House votes to override veto of sanctions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House voted overwhelmingly Monday night to overturn President Ronald Reagan's veto of tough sanctions against South Africa, and Reagan made a last-ditch bid for Senate support by offering to stiffen his stand toward Pretoria.

"I believe we have an opportunity to provide a moral and diplomatic wake-up call" to Reagan, said Rep. William Gray, D-Pa., a leader on the sanctions issue. "Today we have a choice, we can stand with (South African President) P.W. Botha, apartheid and Ronald Reagan or we can stand with the American people."

House members voted 313-83, more than the two-thirds needed to override Reagan's veto of a bill demanding sweeping economic sanctions to underscore U.S. opposition to Pretoria's system of apartheid. Seventy-nine Republicans and four Democrats voted no.

The bill now goes to the Republican-led Senate for a final showdown with Reagan, who supports softer sanctions and "constructive engagement" to persuade the Pretoria government to abandon its policies of racial separation.

REP. STEPHEN SOLARZ, D-N.Y., said Reagan's stand "is an act of incredible moral arrogance and supreme political cynicism" and "his expressions of concern make crocodile tears seem like Perrier water."

Solarz said the economic impact on South Africa of the sanctions bill is $3.6 billion, while the impact of moderate sanctions Reagan proposed Monday would be $267 million.

"This administration has remained unmoved, with its feet stuck in cement and its head stuck in the sand as one of the most important moral issues of our time passed it by," Rep. Mel Levine, D-Calif., said before the vote.

Critics claimed black leadership groups in South Africa, such as the outlawed African National Congress, are run by communists, and sanctions will hurt the black workers the United States wants to help.

Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind., said there will be "blood running in the streets" after sanctions are imposed and hundreds of thousands of black South Africans will be out of work.

IN A LETTER to Senate Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas earlier Monday, Reagan said he was prepared to issue an executive order with new sanctions to pressure the South African government to end its apartheid system of racial separation and grant full political rights to blacks.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said senators were not swayed by the executive order. The Senate voted 84-14 in favor of the sanctions bill.

Idle seat could add to ASAP majority

By Joseph Levy
Staff Writer

The Allied Students Advocacy Party could win a major victory in the UI Student Senate by acquiring the seat vacated by Students First Sen. Ken Nelson, but Students First members said Monday it is vital they retain the seat.

Nelson, who represented the Associated Residence Halls, resigned at last Tuesday's senate meeting because he has a scheduling conflict with the senate's ordinary meeting time.

If an ASAP advocate attains the seat, it will give the party a two-thirds senate majority, ARH President Larry Pearlman said.

Sen. John Gengler said it is vital for the new senator to be sympathetic to Students First. "It is very important that ASAP does not have an absolute two-thirds majority in the senate if we want to protect our own rights," Gengler said.

IF ASAP OBTAINS the majority, it would enable the party to maintain a "gag rule," by which it could effectively end debate and introduce motions at its own will at senate meetings.

A gag rule is "theoretically possible," according to Senate Vice President Staci Rhine. "But it won't happen," she said. "People don't line up on their party lines."

Students First Sen. Mike Gainer agreed, but added the possibility of a gag rule exists. "I could see on important issues that (Senate President Joe Hansen) would try to do that," he said. "He's the type of person that likes to manipulate."

But Pearlman said political ties are not the most important issue.

"That's not the primary concern," he said. "The primary concern is that the residence halls will be represented."

PEARLMAN AND four other ARH executives will comprise a committee to select the new senator. Senate guidelines do not call for an election to fill a vacated residence hall seat, so the committee's recommendation will be final, he said.

"I'm sure (politics) are going to be an issue with some people, but we'd like not to make it one," he said.

ARH National Communications Coordinator and selection committee member Marvin Wens said the selection process will be objective, and the nominee will probably be non-partisan.

But some members of Students First said they are determined to have their party represented.

Pearlman pointed out that all of the residence hall seats on the senate are filled by Students First advocates, but Gengler is concerned about the appointment's affect on his party's fate.

The seat isn't the last hope for Students First, though. An election Oct. 18 will fill three more vacated senate seats.

Daniloff release ends showdown

United Press International

A monthlong superpower showdown ended Monday with American reporter Nicholas Daniloff leaving the Soviet Union for freedom and President Ronald Reagan declaring that the Kremlin "blinked."

At the same time, U.S. officials insisted no conditions were attached to Daniloff's release, although a diplomatic source said it was "an exchange."

Although the arrangement was worked out in a series of four private meetings between Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in New York the past week, Reagan made the public announcement at a political rally in Kansas City, Mo., just after Daniloff and his wife, Ruth, left Moscow.

"In case you haven't heard," Reagan told a crowd of 400 supporters, "at 12 p.m. a Lufthansa airliner left Moscow bound for Frankfurt, West Germany, and on board are Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Daniloff."

AS HE LEFT Kansas City, Reagan was asked if he "blinked" or retreated from his declaration there would be no trade for Daniloff. "They blinked," he said, referring to the Soviets.

"Wait till tomorrow. We did not" trade, he said.

Later, a senior administration official aboard Air Force One said there were "no conditions attached to (Daniloff's) release."

As Daniloff and his wife arrived safely in Frankfurt, he said he could not comment on the arrangements leading to his release.

But he added, "The KGB did not punish me. The KGB punished itself."

Nicholas Daniloff

Shultz, in several brief encounters with reporters, made no comment.

A DIPLOMATIC source at the United Nations, who declined to be identified but who is not American, described the arrangement as "an exchange" in which Daniloff was allowed to fly to freedom Monday while Gennadi Zakharov, a Soviet physicist and U.N. employee charged with spying in New York City, would eventually be allowed to leave the United States.

The diplomatic source at the United Nations was asked a second time by United Press International if "exchange" was the word he meant to use to describe the arrangement, and he repeated that was the word he had intended. He did not expand.

One administration official said Zakharov would be released following a court appearance, where he would be allowed to change his plea from innocent to no contest. There was an expectation Zakharov would be deported to the Soviet Union in exchange for some Soviet dissidents.

IN WASHINGTON, the Justice Department had no comment on the developments, but one official indicated Zakharov's departure from the United States could come later this week.

There was no immediate word whether 25 members of the Soviet U.N. Mission in New York, who are accused of spying, will still be forced to leave the country by tonight. The United States has insisted an expulsion order will stand regardless of the Daniloff case, but the Soviets reportedly had tried to press Washington to ease the order.

White House chief of staff Donald Regan said Sunday it was possible that one or two of the names on the expulsion list could be changed, but the United States would stand by its order the large mission staff be reduced because some members were engaged in espionage.

ZAKHAROV WAS arrested in a New York subway station in August while allegedly trying to buy secret U.S. documents. A week later, Aug. 30, Daniloff was picked up by the KGB when a Soviet acquaintance handed him a package that Kremlin officials said contained state secrets.

Shultz and Reagan both ruled out a swap or an exchange because, they insisted, Zakharov was a spy while Daniloff was an innocent journalist seized as a hostage in a Kremlin powerplay.

Senate Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas said it appeared that Daniloff's release was "unconditional."

The agreement leading to Daniloff's permission to leave the Soviet Union came after Shultz and Shevardnadze met for nearly three hours Sunday night at the U.N.

Sex, sports are just a phone call away

By Carlos M. Trevino
Special to The Daily Iowan

If you let your fingers do the walking you can find out about sex, sports and money with help from the "AT&T Dial-It 900 Service."

Whether you want to hear a young woman beg for sex, get the latest sports results or just check on the stock market, you can dial a 900 area-code number for 50 cents or more and get an earful.

"Hi lover," says Gina, whose seductive voice is recorded on the Adult Conversations line. "We're hot . . . and just for you. Just stay on the line, there's more to come." The dirty-talk line is one of five 900 numbers relating to "Phone Sex."

For an initial charge of 50 cents and 35 cents for each additional minute, Gina and her co-worker, Christy, take turns going through sex "skits." After the conversation is over, they encourage callers to dial an additional 800 number because, as Gina says, "I know you enjoy me and if you want to talk to me live . . . It's only $35."

The Daily Iowan/Gregory McCallum

ANOTHER phone-sex line, called "Adult Fantasy Line," isn't as wordy as Adult Conversations — it specializes in moaning, groaning and women begging for sex.

But these calls clearly are not intended for everyone. Christy on the Adult Conversations line periodically announces the obscene conversations are for adults only and warns "If you're under 18, hang up now!" "We don't make a judgment of what our subscribers carry," said Ralph Dobriner, an AT&T media relations representative. "We don't keep track of who's doing what."

Dobriner said he was surprised to find most numbers currently offered through the 900 directory involved sex, sports and money.

"We don't break it down into any specific categories," Dobriner said, "Some people subscribe for just a few days and others for a longer period of time. It's a proven tool for two things — polling and recorded information to an audience at a distance."

FOR THOSE with a lust for money, the Dow Jones Report gives stockholders the latest information on what their stocks are up — or down — to at the New York Stock Exchange. But stockbrokers are skeptical of the service.

"I've never heard of anybody using that line," said Darrel Courtney, a registered representative of Dain Bosworth Inc. "The people who would use that 900 number are people who do their own investing or have a discount firm."

Courtney explained that most clients call in for information and advice. "We have our own machine that gives us up-to-the-minute quotes and news off the Dow Jones wires," he said.

Woman files $3 million suit against UI Hospitals, staff

By Ann Szemplenski
 Staff Writer

An eastern Iowa woman who underwent stomach surgery at UI Hospitals in 1983 filed a $3 million lawsuit Monday against the hospital, her doctors, nurses and attending staff.

In her suit, Marjorie Higgins, 46, contends that while she was a patient at the hospital, the defendants were negligent in caring for her and caused her major neurological damage.

In the petition filed in Johnson County District Court, Higgins named as defendants the state of Iowa; UI Hospitals; doctors William G. Marshall Jr. and Nicholas P. Rossi; a doctor with the last name of Bruneteau; and unknown doctors, nurses and staff employees. The suit states that while Higgins was in the hospital for stomach surgery, the defendants did not properly test or question Higgins about medication given to her or properly monitor the effects of the medication.

Higgins also contends the hospital's negligence caused her major neurological damage, including partial blindness and partial paralysis. Higgins also contends she has and will continue to suffer severe emotional distress and mental anguish.

The suit states that without the complications Higgins could have returned to work shortly after the stomach surgery and that she will suffer a loss of future earnings totaling $200,000.

Tenants gather to protest trailer park living conditions

By James Cahoy
Staff Writer

The owners and managers of an Iowa City trailer park were under attack Sunday night when disgruntled tenants gathered to complain about the living conditions there.

About one dozen angry tenants of the Iowa City Regency Mobile Home Park, located on Old Highway 218 South, met to discuss the poor quality of drinking water, problems with the drainage system and increasing rent.

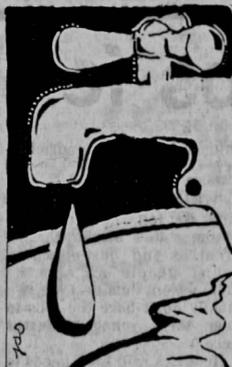

"Frankly, I get sick to my stomach immediately after I drink the water," said Regency resident and tenants association member Carrie Williams. "Friends of mine tell me the same thing. There are a lot of people around here buying bottled water."

Regency manager Pat McDonald denied this. "I drink the water and I feel fine," he said. "I would guess most of the residents out here feel the same way."

ACCORDING TO Greg Evans, a member of the tenants association, the trailer park has had a history of problems with its water supply. "There was a lawsuit two years ago concerning that, but the problems didn't stop," Evans said.

The lawsuit concerned the use of a deep well which supplied tap water to the park and contained, according to Evans, "an extremely high radium level which was way above state limitations." The park agreed at the time to stop using the deep well and dig two new, shallow wells to provide tap water.

But Evans said the park is still using the deep well. "The park admits the well is being used during periods of heavy usage. We don't know how much usage that means," he said.

McDonald said the well was being used only on an emergency basis. "We've used the well once since we got the new wells dug," he said.

CURRENTLY, the tap water at Regency is being tested by the Johnson County Health Department for safety. The water was previously tested by Water Quality Management, a Cedar Rapids firm, which was hired by Regency managers. Residents of the park complained the tests could be biased.

While the tests conducted by the county have so far proved negative, the tenants association insists there is still problems with the water.

But tap water isn't the only matter that concerns Regency tenants. According to resident Jan Corderman, "Flooding is a real problem when it happens.

This spring it got real bad and did a lot of damage."

Corderman blames the problems with flooding on the management. "I think they bear some responsibility. My understanding is that the storm sewers are not adequate enough for good drainage."

BUT McDONALD said it is unfair to blame flooding problems on the management. "I'll admit that flooding is a problem, and I don't think our system is completely adequate, but we're doing everything we can to clean up the system. We just got told by the state they can't help us," he said.

In addition to these charges, Evans claimed the Regency management posed "an unnecessary health risk" to residents when they pumped 800 gallons of raw sewage into an open ditch for three days in July in order to stop the sewer system from overloading.

"We used what we thought was the best way of controlling the overflow. There was no health risk," McDonald disagreed.

Tenants also complained they must pay $160 in monthly rent, while new tenants are being offered less rent and incentives such as free cable upon moving in. But McDonald said the lower price for new tenants is "basically a business proposition. Since I've been here, we've moved 27 new tenants in and only five out."

McDonald also said the tenants association did not represent the feeling of the entire park. "The tenants association is a very small organization in the park. They only have about a dozen members, and what I can't understand is if they don't like it, why don't they move out?"

UI student political groups gear up for '86, '88 elections

Christian Peters
Special to The Daily Iowan

With a little more than a month remaining before election day, a number of UI students have begun organizing on behalf of campaigning candidates and their respective parties.

This year, student Republican groups have a head start in making their organizations visible. In addition to the approximately 40-member umbrella organization of College Republicans, separate committees have been established for individual Republican candidates such as state legislature candidate Mike Ketchmark and U.S. Senate incumbent Chuck Grassley.

"When we started out this year we really wanted to be better organized and get more accomplished than anybody's done before," College Republicans President Don Feeney said.

Feeney explained that the desire to prove students are not apathetic was the primary motivator for the group's early activity.

"I READ IN THE DI in August sometime an article that said that students don't care about politics anymore," Feeney said. "That really pissed me off. I want to show that that's wrong."

The primary campus activities of student Republican groups thus far have been an early September registration drive, publicity tables in the Union, the distribution of fliers and phone canvassing to identify Republican voters and get them registered.

On the Democratic Party side, organization has been somewhat slower to develop. While a Students for Nagle committee headed by UI senior Mike Skinner has been meeting, and members of the University Democrats organization hope to regroup this week, there has been little other formation of student groups on behalf of individual Democratic candidates.

SEAN KENNEDY, former president of University Democrats, said this lack of involvement is in part due to the diverse interests of politically active students who normally support Democratic candidates.

"A lot of people are involved in other groups (like) LASA (Liberal Arts Student Association) and Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament," Kennedy said. "There are a lot involved in student government, too."

According to Matt Hanson, another member of University Democrats, "people like Tricia Johnson, who's vice president of LASA, and (Student Senate President) Joe Hansen are prime examples of people who have worked for Democrats before but either don't have the time or don't feel comfortable working in partisan political campaigns this year."

"I read in the DI in August sometime an article that said that students don't care about politics anymore. That really pissed me off. I want to show that that's wrong," says College Republicans President Don Feeney of his group's increased activity.

ON THE OTHER hand, Johnson County Republican Committee Co-chairman Brian Miller said students involved in organizing Republican campaign committees are not heavily involved in other student political activities.

"There are not too many Republicans occupied (by involvement) in student government and not many Republicans involved in specific issue activist groups," Miller said. "You certainly don't see many involved in protests on the Pentacrest. Their activity is just to work for the candidates they support."

Student Senate President Joe Hansen ventured a guess that some of the 1984 races were simply more exciting to people than this year's contests.

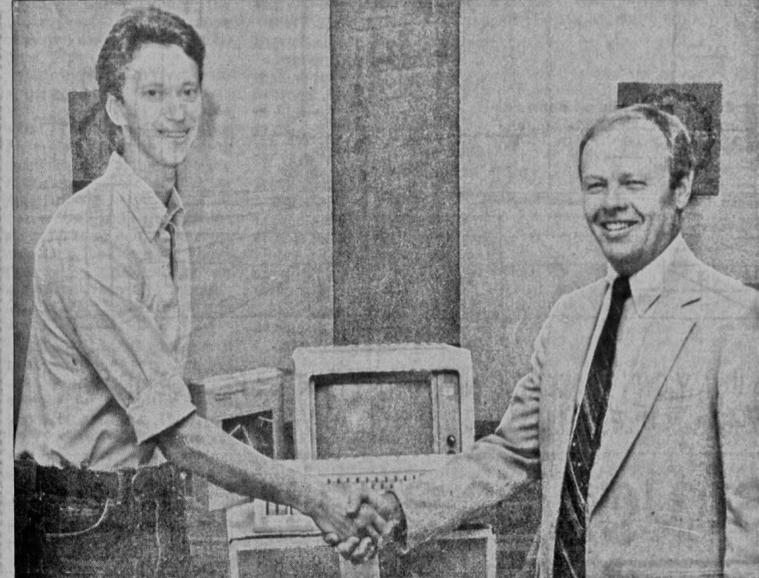

"In '84 you had the Harkin campaign, which was one of the biggest races in the country, and you had the presidential race," Hansen said. "This year's races aren't as exciting to a lot of people. It's definitely a shame because I know that there are a lot of good concerned people around."

ACCORDING TO Skinner, the student Democratic organizations will be recruiting volunteers to strengthen their party in October.

"Over the next month we're going to be needing people to help set up information tables, tailgaters, distribute leaflets and work on getting out the vote drives more than anything."

Hanson agreed, saying the University Democrats will be focusing on building a strong organization for 1986 and the coming election year.

"We really need to provide focal point for people with leanings towards Democratic candidates who don't know where to go, especially freshmen," Hanson said. "Also, we don't want to have to start from scratch in '88."

Idle minds

Idle hands do the devil's work. Or so the saying goes. Too bad the saying doesn't elaborate on whose work idle — or empty — minds do. The current wave of Big Brotherism creeping across the country provides several examples of what happens when people with nothing better to do take a peek into other folks' business.

Book bannings continue at schools and libraries as concerned citizens yank titles such as John Steinbeck's The Grapes of Wrath and William Faulkner's As I Lay Dying off the shelves. Groups of senator's wives work long hours to convince the record industry that the songs of certain popular groups promote satan worship and drug use and should be banned.

And now residents of Ottumwa, Iowa are endeavoring to halt free showings of X-rated movies to patrons of a local motel on the grounds that the establishment is too close to an elementary school full of impressionable children. Apparently sin is contagious and by merely walking past this motel the school children will be set upon the path to hell.

All these efforts at sanitizing America are carried out by people convinced they — and only they — possess the correct standards of behavior and morality. But this country is founded on the ideal that one person's standards should not be imposed on all others. The freedom to choose what books to read, what songs to hear, what movies to offer is an integral part of the system these crusaders claim they are protecting.

If only the do-gooders could see that their efforts undermine everyone's freedoms, perhaps they would be content to stay at home and live their own lives as they see fit — and leave the rest of us to do the same.

Veiled references

The Daily Iowan has been playing host lately. During the past few weeks, several candidates for political office have been stopping by the DI office to show their face and talk to some of the editors. Before the November elections, we plan to meet with all the major candidates — those in the gubernatorial, lieutenant governor, Senate and House of Representatives races — and publish a series of reports based on our interviews.

And, while not all of the candidates have had a chance to come by yet, the initial interviews reveal some startling developments.

To begin with, every candidate so far has endorsed "economic development" as a potential cure of our state's ailing economy. Furthermore, there seems to be unanimous support for "broadening the economic base." Even more earthshaking is the apparent widespread support for "job creation" in the state of Iowa. "Capitalizing on human resources" is the final aspect of the candidates' complex plan to revitalize our state. These programs surely deserve the unquestioned support of the voters.

At this point in the race, the only vulnerable spot in the candidates' plan is what some rudely inquisitive people call its vagueness. Fortunately, few if any of the questions asked on this matter have forced a straightforward answer, thus preserving the veil of ambiguity.

Inaccurate data

To the Editor:
In a recent United Press International report, it was claimed that Iowa's new seat belt law has saved 22 lives. The information used in making this claim was gathered by law enforcement officers who indicate "if they believe persons would have been killed if they had not used seat belts."

Although the subjective impressions of law enforcement officers may be interesting, this evidence is less than satisfactory for justifying the actions of Iowa's legislators.

The proper data come from comparing the chances of surviving an automobile collision when wearing seat belts to the chances of surviving a comparable collision when not wearing seat belts.

Surely, the DOT has the objective data that could accurately inform the citizenry about the merits of wearing seat belts. It should do so and discontinue its current subjective and possibly inaccurate practice.

Does she suggest that the Israeli blood is heavier (more Western, more Democratic) than the Arab blood according to the racist doctrine of the Promised Land for the Chosen People? Her letter reveals not only prejudice against Arabs, but also gross ignorance of the realities of the Middle East. Doesn't she know that thousands of Jews are living now in Arab and Islamic countries?

Survey wins jobs for Iowans

By Mary Boone

Are you presently a student? Are you working full-time? How far do you travel to work each day? How far would you be willing to travel daily to accept employment in a new or expanded industry? Your answers to these and other questions on the Johnson County Labor Force Survey could play a significant part in the types of industry this area is able to recruit.

The Johnson County Economic Development Committee — in cooperation with Job Service of Iowa, the Iowa Development Commission, the State Office for Planning and Programming and Private Industry Council — has distributed 31,000 surveys locally.

The purpose of the survey is to determine the number of people interested in working for new or expanded industry and to examine the characteristics of the available work force.

"WE HAVE A VERY viable work force, here in Iowa," said Art Hendrick, supervisor of the economic development section of Job Service of Iowa. "What we need to do, is evaluate that workforce so we can better represent it to potential employers."

Hendrick supervises two teams of Job Service Specialists. Maureen Leonard, of Corning, Iowa, and Sydney Howe, of Des Moines, are working to complete the Johnson County survey. "It's especially important that students who want to live and work in Iowa City after graduation complete the surveys," Howe said. "Their surveys will present a more accurate picture of this area's available work force and will register their qualifications and interests with Job Service."

The "brain drain" is something with which Hendrick is very familiar.

"WE ARE LOSING students right and left," he said. "Many of the state's brightest, most creative and best-educated young people are finding employment outside Iowa. We simply don't have the jobs to keep these young graduates here."

Hendrick said Iowa needs to do a better job of promoting itself so that it might attract more businesses.

"We have to sell Iowa," the Job Service official said. "We have to sell the very best that we have. Students need to fill out these surveys so we can better 'sell' them."

Hendrick ought to know. Before assuming his post with Job Service, he worked for an economic development group.

"People looking to expand or relocate their businesses have a lot of questions," he said. "They want to know about the area and the people. They want to know the age and sex of the average worker, the workers' education level and their willingness to commute.

"IF WE CAN'T PROVIDE these answers, we can't lure in new businesses," Hendrick explained.

Since August 1984, Hendrick's staff has conducted 50 county surveys. Another 20 counties have submitted requests for surveys.

The surveys work, if people fill them out. Iowa counties ranging from Wapello to Delaware have completed the surveys and have used them to actually attract new businesses to their communities. We can do the same.

Additional surveys are available at area banks and at the Union. Take the time to pick one up and return it — consider it a labor of love for the area you'd love to labor in.

Library struggles against cuts

By Anne Marie Kelzenberg

IN ADDRESSING the Sept. 3 meeting of the Liberal Arts Faculty Assembly, President James O. Freedman emphasized that the UI Libraries' budget had never been cut prior to fiscal year 1986-87. While this may be true of the materials acquisition budget, this statement tends to obscure the fact that the Library has indeed suffered a variety of setbacks, financial and otherwise.

Last year, the Library acquisition budget was fixed at the same amount as for fiscal year 1984-85. This resulted in significantly reduced purchasing power, due to inflation and declining exchange rates for foreign publications. The $550,000 library budget cut, announced in July, translates into a 65 percent reduction in book orders, a 7 percent reduction in serials, and a drastic reduction in binding.

THIS BUDGET WOULD leave "holes" throughout the collection, and would require the library staff to scramble to order and process significant literature for this year. It is shortsighted to expect that the holes would ever be completely patched, because materials go out of print faster than remedial work can be done.

Perhaps less visible, but no less serious, is the problem of

It is to the credit of the Libraries that they have maintained services as well as they have, given the deficiencies they must routinely overcome.

staffing shortages. In order to judge the UI's standing, it is enlightening to review statistics compiled by the Association of Research Libraries, comprising 106 U.S. and Canadian university libraries.

While the UI ranks a healthy 27th in total number of volumes held, it ranks 87th in full-time support staff. In comparing the proportion of full-time support staff to total staff, the UI ranks 99th. In the decade from 1974-75 to 1984-85, the UI Libraries lost 11 full-time staff positions and replaced them with part-time student employees totaling 12 full time equivalents.

THUS THE LIBRARIES are increasingly dependent upon part-time students (with inevitable high turnover rates, at $3.50 per hour) to perform detailed work routines normally done by permanent staff. These 12 full-time employees represent a growth of a mere one-half of one percent in staffing over ten years.

These statistics reflect staffing for Main Library and campus departmental libraries, but exclude the autonomous UI College of Law Library and its temporary "project" positions.

As the UI slips backwards in its statistical rankings for staff, consider the increases in demand for reader services. In the past decade, the UI's enrollment increased by 40 percent, boosting its standing in Association of Research Libraries from 38th to 24th. Usage of the Main Library increased by 69 percent, and, at the Main Library Reference Desk, reference questions increased by 110 percent.

INTERLIBRARY LOANS to other institutions increased 200 percent, reflecting a rise from 40th to 12th place in Association of Research Libraries. Despite this tremendous expansion in usage over the past ten years, staffing has barely remained the same, and has not risen proportionately to demand.

In a Special Faculty Senate meeting on Sept. 15th, UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Richard Remington announced $200,000 of the $550,000 cut will be released to the UI Libraries and the Law Library.

While it is not enough, perhaps this will enable the Libraries to tread water for the time being. It is hoped that this and other news will not lull the UI community into believing that the problems have been remedied. The "band-aid" approach is not a long-term solution to the shortages that have plagued the Libraries for years. It is to the credit of the Libraries that they have maintained services as well as they have, given the deficiencies they must routinely overcome.

By doubling and tripling their efforts, the staff of the Libraries have contributed to the phenomenon described by Freedman in his address: "I go to Des Moines week after week and regularly hear people say: 'We keep having one reversion after another and there's no pain down there at all ... one begins to wonder about the credibility of what you're saying.'"

If more people were aware of the facts and figures, perhaps greater credibility — and solutions — could be attained.

Capitol flag honors UI dead

By Shawn Plank
Special to The Daily Iowan

When a UI student, faculty or staff member dies, custodian Harold Wagler climbs 182 steps to the dome of the Old Capitol and lowers the flag to half-staff.

The ceremonial flag lowering is a long-standing tradition at the UI, according to Mary Parden, a former employee in the UI President's Office.

"I was in school 50 years ago and they did it then," Parden said.

People who work in the President's Office are responsible for informing the Old Capitol Office of a death in the UI so they, in turn, can lower the flag.

When Wagler learns from the Old Capitol Office someone has died, he climbs a series of ladders, 182 steps to be exact, from the second floor of the Old Capitol into the dome.

"I GOT CURIOUS one day and I counted the steps," said Wagler, who has worked in Old Capitol for 10 years.

The Daily Iowan/Gregory McCallum

Wagler also is responsible for lowering the flag during times of national mourning, as he had to do in January, after the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger.

Nan Wolverton, an Old Capitol graduate research assistant, said Wagler has to make about four or five trips to the dome each month.

But Wagler's journey to the dome has been made less strenuous since he first started working there.

Before 1983, Wagler had to make two trips to the dome each day, once in the morning to raise the flag and again in the evening to lower it. But that year, the UI began flying an all-weather flag 24 hours every day and spotlighting it each night.

Now Wagler only has to climb to the dome when the flag or the nylon rope it hangs from needs to be replaced, in addition to his job of lowering the flag to half-staff. He said he's relieved by the lighter workload.

"THE DOME is the coldest place to be in the winter and the warmest place to be in the summer," he said.

But despite its inhospitability, the Old Capitol dome, built in the 1840s, is a place of history. Wagler said names of former Old Capitol workers are carved into the wood in the top of the dome. And the name "Harold Wagler" is no exception to the Old Capitol workers "hall of fame."

The Old Capitol workers also said Iowa City residents demonstrate their curiosity about why the flag is lowered to half-staff.

Wolverton, an assistant to Old Capitol Program Administrator Bette Thompson, said there are some "flag watchers" in Iowa City, who call to find out who died when the flag is at half-staff.

"We keep a note on the desk so we can tell them who died," she said.

Mississippi River towns brace for record floods

DAVENPORT (UPI) — Residents along the Mississippi River were sandbagging and taking other precautions as the river rose toward its highest fall level this century.

"It does look like unprecedented proportions," said Jim Wiggins, meteorologist at the National Weather Service, after another inch of rain fell at the Moline (Ill.) Airport Monday.

River stage moved above 14 feet in Davenport Monday and was expected to reach the 15-foot flood stage sometime today and crest at 19.5 feet on Oct. 6, Wiggins said.

The previous high river crest at Davenport in October was 17.7 feet in 1881, Wiggins added. The Quad-Cities area experienced minor flooding problems last spring when the river peaked at 18.2 feet on April 14.

Some Iowa and Illinois cities along the river could see river crests at 5 feet or more above flood stage, depending on additional rainfall amounts forecast for the Midwest this week, Wiggins said.

THE SWELLING waters will mean flooding this autumn and could increase the chances for flooding again next spring unless the river level can be lowered somewhat before winter arrives, he said.

Ray Gall, spokesman for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' Rock Island District, said the rising waters had not affected river traffic as of Monday, but officials planned to monitor the river closely for the next week or so.

"With the rain, it could necessitate some closure later on," Gall said Monday. "As it stands now, as of 7 a.m., we're still on a normal operating schedule," but officials at some lock-and-dam locations planned to put up splash boards and take other precautions to keep the river open during the harvest season.

"This is the high movement period" for grain companies and other shippers, Gall said. "However, movement in general has been done all year." He said any decision to close locks along the Iowa border would be made on a site-by-site and day-by-day basis.

GALL SAID the river normally experiences a September rise, "however, this is slightly more than a rise, obviously. As far as this stretch of the river, this is unusual to have flood stages at this time of the year."

Capt. Fred Hudson, a riverboat pilot with Robert's River Rides in Bettendorf and Dubuque in Iowa, said the higher river level would not curtail excursion rides but he added that "we'll just be extra careful and cautious and watch for debris."

"As long as the locks are operating, they'll continue to operate without any problem," said Hudson.

The corps said other river stages, flood stages and expected crests for locations along the Mississippi River in Iowa as of Monday were as follows:

- At Dubuque, river stage was 18 feet, flood stage is 17 feet and crest was expected at 22.7 feet on Sunday.

- At Muscatine, river stage was 14.5 feet, flood stage is 16 feet and crest was expected at 21.5 feet Oct. 7.

- At Burlington, river stage was 14.4 feet, flood stage is 15 feet and crest was expected at 18 feet Oct. 8.

Senate hits snags on spending bill

WASHINGTON — The Senate quickly took up a record spending bill Monday needed by midnight tonight to keep the government running, but immediately got bogged down in amendments and leaders predicted they will miss the deadline.

Congressional leaders said a stopgap measure probably will be necessary while disagreements among the House, Senate and White House are resolved on the massive spending bill.

The leaders said about 120 amendments were waiting to be attached to the spending measure, which is one of the last bills that needs to pass before Congress can adjourn.

The record $556 billion Senate bill, containing spending for nearly every aspect of government, largely mirrors a $562 billion bill passed last week by the House. But there are major differences in military spending, foreign aid and arms control provisions.

Search for Missouri fugitive cut back

WRIGHT CITY, Mo. — Searchers surrounded a house where fugitive Michael Wayne Jackson was believed hiding Monday but found no trace of the murder suspect in a raid at dawn, prompting a scaling down of the massive manhunt.

Roadblocks that surrounded the farming community were lifted, and the number of lawmen looking for the former convict and mental patient was reduced from more than 100 to 24.

Police thought they had a solid lead Sunday night when the owner of a small trailer reported it had been broken into.

Bloodhounds picked up a trail leading from the trailer to a vacant house. Police surrounded the house in the darkness. A six-wheeled armored personnel carrier with a battering ram was moved into place in case Jackson barricaded himself inside. But when officers entered the house at daybreak, they found nothing.

Nuclear production rises worldwide

VIENNA — Worldwide production of nuclear power increased 14 percent last year and atomic reactors have become an indispensable source of energy, the head of the International Atomic Energy Agency said Monday.

Director General Hans Blix, opening the 30th general conference of the 113-member advisory body, said the increase from 1984 to 1985 follows a 19 percent increase in nuclear power from 1983 to 1984.

The 1985 figure is equivalent to the entire annual coal production of the United States or the Soviet Union, he said.

"Nuclear power is not a luxury that can be dropped like a garment," he said, noting growing opposition by environmental groups since the nuclear accident at Chernobyl. "It is a source of energy that continues to grow substantially in several countries."

Chernobyl reactor back in operation

MOSCOW — One of the Chernobyl nuclear station's four reactors has resumed operation, five months after the atomic power plant disaster, the Soviet media announced Monday.

The report came first in a Sept. 26 newspaper from Kiev that reached Moscow Monday and was confirmed later in reports by the official Tass news agency and the government newspaper Izvestia.

The Sept. 26 description of the re-start was written before other Soviet reports that said the resumption had not yet occurred.

The first and second reactors of the station were undamaged by the April 26 explosion and fire in the No. 4 reactor that spread a nuclear cloud across Europe. However, they were heavily contaminated.

Hundreds more arrested in Bhopal

BHOPAL, India — Police arrested nearly 2,000 protesters Monday in the third day of demonstrations by survivors of the 1984 Union Carbide gas leak, who are demanding government relief payments.

The demonstrators want $120-per-family payments, which were promised by the state to people whose livelihoods were disrupted by the Dec. 3, 1984 leak of methyl isocyanate from a plant owned by Union Carbide Corp.

More than 800 demonstrators were arrested for defying a ban on public gatherings in the first two days of protests Saturday and Sunday outside the home of Madhya Pradesh region Chief Minister Motilal Vohra. Monday's estimated 2,000 protesters marched in a one-half-mile-long procession to the state chief minister's home waving banners and chanting slogans condemning the government.

Court indicts Nazi war crimes suspect

JERUSALEM (UPI) — An Israeli court indicted retired Ohio autoworker John Demjanjuk Monday on charges of war crimes, alleging he was a Nazi death camp guard known as "Ivan the Terrible," who forced thousands of people to their deaths in World War II gas chambers.

He faces the death penalty if convicted.

The 66-year-old suspect, who has consistently proclaimed his innocence, was not present when the 24-page indictment was handed down in Jerusalem District Court.

Justice Ministry officials said Demjanjuk's trial probably will begin in December or January and may run up to six months. Under Israeli law, trial must begin within 60 days of indictment, although the defense can request a delay.

The only person executed under Israel's 1950 war crimes law, which deals with crimes against Jews in World War II, was Adolf Eichmann, the architect of Adolf Hitler's "Final Solution" plan for exterminating the Jews.

ISRAELI AGENTS kidnapped Eichmann in Argentina in 1960 and brought him to Israel for trial. He was convicted and hanged in 1962 in Ramleh Prison, the jail where Demjanjuk is held.

The government charged Demjanjuk with war crimes, crimes against humanity, crimes against the Jewish people and crimes against persecuted persons.

Israeli prosecutors produced a list of witnesses, including a former Nazi SS officer, who they said would testify against Demjanjuk. They also said they could prove his identity through photographs and a copy of an SS document O'Connor labeled a fake.

"WE WILL PROVE on an almost day-to-day basis the whereabouts of John Demjanjuk at the time," O'Connor said of his strategy.

The man known as "Ivan the Terrible" was a sadistic guard who whipped and tortured naked Holocaust victims as he forced them to their deaths in the Treblinka concentration camp in Nazi-held Poland in 1942 and 1943.

Referring to the suspect as "the Accused," the indictment charged he ran the engines that spewed poisonous carbon monoxide fumes into the gas chambers at Treblinka, where about 900,000 Jews, gypsies and other Nazi victims were slaughtered.

DEMJANJUK HAS argued he is a victim of mistaken identity. Some accounts from Treblinka have supported Demjanjuk's claims. One report from there said the guard known as "Ivan the Terrible" was killed in a camp uprising in 1943.

Demjanjuk moved to the United States after the war and became a naturalized American citizen in 1958.

U.S. authorities ruled that he had lied about a Nazi past on his visa application. He was stripped of his American citizenship before being extradited to Israel Feb. 28.

The indictment against Demjanjuk reads like a catalogue of horrors, accusing him of indiscriminately torturing and killing men, women and children who were shipped to Treblinka in cattle cars.

It says the man called "Ivan the Terrible" was armed with a sword or bayonet that he used to chop off the noses or ears of inmate-workers to mark them for execution.

Christian avengers kill Lebanese officer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — A gang of Christian militiamen avenging the slayings of two comrades by troops loyal to President Amin Gemayel killed a ranking Lebanese army officer Monday and burned down the home of another, military sources said.

The assassination of Col. Khalil Kanaan, the commander of the elite 5th Brigade of the Lebanese army, strained relations between the Christian-led military establishment and the Christian Lebanese Forces militia.

The 5th Brigade was one of the Lebanese army units that helped the militia repel an attack Saturday on Christian East Beirut by pro-Syrian forces.

Lebanese military sources said an investigation was begun into Kanaan's assassination, and initial findings indicate the killing may have been the work of relatives of two Christian militiamen killed in an earlier shoot-out with units from the 5th Brigade.

Military sources said hours after the Monteverde killings, a gang of Christian militiamen stormed the colonel's suburban home and shot him.

Col. Kanaan was in bed when the attackers stormed his apartment. They opened fire at him and his wife from machine guns. Col. Kanaan was hit by 27 bullets and was killed instantly. His wife was wounded and taken to a hospital, a military source said.

At about the same time, another gang of Christian militiamen stormed the home of Capt. Antoine Kerim, a 5th Brigade officer commanding the Monteverde position, in a northeastern suburb of Beirut and set it ablaze.

"Fortunately, Captain Kerim was not at home at the time," said a military source who refused to be named.

PRESIDENT GEMAYEL and other Christian leaders condemned Col. Kanaan's killing and warned against its repercussions on Christian unity in the aftermath of a pro-Syrian militia attack on East Beirut.

"The attack on East Beirut could not have been crushed without the army, and especially the 5th Brigade, and the Lebanese Forces militia should hand over Kanaan's killers to avoid a serious split in Christian ranks," a Lebanese army officer said.

Cloudgate bursts with brilliant ballet E.T.

By B. Gordon
Staff Writer

I T HAS BEEN said that dance is the primal art form, that it frees the body from the constraints of the mind, allowing the spirit to express itself as purely as possible. If this is true, the Hwai-min's Taiwanese dance company, Cloudgate, is exuberant proof.

Cloudgate performed Hwai-min's full-length ballet Legacy Friday night at Hancher Auditorium. According to the program notes, "In Legacy a group of young people pay tribute to their ancestors, the pioneers of Taiwan." Legacy is a work in seven movements, some contiguous, some separated by "interludes" of improvisationally performed poetry.

THE BALLETS opened with the company arranged on the stage, dressed in modern clothing, each member holding a tall stick of incense. As traditional oriental music filled the stage, the dancers lit their incense in a random pattern of small flames.

THEN SINGLY and in pairs, the company promenade

the cast iron incense holder downstage right, to bow and place their smoking sticks in the cauldron. As the process drew to a close, one began to notice that some of the company, having returned to their opening places, were disrobing. The men were taking off their shirts and the women removing their colorful skirts to reveal slate blue or black jumpers. Again, with a conscious randomness, the shirts, skirts, and blouses fell to the floor.

Perhaps this does not sound much like ballet. At the very least it is not what one might expect a dancer, who has spent a lifetime creating bodily perfection, to do. What made it engrossing was the high order of concentration among the dancers. Smoke rising, people walking, bowing, sitting, undressing, dropping a piece of clothing — these actions were the ballet of daily life.

one reason for that crystal-hard concentration became clear: the dancers were performing a work of authentic genius and knew it.

For instance, in the section entitled "Call of the New Land," one woman, holding her red apron like a bloody child, threw herself into gyrations of silent agony, praying mutely to the cauldron of smoking incense against a menacing human chain. But in "Crossing the Black Water," a silk sheet lit electric blue tossed a man overboard like a wave and the chain reappeared, this time to save his life.

"Taming the New Land" and "Joy in the Wilderness" exemplified the pleasure of working together for a common goal. These fabulously athletic sections of the piece, performed not only flawlessly but also with breathtaking physical risks — the choreographer flinging his dancers into the air so that their bellies were suspended over the stage — dissolved into the central dramatic event — the marriage of a pregnant woman.

opened with the death of the new husband. Hwai-min managed to create a dance of true personal grief while always keeping in mind the commonness of the experience. The sequence where the bride is hidden behind the sheet which earlier portrayed the sea, as the other women of the village enact her birth pangs in stylized movements on the other side of the stage, was as close to sublime as anything ever choreographed.

It is connection to the land, which Hwai-min credits Iowa with having taught him (he holds a master of fine arts from the UI Writers' Workshop), and community spirit that renews the mood of optimism, setting the stage for the final celebration. In "Planting the Rice Sprouts," the dancers not only plant but become the flourishing rice paddies themselves.

"Epilogue/celebration" opened with a red banner dropping from the flies above the stage. The banner was no longer an ominous color, but was clearly the red of the dragon. The audience brought the company back for seven bows at the end of the piece.

Vaudeville act proves ponderous

By Beth Lucht
Staff Writer

THE "New Vaudeville" — a movement which stresses audience rapport and simple, old-fashioned humor — came to Iowa City Sunday afternoon in the form of The Alchemedians.

New Vaudeville artists like the Pickle Family Circus and the Flying Karamazov Brothers have delighted local audiences in the past. In the case of The Alchemedians, the reaction was more like delight mixed with frustration.

The performance, which featured mimes Bob Berky and Michael Moschen, was a mix of juggling, dance and clowning. Moschen and Berky seemed to be modern-day alchemists, trying to make a magical elixir out of ordinary sounds found in stainless steel bowls which wandered onstage at the start of the performance. (And if this sounds strange in print, imagine how confusing it was on stage.)

IT IS DIFFICULT to figure out why Berky and Moschen even bothered with a plot. The contrived beginning was obviously just a setup for the performance to come. Both performers were talented and entertaining. It would have been much more effective simply to say, "We are going to perform for you," without developing an indecipherable plot as an excuse for the action.

Another problem was the overly clear division of the performance. Berky was the comedian and Moschen was the sleight-of-hand artist. The presentation shifted abruptly from slapstick to mesmerizing juggling and then back again, with very little in between.

Despite these faults and the long delays which left the children (and some of the adults) in the audience squirming in their seats, The Alchemedians had its moments. Berky's clown, who communicated his acerbic comments through a kazoo, was the highlight of the show.

HE USED AN OLD, but valid, formula: Take volunteers from the audience and make fools of them. He dressed a distinguished gentleman in a fluffy blue tutu, but the embarrassed volunteer upstaged Berky.

Moschen's work was often breathtaking, but he pushed tricks for too long. Five minutes of his amazing tricks were nice, but 15 minutes of the same thing got to be a bit old.

The performance was helped along by a unique set by sculptor John Kahn and a hypnotic score by well-known composer David Van Tieghem. Ricardo Velez's direction was a bit muddled and lacked direction, but it is difficult to tell whether the fault lies in the uninspired ideas behind the performance or in Velez's work.

Play uses creative synthesis of styles

By Hoyt Olsen
Staff Writer

THERE IS ONE prop on stage, a large T-shape formed with cubes of corrugated board, representing a tree. Band members enter one at a time; their movement is slow, mannered, militarily precise. Each turns at a right angle to reach the band platform, which projects toward the audience from the side of the stage.

The band members wear black pants and shirts. They sit on tree stumps. They wait. The silence becomes physically uncomfortable; audience members attempt urgently to stifle the immediate urge to cough. Robert Wilson's the Knee Plays has opened in Boston.

"A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country." So it is in Wilson's case. Few Americans have heard of the Texas-born innovator, who has won considerable fame in Europe and Japan. Its horizons diminished by daily exposure to a 21-inch conservative medium, the domestic theater audience is conditioned to expect straightforward, representational drama with clear narrative development — and a few laughs would be nice.

WILSON'S HORIZONS are so unconfined that one cannot reasonably categorize what he does. Because Wilson substantially incorporates music into his pieces, the term "opera" is the misnomer most commonly applied to his work. But a Wilson performance is also dance, poetry, light display, movable architecture; perhaps "ritual" is the only completely inclusive description.

The Knee Plays was not conceived as a self-contained organic unit, but as entr'actes to connect the scenes of a massive project entitled CIVIL WAR: a tree is best measured when it is down. This project was planned for a full presentation in conjunction with the 1984 Olympics.

Several nations were involved in staging sections of the work, which were to be joined in four 12-hour-long presentations in Los Angeles. Enthusiastic support for the project was generated abroad, but U.S. organizers failed to raise the necessary funding for their share of the expenses and canceled the performance. While little noted here, this failure made headlines abroad.

ASA RESULT, Wilson has had to be contented with staging one section of the CIVIL WAR here, another there. Thankfully, the Knee Plays offers sufficient delight by itself that the loss of the surrounding frame is no hindrance to enjoyment.

The Knee Plays may remind one of an imaginative children's book. Events defy any clear cause-effect relationship; the magical and the fantastic are accepted at face value; delight in a visual image is more important than finding meaning in it. A tree topples, becoming a cabin in the process. People construct a boat around the cabin. An enormous bird snatches a man from the boat. The boat becomes beached, and people write graffiti on it.

The performance style is more Eastern than Western, incorporating elements of Japanese Kabuki and Noh theater and Bunraku puppet theater. Performers dress in white, and play against a white background; surprisingly, the effect is not barrenness, but a heightening of the sense of each movement and of the delicately textured lighting.

WILSON'S CONCERN with movement is so precise that he times individual gestures with a stopwatch during rehearsals, insisting that each be completed in exactly the assigned interval. As the Knee Plays' dancers perform, the remarkable contrasts and emphases Wilson is able to create (with collaborator Suzushi Hanayagi, a dancer trained in classical Japanese forms) underscore the success of his methods.

The music and narrative were written by David Byrne, best known for his leadership of the rock group Talking Heads. Byrne's music provides a deliberate antithesis for the Japanese movement techniques; it is a lively, memorable Dixieland brass score. East meets West within the action as well: In "Knee Play 7," as the band plays a shimmering, shimmying, striptease of a melody, Admiral Perry lands in Japan and entertains a Japanese fisherman with a Punch and Judy show, using Bunraku puppet figures.

BYRNE'S NARRATIVE is often deliciously wry; it connects with each scene, but only in an elliptical sense, and the narrator delivers his lines in a completely deadpan style. As a giant bird puppet is about to snatch a human puppet away, the narrator is talking about wanting to steal someone else's grocery cart because, he says, "If I ate their groceries, I might become that person... we could lead identical lives as long as the groceries lasted."

One of Byrne's lines is clearly directed at the audience: "Being in the theater is more important than knowing what is going on in the movie." It's a reasonable summary of the Knee Plays experience.

It's an experience well worth having because of its entertaining and brilliantly innovative synthesis of performance styles. But if Wilson can be faulted, it is that "what is going on" here is attractive only at the surface level; such artistry lacks the depth to become an enduring stage work.

The Knee Plays will be performed at Hancher Auditorium Nov. 7-8; it marks a return of sorts for Wilson, who was an artist in residence here in 1970.

Retton announces retirement at 18

NEW YORK — Mary Lou Retton, America's Sweetheart, announced her retirement from gymnastics Monday at the golden age of 18.

The bubbly pixie who won five medals at the 1984 Olympics, reluctantly gave up her quest of further glory for the joy of returning to school.

Retton wants to pursue studies in communications at the University of Texas, where she is a freshman, and to remain involved with gymnastics as a coach and announcer.

Calcavecchia makes most of tour card

ABILENE, Texas — The golf tour makes a late-season dash to Georgia this week and Mark Calcavecchia is going along for the ride.

Calcavecchia is completing a remarkable comeback story. Seven months ago he lost his tour card and was acting as a part-time caddy for Ken Green, whose sister Shelley normally caddies for him.

Since Calcavecchia regained his tour card he qualified for next year's U.S. Open and Masters, put together six top 20 finishes and polished it off with a victory last Sunday at the Southwest Golf Classic.

Bears' Dent will miss Viking matchup

LAKE FOREST, Ill. — Defensive end Richard Dent, last year's Super Bowl MVP, will probably miss next Sunday's game against Minnesota, Chicago coach Mike Ditka said Monday.

Dent, who missed most of Sunday's 44-7 romp at Cincinnati, has a pulled hamstring and will not practice this week.

Dent will be replaced by Mike Hartenstine, who will set a new club record if he plays Sunday. Hartenstine has played in 167 straight games and will break the club record of 168 set by Bob Parsons.

Sailing Club grabs second regatta title

By Marc Bona
Staff Writer

Sportsclubs

The UI Sailing Club won its second regatta in as many weeks when it topped a field of four schools at the B'Gosh Regatta in Oshkosh, Wis., this past weekend.

Iowa dominated the field of four with 22 points, followed by host Wisconsin-Oshkosh with 35. Wisconsin-Green Bay took third with 46 while Marquette finished last with 57 points.

Led by skipper Eric Quayle and crew Brett George, Iowa scored 13 points while winning five of eight races in the A division. In the B division, skipper Tim Craven and crew Paul Goodman won six of eight races to take top honors.

"We won everything," Coach Bob Woodward said. "We dominated. It was satisfying for us in that we didn't have our No. 1 skipper, Bill Vickers. We went with the bare minimum, four people. It shows we're really deep."

Iowa will travel to Ann Arbor, Mich., this weekend. "Michigan will be tough. We hope to be in the top three. That's our goal," Woodward said.

THE WOMEN'S RUGBY Club split two games this weekend, shutting out Wisconsin-Eau Claire 20-0 and tying Wisconsin-Milwaukee 0-0.

Diane Pfile led the Hawkeyes with two tries while Jean O'Leary, Kim Kipp and Lisa Boomsmer each scored.

In addition to the victory, six Iowa players were chosen to the Sub-Union Select Side. Chris Samms, Lori Masbasch and the players who scored against Wisconsin-Eau Claire were selected.

The Midwest Club Championship will be held Oct. 18 and 19 in Carbondale, Ill. "That's what our season is geared for," Coach Trudy Groat said.

Tentatively, the club has scheduled a home game Saturday at the Hawkeye Drive Apartments against Mississippi-Columbia. The game is tentative due to a possible scheduling conflict with the men's rugby club.

The win and tie at Milwaukee boosted the club's record to 2-1-2.

THE MEN'S RUGBY Club defeated Central College Sunday, 38-6.

Marty Davis and Andy Griebel paced the Hawkeyes to victory, accounting for 16 points between them. Davis scored two tries and Griebel scored a try and converted two kicks.

Greg Spontak, Jim Penosky, Hiram Melendez and Scott McDonough each scored tries in the win.

The A squad will play Northern Iowa Saturday at 1:30 p.m. at Hawkeye Drive Apartments. The B squad will take on the Iowa City Rugby Club.

THE HAWKEYE SOCCER Club defeated Maharishi International University at Fairfield, Iowa, 8-0, on the strength of Chad Miller's hat trick.

Billy Claverie and Raul Curto each scored two goals in the game. An accidental goal by an MIU defender accounted for a goal.

THE ICE HAWKS will be holding practice Thursday, Oct. 2, at 9:00 p.m., Monday, Oct. 6, at 10:00 p.m. and Friday, Oct. 10, at 10:00 p.m.

Anyone needing more information should contact UI Hockey Club president Mike Pugliese at 354-0323.

THE VOLLEYBALL CLUB will be having an organizational meeting Thursday, October 2, at 7:00 p.m. in Room E220 of the Field House.

Anyone needing more information should contact Keith Belling at 353-1294 or Don Schutt at 353-3886.

THE FALL SPORT club meeting will be Wednesday, Oct. 1, at 4:30 in Room E220 of the Field House.

The meeting, which will discuss budget allocations and facilities, is mandatory and must be attended by at least one representative or officer of any club wishing to be recognized during the 1986-87 school year.

The DI Sportsclubs column appears every Tuesday. Anyone interested in having club information printed in this column should contact Marc Bona at The Daily Iowan, 353-6210, on Monday before 2 p.m.

On The Line

Alright readers — your days in the sunshine are over. There'll be no more easy glory for the likes of Kurt Stange and Tim Ehler, past perfect ballot submitters. If you folks want perfect ballots, you'll have to work for 'em.

Like Hayden Fry with his inexperienced youngsters, we've been bringing you along slowly, spoon feeding you easy games week after week (we considered breast feeding you easy games week after week, but that seemed less than practical).

But that's over with. No more free lunches in this column. The winners of our next eight kegs will have to really work for it, because the Big Ten season has begun. In addition, we've taken special care to supplement your Big Ten diet with a number of tough games nationwide.

In fact, there's hardly an easy game in the bunch this week. You can't even count on Northwestern losing anymore. Coming off two straight wins the Wildcats now host red-hot Indiana.

Can Northwestern really win three straight games? It seems impossible, doesn't it? But hey, no one thought Brent Musberger could keep his hair from turning gray all these years either. You just never know.

And how about Minnesota at Purdue, the battle of Big Ten embarrassments. The Gophers actually lost to Pacific, for goodness sakes. Pacific, can you believe that? What a bunch of rubberheads.

And while we're on the subject of rubberheads, will the Wisconsin Badgers win a Big Ten game this season? If they can't beat Wyoming, who can they beat?

Yes, it's beginning to appear as if the Big Ten, in the words of Beano Cook, "is a weak conference". In fact, once you get past Michigan, Iowa, Michigan State and Ohio State

This week's games

- Illinois at Ohio State
- Indiana at Northwestern
- Iowa at Michigan State
- Michigan at Wisconsin
- Minnesota at Purdue
- Notre Dame at Alabama
- Arizona State UCLA
- Wyoming at Iowa State
- California at Washington
- Georgia at Mississippi

Tiebreaker:

Liberty U. _____ at Eastern Illinois _____

Name _____
 Phone _____

(maybe), there isn't much there to be impressed by.

But one thing we all can be impressed by is the unbridled generosity of The Fieldhouse bar, 111 E. College, which is providing the keg for this week's winner.

And remember, as pointed out in this column yesterday, the Fieldhouse is the primo spot to kick back and take in the Iowa-Michigan State game on CBS Saturday. And while you're watching, see if you can figure out how Musberger stays so young looking. Perhaps he's found the fountain of youth — but more likely he just stumbled onto the cosmetic counter at Woolworth's.

And by the way, don't forget the rules of the contest. Only five ballots per customer, print your name and phone number on each ballot, circle the winning teams including the tiebreaker, scribble in a tiebreaker score and drop all ballots off at the business office of the Communications Center by high noon on Thursday, or we'll send Beano Cook over to your house to give you a big fat lip.

Recreational Services provide active weekend for UI students

By Mike Trilk
Staff Writer

Just because the Hawkeyes are taking their show on the road this week, don't think that there won't be anything to do in Iowa City.

The UI Department of Recreational Services has several events planned for the weekend, including the first-ever Free-For-All, which is set for Friday night.

"We've got a busy weekend planned," Michelle Harder, a director with Rec Services, said. "The Free-For-All should be fun. We're trying to line up a lot of coed teams for the non-traditional events."

Events lined up for the Free-For-All include a tug-of-war in the Field House pool, a greased pig chase and a logrolling contest.

"THIS IS A dual program with Rec Services and the Residence Hall associations," Harder said.

Intramurals

"What we are trying to do is show UI students that there is a great recreational facility open to them, plus give some students an alternative for going downtown all the time."

This year's Home Run Derby is also slated for this weekend, and only a few time slots are open for Saturday.

"We have a lot of entries for this year's derby," Harder said. "This has always been one of our better events, and if the weather cooperates, we see no problems this year either."

If golf is your bag, the intramural golf tournament will be held at Finkbine on Saturday and Sunday. The coed tournament will be held Saturday, and the men and women will tee it up on Sunday.

NCAA may loosen ticket policy

AUBURN, Ala. (UPI)—An NCAA eligibility and rule committee member says recent athlete misuse of complimentary game tickets may lead to more liberal policies.

"I think serious consideration will be given to revising the rule in some way," Auburn's Wilford Bailey, a faculty representative and secretary-treasurer of the NCAA, said.

"It may be reworded where the boyfriends and girlfriends of the immediate family are eligible for the tickets. I don't see anything wrong with that," Bailey said Saturday.

Auburn and Alabama last week admitted that their players misused the complimentary tickets. Reports indicate that 40 players misused tickets at Auburn and 55 at Alabama.

NCAA rules allow only family members or fellow students to use the complimentary tickets, not girlfriends or acquaintances.

THE PROBLEMS came to light earlier this month when the NCAA at first suspended 60 players from Nebraska, then changed its mind after Cornhusker Football Coach Tom Osborne threatened forfeiture of a televised game. The NCAA then took

"We were criticized on both sides, by the media for not having the guts against Nebraska and the other way for being unfair against the athletes," NCAA secretary-treasurer Wilford Bailey of Auburn says. "We felt that what we did was an appropriate penalty."

away Nebraska ticket privileges. After that case, the NCAA told all schools to clean up their programs and deal with the violations.

"But a lot of people don't understand what's involved, which is a fundamental principle," Bailey said. "Under the NCAA constitution, a student-athlete providing false information to the infractions committee is guilty of unethical practices and that

Vlasic earns top collegiate

IOWA CITY, Iowa (UPI) — The nation's top two quarterbacks based on NCAA passing statistics are scheduled to meet Saturday when Iowa's Mark Vlasic faces Michigan State's Dave Yarema in the Big Ten opener for both teams.

The 13th-rated Hawkeyes also will arrive in East Lansing, Mich., with a squad that leads the nation in total offense, scoring offense, total defense and rushing defense. They rank second in scoring defense and fifth in rushing offense.

Vlasic, a fifth-year senior who played back-up to all-American Chuck Long the past three seasons, has completed 33-of-55 pass attempts for 544 yards and six touchdowns. His passing efficiency rating of 171.8 leads the NCAA.

Vlasic completed 9-of-12 passes for 135 yards before leaving the game with a bruised shoulder in Saturday's 69-7 win over Texas-El Paso. However, he is expected to play against the 18th-ranked Spartans.

YAREMA, SECOND on the passing list with a rating of 163.8, has completed 46-of-67 attempts for 649 yards and four touchdowns. He completed a career-best 13-of-16 passes for 277 yards and two touchdowns Saturday before he was yanked midway through the third quarter of Michigan State's 45-10 win over Western Michigan.

Third on the list is another Big Ten quarterback, Michigan's Jim Harbaugh at 158.9. He has hit on 38-of-57 attempts for 532 yards and three touchdowns.

Miami's Vinny Testaverde is next at 156.1, having completed 66-of-110 attempts for 985 yards and 10 touchdowns. His rating is lower because he has thrown five interceptions, compared to two each for Vlasic and Yarema.

Testaverde is considered one of the favorites to win the Heisman Trophy, along with Michigan State running back Lorenzo White.

WHITE RANKS SEVENTH among the nation's leading rushers, averaging 133.3 yards per game. He has carried 91 times for 400 yards and four touchdowns. He ran for 192 yards and three touchdowns Saturday and averages 4.4 yards per carry.

The only other Hawkeye included among the nation's individual leaders is tailback Rick Bayless, who is eighth in scoring with an average of 10 points per game. He has scored five touchdowns for 30 points in three games.

Iowa outscored its three non-conference opponents — Iowa State, Northern Illinois and Texas-El Paso — by a combined total of 169-17.

The Hawkeyes are averaging 56.3 points per game while allowing 5.7 points per game. They are averaging 554.7 yards total offense, including 308.3 yards rushing.

The Iowa defense has given up an

Harberts finds fame in a Hawkeye uniform

By Robert Mann
Staff Writer

Another walk-on stood out among Hawkeye football players for the third week in a row when sophomore Deven Harberts caught his first two passes of his career Saturday against Texas-El Paso, both of which went for touchdowns.

The touchdown tosses, which were freshman quarterback Dan McGwire's only completions out of three attempts on the day, covered distances of 59 and 54 yards in the third quarter. Iowa defeated Texas-El Paso 69-7.

"I was excited when I was running," Harberts said of his first catch. "I was waiting for someone to hit me before I got there (in the end zone)."

"I already knew I could catch the ball, but I was surprised with the way it turned out," he added. "Two catches and two touchdowns doesn't happen to too many people."

THE FIRST RECEPTION came over Harberts's shoulder with two defenders at his heels. The second pass he caught required him to elude a defender and struggle to stay in bounds before going into the end zone.

Harberts was the primary receiver on his first reception when he sprinted down the field, but was not the No. 1 receiver on the other play.

"The two he (McGwire) threw for touchdowns were perfectly thrown," Fry said. "One was perfect, and on the other Harberts was the third or fourth receiver on priority. Dan just stayed in the pocket and finally found him, and then Harberts made a tremendous run to make the touchdown."

"I just saw him out of the corner of my eye and went downtown with him," McGwire said.

HARBERTS, WHO is from Walnut, Iowa, is listed as the No. 3 split end, which, although it will not change in the future, means he was able to gain playing experience that will help him in the future.

Harberts, whose father is a high school coach, has had playing opportunities in the early going this season in part because of injuries to other wide receivers.

"We're going to keep the same rotation order," Fry said. "We just got to play so many people. All he needed was an opportunity, and he showed some skill."

Iowa fans will probably be keeping an eye out for Harberts in the future, which should not be hard since he wears former Hawkeye Chuck Long's No. 16 jersey.

Cowboys run past hapless St. Louis

ST. LOUIS (UPI)—Herschel Walker, making his first NFL start, ignited a second-half spurt and Danny White threw three touchdown passes Monday night to send the Dallas Cowboys to a 31-7 rout of the winless St. Louis Cardinals.

The Cowboys improved to 3-1 and stayed a game behind the unbeaten Washington Redskins in the NFC East. St. Louis fell to 0-4 under first-year coach and former Dallas assistant coach Gene Stallings.

Walker gained 82 yards on 19 carries and caught five passes for 57 yards while filling in for Tony Dorsett, who missed the game with an injured knee.

ROOKIE RECEIVER Mike Sherrard made an acrobatic catch of a 39-yard touchdown throw from White in the first period, and Rafael Setpen gave Dallas a 10-0 halftime lead with a 32-yard field goal.

Then, after the Cardinals closed within three points early in the second half, Gordon Banks returned the kickoff 56 yards, and Walker accounted for 29 yards in three plays before White hit Tony Hill with a 13-yard scoring pass.

Two possessions later, Walker put away the game by slipping into the end zone untouched and catching an 8-yard TD strike from White. With 2:15 to play in the game, Ron Fellows intercepted a Neil Lomax pass and raced 34 yards for Dallas' final touchdown of the night.

Lomax was intercepted four times on the night.

St. Louis' only score came on a 10-yard run by Otis Anderson at the end of a 76-yard, seven-play march to start the second half.

THE CARDINALS' offense sputtered and misfired throughout the game with a key turnover at the end of the first half robbing St. Louis of a critical scoring chance. Lomax could complete only three of his first 11 passes in the second half, during which time he was sacked twice and intercepted once.

Dallas, meanwhile, moved methodically with the help of Walker and the passing arm of White.

The Cardinals wasted an early opportunity when John Lee's 42-yard field goal try was blocked by Michael Downs.

Hurricanes move into No. 1 spot

NEW YORK (UPI)—The University of Miami, winning its weekend showdown with Oklahoma, vaulted to college football's No. 1 ranking Monday in voting by United Press International's Board of Coaches.

The Hurricanes received 48 of 50 first-place votes in earning the No. 1 spot for the first time since the second game of the 1984 season. They defeated the Sooners 28-16 to raise their record to 4-0.

Miami, No. 2 the previous week, earned 746 points and outdistanced Alabama by 99 points. The No. 2 Crimson Tide, 4-0, moved up a spot, earning one first-place vote.

Nebraska, 3-0, jumped two positions to No. 3 while Michigan maintained its No. 4 ranking. Penn State earned the other first-place vote and advanced a notch to No. 5.

That's how we're thinking."
