UI Hospitals may lose state dollars

By Niels Breen

DETAILED—An Iowa House of Representatives subcommittee gave preliminary approval to a bill that would change the duties of the state's four public hospitals.

The legislation approved by the House Ways and Means Committee would allow hospital staff to serve in state appointments and would allow state-appointed board members to serve in their positions for years longer than three—20 years is the current limit. It would also allow hospital board members to receive state pay the same as state-appointed park board members.

The legislation is one of the House Ways and Means Committee's priority bills. The panel is expected to consider the legislation further this week.

The committee's 9-1 vote approved the bill on a voice vote.

The legislation would change the duties of the state's four public hospitals.

The legislation would also allow hospital board members to receive state pay the same as state-appointed park board members.

UI Hospitals may lose state dollars

UI hospitals may lose state dollars if they fail to meet state standards for patient care, according to a new proposal by state Rep. Steve Mullen.

Mullen said he was not surprised that the proposal was being considered by the state legislature.

"I think the state is trying to do a better job of regulating hospitals," Mullen said. "I think the state is trying to ensure that hospitals are providing quality care to patients."

State Senate passes legislation to change shape of government

By Ben Cohen

NEW ORLEANS— Following nearly two weeks of debate, the Louisiana House of Representatives late Tuesday gave first reading to a bill that would change the current state legislature to a unicameral form of government.

The bill, which was introduced by Rep. John Breaux (D), was quickly passed by the House and is expected to be heard in the Senate in the near future.

The unicameral approach, which would eliminate the current House and Senate, is being advocated by some as a way to streamline the legislative process and reduce costs.

However, opponents argue that it could lead to an over-concentration of power and result in less effective representation of state constituents.

On a related note, the Senate also passed a resolution calling for a constitutional amendment to allow the state to undertake a comprehensive review of its current government structure.

Council hears budget complaints

By Brian Lef

"If these people are so damned honest, I hope they don't put all their duff into the city coffers," that's what Iowa City Councillor Miry Lapper told a large attorney association meeting Tuesday at the Municipal Building. Lapper referred to a number of spending items for the city's operating budget for the coming year.

Iowa City Attorney David Paulus called Lapper's presentation "preposterous." He later said, "I think they were making a lot of hay out of thin air." The city council debated the budget. Lapper led the attack.

"I was hired to be a lawyer, not a politician," said Iowa City attorney David Paulus. He was concerned with the city's large share of the 300 million dollar expenditure budget.

A FORCIBLE Iowa, Lapper made his presentation for the bottom line, the need to cut spending from the Iowa City budget, the city's business' desire for a comprehensive budget and the city's spending needs. He said, "The council is not to make a personal attack on the council, but to see Iowa City's government from the financial point of view." The council decided that more spending should be cut.

Lapper discusses hunger politics

By Mary Taher

World hunger authority Frances Moore Lappé discussed a different perspective on food production to about 300 people in Iowa City's Coralville-Lantern Auditorium Wednesday night. "I want people to understand that the root of hunger lies not in the hands of the poor, but in the hands of the rich," she said. She went on to discuss the importance of food in the marketplace. "People can't believe that the world market responds to basic human need," she said.

Lappé pointed out that only half of the US population consumes food. "We need to understand that the world market is blind to human preference." She pointed out that food is a "basic human need," but is not recognized as such. "The market responds to basic human need," she said.

Jairam Satran

"It's a good time for students to come to the Center and get information," said leligs

The Alumni Association's Center Network, started with California Umbrella, arranges for the students to get information about potential careers. The Center is a place where students can look for opportunities and learn about the careers that are available.

The students have already gained some information about the careers available, and the Center Network is looking to expand its services. The Center is currently working on developing a career database that will allow students to search for careers based on their interests.

In the meantime, the Center Network is working to get more students involved in the program. The students are encouraged to attend the center and learn more about the careers available. The Center is also looking for more alumni to participate in the program.

JOHN WINTER: Break 2

John Winter had a busy day yesterday. He spent the day in Los Angeles, discussing a project with UCLA. The project involved the use of artificial intelligence in the medical field.

Winter has been working on the project for several months. He has been working with UCLA to develop a system that can be used to diagnose diseases. The system uses artificial intelligence to analyze medical data and make predictions.

Winter is excited about the project. He believes that it has the potential to revolutionize the medical field. "This is a great opportunity for me," Winter said. "I am excited to be working on something that has the potential to make a real difference."

A misconduct was found in the case of Marcos Defense Secretary Juan Enrile. He is under investigation for alleged involvement in the Marcos regime's illegal human rights abuses. The investigation is being led by the Philippine Human Rights Commission.

Philippines

The situation in the Philippines continues to be unstable due to the ongoing struggle for power and the push for democracy. The government is still grappling with issues of human rights violations and corruption, which are significant obstacles to its development. The people of the Philippines are demanding better governance and a more accountable government.

A frequent topic of debate is the fate of former President Ferdinand Marcos. The arguments range from his potential return to the Philippines and his possible involvement in a new political movement, to the possibility of his extradition to the United States. Despite calls for his return, the current government remains committed to ensuring that he does not hold any official position.

The opposition is divided in its stance on Marcos. Some, such as former President Joseph Estrada, support his return, seeing it as a way to bring about change. Others, like the current President, Benigno Aquino III, believe he should face justice for his roles in the past abuses.

In the midst of these debates, the Philippines is also facing economic challenges, with a focus on improving social services and infrastructure. The government is working to address these issues, but progress is slow.

Opinion

The recent events in the Philippines highlight the complexity of the country's political landscape. The desire for change and accountability is strong, but the path to achieving these goals is not clear.

EAGLE LEAN. DELICIOUS FIVE STAR MEAT FOR QUALITY, SELECTION AND VALUE!
Richardson banned from NBA for drug use

By Matt Stone

Richardson was banned from the NBA for at least two years after the league's drug-testing program found he had used drugs at "all times," said Omeran, who is executive vice president of the NBA Players Association. The ban lasts for two years, or as long as he has not violated the program's rules.

Richardson was tested for a second time last week, and it was discovered he had taken the substance, Omeran said. He has been suspended from the team for the remainder of the season.

Richardson is a star player for the Chicago Bulls, the league's fourth-best team. He has also been suspended by the Bulls for two games.

Richardson is the first player under contract to be banned under the NBA's anti-drug policy. It is also the first time a player has been suspended for failing a drug test.

Richardson was informed of his suspension by his agent, the NBA Players Association, on Monday. He is expected to appeal the suspension, which means he can remain on the Bulls' roster while the appeal process is underway.

Reigning MVP Richardson has been suspended for a total of three games, including the two games he missed before the suspension.

"We're excited to be playing Iowa," Tressel said. "We've been looking forward to this game for a long time."

Tressel said his team is ready to face Iowa, which he described as a "tough, physical team." He said his team is motivated to prove it is the best team in the Big Ten.

Madison Square Garden, home of the Knicks, will host an estimated 10,000 fans on New Year's Eve in its first indoor event since the 1978-79 season. But for the fans who do show up, it will be a sparse, muted affair without the normal atmosphere of the MSG crowd.

"There will be no fans here," Garden President Peter Holt said. "There will be no excitement here. It will be a very subdued event, and everything will be for the living room." Holt said the garden had not received any orders, and it was unsure how many fans would actually show up. But the Garden was expecting a crowd of at least 10,000, and it was planning to serve food and drinks to the fans who did show up.

"We're excited to have fans back," Holt said. "But it's a very different situation. We're not going to have the usual excitement and energy that we're used to." Holt said the Garden was working with local authorities to make sure that the event was safe and that fans had a good time. But Holt said the Garden was not expecting a large crowd, and it was planning to keep the event as low-key as possible.

"We're just trying to have a little bit of fun," Holt said. "But we're not trying to make anything special. We're just trying to have a good time."
