for a $3 charge for the interest inventory.

"We get a lot of juniors, seniors and graduate students coming in in a sort of career panic. We'd really like to see more people trying to take a more thoughtful and systematic approach to their careers earlier on," Etringer said.

Good attitude vital in job hunt

By Chris Peters
Special to The Daily Iowan

It's not necessarily the past experience that helps land a job, but how that experience is presented, said Connie Rosene, Iowa Job Service employment counselor.

In addition to the regular referral service, Iowa Job Service offers individual and group employment counseling workshops. Rosene stressed the need for better awareness of what goes into writing resumes and preparing for job interviews.

"One real important thing for instance, is that people interviewing for jobs aren't always aware of the need to be positive, not just about their skills, but about their general attitude toward future and past work even if they were fired from their last job," Rosene said.

Rules for resume writing are not set in stone and Rosene encourages clients to fit the format to their individual needs.

Rosene emphasized the usefulness of monthly job skills workshops. The workshops last four days and focus on resume writing, job interview skills, writing cover letters, setting goals and sharing experiences. Approximately 70 percent of those who go through the workshops find employment soon after, she said.

"When a person's looking for a job and maybe getting frustrated or discouraged, approaching the problem with people trying to do the same thing, sharing information and maybe networking a little bit can be a huge encouragement in itself," Rosene said.

NATO to temper nuclear strategy

BRUSSELS, Belgium (UPI) — NATO is reducing its dependence on a nuclear first strike against a Soviet invasion of Western Europe by upgrading and improving its conventional weapons, NATO defense ministers said Tuesday.

"We are determined to strengthen the credibility of our strategy by avoiding an undue reliance on the early use of nuclear weapons through the special effort to improve our conventional capabilities," the ministers said in a statement at the end of the year-end session of NATO's Defense Planning Committee.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger called the gathering at NATO headquarters a "very fine meeting" in which member nations decided to cooperate most closely in the building and design of conventional weapons systems.

"This can improve the basic industrial capability of all our countries," Weinberger said at a news conference.

HOWEVER, THE defense ministers had some difficulty with the Netherlands' unilateral decision to drop two of its NATO-assigned nuclear tasks in return for deploying 48 Tomahawk cruise missiles in 1988.

Dutch Defense Minister Job de Reuter told reporters the decision was forced on his government by the strength of anti-nuclear feeling in Holland.

"It was a package deal," he said. "The Netherlands is deeply divided on the issue of deployment and we consider that our decision was well balanced."

Under the Dutch compromise, it will deploy cruise missiles but will relinquish its NATO task of carrying nuclear weapons in its F-16 warplanes and jettison its nuclear depth charges currently carried in Orion reconnaissance planes.

Caspar Weinberger

Weinberger said all the allies regretted that the Dutch felt they had to back out on NATO duties because of internal political problems.

"We hope that further review, based on the statements that were made today and other factors, might induce a change," Weinberger said.

WEINBERGER ALSO said Tuesday the United States is close to signing a deal with Britain to participate in President Ronald Reagan's Star Wars missile defense program.

Weinberger indicated the deal — the first with a foreign country — could be signed later this week when he meets with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in London.

The British have been seeking a $1.5 billion package of defense contracts for research into Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known as Star Wars, which is aimed at developing a space-based laser weapon for defending against nuclear missiles.

Thatcher said in London last week she hoped a deal could be signed by Christmas and Weinberger, in an interview from Brussels on NBC's "Today" show, indicated it could happen by then.

"I think we're reasonably close to it," said Weinberger, who will be in London Thursday and Friday. "The main problems now, I think, are mostly technical, drafting and legal problems."

"I'm very hopeful that we are quite close to an agreement and it would be very fortunate, very good for everybody I think, if we could sign as soon as possible," Weinberger said.

British officials at the Brussels conference said Weinberger discussed SDI with British Defense Secretary Michael Heseltine in a 20-minute talk on the sidelines of the main conference.

WEINBERGER SAID in the television interview that Washington's European allies in NATO had displayed keen interest in taking part in the Star Wars research.

"There are a lot of obviously very highly skilled and extremely competent scientists and companies and organizations and groups in the European countries, and we would be delighted to have them participate," he said.

Conference officials said the Netherlands, despite its divided ranks, is promoting the idea of a Star Wars technology that could be used by all the Western allies.

Weinberger shrugged off criticism that the money to develop the Strategic Defense Initiative would be better used among American companies, rather than farming out some of the SDI project abroad.

"We'll have enough work for a great many people to do, but we want to have our allies encouraged to participate," Weinberger said.

Aquino's widow affirms presidential candidacy

MANILA, Philippines (UPI) — Presidential hopeful Corazon Aquino said Tuesday many consider her "just a housewife" with little political experience but that she is the "unequivocal change" the opponents of President Ferdinand Marcos want.

Aquino, 52, wife of slain opposition leader Benigno Aquino, announced her candidacy at a news conference Tuesday. She will oppose Marcos in Philippines' Feb. 7 election.

"The people clamor for a distinct and unequivocal change," Aquino told a packed auditorium. "We must offer that unequivocal change."

"Anything less will dull and dim the hope and inspiration they need if they are to link their arms as one in rebuilding our devastated nation."

She conceded many Filipinos were "considering me, a woman, just a housewife, with hardly any political experience at all except being the wife of Ninoy (Benigno) Aquino for 28 years."

BUT SHE ADDED, "People are just so fed up. "In fact, they are almost in despair because for 20 years we have had one of the most brilliant Filipinos and look at what has happened to our country. I have been devastated."

"The contrast is necessary in order to convince the people that there is still a chance for this country and that there is still hope."

Repeatedly interrupted by applause and chants of "Cory, Cory," Aquino said the main issue in the election will be "credibility."

She said she had offered the vice presidency to former Sen. Salvador Laurel, an ambitious presidential aspirant. Laurel later said he would meet Aquino Wednesday and that he is hopeful of a "unification."

AQUINO SAID the challenge facing the opposition was not merely to rally behind one candidate but to field one "who cannot, rightly or wrongly, be seen as a continuation, potential or actual, of the Marcos regime."

OAS calls for reform to avert 'overflow of war'

CARTAGENA, Colombia (UPI) — Mexican Foreign Minister Bernardo Sepulveda Tuesday called for reform in the Organization of American States so the group can help avert "an overflow of war" in Latin America.

Foreign ministers of the Contadora Group met apart from the OAS extraordinary session and Assistant Secretary of State Elliot Abrams met with Venezuelan Foreign Minister Simon Alberto Consalvi.

During Tuesday's debate on proposed reforms that would allow the OAS to help negotiate the Central American conflict, Sepulveda said the entire hemisphere is at risk.

"THE CONFLICT in the zone (Central America) threatens the peace, the development and the political and social stability of the hemisphere," Sepulveda said. "The overflow of war is a factor that puts in jeopardy the future of inter-American relations."

"We cannot approve as legitimate what is illegal," he said. "We cannot justify actions of destabilization or subversion, arguing that that is the way to protect one's security."

Sepulveda did not directly refer to the United States, which supports rebels trying to overthrow the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. The United States has accused Nicaragua of supporting guerrilla movements in El Salvador and Colombia.

THE TENSION between the United States and Nicaragua flared Monday at the opening session of the OAS meeting when Secretary of State George Shultz and Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Alejandro Bendana had a heated exchange over the Central American policies of the Reagan administration.

Bendana condemned foreign intervention in his country, a thinly veiled reference to American funding of counter-revolutionary forces known as Contras.

Shultz responded by claiming Nicaragua is actively involved in such intervention by its alleged support of the Colombian terrorist group M-19, which last month staged a bloody siege of Bogota's Justice Palace.

SEPULVEDA SAID the OAS must overcome its "insufficiencies" and become a "useful instrument to maintain the peace and security in the region and ... for dialogue between the United States and Latin American nations."

Current OAS rules make it impossible for the group to get involved in the Central American conflict because the United States and several Central American countries have not ratified a key OAS provision allowing the group's intervention.

Abrams, meanwhile, told reporters the United States will keep "pressuring" Nicaragua to stop supporting outside rebel movements.

ABRAMS met three hours with Venezuelan Foreign Minister Consalvi, who told reporters the two "analyzed the Central American situation" and "sought points of understanding."

The Contadora Group, composed of Mexico, Venezuela, Panama and Colombia, met Tuesday morning. A member of the Mexican delegation said the foreign ministers "agreed on the need for a Central American agreement, so the conflict does not intensify."

The Contadora Group, which opposes foreign intervention in Central America, supports a peaceful resolution to the regional conflicts by addressing the economic and political problems facing the Latin nations.

Pentagon suspends contracts

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Pentagon barred General Dynamics Corp. Tuesday from receiving any government contracts until the case is closed on a federal indictment charging the giant company and four individuals with fraud.

The temporary ban does not affect existing contracts for the production of weapons — ranging from nuclear-powered submarines to tanks — but those contracts cannot be renewed or extended during the suspension period, the Navy said.

The punishment, handed down by the Navy in its role as executive agent for Defense Department contracts with the company, was severe since it affected all of the company's facilities, not just the Pomona, Calif., division that was the focus of the indictment. Further, the suspension is government-wide and not restricted to the Defense Department.

"THE SUSPENSION is for a temporary period pending completion of the legal proceedings initiated by the indictment," the Navy said. The company did more than $6 billion in business with the Pentagon last year. General Dynamics, the nation's third largest defense contractor, has 30 days in which to submit a formal opposition to the suspension.

The indictment, returned by a federal grand jury in Los Angeles Monday, details one count of conspiring to defraud the Pentagon from January 1979 to August 1981 and six counts of making false statements.

Among those named in the indictment — which alleges efforts to pass off more than $3 million cost overruns as legitimate expenses — is NASA Administrator James Beggs, who was an executive at General Dynamics before taking over the space agency in June 1981.

ALTHOUGH BEGGS said Monday he expected to be exonerated and had no plans to resign, administration officials said Tuesday he has decided to take a leave of absence until the case is settled. An aide to Beggs said Tuesday the NASA chief was "going to sleep on it" before deciding what to do.

In a statement, General Dynamics company said the harsh penalty was "inappropriate since the issues in the case should not have resulted in indictments against the company or its people."

Repeating the defense it offered Monday, the company said the "actions challenged in the indictment involved highly sophisticated regulatory and accounting matters" and "should have been resolved in a civil forum, such as the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals."

THE GOVERNMENT has charged the Pomona division, Beggs and three present company officers with trying to hide a $3.2 million cost overrun on a $39 million contract to build two prototypes of an ill-fated Army anti-aircraft weapon known as the Sgt. York gun.

The Army later selected the Ford Aerospace Co. to build the weapon, a tank-mounted Division Air Defense gun. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger canceled production of the weapon in August, after more than $1 billion was spent on it, because it did not work.

General Dynamics, which had $6.8 billion in Pentagon orders during fiscal 1984, has had a series of run-ins with the military in the past year and is the subject of one of the biggest investigations in Defense Department history.

THE NAVY suspended contracts awards to General Dynamics from May 21 to Aug. 13 for what was called "pervasive" misconduct and withheld progress payments of $437 million on existing contracts between March and July because of "unallowable expenses."

Further, it canceled two contracts worth $22 million and fined the company $676,283 for gift-giving to retired Adm. Hyman Rickover, who supervised the Navy's nuclear power program.

Despite the penalties, General Dynamics received $6.6 billion worth of Pentagon contracts during the first 10 months of 1985 — 108.6 percent more than the same period the year before, the Washington Analysis Corp. reported recently.

Among other weapons, the company builds missile-firing nuclear submarines for the Navy, F-16 fighters for the Air Force and M-1 tanks for the Army.

McFarlane

foreign policy adviser, Reagan said, "I speak to him every day."

It was the second day in a row that White House officials, including McFarlane himself, refused to discuss reports that McFarlane has decided to quit in a turf dispute with Regan.

Several months ago there were rumors that McFarlane was in line to be ambassador to Japan when Ambassador Mike Man-field retires. He also was mentioned as a possible ambassador to Israel.

McFarlane, 48, has been close to the president, frequently seeing him several times a day to bring him up to date on security and intelligence matters. He also was an important force before the Geneva summit meeting between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Trade

imports except those from Canada and Europe, whose higher-priced merchandise does not threaten the domestic industry.

By accepting the Senate-passed trade measure, the House avoided the need for a conference to work out differences between it and the stripped-down textile bill approved by the House in October. It now goes to the president, shifting the focus to whether Reagan will veto it, and if so, whether both Houses of Congress can muster a two-thirds vote to override it.

To win additional votes, Senate supporters added protections for the domestic shoe and textile industries in hopes of overriding a veto. But last month's 60-39 Senate vote was short of the two-thirds majority needed for an override, indicating that such a feat would be unlikely.

Shoe imports, which now account for nearly 80 percent of the domestic market, would be limited to 60 percent for the next eight years under the bill. It also would require the president to negotiate voluntary restraint agreements with major copper exporting nations.

Senate

added the senators who work hardest selling the four packages will be given priority when he decides who will go to the game in Pasadena, Calif.

SEN. CRAIG Perrin, who was extremely critical of the actions of several UI student leaders during a trip to California in August, said he believes "senate time can be better spent elsewhere."

During the previous trip to California, several student government members skipped parts of a conference to visit beaches, attend a baseball game and illegally drive a rental car to Tijuana, Mex.

"It would be smarter if the top two sellers from the CAC and the top two sellers from the senate would go, and we would take cash for the rest," Perrin suggested.

Grubbs said the senate could still earn money on the trip, depending on the success of the package's New Year's Eve party.

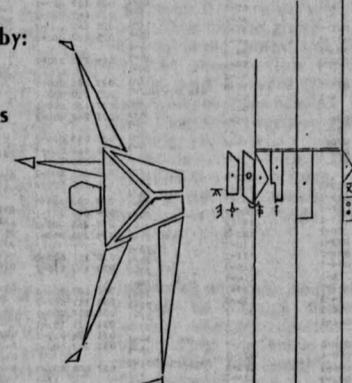

"If there's any money left over, Conlin-Dodds will revert that money" to the senate, he added.

As part of the agreement with Conlin-Dodds, Grubbs said he and senate Vice President Sara Moeller will be going to California today with some UI alumni to help work out the details of the tour.

Dollars and sense

One of the most popular American myths is that the children of the United States can grow up to be anything they want; all that is required is hard work. It comforts those of us who want to believe that the system treats everyone as equals. People naturally prefer to feel that they have succeeded on their own merits, and that others fail because they deserve to fail.

In 1980 Eugene Lang, multimillionaire owner of Refac Technology Development Corp., stood at a podium in front of the sixth graders of Harlem's Public School 121, intending to repeat the myth: Work hard, be what you want to be. After all, Lang himself had attended P.S. 121 back in the 1930s.

But as Lang faced his audience, predominantly poor blacks and Hispanics, he knew that his prepared speech was not entirely truthful. Lang discarded his prepared text, offering instead of empty platitudes some real incentive: He would pay the college tuition of every sixth grader who stayed in school.

Lang started a $2,000 scholarship fund for each, adding to it each year the student stayed in school. Fifty-two of those 61 sixth graders still live in the area, where poverty and hopelessness make dropping out the norm, not the exception. All 52 are juniors in high school; all 52 are college bound. Two of the nine students who moved away have maintained contact with Lang and will also take advantage of his scholarship offer.

Those students' success must remind us how many are failing only because they lack real opportunity — and that often the only way to create real educational opportunity is to spend money on special programs. This is, of course, completely contrary to one of the new American myths fostered by the Terry Branstads of the country: That the quality of education has absolutely nothing to do with the amount spent on education.

When money is slashed from programs for the handicapped, from college scholarship and loan funds, from special classes for the learning disabled, and from public schools in general, that some students will lose the opportunity for full success must logically follow. Lang demonstrated what happens when doors are opened for the disadvantaged; those closing doors must recognize that the principle is equally true in reverse.

No laughing matter

What if a task force, assigned to study Iowa's medical or legal profession, suggested that doctors and lawyers be allowed to practice in Iowa without the appropriate certification? The governor would laugh them out of his office, right?

Maybe not. Last week a Task Force on Compulsory Education suggested that people without proper teaching certificates be allowed to teach in Iowa's Christian and home schools. Gov. Terry Branstad, with a straight face, said the idea "sounds good."

What would possess Branstad to endorse such an erosion of the state's education standards? With an election year just around the corner, Branstad is not about to cross parents who feel that the state's insistence upon having qualified, certified teachers instruct their children is an intrusion upon their rights, nor offend the conservative fundamentalists who operate these schools.

It is unfortunate that Branstad feels extra votes next November are worth letting the quality of education for Iowa children slide.

Spy stories lack actual threat

WASHINGTON

Richard Cohen

THE NEW E.L. Doctorow book is called World's Fair. The fair of the title is the 1939 one in New York, maybe the last with the capacity to absolutely wow those who came to see it. Since then there have been many fairs, but television and movies have surpassed them as mediums of wonder. Like aging singers who are introduced as either Miss or Mister, they coast on their reputations.

It is the same with spies. A baker's dozen has been arrested so far this year. Most of them were in the alleged hire of the Soviet Union, which is serious stuff. But one was supposedly working for the Israelis (or an Israeli), two for Ghana, one for a British magazine, Jane's Defence Weekly, and one for what Richard Nixon used to call Red China but which we now call the People's Republic of China, too, are given star billing.

The arrest of each spy warranted breathless front-page stories and precious minutes of television news. It's hard to see why. Ghana is not a threat to us, nor is Israel; China once was, but isn't anymore. As for Samuel Loring Morison, the former navy intelligence analyst who provided U.S. satellite pictures of Soviet ships to Jane's, he is not even a spy in the conventional sense of the word.

THE REMAINING SPIES allegedly sold information to the Soviets, which is serious business, but somehow not so serious that anything much seems to change. The damage is always hard to measure. The government, of course, routinely says it's either immense or incalculable. But recently a spokesman made the mistake of trying to calculate it. "It's going to cost us millions to recoup, if we can," he told the New York Times. That's hardly the same as saying we might as well kiss the East Coast goodbye.

How then do we explain our continuing fascination with spies and spying? How in an age when two nations have nuclear arsenals capable of destroying the world... when much intelligence is being conducted by satellites in space and discs standing sentry in the Arctic... when we know that no spy can make a real difference because no real difference can be made... why do we still care so much about spies?

The answer is that we are hopeless romantics. We'd like to think that individuals still matter. We would like to think that despite all the gizmos in space and the gadgets at the National Security Agency, a person (maybe in a trench coat) can still alter history. Once, of course, that could be done. A battle plan in the hands of the enemy could mean national defeat. But in the Cold War, there are no battles. There are only plans.

SPYING IS A serious business and I am not trying to belittle it. Whatever the value of the information stolen, we are still talking treason, which is another word for betrayal. Those are ugly words, but they match the deed. And spying can have tragic consequences. There is reason to believe that one of our own agents was killed by the Soviets, maybe accidentally, when his cover was blown by an American traitor.

But having said that, you still cannot escape the feeling that spying has become so ephemeral and morally confusing that the government, as if to compensate, resorts to hyperbole. For instance, Larry Wu-Tai Chin is momentarily arrested and charged with 30 years of spying for China. But the Reagan administration wants to provide China with nuclear technology. Jonathan J. Pollard allegedly spies for Israel, but Israel is our ally. Morison gets called a spy but the fruits of his so-called espionage can be bought in a magazine. And there exists in our government a man who says he would give the Soviets the plans for Star Wars. His name is Ronald Reagan.

THE RESULT OF all this hype and moral ambiguity is both cynicism and confusion. The government and the press seem unable to differentiate between the serious and the trivial and so it all seems trivial. Maybe that explains why various relatives of convicted spy John A. Walker Jr. knew of his activities but did nothing about it. Their apathy in the face of treason is at least, if not more, troubling than the spying of their relative. But it went almost unreported and, worse, unpunished.

Satellites in space do the real spying nowadays and the enemies of the past are the friends of the moment. Spying stubbornly plods on, Victorian in a world of porn, out of step with the times, more nostalgic than real, something like Doctorow's world fair. Only in fiction does it still dazzle.

Lennon legacy lives on in hearts of millions

MY FILE CABINET is filled with incompletable stories. One of them, from five years ago, is called "December 14 of Another Year." The story was never finished, but for several days I worked on it feverishly; I felt unable to work on anything else. I got 10 or 12 pages done and then, having freed myself of it to some extent, put it aside — hoping that after a period of percolation through my subconscious it would come out strong and true, with all impurities removed.

I was writing it during the weeks after John Lennon's death, and that was really what the story was about. Oh, there was a plot of some sort — a typical "spie" thing about a couple whose marriage was coming unglued. But the real story was this: a man sitting alone at his typewriter and trying to make something positive out of his feelings of rage and impotence and loss — feelings that he shared with millions of other people.

AS IT DID to millions of others, John Lennon's death felt to me like a personal loss — as though a close friend had died. I had never met him but had the expectation that at some point during the course of our lives we would not only meet but perhaps have a good deal to say to each other. It goes without saying that I would not have wanted to meet him as a psychophant or autograph seeker — only as an equal. I expected that we might hit it off pretty well.

The meeting would have happened

T.N.R. Rogers

eventually, I was convinced. I remembered one night three years earlier when Rosalyn Drexler and I had been making our way through a bottle of tequila. As we neared its end, Rosalyn recollected that she had John's personal phone number in her little black book. She had gotten the number from Yoko, on whom she had done a piece for the Village Voice. "Let's call him up," Rosalyn said.

"No."
 "Sure. Let's do it."
 "It's 3 in the morning. Let's not be assholes."

THAT WAS THE CLOSEST I ever came to talking to him. But as I said, I would only have wanted to meet him as an equal.

Thanks to Mark David Chapman, that is what will happen. Where John and I will meet is the place where all of us are equal.

John was murdered on Dec. 8, a Monday. All the rest of the week the radio stations played Beatles music, but I could not listen. To hear their music was too painful.

The following Sunday, at Yoko's request, people were to honor John with 10 minutes of silence. I was downtown early that day, picking up some of life's necessities at Osco — cotton balls, moisturizing cream, Christmas lights. Beatles music from K101 followed me around the store, emanating from speakers in the ceiling. They were playing "Imagine" as I approached the checkout line.

I KNEW IT WAS getting close to 1 p.m., but I thought I had plenty of time to go through the line before the 10 minutes of silence should begin.

But my timing was off. Just as the girl at the cash register began ringing up my purchases, the music on the radio broke off and a bell began to toll. The 10 minutes of silence had begun. I looked at the girl helplessly — she had just asked if I'd noticed any price on the cotton balls — and, without a word, walked away.

"Sir! Sir! Don't you want these things?" she called.

I kept walking. Didn't she understand John Lennon was dead?
 "Damn it," she said. "What the hell is wrong with that guy?"

I walked through the downtown slowly, furiously going nowhere, while I sent my prayers or whatever they were — little messages, little invocations, little promises — up to a cold gray sky.

I am not a religious person — not someone who believes in the immortality of the soul or of anything else. But how could it really be that John Lennon was gone? It seemed much easier, on that Dec. 14 of another year, to believe that he might be up above us, singing in the firmament — hearing 10 million people's thoughts, feeling the power of 10 million people's love.

The death of John Lennon, who was shot Dec. 8, 1980, evoked feelings of rage, impotence and loss in people around the world. This photo of Lennon and his wife, Yoko Ono, appears on his last record album.

Gophers travel to bowl without Holtz

MINNEAPOLIS (UPI) — Lou Holtz, named last week as head coach at Notre Dame, will not coach for the University of Minnesota in the Independence Bowl Dec. 21 so he can devote himself full time to his new job, officials said Tuesday.

Athletic Director Paul Giel said Holtz will be "relieved of his duties as head football coach at Minnesota immediately."

Holtz, who was in South Bend, Ind., to meet with the current

Notre Dame will once again be on top, according to Notre Dame affiliates ..... Page 2B

Notre Dame staff, was named last Wednesday as the successor to Gerry Faust, who resigned under pressure.

Giel said he hoped to name a new head coach who would be on the sidelines for the Independence Bowl when Minnesota plays Clemson at Shreveport, La.

Holtz was one of the reasons the Independence Bowl committee expressed interest in the Gophers.

GIEL SAID THE assistant coaching staff, headed by defensive coordinator John Gutekunst and offensive coordinator Larry Beckish, will handle the preparations for the game. Gutekunst has applied for the head coaching position and was singled out by Holtz as a top candidate.

"I have met with Lou's current coaching staff and despite the void left by his departure, they have indicated they are going ahead with preparations for the Independence Bowl game with Clemson with every intention of winning," Giel said in a statement.

"Meantime, the search for a new football coach continues with excellent candidates from both within and outside our program. We feel confident that a new coach will be named before the Independence Bowl.

"IF THAT PERSON comes from outside our program we would hope that he would be present on the sidelines that day. If the coach comes from inside the program, we would expect little disruption as we prepare for the game."

Holtz had three years left on his five-year contract at Minnesota, but decided to leave for Notre Dame.

Iowa's Clarence Jones and Drake's Demetrius Henderson chase a loose ball during the Hawkeyes' 55-43 win Tuesday night in Des Moines. The win keeps Iowa undefeated at 5-0. The Hawkeyes will be in action Friday and Saturday in the Amana-Hawkeye Classic at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Defensive change aids Iowa victory

By Jeff Stratton
Assistant Sports Editor

Iowa's Brad Lohaus rejected Friedrich's shot.

DES MOINES — A change was in order midway through the second half of the Iowa-Drake basketball game Tuesday night and it proved to be the deciding factor in the contest.

Iowa changed to a two-three zone defense in the second half and raced away to a 55-43 victory over Drake at Veterans Memorial Auditorium before 11,700 fans.

"In my opinion, the turning point was when we changed our defense to a two-three zone," Iowa Coach George Raveling said. "They scored seven baskets the rest of the game. It changed their tempo and took away their inside offense."

Drake Coach Gary Garner said that rebounding and defense determined the game's outcome.

"WHEN IOWA GOT ahead they started zoning," Garner said. "Iowa really dominated the boards. We couldn't get the ball off the boards."

The 12-point final margin is misleading as Iowa scored the last 12 points of the contest.

Drake's Demetrius Henderson nailed a 16-foot jump shot with four minutes, seven seconds to play to tie the score at 43.

Henderson's basket ended the Bulldogs' scoring for the evening. Iowa's Clarence Jones answered the Bulldogs' basket with a lay-up, was fouled by Drake's Glenn Martin, converted the three-point play and the Hawkeyes never looked back.

Following Jones' basket, Drake moved the ball inside to freshman center Bart Friedrich, but

LOHAUS THEN FOLLOWED with a hook shot putting Iowa up, 48-43.

"I was in the right place at the right time," Lohaus said.

Raveling was pleased with the performances of Lohaus, Jones and Kevin Gamble in the game's latter stages. He said Lohaus' block of Friedrich, Gambles' scoring and Jones' scoring and leadership were crucial to the Iowa win.

"We felt most fortunate to win," Raveling said. "We did keep our poise when the heat was on."

Drake's Garner came away and pressed with the Iowa team and freshman Marble. "They are going to get better and better," the Drake coach said. "Marble is going to be a great player. He will be up and down like all freshmen. It will be kind of like a roller coaster."

Marble led Iowa in scoring with 15 points and in rebounding with 10.

FOLLOWING MARBLE in scoring for Iowa were Jones with nine points and Andre Banks with eight.

For Drake, Friedrich and Michael Morgan each scored 10 points.

The game was plagued by turnovers. Iowa had 26 while the Bulldogs committed 25.

Iowa shot 47.8 percent from the field and 68.8 percent from the charity stripe for the contest.

Drake finished the game 36.7 percent from the field and 46.7 percent from the line.

Swimmers jump into top ten

IOWA CITY, Iowa (UPI) — Defending national champions Stanford and Texas are atop the men's and women's college dual meet swimming polls, respectively, released Tuesday by the College Swimming Coaches Association.

Stanford was in first place in the men's listing, while Texas topped the women's ratings. Iowa men's squad jumped into 10th place from the 16th position the

Four Hawks named to all-American list

By Jill Hokinson
Staff Writer

The Iowa field hockey team, which finished the season with a 19-4-1 record and a share of the Big Ten title, placed four players on the NCAA all-American squad.

Forwards Marcia Pankratz and Deb Brickey were named to the first-team all-American squad. Goalie Karen Napolitano and forward Mary Koboldt earned honorable mention status.

The all-American team is voted by coaches across the country.

According to Napolitano, placing four players on the all-American teams, despite failing to make the Final Four, shows that other field hockey teams are beginning to recognize Iowa as a field hockey power.

"IT SHOWS a lot," she said. "People are starting to look at us as individual players."

The goalie said earning all-American status is the highest award a field hockey player can receive besides making the Olympic team.

Both Pankratz and Brickey received all-American honors last season along with Koboldt and Kim Herrmann. The four-

Field Hockey

some led the Hawkeyes to the Final Four last year, losing to Old Dominion, 5-1, in the championship game. Pankratz and Brickey also earned all-Big Ten honors in 1984.

Pankratz, a senior from Southboro, Mass., led the Hawkeyes this season with 25 goals, one goal short of record she set last season.

Brickey, a senior from St. Louis, Mo., scored six goals during the season and tallied 13 assists. The forward was also a co-captain of the Iowa squad.

Napolitano, a sophomore from Selden, N.Y., earned post season honors for the first time. She started in 60 percent of the Hawkeyes' games, sharing the goalkeeping job with Joan Behrends, a senior.

Iowa Coach Judith Davidson will have a difficult task next season, replacing the all-Americans. Only Napolitano returns next season. Besides Pankratz, Brickey and Koboldt, Davidson will also lose Herrmann and Behrends due to graduation.

Teams return height to court

Buckeye guard loss softened by high scorers

Rivals agree Minnesota's center stronger

By Steve Sands
Staff Writer

CHICAGO — When Big Ten opponents enter St. John Arena in Columbus, Ohio this season, they can't expect to rule the boards anymore.

The Ohio State Buckeyes, who tied for third with Purdue in the conference last season, lost the quick guard combination of Ronnie Stokes and Troy Taylor to graduation, but the club has height to spare now.

Coach Eldon Miller has switched the only two returning starters, 6-5 forward Dennis Hopson and 7-0 center Brad Sellers, to off-guard and forward respectively, to make way for added rebounding strength.

AT TIMES, Hopson was the second tallest Buckeye on the floor last season, but not anymore.

Keith Wesson, 6-9 senior who played only three games last year because of eligibility problems and a knee injury, will replace the vacated center spot.

Sophomore John Anderson, a 6-9 forward who played in 22 games as a freshman, will join Sellers, a senior, and Wesson on the front line.

Miller said this year's Buckeye edition will not be at a disadvantage.

"Last year, when we threw the ball up," he said, "we were outnumbered on the boards. We don't want to be outnumbered on the boards."

"THE NUMBER of rebounders you put on the floor is critical. I think moving these guys (Hopson and Sellers) gives us the opportunity to put more people who are big on the court."

The Buckeyes will definitely miss Stokes and Taylor, who played in the same backcourt for four years and led the club to three NCAA appearances. They combined for 889 points, 268 assists and 89 steals last season.

Sellers, who averaged 15.6 points a game last year, said the Buckeyes will sport a different look without the two.

"I think we'll be a more front court-oriented team because that's where our power lies now," he said.

BUT DON'T feel sorry for Miller and his backcourt predicament. He already has an established scorer in Hopson to build around.

See Buckeyes, Page 3B

By Dan Millea
Staff Writer

CHICAGO — John Shasky, Minnesota's 7-foot center, can't understand why so many preseason prognosticators are picking Iowa third in the Big Ten ahead of the Gophers. And last month at the Big Ten preseason basketball press conference in Chicago, Shasky wasn't hiding his feelings.

"They have an unproven center in (Brad) Lohaus," Shasky said of the Hawkeyes. "Maybe he'll be good but at this point he's unknown. Their guards have never been any good, and I don't think they've done anything to change that this year. They have one good forward in (Gerry) Wright, but he didn't score much last year."

Based on that analysis, and the fact Minnesota lost just one starter from last year in all-Big Ten guard Tommy Davis, Shasky believes the Gophers deserve to be picked as the likely No. 3 finisher behind Illinois and Michigan.

IOWA COACH GEORGE Raveling echoed those sentiments, and a number of other conference coaches indicated Minnesota could be the darkhorse team in the league.

Gopher Coach Jim Dutcher said if the team overcomes the loss of the high-scoring Davis, it could be a surprise year for Minnesota.

"When we were all together last year we were a pretty good basketball team," Dutcher said. "This year we have everybody back except Tommy Davis. This will be our best team since 1982 when we won (the league crown). What that will mean in the Big Ten, I don't know."

Minnesota could have an imposing front line with Shasky back at center and controversial 6-9 sophomore Mitchell Lee starting with either 6-7 junior Kevin Smith or 6-7 freshman Kelvin Smith as the forwards.

LEE IS SLATED as a starter, but has not yet been given a hearing on assault charges stemming from an incident last January.

"We're very supportive of (Lee)," 6-1 senior guard Marc Wilson said. "His return hasn't affected the team whatsoever. Right now Mitch is a part of the team and we accept him as a team member."

Indiana cagers upset Notre Dame

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (UPI) — Junior guard Steve Alford scored 32 points to lift No. 20 Indiana to an 82-67 upset of 13th-ranked Notre Dame in college basketball Tuesday night.

The victory left Indiana with a 2-0 mark while the Irish fell to 2-1.

Alford gunned in 12 of IU's last 14 points at the end of the first half to lift the Hoosiers to a 10-point advantage at intermission 41-31.

One of the star's on Bobby Knight's 1984 U.S. Olympic basketball team, Alford split his total evening in each half, hitting 13 of 23 field goals and adding 6 of 7 free tosses.

Indiana grabbed the lead at the start and broke open a tight game at 22-21 with five minutes remaining in the first half.

IU stretched its lead to 49-33 in the first three minutes of the second half and still had a 15-point advantage 64-49 with 9 and a half minutes remaining.

Notre Dame rallied to trim the margin at 67-61 with 6:16 left, but Indiana senior forward Winston Morgan scored five straight points to help put the game out of reach.

Freshman Ricky Calloway finished with 18 points while Morgan added 15. David Rivers topped Notre Dame with 18 points and center Ken Barlow hit 14.

Six players receive Gold Glove award

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Kansas City third baseman George Brett was among six players named Tuesday as first-time winners of the Gold Glove award for fielding excellence. Three other newcomers were from the American League — first baseman Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees, shortstop Alfredo Griffin of Oakland and outfielder Gary Pettis of California.

Third baseman Tim Wallach of Montreal and pitcher Rick Reuschel of Pittsburgh were winners for the first time in the National League.

The teams, sponsored by Rawlings, were chosen in voting by coaches and managers of both leagues for The Sporting News.

For the first time in the 29-year history of the award, there was a tie in the voting at one position. Dwight Evans of Boston and Dwayne Murphy of Oakland tied for the third outfield spot on the American League team, necessitating the inclusion of four outfielders on the squad.

The other American League members were second baseman Lou Whitaker of Detroit, outfielder Dave Whitfield of the Yankees, catcher Lance Parrish of Detroit and pitcher Ron Guidry of the Yankees.

The National League Gold Glove winners were first baseman Keith Hernandez of the New York Mets, second baseman Ryne Sandberg of Chicago, shortstop Ozzie Smith of St. Louis, third baseman Tim Wallach of Montreal and catcher Tony Pena of the Pirates.

The National League outfield consisted of Willie McGee of the Cardinals, Dale Murphy of Atlanta and Andre Dawson of Montreal.

Malone, Erving lift Sixers past Pistons

PONTIAC, Mich. (UPI) — Moses Malone scored 29 points and Julius Erving added 18 Tuesday night, carrying the Philadelphia 76ers to their fourth straight road victory with a 127-107 triumph over the Detroit Pistons.

Philadelphia never trailed after Erving's jumper to give the 76ers an 8-7 edge. Malone then scored 6 of his 12 first-quarter points in a 16-4 spurt as the 76ers opened a 34-19 advantage.

Detroit came back behind Vinnie Johnson's 16 points in the second quarter to narrow the gap to 55-49. But Philadelphia closed the period with a 16-4 flurry to mount a 70-53 halftime cushion.

Philadelphia put the game out of reach early in the third quarter with Terry Catledge scoring 7 straight points to give the 76ers an 84-58 lead. Detroit thereafter did not come closer than 18.

Catledge had 17 points while Paul Thompson added 14 and Leon Wood 13. Johnson scored 22 points for Detroit while Tony Campbell added 20, including a 65-foot shot at the end of the third quarter, and Isiah Thomas 19.

Slumping Winnipeg tie Islanders, 4-4

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (UPI) — Randy Carlyle scored a power-play goal with 69 seconds left in regulation Tuesday night to rally the slumping Winnipeg Jets to a 4-4 tie with the New York Islanders.

With eight seconds remaining on Paul Boutilier's interference penalty, Ray Neufeld wrestled the puck from Gord Dineen and passed to Brian Mullen behind the goal line. Mullen then fed Carlyle at the top of the left circle, and the Jet defenseman fired a rising shot that beat Bill Smith to tie the game a fourth time.

Pat LaFontaine gave New York a 1-0 lead 4:29 into the game, taking a feed from Pat Flatley. Scott Arniel's goal 23 seconds later tied the score, but the Islanders reclaimed the lead on Brent Sutter's goal at 14:08.

The Jets tied the score at 2-2 48 seconds into the second period during a 5-on-3 advantage when Dale Hawerchuk scored his 15th goal of the year.

LaFontaine then set up Flatley, threading the puck through traffic in the circle during a power play at 4:32, to put New York up 3-2.

Brian Mullen's power-play goal at 13:01 tied the game a third time, but LaFontaine's second goal of the game 44 seconds later gave the Islanders a 4-3 advantage.

Referee Bryan Lewis left the ice at 4:04 of the third period and was initially diagnosed with a broken wrist. Linesman Gord Broseker replaced him.

Padre coach rumored to retire

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Dick Williams' future with the San Diego Padres remained an open question Tuesday following reports that he will retire from baseball rather than pilot the team next season.

The San Diego Union reported Tuesday that associates of the Padres' manager said he would accept a $250,000 buyout of his contract and retire.

The Union said Williams' wife, Norma, had been urging him to hang up his spikes.

Williams, 56, guided the Padres to their second winning record in 13 years when San Diego won the National League title in 1984. In two prior years, Williams' Padres finished 81-81 each season.

THE PADRES WERE Williams' fifth managerial post. He led Boston (1967-1969), Oakland (1971-1973), California (1974-1976) and Montreal (1977-1981).

Team president Ballard Smith declined to comment but was quoted in the San Diego Tribune Tuesday saying he wanted Williams to stay.

"Frankly, I can't think of a better man to manage the Padres next season than Dick Williams," Smith told the Tribune. "He has a contract to manage for us next season, and, as far as I know, he plans to honor it. I don't understand all the speculation going on."

Smith said the Padres would not pay off Williams' contract, but that they could not force Williams to manage if he chose to retire.

WILLIAMS HIMSELF was unavailable for comment. He was in Milwaukee Monday to attend a seminar at a brewery, but team spokesman said Tuesday he had apparently left for parts unknown.

Padres owner Joan Kroc was unavailable for comment. Williams' future with the Padres was the subject of speculation this summer as they faded to third place in the National League West after leaving the division for much of the first half of the season. Some players had been quoted complaining about Williams' cool relations with the team.

Williams' request for a contract extension was turned down late in the season.

Adding further fuel to the fire was the dismissal last week of third base Coach Ozzie Virgil, a friend of Williams who was cut when his contract expired this fall.

Wilander, Lloyd head for title

MELBOURNE, Australia (UPI) — Mats Wilander and Chris Evert-Lloyd pulled closer to a title defense Tuesday with straight sets victories on the infamous Kooyong center court at the $1.5 million Australian Open Tennis Championships.

Mats Wilander, a 21-year-old Swede and virtually the only player in the tournament not complaining about the couch-grass center court, was in superb form as he crushed Asheville, N.C. resident Tim Wilkison 7-6, (7-1), 6-3, 6-3 to set up a quarterfinal meet with Johan Kriek.

Wilander owns a 3-0 record against the South African-born American.

Evert-Lloyd swept aside Bulgarian Manuela Maleeva 6-3, 6-3 to reach the semifinals of the women's event. She was happy to be playing in the semis against West German Claudia Kohde-Kilsch, who is seeded No. 5 in the field of 64.

KOHDE-KILSCH moved into the last four with a fighting 6-4, 6-0 victory over Sweden's Catarina Lindqvist.

Evert-Lloyd had watched her husband John cause the upset of the day in the men's singles, beating seventh-seeded Swede Joakim Nystrom.

"John told me not to watch him, but I couldn't resist the temptation. I was proud of him when he won and it sure got me pumped up for my match against Manuela," Evert-Lloyd said.

Lloyd moved into the quarterfinals with a 6-2, 1-6, 6-4, 6-7 (4-7), 6-4 victory. He next meets the winner of Ivan Lendl's match with South African Christo Steyn, which was postponed Tuesday because of rain.

In the other men's match completed, Michiel Schapers, the Dutchman who upset Wimbledon champion Boris Becker in the second round, reached the last eight when Tim Gullikson of Boca West, Fla. retired after the first set.

MARTINA NAVRATILOVA was merciless when she took her revenge against lanky Czechoslovakian Helena Sukova in the women's quarterfinals.

Last year Sukova stopped Navratilova in a history-making year, beating her in the semifinals of this tournament. This time, Navratilova raced through 6-2, 6-2 in a 58-minute blitz.

The No. 2 seed had more trouble with a cascade of pollen than she did with Sukova. The late matches were played in humid, steamy conditions before a gallery of 8,200 fans who sat in a haze of pollen from thistle bushes lining a nearby creek.

Navratilova looks in top form. She captured the Queensland and New South Wales State championships in her run up to this grand slam tournament.

"I THINK I was ready from the first point today," said Navratilova. "I felt like a prize fighter out there."

Hana Mandlikova was also in prime form when she trounced Zina Garrison of Houston, 2-6, 6-3, 6-3, and gained a semifinal berth against Navratilova.

In an administrative matter Tuesday, John McEnroe was fined $1,500 for "verbal abuse" in his five-set victory over Henri Leconte. McEnroe meets big Slovenian Zivojinovic of Yugoslavia in the quarters Wednesday.

Keith Johnson, supervisor of the Men's International Professional Tennis Council, handed McEnroe his second fine of the tournament. The 26-year-old New Yorker was fined $1,200 for an audible obscenity in Saturday's match against Dannie Visser.

Johnson also assessed Matt Mitchell with a $350 fine for unsportsmanlike conduct and Kriek a $350 fine for an audible obscenity.

Hall inducts Hornung, Devine

NEW YORK (UPI) — Representatives from Notre Dame's football past and present agree the Fighting Irish's future will bring a return to glory.

Paul Hornung, the Golden Boy of the Golden Dome in the mid-1950s; Dan Devine, the coach who directed Notre Dame's last national championship team in 1977; and Greg Dingsen, a 21-year-old defensive tackle who has witnessed the Irish lose its Fight over the past four seasons, were among honored guests Monday at the National Football Foundation's Hall of Fame luncheon.

Hornung and Devine were being inducted into the Hall while Dingsen, a pre-med student, was one of 11 scholar-athletes singled out.

ALL THREE SAID Gerry Faust, who resigned last week as the losingest coach in Notre Dame history, was ill-prepared to handle the tremendous spotlight which bears down on the football program in tiny South Bend. Each also predicted that Faust's successor, Lou Holtz, would restore the Fighting Irish to prominence.

Each made reference to Faust's giant step from a tremendously successful high school coaching career at Moeller of Cincinnati to the highest pressure college football job in the country.

"I don't have a numerated plan for what a coach needs to do to become a coach at Notre Dame," said Dingsen. "It definitely would have been a help for him to be an assistant or head coach at even a small Division I school. That experience would have been invaluable."

FOR EXAMPLE, Devine went from a head coach at the high school level to backfield coach at Michigan State, to head coaching jobs with Arizona State, Missouri and the NFL's Green Bay Packers before he started at Notre Dame.

"I don't know how Gerry would respond to this, but experience is our most valuable teacher," said Devine, whose six-year record at Notre Dame was 53-16-1. "When I was young I didn't believe that, I started coaching at Arizona State when I was 28, and I thought I knew everything. But years teach you that's not true. And certainly experience is at a higher value if you are going to coach at a Notre Dame."

Hornung, who learned something about a coach instilling fear and discipline as a professional playing for Vince Lombardi's Packers, noticed those two qualities lacking in recent Notre Dame football.

"THE JOB JUST overwhelmed him," said Hornung, who in 1956 became the only Heisman Trophy winner ever to play for a losing team. "Gerry Faust was an energetic, likeable man, but that job takes a unique situation. As far as a coach is concerned, he can't get too close to his players. He must be revered and respected up to the point of fear."

"Near the end of his career at Alabama, Bear Bryant had built such a strong organization that his assistants ran the show during practice. Still, everyone knew who the boss was. All he had to do on Saturday was go into the locker room, say a few words and those boys were all pumped up to play for him."

Hornung said Holtz, a successful college coach at North Carolina State, Arkansas and just beginning to turn the program around at Minnesota, will have the same kind of impact.

"I'M VERY HAPPY that Notre Dame found a coach like Lou Holtz," he said. "Holtz will be respected more as a boss. At Notre Dame, you have to have people look up to you."

Holtz has directed teams to bowls in 12 of his 16 collegiate coaching years, including a Dec. 21 Independence Bowl date with Clemson.

Notre Dame used to have regular bowl dates, and in seven of the nine years before Faust took over, the Irish made postseason appearances. In his five-year tenure, the team was invited out twice.

"Everyone is excited, we needed a change," Dingsen said. "No one has any doubts about Holtz' abilities or credentials."

Of course, there were few doubts expressed Nov. 24, 1980, when Notre Dame hired an energetic high school coach to be its 24th head football coach.

Despite his shortcomings as a college coach, Faust, even after his resignation, continued to display the loyalty and faith that preserved him during 18 successful years at Moeller and five painful seasons with the Fighting Irish.

In contrast, Holtz isn't quite as loyal as Faust. Look up the New York Jets in 1976 when Holtz accepted a job with Arkansas before his first year as Jets coach had finished. He said he would coach the final game, the Jets told him not to bother. This will be Holtz' sixth coaching stop since 1971.

So now that Lou Holtz has become the 25th Man on the Spot at South Bend, the hindsight being used to explain Gerry Faust's failure should be directed toward the new man on campus.

Sagging sports programs change personnel

Coach resigns due to pressure from academics

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Vanderbilt football Coach George MacIntyre resigned Tuesday, citing increasingly tough academic standards for players at the private institution and expressing pessimism about the program's future.

MacIntyre, who compiled a 25-52-1 record over seven years at the Southeastern Conference school, announced his resignation at a news conference shortly after a morning team meeting. The resignation had been expected.

His decision to quit came "after much deliberation, soul-searching and prayer," said MacIntyre. "I regret that we did not maintain the level we attained after our fourth season, but there are definite reasons why we didn't.

"ONE OF THE biggest reasons is the continuing rise in academic standards, both in admissions and in the retaining of student athletes. I certainly don't condemn the university for these standards because in my opinion there is none better. But I am stating the facts as I see them."

The Commodores finished 3-7-1 this year, and six of MacIntyre's seven years at Vanderbilt were losing seasons.

Asked what was needed to produce a winning squad at Vandy, MacIntyre said the team needed six or seven "stemwinders." Without that many outstanding players, MacIntyre said, "Vanderbilt will have to be content with what we've been. I'm not content."

There are "great students who are great athletes, but they are being recruited by state schools," he said.

Former Vanderbilt quarterback Watson Brown was expected to be one of the candidates to replace MacIntyre. A native of Cookeville, Tenn., Brown was offensive coordinator under MacIntyre when the Commodores last went to a bowl game in 1982.

NOW IN THE second year of a six-year contract as athletic director and head football coach at Houston's Rice University, Brown said he had not been contacted by Vanderbilt officials.

"I have a dadgummed good job here with a lot of responsibilities to take care of," Brown said. "If and when any official at Vanderbilt talks to me, then I'll make a decision whether or not to talk to them or just let it go from there."

MacIntyre defended his coaching ability, saying he produced an exciting football team to watch which produced many records.

"Our quarterbacks have led the best league in the country in passing four of the past five years and our receivers, six of the seven years," MacIntyre said.

MacIntyre told reporters he felt "no animosity" toward the school.

His resignation was the second major upheaval at the Vanderbilt athletic office this year. MacIntyre's close friend, strength coach E.J. "Doc" Kreis, was indicted on charges that he illegally distributed body building steroids to more than 30 Vandy football players.

Kreis, who resigned, eventually pleaded guilty to one misdemeanor count of distributing the drug to former Clemson strength Coach Sam Clomon.

San Diego fires Scovel; names new director

Day. Day called Miller a "dynamic leader."

MILLER WAS THE athletic director at Arizona State from 1971 until 1979. He was inducted last year into the Hall of Fame of the National Association of Athletic Directors.

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — San Diego State Tuesday fired football Coach Doug Scovel and hired former Arizona State athletic director Fred Miller as the new athletic director.

Miller, 54, said at a news conference that replacing Scovel would be a top priority in the school's attempt to boost its sagging sports program.

"We know time is a problem," Miller said. "We have very tight constraints as to our recruiting schedule. It's probably going to be someone on the way up."

As for the importance of football at the school, he said: "Football, as we know, is the engine that will drive the ship."

Miller replaced Mary Alice Hill, who was fired Aug. 22 by university president Thomas

The dismissal of Scovel and hiring of Miller came at a time when San Diego State's appeal to the community was slipping.

Attendance at football and basketball games remained low as the teams posted unimpressive records.

Scovel compiled a 24-32-3 record in his five years at San Diego State. He finished 1985 with a 5-6-1 record.

"I take this step with deep regret," Day said in a statement. "Doug is a good coach and a fine person. He has brought our football team through a difficult transition."

"The Aztec athletic program is at a critical point. I feel that for the good of the entire program, we must have new leadership in football."

person. (The charge) isn't affecting his play, and I don't think he's worrying about it."

Although Dutcher's front line seems solid, he is concerned about his backcourt players, a turnaround from recent trends for the Gophers.

"Our question marks in the past have been our forward spots," Dutcher said. "We have a little more stability at forward now, and our question mark is perimeter shooting."

WITH THE DEADLY Davis

Buckeyes

The Toledo, Ohio, junior scored 293 points, and started 21 of the 30 Buckeye games last year, saving his best game for the NCAA tournament against Iowa State.

He pumped in 19 points and grabbed nine rebounds to put down the upstart Cyclones.

Scott Anderson, a Marion, Iowa sophomore, will back up Hopson at off-guard. He saw action in 11 games last year. Wilson, who averaged 10 points per game on just 46 percent shooting last season, to provide an outside scoring threat.

"(Losing Davis) will affect us to the extent that we may lose a little outside scoring," Wilson said. "And they may try to stop us from driving a little bit and make us take some outside shots."

"Believe it or not (losing Davis) may open up my game a little more. I'll be free to roam around and maybe go to the boards more."

Todd Alexander, a 5-11 guard who averaged 7.5 points a year ago, will battle 6-3 junior college transfer Mark Anderson and 6-2 freshman Ray Gaffney for the other guard spot.

The Gophers were just 6-12 in the Big Ten and 13-15 overall in 1984-85, but got off to a promising 4-2 start before faltering.

First Lee was suspended because of the assault charge, then three games later Kevin Smith injured a hand and missed the remainder of the season.

With Lee and Smith Minnesota was 11-5, without them the Gophers were a dismal 2-10.

Dutcher, who picked Illinois and Michigan as the obvious frontrunners in the league, said a major factor for Minnesota this season will be the development of Shasky.

"John Shasky has made tremendous progress," Dutcher said. "We've had every post man in the last 20 years go into the NBA. John, I hope, is going to keep that thing going."

Suns off to worst season during rebuilding process

PHOENIX (UPI) — Welcome to the Land of the Sinking Suns.

It was no secret that the Phoenix Suns were going through a rebuilding process this season. However, nobody guessed that the project would reach these proportions.

The Suns are off to their worst start in their 18-year history, winning just three of their first 18 contests heading into Tuesday night's game at Houston. At their current pace, they would finish with a 14-68 mark this season, tying the 1982-83 Houston Rockets for the third-worst record in NBA history.

Even Phoenix General Manager Jerry Colangelo did not foresee that drastic a slide.

"I FELT THAT even with a team in rebuilding that we'd win 35-40 games," he said.

The team is last in defense, first in turnovers. It has been the butt of numerous jokes, has been heavily criticized in the press, and some fans have taken to wearing grocery bags over their heads at home games.

But through it all, Phoenix Coach John MacLeod remains determined to turn things around.

"We are not going to quit," MacLeod resolves with voice rising and eyes aglow. "We are not going to throw the towel in. The coaches are not, the players aren't. The easiest thing to do would be to tuck our tails between our legs and say the season's over. I refuse to have that happen."

"We don't believe what everybody says about us or writes about us. At times I've noticed people laughing when things are going bad. That's okay. We'll use it as positive motivation."

THE PHOENIX PLAYERS share MacLeod's view.

"It's not tough to get up (for practices) — we're losing, and we want to win," said guard Walter Davis, whose comeback from a severe knee injury is one of the few bright spots of the season. "That's what we keep talking about. We've got to work hard in practice."

Two problems have been at the base of the Suns' woes.

The first is that MacLeod switched from his trademark half-court offense to a running game during the off-season, a switch that resulted in an 0-9 start. The plan was then scrapped.

"You can put the blame right on me for that," MacLeod said.

Problem No. 2 came as an indirect result of the first. In reverting back to the slow-down game, the Suns were without two key parts of that offense — enforcer Maurice Lucas and playmaker Kyle Macy.

LUCAS WAS TRADED to the Los Angeles Lakers for two second-round draft picks. Likewise with Macy, who went to Chicago.

Bulgarian forward Georgi Glouchkov may eventually be able to fill Lucas' shoes, but it will take at least a year for him to learn the English language and American basketball.

Replacing Macy has been a bigger problem. Second-year man Jay Humphries is the starter, but there is nobody to back him up. Rod Foster has been moved from the shooting guard position to the point, but with little success. The fourth guard is Mike Sanders, recently moved from small forward. The Suns are known to be looking for backcourt help.

Both Colangelo and MacLeod said they find hope in the fact that the Cleveland Cavaliers began last season with a 2-19 mark but came back to make the playoffs.

"That just points out that there's plenty of time to put things together," Colangelo said. "It could happen again this year. We're way behind schedule at this time, but we're still capable of winning 35-40 games."

Forward Alvan Adams, an 11-year veteran, put it another way.

"I happened to work the other day where it takes only 39 wins to make the playoffs," he said. "We only have to win 36 more."

Blue Jays' Gillick named UPIs Executive of the Year

NEW YORK (UPI) — Pat Gillick, the architect of the American League East champion Toronto Blue Jays, Tuesday was named the Major League Executive of the Year by United Press International.

In voting by 26 UPI baseball correspondents, Gillick received 20 votes to run away with the award. Others receiving mention were Whitey Herzog of the Cardinals, John Schuerholz of the World Series champion Royals, Mike Port of the Angels, Bill Bergesch of the Reds and Roy Eisenhardt of the A's.

Gillick, who has been with the Blue Jays since their inception in 1976, built Toronto from an expansion nobody to a division winner in 1985.

During the American League playoffs in October, Gillick, a former minor-leaguer in the Orioles' chain, said he learned the most from the systems that operate in Baltimore, Los Angeles and Kansas City.

"THERE ARE FOUR general managers in the American League who began their careers in Baltimore," Gillick said. "Harry Dalton (of Milwaukee), Lou Gorman (of Boston), John Schuerholz and myself. Their background is from the Baltimore organization. When I came to Toronto one of the organizations I wanted to model my club after was either the Dodgers or Kansas City, where they build from within."

Gillick, who served in the Astros and Yankees organizations for a combined 23 years, is an astute judge of talent. He worked his way up to director of scouting in the Houston organization before moving to the Yankees as coordinator of player development and scouting.

Now executive vice-president of baseball for the Blue Jays, Gillick, 57, used the draft and shrewd trades to build Toronto. Three of the original Blue Jays taken in the 1976 expansion — Jim Clancy, Ernie Whitt and Garth Iorg — are still with the club. Four members of last year's team — Dave Stieb, Lloyd Moseby, Jesse Barfield and Jimmy Key — were originally drafted by the Blue Jays. Five were obtained through the December major-league draft, in which a team can acquire for $25,000 a player left unprotected by a major-league team.

GILICK PLUCKED first baseman Willie Upshaw, outfielder George Bell, pitcher Jim Aker and infielders Louis Thornton and Manny Lee from the draft.

His experience with the Yankees was not wasted. Iorg came out of the Yankee system as did Upshaw. Gillick traded for second baseman Damaso Garcia in 1979 and signed former Yankee Doyle Alexander in 1982 after New York released him. Alexander has been Toronto's top winner the last two seasons.

After finishing in last place the first six years of their existence, the Blue Jays landed in fourth in 1983 and climbed to second in 1984. Sensing he was on the brink of a championship team, Gillick went out and addressed Toronto's major problem, relief pitching. In less than two months, he traded for relievers Bill Caudill and Gary Lavelle.

Two days before acquiring Lavelle from the Giants, Gillick made a move that he would later say clinched the pennant for the Blue Jays. Gillick selected relief pitcher Tom Henke as compensation for losing Cliff Johnson to free agency. When Caudill faltered, the Blue Jays brought Henke up from the minors and in half a season he saved 13 games.

"I'd like to think we've improved each season," Gillick said during the playoffs. "But in 1985 the guy that put us over the hump was Henke."

Labor song collection carries on Seeger's devotion to folk music

NEW YORK (UPI) — Troubador and social activist Pete Seeger sees his 45-year career as a link to a long history of songs written and sung by working people.

The 66-year-old folk singer, who started performing labor songs with Woody Guthrie in 1940, has followed his interest in workers and unions by co-authoring a book on the American labor movement.

The book, Carry It On: The Working People of America in Song and Picture, was written with Bob Reiser to mark the 100th anniversary of the Haymarket Square bombing that killed 25 workers in Chicago in 1886, Seeger said.

THE IDEA for the book came four years ago. "I suggested musicians might be able to do something about the general public not knowing about the labor movement," he said.

The result is a collection of labor songs dating back to the Revolutionary War, photographs of workers from the 1800s to the present and a short text. Seeger selected and edited the songs.

"My 45 years of experience in singing these songs helped me decide which ones to include," Seeger said.

Working on the book was a logical progression from performing labor songs in concert, he explained.

"My job is to pass on the songs and music I've learned. I'm a link to a long line of people like Woody Guthrie and Leadbelly. They taught songs to me and I've taught them to others," Seeger said. "The book is just a continuation of that."

THE FOLK singer said there is no single song that typifies the American labor movement.

"The closest one might be 'This Land is Your Land,' but even that leaves some people cold," Seeger said.

Woody Guthrie, one of Seeger's heroes and mentors, "would have loved this book because it's basically a rank-and-file type book. It's meant for everybody," the singer said.

Most of the songs in the book were written "by normal everyday people, not trained musicians." As a result, many are similar in melody or lyrics, "because that's the folk method. That's the tradition of passing songs on."

Pete Seeger

"There are some songs I won't sing because they just sound terrible. I used to sing 'The Water is Wide,' but now on the long sustained notes my voice wobbles like a top," says Pete Seeger.

"WOODY WAS a master at it. He would borrow an old tune and put new words to it. He said that was the way things should be," Seeger said.

An example is Guthrie's song "So Long, It's Been Good To Know You," he explained. "Woody took a tune he had heard as a kid, changed the words and then added new words." Seeger said his father, Charles Seeger, a New York musicologist, put it best. "He used to say 'plagiarism is basic to all culture.'"

One of Seeger's best-known songs, "If I Had A Hammer," which he wrote with Lee Hays, was altered by Peter, Paul and Mary.

"THEY REWROTE the tune slightly and made it a big hit. It's become so popular, I ought to pay them royalties," he said.

In concert, Seeger sings a combination of both his and their version.

Seeger, who lives in Beacon, N.Y., with his wife, Toshi, was born in New York, May 3, 1919, and said he grew up "surrounded by socialist music and socialist politics." As a child he learned to play the banjo, guitar, recorder and other instruments around the house.

After a prep school education he attended Harvard University, his father's alma mater, for two years, but dropped out in 1939 because "I had lost interest." About the same time he joined the Communist Party.

IN 1940 he joined other musicians playing concerts and rallies to help organize unions.

Later that year, Seeger met Guthrie while performing at a benefit for migrant farm workers. The two, along with Hays and Mill Lampell, formed the Almanac Singers and wrote and sang union songs.

The group lasted until 1942, when Seeger was drafted and served overseas in World War II. "I never fought. They wanted me to fix airplanes but then they found out about my background and they had me entertain in hospitals," Seeger said.

In 1949, Seeger, Hays, Ronnie Gilbert and Fred Hellerman formed the Weavers and within three years the quartet sold more than 4 million records and kindled a folk music boom.

AFTER refusing to answer questions before the House on Un-American Activities Committee, Seeger was blacklisted in 1955. He was barred from appearing on television until 1967.

Seeger continues to perform and work on social and environmental issues, but said he wants to cut down on concerts because his voice is beginning to falter.

"There are some songs I won't sing because they just sound terrible. I used to sing 'The Water is Wide,' but now on the long sustained notes my voice wobbles like a top," he said.

He said cutting down the number of performances he gives each year will be difficult because "I just love to sing. A few years ago I gave 90 concerts and only got paid for 10. The rest were benefits."

Growth evident in Costello album

United Press International

Elvis Costello, "The Best of Elvis Costello" (Columbia)

Choosing the best work from one of the wittiest and most consistent voices in rock music is at best a difficult task. That may explain why this record features so many songs — it would have been tough to eliminate any of the 16 included here.

The most remarkable thing about having Costello's eight-year career squeezed into a compilation album is seeing the tremendous development he's undergone.

Side one of this album, featuring the often angry, brutally intense songs from his first three LPs, could almost have been performed by a different artist than the one who recorded the songs on side two, which is luxurious, romantic and almost Cole Porter-like in its wit.

Rarely does the outright anger of early Costello surface in his later work.

A "best of" package is not the ideal forum in which to savor Costello — his albums are too textured and cohesive to be chopped up and spliced together like this. Each possesses a special personality, whether it be the Stax sendup of "Get Happy" or country posturing of "Almost Blue." But even under these circumstances, Costello comes across as a songwriter and performer of startling ability.

Class produces play for final

By Karma Lisa Edwards
Staff Writer

SOME FINALS consist of written examinations, some are projects. The students taking Black Action Theatre are putting on a full-scale production for their final.

Bought With Our Baggage '85, will be presented at 8 p.m. on Dec. 5, 6, and 7, in Theatre B of the Theatre Building. A $2 admission will be charged at the door.

Black Action Theatre is a theory/performance class taught for 15 years at the UI. It started as two separate courses: an English literature class studying the works of black authors, and a series of Theatre Action classes involving students in hands-on productions.

Tisch Jones, the current instructor, has taught the course six times. Now she divides the semester into two parts: academic work in the first half, and a public production in the second.

JONES SEES this final as a teaching device. She states, "the best way to learn things is by doing." After a relatively normal academic experience, the participants are put into a totally different environment — the theater. Their link is the material and their class experiences. They are asked to internalize what they've learned intellectually and show the audience, through the use of drama, what they've discovered.

Bought with Baggage was the original name of the show when it was done in the fall of 1984. Instead of highlighting the work of one black writer, Jones and the students have used improvisation, and scripting from those improvisations to put together a number of what they call, props. The props serve as the examination.

EACH STUDENT is given one

The history of blacks in entertainment is traced in Brought With Our Baggage, performed by the UI Black History Theatre.

people come together to form the student body of Black Action Theatre. Dwayne Newson, a business major, is taking this class for the second time, because he so liked his first semester experience. In the spring of 1985 he played the part of Blue Haven in the production, Ceremonies and Dark Old Men. He sees theater as an opportunity to display talent, relax and have fun working with people from different backgrounds. This show, according to Newson, has given him a sense of responsibility and he expects to support black theater after graduation.

WES FOSTER is taking Black Action Theatre for the second time — the class can be taken up to three times. He was in the original Bought With Baggage, felt it had an important message and wanted to communicate it again. He sees this production differently, though. In addition to a new cast, Foster says there are new scenes, different characters and more information. The last time he participated, he was the only man in the group and was given almost every male part. This semester, since more men are involved, he's been able to concentrate on fewer parts and gain a greater depth of character. Foster likes the production because it is "not a bunch of information just thrown" at the audience, instead the show is "entertaining and informing."

During the run of Bought With Our Baggage '85 the lobby of the Theatre Building will display African sculpture from the UI Museum of Art. Also the vestibule of Theatre B has been turned into the hold of a slave ship.

There will be a panel discussion featuring Darwin Turner, UI chairman of Afro-American Studies; Robert Hedley, director of the UI Theatre Department; and Melba Boyd, professor of English and Afro-American Studies after Thursday night's performance.

or two props and asked to tell the history of that particular object as it pertains to black history.

Objects being used include a toy piano, a cash register, a bag of corks, broom and handkerchief. There are nine sections and ten props in the show. Each of these serve as a memory chip for the student.

Christmas gift ideas lack spirit

United Press International

Christmas used to be so sacred — the holiest day of the year for Christians — but that was before marketing madmen created tackiness.

This year, we go from high-tack — a computerized Christmas card — to the epitome of low-tack — a Santa Design Johnny Lid Cover toilet seat.

Somewhere in between is an unusual doll for children: a baby Jesus with day-glow halo.

According to Webster's New World Dictionary, a person with "tact" is one who has a quick and delicate sense of what is fitting in a particular situation and thus avoids giving offensive gifts.

NOW COME the offenders.

God did not create Rambo. Sylvester Stallone did. What better gift to warp an innocent, peace-loving child than a Rambo submachine gun with serrated hacksaw knife? Certainly, there is none.

There was this merry advertisement in the New York Times Sunday magazine, showing a cartoon cat, its eyes two small crosses, its tongue hanging out and its tail rakishly askew.

"Earl the Dead Cat lets you say farewell to smelly cat food, litter boxes, and live cats that shed and go into heat," reads the ad. "Earl is a cuddly, understuffed and very dead toy cat complete with his own death certificate."

"Earl The Dead Cat, the last cat you'll ever need."

Buy it from Mad Dog Productions in Richmond, Va., for $14.95.

AND HOW about adults? One of the most difficult tasks of Christmas is sticking to the traditional, to the true meaning and spirit of one of the holiest of holidays. Nothing suits the season like an animated holiday greeting on a floppy disk. The Jingle Disk features holiday scenes accompanied by beeping Christmas carols at $9.95 each, minimum order of 200. Disking the halls with floppies, if you will. It's a long way from Christ in the manger.

For the devil in you, how about the Complete Revenge Kit, a game that rips apart the notion that it is better to give than to receive. The $8.40 game is being marketed for people who have been abused, used and deceived. It is sweet revenge.

THE KIT is a package of 40

hoax letters, phony brochures and business correspondence that can be sent to the target of the buyer's revenge. For instance, the Meaty Tom cat food company writes to say that the recipient has just won a free supermarket spree. "All you have to do to join in the fun is dress up like a cat, go to any participating supermarket with the voucher and ask for the manager."

In Oshkosh, Wis., the Miles Kimball catalog breaks all bounds for its 50th anniversary. First, there is the Holy Family Stik-ees set. "Adds a reverent touch to holy-day decorating," the catalog says. Basically, you stick the holy family — Mother Mary and Baby Jesus included — on windows, mirrors, patio doors, even the kid's bike. Cost is only $4.49, but buy two and see how holy you can get.

THEN THERE is the Santa Design Johnny Lid Cover. "Add a bit of holiday dash (and chuckles from guests as well) to that ho-hum bath," reads the catalog. "Our sizzling red toilet seat cover boasts a jolly Santa design in bright colors. When the lid is down the merry face wears a happy grin. When it's up, the jolly old elf politely covers his eyes with his mittens. Made in the USA." At $5.98, it's a real cheap shot.

For the tactless, Horchow's Christmas catalog has Diet Tools, the "perfect gift" for fat people. The forks, knives and spoons are "just about half the size of regular flatware to encourage smaller bites." Stamped right on the fork it says "Diet Tool Fork." Just $15 for this jewel.

HEAVENLY Dolls Inc., of Littleton, Colo., is selling Baby Jesus Dolls with glow-in-the-dark halos for $31.50.

"I believe anyone who is a Christian would want one," says creator Rita Edler. The 13-inch long vinyl doll — in Anglo, Hispanic and black models — comes with a wooden manger, a non-toxic glow-in-the-dark detachable halo, and a card with the words: "My name is Jesus. Jesus loves you. I am your friend. Please love me."

FINALLY, for a mere $25, one can purchase an Ebenezer's Sweat Shirt from Joan Cook's winter 1985 catalog. The sweat-shirt features two fleecy white sheep. One says "baa!" The other says "humbug!"

Now that's the Christmas spirit.

Coming December 13...

Legendary literary feud on hold while novelists discuss politics

NEW YORK (UPI) — American novelists Norman Mailer and Gore Vidal set aside a legendary literary feud to speak out against Ronald Reagan's administration politics and the arms race.

"Neither of us could pass a bowl of soup without spilling it on the other," Mailer told a packed audience at the Royale Theatre during a recent lecture. "Tonight we make up feuds and mend the fences — all the things I'm not good at."

Vidal, the aristocratic author of Burr and Myra Breckinridge, said he and Mailer were good friends before the feud — the start of which neither claimed to remember but which flourished during several scathing episodes of the Dick Cavett television show.

"Our lives have been parallel, but as Italian politicians say, 'parallel lines must eventually converge,'" Vidal said, explaining he and Mailer's first friendly then hostile relationship.

THE LECTURE was the sixth of eight programs of American authors presented this fall under the sponsorship of PEN — Poets, Playwrights, Essayists, Editors and Novelists — a worldwide organization of writers started 48 years ago. During the programs, two prominent authors spend an evening lecturing, debating or reading from their own works.

Mailer, who is president of PEN, and Vidal said they decided to speak together because of a shared belief that the United States is being run by a wealthy few who put their concerns before that of the common good.

Sometimes witty and sometimes insightful, Vidal and Mailer also harangued against the arms race and the American perception of the Soviet Union as inherently evil.

"They (the government) have to keep frightening the American public to justify one third of the budget to defense," Vidal said, adding that not since The Wizard of Oz has an entity been made out to be so evil as the Soviet Union.

THE MOST PROLONGED applause of the evening came when Vidal answered a question from a member of the audience by saying he was tired of being attacked as un-American for criticizing his country.

"I'm in absolute agreement with him," said Mailer of Vidal.

Mailer, admitting he was attacking many of the people who made up his audience, said at one point, "I sense hostility here." To appease those he was insulting, he read one of his own poems about a drunk who throws up on his hostess' floor and then calls her names before passing out at her feet.

"You can see yourselves as the hostess and me as the drunk," said Mailer, who added he was "stone sober" at the moment.

MAILER, WHO became a critical and popular success at age 25 with the publication of his first novel The Naked and the Dead, sometimes rambled off the point but the audience applauded when he asked if they approved of his impromptu style.

His theories were varied if not unique. He argued the president had one brilliant thought during his lifetime and that was never to tell bad news.

He also suggested the American public control economic and foreign policy by giving themselves the right to decide what should and should not be taxed.

The speech by Vidal was at the other end of the spectrum, a historical and political overview of what he called America's rise to imperialism and its economic undercurrents. He deplored the lack of input into government by the common man, whom he said the government either bribed or coerced into agreeing with what was best for the wealthy oligarchy who ran the country.

Poetry

Submersed

Quickly inhaling the fire,
Thirsting for fathoms of absorption,
I step sliding.

The sunlight liquefies
As I stand weightlessly, attaining balance;
Painfully adapting my eyes
As if staring into the sun — eclipsing.
I glide laterally
Curiously searching for an inhabitant,
But extinguishing the ember.

Grasping, pulling, I scale the gleam,
Breaking through the atmosphere to twilight,
Exhaling the ashes.

Out of the Past (1947) and Murder, My Sweet (1944). Two journeys into the tough-talking world of film noir: The former finds gumshoe Robert Mitchum fallin' hard for a dame played by Rhonda Fleming, who happens to be the wife of his client, Kirk Douglas — a plot later borrowed for the quasi-remake, Against All Odds. Second on the bill is a classic Raymond Chandler that puts Dick Powell through his paces as the inimitable Phillip Marlowe. At 7:30 p.m.

Television

On the networks: Good Grief! It's Christmas time again and that blockhead Charlie Brown is back with his seasonal repeat of "A Charlie Brown Christmas" (CBS at 7 p.m.). Then Joel Grey narrates an animated version of Clement Moore's "Twas the Night Before Christmas" (CBS at 7:30 p.m.). And on "St. Elsewhere" (NBC at 9 p.m.), Westphall discovers that his new housekeeper is a refugee from political violence in El Salvador.

On cable: Only Hollywood would make a film about a maniac terrorizing a woman and then call the movie The Seduction (HBO-4 at 8 p.m.) — that's the case with this tacky exploitation film starring Morgan Fairchild and Andrew Stevens. Better thrills and entertainment are to be had from Gene Hackman, James Coburn, Candice Bergen, Jan-Michael Vincent and Ben Johnson in Richard Brooks' Bite the Bullet (HBO-4 at 4:30 p.m.), a sprawling and colorful western about a grueling 600-mile endurance horse race across America's west around the turn of the century.
