Harkin pledges Contra aid filibuster

By Susan Slang
Staff Writer

Iowa Senator Tom Harkin, one of the most vocal advocates of aid to the contra rebels in El Salvador, says he will hold a filibuster to prevent the Senate from voting on a bill that would limit U.S. aid to the group.

"The filibuster starts when the debate starts," says Democrat Sen. Tom Harkin, of his plans to block federal aid to the Nicaraguan rebels. "My intent is to lay out appropriate words, charts and graphs that prove Contra aid is wrong."

Lugar and the Senate are pressuring him to drop out of the fight. But he was quoted as saying he will hold the debate "as long as I can." Harkin said he would begin his filibuster "as soon as the Senate meets." The Senate was scheduled to meet Monday afternoon.

Harkin's plan is to hold up the bill by bringing up a series of amendments that the Senate would have to vote on. If the Senate rejects any of the amendments, the bill will die.

The filibuster is expected to last several days. Harkin says he will continue speaking until the Senate passes the bill or until the Senate adjourns for the year.

The bill, which is expected to pass the Senate, would cut aid to the Contras by $30 million. Harkin has promised to filibuster against the cuts, saying they would mean the end of American support for the Contras.

"I cannot understand why the American people would allow the U.S. to support the Contras," Harkin said. "We are supporting the Contras because they are fighting against the Sandinistas, who are supported by the Soviet Union and Cuba."

The confirmation hearings this week to become the 19th chief justice but no one believes it is going to be a smooth ride will have everything to do with one thing: the memos to Congress that Justice Robert H. Bork wrote when he was an assistant attorney general.

Bork's memos to Congress were written to support the Reagan administration's view that federal courts should not make public interest decisions.

Bork was confirmed in 1987 by a large margin at the Senate hearings.

Bork's memos were written to influence the Senate's views on constitutional issues.

Parents worry about their kids' ability to handle new situations, whether without arguing with their parents at all times, or without being able to ask for help when they need it. The UI program is structured to address these issues.

"My parents were concerned that my academic success would not deteriorate with the addition of a new job," said one student. "I'd been working part-time for several months, and I was worried that this job would be too demanding to handle.

"I was also worried about my relationships with my friends and family. I wanted to make sure that I wouldn't neglect them while I was working.

"But I found that the UI program addressed these concerns. The program provided support and resources to help me manage my time effectively and maintain my academic success.

A new service offers young college graduates seeking their first jobs. Most graduates have no idea where to start.

"But with this service, I was able to find a job that I was interested in. The service helped me to identify my strengths and weaknesses, and to develop a strategy for finding a job.

"I was also able to get advice on what to do after graduation, such as where to look for internships and job opportunities.

"The service was very helpful and I would recommend it to anyone else.

The service is highly competitive, but many students seek it out. The service offers a wide range of services, including resumes, cover letters, and interview preparation.

"The service is very affordable, and it's easy to use.

"I was able to find a job that I was interested in, and I was able to get a good starting salary.

"I would definitely recommend this service to others.
S. African violence may be inevitable

By Arndt Hemmers

The phrase, "time will tell," - repeatedly thrown around in recent days - seems to be the official policy of many black leaders in South Africa. The situation appears to be a waiting game.

The conflict between Presi­dent Thabo Mbeki's government and the opposition African National Congress (ANC) is now entering a new stage. The ANC and its allies are preparing for the 1999 general elections.

The African National Congress (ANC) - the main opposition party - is currently in a state of national crisis. The ANC was formed in the early 1900s as a union of different organizations that worked for the freedom of black people in South Africa. The ANC has been banned and reclaimed several times, and has had to change its name many times. It is currently the largest political party in South Africa.

According to a recent speech by Mbeki, the ANC will be able to hold its own in the upcoming elections. However, the ANC is facing internal divisions, and some leaders are calling for a change in leadership.

The DA (Democratic Alliance), the main opposition party, is currently in a state of disarray. The DA leadership is divided, and the party is facing internal conflict. The DA is currently in the process of forming alliances with other parties, and is working to build a broad-based coalition.

The ANC and the DA are both working to build a consensus on the future of South Africa. The ANC is working to build a broad-based alliance that includes all South Africans, while the DA is working to build a coalition of like-minded parties.

In the meantime, the situation in South Africa remains tense. The ANC and the DA are both working to build a consensus on the future of South Africa, and are working to build a broad-based coalition.

UI's 'Butterfly' dazzles despite flaws

HANCOCK Auditorium presented the Opera Theatre production of Puccini's 'Madame Butterfly' on Saturday night.

The production was indeed a visual spectacular, filled with dancing, singing, costumes, and sets of overwhelming color and form. The character's clothing and makeup were magnificent, with attention to lighting and the beautifully mounted sets and costumes coming from The Washington Opera.

Beyond the visual, however, was the investment of the actual experience. Leslie Morgan actually dominated the production, playing the role of the Japanese heroine, Tatsuya. More, the portrayal of the Nagasaki station girls was a view of terrifying and incredible bravery. Morgan, moreover, created the fine tone and the various moods that made the opera believable.

Deliberations continue in USFL trial

NEW YORK (UPI) - Theorneys considering the USFL's $48.5 million anti-trust suit against the NFL reached a deadlock Friday evening in their efforts to settle the entire case or to split it into parts for separate trials.

The lawyers for both sides have declared 33 hours since Thursday afternoon and are expected to continue meetings Monday in their joint room in U.S. District Court here.

That panel is considering a list of 61 questions that affect the federal antitrust laws and three antitrust law charges to their basic elements.

The USFL has asked for $85 million to $80 million for damages allegedly inflicted by the NFL. When tried, as it is by antitrust laws, the total could go up to $200 million.
