Reagan, Gorbachev announce early meeting

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Ronald Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev brought a surprise end to the Daniloff-Zakharov spy affair Tuesday with the announcement they will meet in Iceland Oct. 11-12 to prepare for a full-scale summit.

Reagan emphasized he regarded the meeting in Reykjavik, the Icelandic capital, as something less than a formal summit and added, "I have no way of knowing what the outcome will be."

"This is not a summit," Reagan said. "This was a suggestion by him that he and I — one on one — meet earlier and make that in a neutral country."

Nonetheless, when asked about prospects for progress in arms control, where movement has been reported in recent weeks, he said, "The chances are better than they've been in many years for reaching some agreement on arms reduction."

REAGAN MADE A surprise appearance before reporters at the White House to announce the mini-summit, proposed by Gorbachev in a Sept. 19 letter.

News of the meeting — announced just a dozen days in advance and only three weeks before congressional elections — came at the end of the Daniloff affair, which had threatened to cripple superpower relations. But extended talks between Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze resolved the month-long standoff.

The scheduling of the Reagan-Gorbachev meeting was an unexpected bit of icing on the diplomatic cake. Reagan made it clear that the release of Daniloff, a correspondent for U.S. News & World Report, was essential to the outcome.

"I could not have accepted and held that meeting if he was still being held," Reagan said.

SHULTZ TOLD reporters the meeting would be "a little less than a formal summit" and an opportunity to "get the ball rolling" toward better superpower relations.

Last year in Geneva, during their first meeting, the president and Soviet general secretary agreed a summit this year would be held in the United States, with a 1987 meeting in the Soviet Union.

Although Reagan and his top aides have always maintained a summit must be "well prepared," Shultz was vague about the agenda for the Reykjavik meeting, suggesting a change of attitude. But Shultz said "there are reasonable prospects" the talks in Iceland could yield agreement on the framework for arms reductions.

"Obviously, we are going to talk about arms control," Shultz said, as well as other issues now that the cloud of the Daniloff affair has lifted.

Senate moves to censure Gengler

By Joseph Levy
Staff Writer

A meeting filled with heated speeches and accusations Tuesday night led to a UI Student Senate decision to censure Sen. John Gengler.

Last week Gengler accused senate President Joe Hansen of conducting a biased treasurer-selection process and making "nasty" jokes about Acting Treasurer Joel Gray.

"He has acted in a way unbecoming of a student senator," said Sen. Jennifer Fleck, who was the primary sponsor of the resolution which had 11 sponsors.

"His comments have harmed the integrity of the senate," she said. "I hope he will consider all of the harm his statements have done."

Sen. Amy Saxton, a co-sponsor of the resolution, agreed, saying it is time to "defeat this political maneuvering going on in the student senate."

John Gengler's actions have made a mockery of the student senate," she said.

BUT GENGLER claimed he only intended to say the senate's treasurer-selection process was being conducted in an unfair manner.

"Maybe we did need to have our reputation harmed," he said. "There were conditions going on here which created an unfair atmosphere."

Controversy also surrounded the senate's decision to elect Sen. Melinda Hess for its official treasurer.

Gengler said the senate didn't need to look past Gray to fill the position.

"I felt that Joel Gray was the most qualified person for the job," he said.

GRAY, WHO INITIALLY planned not to apply for the position because of his other time commitments, later changed his mind. Members of the selection committee said this was part of the reason he was not given the position.

"The only reason we did not reappoint Joel Gray is because of his initial intent not to reapply," Senate Executive Associate Rudy Garza said.

"I think that's just a bogus argument," Gengler said. "I don't see how you could think anyone else is more qualified."

Gengler said he never stated that Hansen had discriminated against Gray because of his sexuality, but only that Hansen had "made some pretty nasty jokes about Joel."

"I have witnesses who have heard him," Gengler said. He alleged that The Daily Iowan misrepresented his statements in last Friday's paper.

Sen. Mike Gainer concurred. "I can understand how a misunderstanding can be made," he said. "If he would have said what was in the newspaper, I would think that (censuring Gengler) would be fully appropriate," Gainer said.

Gengler said he doesn't believe the action will harm his ability to perform his duties with the senate, however, and that he has no regrets.

Superpower 'deal' brings Daniloff home

WASHINGTON (UPI) — American reporter Nicholas Daniloff, detained in Moscow for a month as a spy, returned home Tuesday for a joyous family reunion with his "honor and integrity" intact.

"I feel I have been vindicated," said Daniloff, who was allowed to leave Moscow Monday in a complex superpower deal that also let Soviet spy Gennadi Zakharov go home after pleading no contest in a New York courtroom.

Daniloff and his wife, Ruth, arrived at Dulles Airport near Washington after a more than 4,000-mile flight from Frankfurt, West Germany.

In a tearful and jubilant reunion with his family, Daniloff was toasted by his daughter, Miranda, 23, and son, Caleb, 16.

Daniloff, bureau chief for U.S. News & World Report when arrested in Moscow Aug. 30, walked off the Pan American jet with his arms raised in triumph and met his children in an airport lounge.

"I MISSED YOU" he said, his voice breaking as his daughter gave him a bouquet of yellow roses, what has come to symbolize the freeing of American hostages. "I'm very proud of you."

In a brief news conference, the 51-year-old reporter said he was "enormously grateful to the president of the United States for standing up for me."

"What a wonderful nation it is when everyone goes all out for one single individual," Daniloff said. "It makes you a great American patriot."

"When I was released from prison on Sept. 12," Daniloff said somberly of the initial steps on his road to freedom, "I said I hoped the diplomats would work in such a way that my personal honor and personal integrity would be preserved intact."

Gennadi Zakharov

"I feel I have been vindicated," he said.

"My investigation was concluded, there was no trial and I left as a freed American citizen," he said. "In the Zakharov case there was a trial and a sentence." Zakharov was allowed to leave the country immediately after a judge gave him five years probation.

THE RELEASE OF Daniloff ended a tense superpower stand-off that threatened prospects for a second summit between President Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev summit. The finishing touches of the deal that won the reporter's freedom were announced at the White House Tuesday.

Secretary of State George Shultz said Zakharov was allowed to leave the United States in exchange for Soviet human rights leader Yuri Orlov, 62, and his wife.

Saferide gets $3,000 pledge

By Dan McClain
Staff Writer

The Fieldhouse Bar has pledged up to $3,000 for Saferide, the UI Student Senate program designed to give UI students' rides home from the downtown area on Friday and Saturday nights.

Mark Eggleston, owner of The Fieldhouse, 111 East College St., said he offered the money to keep Saferide going strong.

"As far as funding goes, we've basically guaranteed them $2,500 to $3,000 for sure, whether they needed it or not," Eggleston said.

The pledge came as part of a Fieldhouse campaign to project its concern for the UI community, he said.

"We're very pleased with the way Saferide has taken off," he said. "It's just a good deal for everybody."

SAFERIDE, WHICH operates two vans and a Cambus, provides rides to people who have been drinking or just want a safe ride home.

Senate reports indicate more than 800 people have used Saferide vehicles during the past four weekends.

The Daily Iowan/Jeffrey Sedam

Sen. Jennifer Fleck said Eggleston's offer fits in with a senate plan to target private businesses, particularly local bars, as sources of possible support for the program.

The senate's Student Services Committee has been concentrating on increasing student awareness of the program.

"We've made some definite improvements in the program over last year and we're basically working on trying to publicize it," she said, adding Saferide is one of the senate's highest priorities.

THE FIELDHOUSE donation represents a major step for the senate toward promoting the project and meeting an obligation to the state Department of Transportation, she said.

The DOT offered the Senate a $7,000 grant last year to run Saferide as a pilot program, provided the senate would match that figure with its own money, she said.

"I think we've got a strong program going here and the Fieldhouse money is just going to make it better," Fleck said.

Students who were cruising home from the Iowa City bar scene aboard the Saferide bus about 1 a.m. Sunday agreed the program is going strong.

"You can't beat it," UI junior Mike McCormick said. "It's either Saferide or you walk. I'm not walking home and that's the cool part of it."

UI sophomore Deb Thompson said, "It's really good for people who are out at the bars and maybe have had a little bit too much to drink."

STUDENTS CAN CATCH a Saferide van or bus from the Cambus stop on the south side of Schaeffer Hall. Saferide vans provide Iowa City residents with lifts to anywhere in the city between 10:30 p.m. and 2:30 a.m. on Fridays and Saturdays. Coralville residents can also take advantage of the van service between midnight and 2:30.

A Saferide Cambus also runs a modified route that stops near each of the UI Residence Halls from 12:30 a.m. to 2:30 a.m. each weekend.

Drinking kills Texas fraternity pledge

Fraternity hazing activities have neither been proven nor ruled out in the alcohol-related death of University of Texas freshman Mark Thomas Seeberger on Sept. 18.

According to the autopsy report, Seeberger, a Phi Kappa Psi fraternity pledge, died of acute alcohol poisoning after ingesting about 18 ounces of hard liquor.

Details surrounding the events of Sept. 18 have been contradictory and difficult to obtain, prompting authorities to question the fraternity's involvement. According to newspaper reports, police sources indicate that Seeberger was on a "ride" — a hazing activity where active members drive pledges far from campus and leave them to find their way home.

Several fraternity members were subpoenaed by the investigating grand jury, but most cited their Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination and refused to cooperate with the grand jury.

The autopsy also revealed that several slang phrases and the Greek letters for Phi Kappa Psi were marked in ball point pen on the backs of Seeberger's legs.

A statement issued by Phi Kappa Psi to UT officials denies that the incident was fraternity-related and emphasizes that no one was forced to participate.

Investigators are continuing to consider every aspect of the death. The only thing that has been ruled out is the possibility that Seeberger, 18, bought the alcohol himself.

UF loses source of research animals

Clay County commissioners voted to permanently ban the sale of pound animals to animal researchers at the University of Florida.

The ban leaves the university with only one other source of animals for research purposes, the Hillsborough County pound, which also supplies lab animals to the University of South Florida.

University researchers said the loss of animals from Clay County will force them to turn to private licensed breeders for dogs and cats for research.

Clay County supplied the university with about 800 animals in 1985, at the cost of $1 per animal. Researchers said it will cost the university about $500,000 for animals from private breeders, but currently there are no plans to cut back research as a result of this high cost.

Local animal rights groups hope the ban will force the university to consider other alternatives to using animals for research.

Georgetown board passes divestiture

The Georgetown University Board of Directors voted to divest the school of all holdings in companies doing business in South Africa.

Officials estimate the divestment will involve 45 corporations, about one-sixth of the Jesuit university's investments. The stocks have a reported value of $28.6 million, about 16 percent of Georgetown's total endowment.

Computer fees to fund grad students

Iowa State University's College of Engineering will use half of the revenue from student computer fees to fund additional graduate student assistantships and the upgrading of computer systems.

The $100 fee engineering students pay each semester to use the university's computers is expected to net $1 million a year for the school.

Forty-three percent of the funds earmarked for the departments will go toward additional graduate student assistant positions for teaching and research. The remaining money will pay for maintenance contracts on existing computer systems and hardware purchases such as microcomputers and printers in the future.

Indiana searches for superprofessors

Indiana University officials have nominated four professors to their College Professorship, or "Superprofessor," Program, but successfully hired only one of the nominees.

The program was instituted in 1985 with the intent of bringing 12 to 14 outstanding educators to Indiana within the next two years.

Thus far, only Roger Temam, an applied mathematician and computer science expert from Paris, has been hired by the university. The other nominations have gone to unidentified individuals: one expert in economics, political science and law; a scholar of philosophy, English, comparative literature, American Studies, film studies and psychoanalysis; and a researcher in psychology and biology.

Local businesses may sue over construction problems

By Carlos M. Trevino
Special to The Daily Iowan

Iowa City councilors discussed at an informal meeting Tuesday the possibility they may face a lawsuit filed by businesses losing customers because of street work.

Councilors said they were concerned about the possibility of a civil suit being filed by one or both owners of two service stations on the corners of Dubuque and Market streets.

The two businesses involved, an Amoco and a Texaco service station, have lost more than half their regular business due to construction that began in mid-July to replace steam pipes.

"Two businesses are really suffering," said Councilor

Ernest Zuber, who pointed out that the longer construction projects linger on, the more the businesses will suffer.

"One of those stations' accountants called ... they've lost more than 60 percent of their revenue," said Councilor Darrel Courtney, who added if something wasn't done soon, "It may be too late."

BUT CITY ATTORNEY Terence Timmins said the city will not lose the suit if local businesses attempt to recover revenue lost because of the construction. Timmins said he has successfully defended such cases in the past.

"Yeah, but did you feel good about defending those suits?" Zuber said. "I don't like laws and I don't like lawyers. That's all, your honor." But laws are one reason for the service stations' inaccessibility, Courtney said. "People can get into the place," he said. "But then they have to break the law in order to get out of there."

Mayor Bill Ambrisco said business owners should not sue the city because construction is bound to occur from time to time.

"All of us have a lot of empathy for those businesses, but everybody has to consider sooner or later there has to be repair work done," Ambrisco said.

"I would encourage people to not lose their loyalties due to a little inconvenience," Ambrisco said.

Meeting focuses on contract

By James Cahoy
Staff Writer

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors met in executive session for two hours Tuesday to draft a response to a local union's contract offer.

The negotiations involve Public Professional and Maintenance Employees Local 2003, an organization of courtroom employees that has never been under negotiated contract.

Sam Donaldson, Iowa City business representative for Local 2003, said concern about wages was one of the main reasons the courtroom workers had decided to unionize.

"Johnson County has had some disparities of wages in the past," he said. "We took a survey to determine what these workers were concerned about, and wages led the list."

DONALDSON CALLED THE contract presented to the board of supervisors "pretty lengthy."

"It isn't anything radical," he said. "We try to address a number of concerns. Basically, we're just trying to ensure these workers are treated fairly."

Board Chairman Dick Myers said the board drafted a "structured response" to the union's offer but refused to elaborate. The response will be released Thursday.

Earlier, the negotiating strategy was the subject of a heated exchange between the county board of supervisors and several county department heads Tuesday.

Johnson County Auditor Tom Slockett charged that the board's plan to have department heads take part in the negotiations would be a waste of time and money.

AS AN ALTERNATIVE, Slockett suggested hiring a professional negotiator to represent the various department heads at the meetings.

"I think it would save a lot on time and expense to hire a professional negotiator. I think we would be better represented than by having all department heads at the same meeting," he said.

Myers disagreed with the idea of a professional negotiator. "I don't agree it will save any time or money," he said.

"What I think this boils down to is that Mr. Slockett questions our expertise in negotiating," he said. "We are not greenhorns at this. We've negotiated contracts before without a professional negotiator."

A local man arrested for allegedly punching a woman in the face and knocking her tooth out made his initial appearance in Johnson County District Court Tuesday.

Jeffrey Lynn Burg, 31, South Amana, Iowa, was charged with intending to inflict serious injury upon the woman after hitting her Sunday in the Country Kitchen parking lot, 1402 S. Gilbert St.

Court records state the woman saw Burg assault a man in the parking lot. He then turned and struck her in the mouth with a closed fist, causing her to bleed inside and outside her mouth. Burg was released from custody Monday night on $500 bond. His preliminary hearing is scheduled for Oct. 14.

A man sentenced for assaulting and intending to sexually abuse an Iowa City woman was denied a motion for reconsideration of his case Tuesday in Johnson County District Court.

Peace Lerobane, 30, of 640 S. Van Buren St., pleaded guilty Aug. 22 to abusing the woman in her apartment on July 18. He was sentenced to two years under the supervision of the Iowa Department of Corrections.

The motion for reconsideration filed Tuesday stated that Lerobane accepted a plea agreement in which he pleaded guilty to the charge in exchange for a one-year sentence with all but 14 days suspended and a two year probationary period. It was also agreed that the probation would be transferred to New Hampshire where Lerobane had been accepted to a college.

An employee of Younkers department store, Old Capitol Center, told Iowa City police officers Tuesday that over $100 worth of lingerie was stolen from the store. Police are investigating the case.

Careers Day offers information to students

By Stacy Rubin
Special to The Daily Iowan

With internships and full-time jobs becoming increasingly difficult to obtain, Careers Day offers students an opportunity to talk informally with nearly 100 employers.

Careers Day will be held at Carver-Hawkeye Arena Thursday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Recruiters from business, industry, social services and government agencies will be available to talk with students about interviews for entry-level positions, summer employment and internships.

According to Nancy Noth, director of the Business and Liberal Arts Placement Office, all students can benefit from this program.

"This is the perfect chance for freshmen and sophomores who are trying to choose a major or develop a career plan, to talk with people who work directly in the field," Noth said. "Students can ask employers exactly what it's like to be in a particular profession and the responsibilities that are involved."

NOTH ALSO SUGGESTED that students inquire about qualifications employers are looking for, and then choose their course electives accordingly.

In addition to supplying information, the recruiters will be accepting resumes and setting up interviews for internships and full-time positions.

"Juniors, seniors and graduate students can ask questions about the realities of the job market," Kathie Wyatt, director of the Office of Cooperative Education, said. She advises students to "ask them what most entry-level positions consist of, salary ranges offered and for a view of the work environment."

Wyatt also said job satisfaction depends heavily upon the students' prior knowledge of the environment they will be entering. Under usual circumstances, students would have to spend a lot of time digging up background information on each company, but Careers Day brings this information directly to the student, she said.

"THE RECRUITERS WILL be here to talk to students about the characteristics of their jobs such as the amount of stress, number of work hours required and the kinds of people who work for the company," Wyatt said. "Students can then have a better idea if this is a career they would like."

According to Pat Hurley, coordinator of Career Information Services, this year's Careers Day will be better than those offered in previous years because it offers more recruiters from more industries, and because students were involved in coordinating the event.

"We moved it to Carver-Hawkeye so there is room for a wider variety of recruiters," Hurley said.

"The program is a great chance to explore different career paths and talk with some of the top employers around the country," Teresa McKenna, student publicity leader for Careers Day, said.

THIS YEAR, representatives from companies including American Telephone & Telegraph Co., Arthur Young and Company, Cargill Inc., Hewlett-Packard and the National Park Service will be available. Many more companies will be showing videotapes and passing out literature.

The event is sponsored by the Business and Liberal Arts Placement Office and Career Information Services in conjunction with Engineering Placement Service and Cooperative Education.

A list of all recruiters attending Careers Day, as well as information on follow-up ideas and future career programs are available in the Business and Liberal Arts Placement Office in the Union.

UI students prepare for interviews

By Scott Hauser
Staff Writer

The equation is simple: UI student plus prospective employer, equals a job.

UI students and prospective employers will get the chance to test that equation formally as they begin the fall season of on-campus interviews early next week.

Nancy Noth, director of the Business and Liberal Arts Placement Office, said the interviews aren't intended to land anyone a job, but are important "pre-screening" interviews.

"They're the interviews to get you the interview," she said.

WHILE NOTH SAID the office has no statistics on the success ratio of UI students who interview on-campus and go on to get those jobs, she said UI students tend to impress recruiters.

"Our students rate very high," she said. "California employers tell us because of the strong work ethic in the Midwest, UI students are some of their best workers."

About 250 companies visit the UI campus each semester to interview UI students, Noth said, adding that fall interviews run from the beginning of October to Thanksgiving.

About 950 students are registered to take part in this fall's interviews, she said.

STUDENTS MUST PAY an $8 registration fee and can sign up for weekly interviews two weeks later, she said.

"It's a pretty good deal, really," UI senior Pat Stansberry said, adding the office has been very helpful in helping him pick out companies to interview with and setting up his interviews.

Stansberry is looking forward to his first interview next Tuesday.

"It's gonna be fun," he said. "I'm a little nervous because it's the first one I've been through."

Because the competition in the on-campus interviews will be stiff, he said he is not limiting his chances of getting a job to this fall's interviews.

"I'M DOING IT mainly for the experience," he said. "I'm just planning to go in, be myself and see what happens."

UI senior John Reynertson also said he will take part in the on-campus interviews later this semester, but doesn't expect the interviews to make or break his chances at a job.

"I'm excited about going out and getting my first job, hopefully with a big company," he said. He said he is also looking at other ways to get a job.

Other UI students plan to play the interviews by ear.

UI senior Troy Nissen, who is registered for interviews, said he is putting a lot of emphasis on these procedures.

"I'm gonna see how these pan out," he said. "It's my first plan of action."

Get involved

Hey, you out there. Yes, you. Joe College student reading The Daily Iowan over your morning coffee.

About a month from now an election will be held. You may have a new governor, senator and representative — or you may be stuck with the old ones.

Who cares, you say? Elections come and go, candidates win and lose — all without the help or hindrance of many college students. Only 11,000 Johnson County residents between the ages of 18 and 24 voted in the 1984 presidential election, according to the County Auditors Office. Even fewer voted in the 1982 general election. So why does your vote (or failure to vote) make a difference when someone will get elected anyway?

Your vote matters because the someone who gets elected may be in favor of cutting student financial aid, or sending U.S. military forces to Nicaragua, or starting classes each day with a prayer. That person will have a share in the decisions that could cut off your tuition money, send you to Central America or curtail your freedoms.

Whoever gets elected will have a measure of power over your life — you'd like them to be sympathetic when wielding that power, right? Then get out there and campaign and vote for the person you want to represent your needs and interests.

If you aren't registered to vote in Johnson County or have changed addresses since the last election, see the County Auditor at the Johnson County Administration Building, 913 S. Dubuque St. You have until 5 p.m. on Oct. 25 to register; the election is Nov. 4.

Wouldn't you rather spend a few minutes registering and voting next month instead of spending a few years worrying about the decisions being made in the capitol?

The real drug war

The Reagan administration's war on drugs couldn't be worse if an enemy power had designed.

First, the test can both lie and be lied to; that is, it can misread over-the-counter medications as illegal drugs. Thus an innocent person will be branded a drug user and either fired, forced into unneeded counseling or required to take a second more expensive test. Either way some suspicion is bound to remain. Moreover, a number of common substances can be added to the urine sample which neutralize its reliability, leading to a false negative.

Second, no one with any experience with drug use can possibly believe that telling someone to "Just Say No" because there is a "wonderful world" of opportunity out there is anything but ignorant.

People use drugs for a variety of reasons in a variety of circumstances. But the bored yuppie who thinks he can use safely for a weekend thrill, the teenager bowing to peer pressure and the lost, angry, hopeless ghetto resident will not be reached by the same tactics. And not many will be reached by a kind of mindless feel-good Just Say No message from happy, old, rich, white folks.

An effective anti-drug program requires honesty, a long-term commitment, and money. It means a realistic, massive, public education effort to portray what various drugs can do to the human body and mind, and a refusal to equate marijuana, cocaine, crack, PCP and heroin. They are not the same and the dangers are not the same. It means a willingness to ban cigarettes which are as dangerous as illegal drugs and to present the dangers of alcohol abuse.

It means money for treatment. Right now treatment facilities, after nearly five years of President Ronald Reagan's funding cuts, are turning away addicts. It means money to intercept planes boats and cars that bring in the drugs. And it means foreign aid to those countries which cooperate and attempt to reduce drug production in their country. For many peasants and many countries the drug crop is a source of important revenue, just as tobacco is to many in this country.

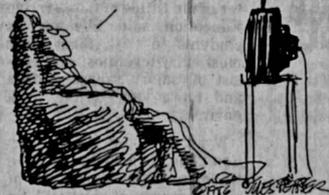

It means a recognition that reducing supply and demand will take a long time of concentrated effort. This war will not be won in weeks, months or even years. Everyone, from the peasant in Bolivia who makes his money growing it, to the middleman who makes his money refining it, to the dealer who profits from the sale and the user who hopes to buy a thrill, social acceptance, or freedom from despair must look elsewhere for those rewards.

All this will take time and money. And finally, life is not wonderful for an awful lot of people. They have little money, less hope, no jobs, abusive parents, or a sense of spiritual malaise from a pointless pursuit of material goods only. Those problems must be addressed as well if society wants people to "Just Say No."

World terror can be stopped

By Ariel Sharon

I BELIEVE THAT the pogrom in Istanbul, in which Arab terrorists with automatic weapons mowed down 21 elderly Jews praying in a synagogue, was the gravest incident in Jewish history since the founding of Israel in 1948 — a prime example of the boundless brutality of Palestinian-Arab terrorism. Perhaps for the first time, the shock felt by world public opinion matched Israel's own sense of outrage. But outrage is not enough.

All forms of terrorism, whether local, regional or international, are interconnected. If the civilized world is to prevail, it must fight terrorism on all levels.

Today, terrorism endangers not only individuals but also the peace of the world. While the superpowers deter each other with nuclear weapons, the Soviet Union uses the terrorist groups that it supports and trains to achieve its goals without major war. It uses them to destabilize the West by creating permanent turmoil in Western Europe, the Middle East, Africa and Latin America.

WHILE ISRAEL struggles mainly with Palestinian terrorism, Western Europeans have their own terrorist problems. In West Germany, France, Italy and Britain, American and European targets are struck with regularity. In Central and Southern America, terrorism threatens the back door of the United States.

Comment

The terrorist organizations are linked as a Murder International Inc. The Palestine Liberation Organization is connected with almost every terrorist organization in the world, from the West German Baader-Meinhof gang to the Japanese Red Army to terrorist groups in France.

Against this Murder International we must establish a Western alliance to fight terrorism. This alliance, to which every country willing and able to fight terrorism must belong, should be led by the United States. This is warranted not only because the United States is the greatest power, but because it is equipped with the best intelligence and logistical capabilities for such a war.

The United States has also demonstrated — whether by bombing Tripoli, as it did in April, or by its efforts to persuade the allies to take diplomatic and economic measures against Libya — that it is willing to combat terrorism resolutely and effectively.

WHEN I USE THE TERM war on terrorism, I mean, first of all, nonmilitary actions. The alliance must pinpoint the terrorists' "addresses" — the states, such as Syria and Libya, that support them — and it must see to it that these states are punished with economic sanctions. As first steps, trade of any kind must be prohibited, and Syrian and Libyan airlines must be forbidden access to airports.

Political sanctions must be imposed, too. The members of the alliance must search the diplomatic pouches of terrorist-sponsoring countries to prevent the smuggling of weapons and explosives. At an appropriate moment the embassies of states caught sponsoring terrorism should simply be closed and their diplomats expelled.

Alongside such nonmilitary measures, the alliance must prepare military steps. An intelligence and command center must be established, where information will be gathered on all terrorist organizations, their leaders, movements, bases and headquarters. Such a center would issue warnings on operations in process. It would also undertake preliminary planning of military strikes against terrorist targets.

At present, the main problem is that the terrorist organizations have a monopoly on surprise, whether in choosing their targets, in timing or in the scope of their operations. Generally, by the time a special force can be deployed, it is too late: innocent victims have been slaughtered. A center to coordinate anti-terrorist operations would not only expedite actions to free hostages, but it would also make pre-emptive attacks on terror bases and headquarters possible.

THE TERRORISTS, AND especially their commanders, must be eliminated. Such operations must be prepared well in advance, and for this a constant operational coordination between members of the alliance is essential. A main center of intelligence and command in the United States, and a parallel one in France, acting in tandem as the brain of the operation, would facilitate detailed planning and preparation.

Four years after Israel's war on the terror organizations in Lebanon, many people have come to realize the compelling necessity of that operation. It is now time for the West to take its own measures against terrorism. If countries like the United States, Britain, West Germany and France take the lead in fighting terrorism, I am convinced the cost and damage of terror can be quickly reduced and terrorism itself ultimately eliminated. But first we need a decision. No one smells weakness and exploits it better than the terrorist monster.

Reagan on Top Ten most-wanted list

By David Kaiser

LAST FRIDAY, September 26, the Anti-Imperialist Populist Brigades began distribution of a "wanted" poster for 12 world leaders. Topping the list was President Ronald Reagan. The poster included photographs and read: "State Terrorists: Wanted Dead or Alive. Reward One United States Dollar."

Because of our military and economic wealth Reagan has been able to affect changes in the economic and political nature of foreign nations worldwide. We influence the policies of foreign governments in order to maintain the economic stability of our investments overseas. The United States and other Western powers support ideologically and economically aligned factions by economic and military might.

TERRORISTS, HOWEVER, must become streetfighters for their goals. Small factions have neither the economic nor military strength to affect changes in an all-out confrontation so they are forced to adopt desperate means.

In the past week more than 20 foreign nationals are believed to have been kidnapped by various underground organizations. The "wanted" poster for Western leaders addresses the irony of the present situation. The United States supplies military weapons and advisors overseas, acting as wealthy brigands.

Guest Opinion

The poster invites us to inspect our motives. Have our economic motivations turned us into state terrorists? We have multi-million dollar weaponry while they must rely on trucks and small explosives. The difference between the United States and so-called terrorist factions is not a functional one. Both employ military threats against opposition. The difference between us and them is one of motivation.

WE SEEM TO HAVE LOST our sense of morality when it comes to foreign policy. We have supported governments which are malevolent to their people. We have supported military machines generated in order to overthrow foreign governments. We no longer support ideals or freedom as strongly as we support the "United States Dollar."

Terrorist methods may be immoral, but their motivations are nobler than ours. We should find a better means to maintain investments without maintaining hatred. We should be able to maintain stability without maintaining oppression. The "wanted" poster for world leaders is only symbolic. Practically, what is wanting is Western morality overseas.

David Kaiser is an Iowa City resident.

Senate vote keeps government running

WASHINGTON — The Senate swiftly passed and sent to President Ronald Reagan Tuesday an emergency spending bill to prevent a government shutdown at midnight and keep federal operations going for another week.

Senate passage, which took place on a voice vote after just two minutes of debate, followed House approval earlier in the day, 315-101. The emergency bill provides enough money to last through Oct. 8.

The emergency bill was necessary because numerous and varied obstacles stood in the way of Senate completion of a record $556 billion overall spending bill, which would finance nearly every aspect of the government for the entire next fiscal year.

In a related matter, the government's debt ceiling of $2.1 trillion also was supposed to expire at midnight, but the Treasury Department advised Congress it had enough left over to get through about mid-October with only some minor shuffling of funds.

Anti-drug bill wins sweeping support

WASHINGTON — A near-unanimous Senate passed an anti-drug bill Tuesday amid charges that the plan to finance the $1.4 billion measure is a "cop out" because it neither raises taxes nor cuts existing programs.

Senators voted 97-2 in favor of the election year legislation, virtually assuring that some anti-drug bill will find its way to President Ronald Reagan's desk before the 99th Congress adjourns later this month. Only Sens. John Melcher, D-Mont., and Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., opposed the bill.

The House earlier passed a more sweeping, more expensive $2.87 billion fiscal 1987 anti-drug bill, and House and Senate negotiators now will meet to resolve some fairly substantial differences over such issues as the death penalty and the level of military involvement in the war on drugs.

Study: MIAs may still be in Indochina

WASHINGTON — A task force report cites "a strong possibility" that American servicemen are being held prisoners in Indochina and the U.S. government presumes the conclusion to be true, a senior Pentagon intelligence official said Tuesday.

"There was no evidence of a cover-up by anyone in DIA (the Defense Intelligence Agency) or anywhere in the U.S. government" about whether there are Americans alive in Indochina, Lt. Gen. Leonard Perroot, the DIA director, quoted the report as concluding.

But he emphasized that no one knows whether any Americans are alive in Vietnam, Cambodia or Laos and, if so, whether any are being held against their will.

Of the 2,430 Americans unaccounted for in Indochina since the Vietnam War ended for the United States in 1973, there have been 91 unresolved reports of live sightings of Americans.

Cash earmarked for Bhopal victims

BHOPAL, India — The Madhya Pradesh state government began distributing a new round of relief payments Tuesday to victims of the 1984 Union Carbide gas leak after three days of demonstrations to press for release of the funds.

Cash grants of about $120 were given to 1,000 families, and 50,000 other people affected by the world's worst industrial disaster will receive the same amount within a month, a state government spokesman said.

He said only those families whose monthly incomes are less than $40 would qualify for the money.

The new disbursements would bring to about $10 million the total amount of relief grants given to low-income families whose lives were disrupted by the gas leak, he said.

Threats don't stall Sudanese relief work

KHARTOUM, Sudan — Organizers of a U.N.-coordinated emergency food airlift said Tuesday a special transport plane would fly to a government-held town in war-torn southern Sudan despite rebel threats to shoot it down.

But as the rebels controlling most of southern Sudan renewed their threats, speculation grew that senior U.N. officials or insurers of the $20 million aircraft might intervene at the last minute to stop the 600-mile flight Wednesday to Juba.

U.N. organizers in Khartoum said the chartered C-130 Hercules transport plane — painted white and emblazoned with the multicolored "Operation Rainbow" insignia — would leave today with 16 tons of high-protein food plus fuel for southern Sudan, where an estimated 2 million people face starvation.

Reagan maneuvers on S. African policy

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Ronald Reagan, fearing an embarrassing foreign policy defeat, named a black ambassador to South Africa and sent an envoy to Capitol Hill Tuesday to pressure the Senate to uphold his veto and abandon tough sanctions against Pretoria.

Secretary of State George Shultz increased the stakes in the sanctions showdown in a meeting at the Capitol with Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas and nine other GOP senators by bringing the newly announced superpower "mini-summit" into the argument.

Republicans said Shultz contends Reagan would be in a weakened position when he meets with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Iceland next month if his veto on Senate next is overturned.

DOLE SAID Shultz "indicated that it wouldn't be any help when the president sits down . . . if he was clobbered by the Congress."

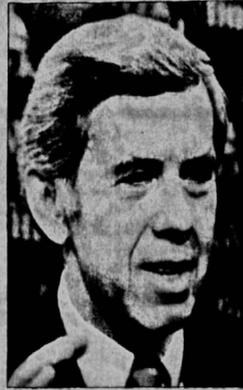

"It is far-fetched to think the president would be discussing South Africa with Gorbachev," argued Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., in response to Reagan's contention the president should set a united foreign policy, said, "The American people are speaking with one voice, expressed by Congress."

"Unfortunately the president is not with us, but the people around the world understand this," Kennedy said. "We are standing tall and have reasserted moral leadership."

LUGAR, WHO USUALLY supports Reagan in Congress, is against the president on sanctions. He is leading the pro-sanctions effort in the GOP-led Senate and maintains he has enough backers to override the veto with the needed two-thirds majority after Senate debate begins by Thursday.

A Reagan supporter, Sen.

Richard Lugar

Larry Pressler, R-S.D., predicted Reagan needs only nine votes. Pressler said Reagan was beginning one-on-one meetings with senators Monday afternoon.

Earlier in the day, Reagan moved to strengthen his position on Capitol Hill, following-through with the appointment of a black ambassador to Pretoria. He named career foreign service officer Edward Perkins, 58, the third black asked to take the sensitive post.

SEN. CHUCK GRASSLEY, R-Iowa, said he does not believe the administration tactics succeeded in changing the position of any of the Republicans present at the Shultz meeting. "I don't think he received too much of a sympathetic ear," Grassley said.

Reagan vetoed a bill last Friday to put strong economic pressure on the South African government to persuade it to change its policies of strict racial segregation and grant equal rights to the majority black population.

The Democratic-led House late Monday crushed 313-83 Reagan's effort to stop the bill despite his proposal earlier in the day to strengthen existing sanctions he imposed last year.

'Exotic' majors give better job outlook

By Tom Hunter
Staff Writer

While UI College of Business students are worried about getting into the classes they need, other UI students are choosing more exotic majors that will lead them to unusual futures.

UI Russian Department Chairman Ray Parrott said there is prestige associated with a Russian major that is absent in other majors.

"It's perceived as more exotic, as more of a challenge," Parrott said.

Students who major in Russian have essentially three avenues for their careers, he said. They may pursue academics and teach, they may work for the government or for business as Russians translators.

JOB OPPORTUNITIES for Russian majors have blossomed recently because of the retirement of many Russian specialists who were trained after World War II, he said.

"The first generation of Slavists (specialists in Russian) is retiring now," Parrott said. The Reagan administration's interest in Russian study has also increased the amount of new jobs, he said.

"Five years ago, three to four jobs were opening up yearly," Parrott said. "Now the figure is up to 30 to 40."

UI senior Britt O'Malley, who is a Russian major, said he intends to work in Russia as a translator when he graduates next semester.

"If I had the chance to go, I'd go right away," O'Malley said.

The State Department wants to replace Russians working in the American embassy in Moscow with Americans, he said.

UNDERGRADUATE advising Director Juliet Kaufmann said students should consider unusual majors before they pigeonhole themselves into a standard major.

"It is very likely that a job will not be tied very closely to what they study as an undergraduate," Kaufmann said, adding students should prepare to work in areas unrelated to their undergraduate studies.

"It's perceived as more exotic, as more of a challenge," says UI Russian Department Chairman Ray Parrott of the prestige associated with a Russian major.

"An Asian Studies major, for example, would be suited to work in any area in these countries," Kaufmann said.

Familiarity with the country's culture enables students to work in a variety of places, provided they have good communication skills and flexibility toward work situations, she said.

"A person who is good at those things will thrive," Kaufmann said.

UI SOPHOMORE Karla Wagner said she intends to specialize in simultaneous translation in Japanese and Mandarin Chinese. In this type of work, the translator must render both languages into English at the same time, she said. "It's a very difficult job," Wagner said. "Not too many people can do it."

Wagner said the job opportunities for her specialty are good if the translator has equal ability in both languages.

Monica Mosman, a UI honors nursing student specializing in aging studies, worked last summer in a nursing home and decided she wanted to focus her nursing career on the elderly.

"Most people just push them (the elderly) aside. I don't feel like that," Mosman said, adding elderly people have a wealth of wisdom and experience to relate.

Overseas studies enrich UI students

By Jay Dutton
Staff Writer

UI students who study abroad can get twice the education for the same amount of money, International Outreach Assistant Liz Pearce-Burton said Monday.

Not only can students learn about the education and life of another culture, but "it's cheap and accessible to go," she said during a meeting of UI students who have studied overseas.

Joining an overseas program is much less difficult than it seems, said UI senior Beth O'Donnell, who studied in England last spring.

O'Donnell said she kept returning to the UI International Center until she finally found a program to fit her needs.

"The UI has all types of programs to study abroad," she said.

PEARCE-BURTON SAID there are programs around the world, from Colombia to Japan and beyond.

UI student Andy Sassie went to France for one year to improve his French skills, study international business and find an internship with a French company.

But that wasn't the extent of it, he said.

"It's like you're a celebrity over there," Sassie said. He said his visit enabled him to meet many different types of international celebrities, including Wimbledon tennis champion Boris Becker. O'Donnell also met several famous individuals at a Super Bowl party in London, including sportscaster Al Michaels and the drummer for Culture Club.

As an American overseas, "you have incredible connections," O'Donnell said.

WHILE THE LOW COST, strong education and "connections" are very appealing, life overseas does have its drawbacks, according to some students who have studied abroad.

"I was arrested in East Berlin," Sassie said.

Because he was late returning to the border with his visa and had accidentally left his backpack full of valuables behind, the East German police placed him in jail for a night. He was released in the morning, he said.

O'Donnell said the university where she was studying once received a terrorist bomb threat, and the buildings had to be evacuated.

While the threat turned out to be false, Pearce-Burton said terrorism has "sloved things down" at the International Center, and fewer students are going abroad.

But she said she expects the decline to be short-lived. "The tightening of security will make students less afraid," Burton said.

The visa system, which has been adopted in France and may reach other countries soon, should also make UI students studying overseas feel more secure, she said.

Teen charged in Bettendorf murder

BETTENDORF, Iowa (UPI)—A 19-year-old Bettendorf man charged with first-degree murder allegedly threatened his former girlfriend before she was found fatally stabbed last Friday, court documents filed Tuesday said.

The documents, filed in Scott County District Court shortly after an appearance by Mark Allen Smith, indicated the victim, Jennifer Crompton, 15, told friends that Smith threatened to harm her before her high school's homecoming football game last Friday.

Crompton also told friends that Smith sometimes used a key hidden in the garage at her home to enter the home, where he would hide and jump out and scare her when she would arrive home from the Pleasant Valley school, court documents stated. The records added that the hidden house key is missing.

Bettendorf police and agents of the Iowa Division of Criminal Investigation arrested Smith while he was at the Bettendorf police station Monday night for questioning in the girl's death.

Court documents also indicated that a witness saw someone matching Smith's description fleeing from Crompton's house at about 4:15 p.m.

Smith was granted a court-appointed attorney Tuesday and was being held in the Scott County Jail in lieu of $500,000 bond.

Friends of Smith and Crompton said the two teens dated off and on for about two years but apparently broke off their relationship several weeks ago.

Junkins plans aid for small Iowa businesses

DES MOINES (UPI)—Accusing his opponent of failing to offer new approaches to help small business, Democratic gubernatorial candidate Lowell Junkins Tuesday proposed the state provide small business owners with $100 million in state help.

Junkins, at a series of news conferences across the state, said Republican Gov. Terry Branstad's failure to offer state incentives to small businesses has caused Iowa's business climate to slip to 48th in a recent Inc. magazine ranking of the 50 states.

"We have fallen to 48th in the nation because Terry Branstad has been unwilling to try new approaches, preferring instead to stay the course and wait for someone else to solve our problems.

The time for waiting is over, the time to act is now," Junkins said.

Junkins said under his plan, $100 million from the sale of $400 million in bonds would be used to provide low-interest loans and insurance subsidies to small-business owners. He also called for an expansion of state job-training programs to offer instruction to small-business employees.

"Clearly the legislative initiatives we passed in the past four years were good ideas. But they're not big enough to turn our economy around," Junkins said. "My plan uses the traditional approaches of loan guarantees, low interest rates, technical assistance and job training for small businesses."

Mississippi locks close after floods

DAVENPORT (UPI)—Flood waters expected to reach the highest autumn levels in 115 years will interrupt barge and other traffic on the Mississippi River for at least two weeks beginning Thursday, officials said Tuesday.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' Rock Island District said it planned to close five Mississippi River locks at Dubuque, Bellevue and Muscatine in Iowa and at Fulton and New Boston in Illinois on Thursday because unusually high waters are threatening electrical equipment that operates the locks and dams.

The northern three locks likely would be closed a minimum of six days and the southern two locks could be closed a minimum of 12 days, and those periods could be extended if recent heavy rains continue, said Corps spokesman Ray Gall.

"The thing is we don't know for how long it's going to be closed," said Dave Marshall of Alter Barge Lines Inc. in Davenport. "Nothing has affected us yet, but if (Lock and Dam) No. 16 closes on Thursday or Friday like everyone's expecting, obviously you can't move barge freight in and out of this area."

MARSHALL SAID the traffic interruption comes during the heavy grain harvest and shipping season, but he said a short delay would have little impact if there are a large number of empty barges can be filled during a brief delay.

"But I have a feeling, things being what they are, it's really not going to happen that way," he said. "We'll probably be delayed because of it — for how long depends on how much rain we get."

While it would be difficult to estimate the financial impact of closing part of the Mississippi to traffic, Marshall said "barge freight is like a hotel or motel room. If you don't rent it out today, you can't rent it out to two people tomorrow to make up for it. So a day lost is a day lost."

Some residents of low-lying areas in East Dubuque, Ill., were forced to move out of their homes temporarily due to water levels 2.5 feet above flood stage.

Construction leaves cornstalks stark

By Carlos M. Trevino
Special to The Daily Iowan

It's the time of year when farmers finally get to harvest the crops they've nursed through the summer. But at least one Iowa City farmer's "field" will be fruitless this year.

Construction killed his corn. For 40 years, Jim Klein, a Texaco service station owner, has been growing corn in a tiny patch of ground next to his station at the corner of Dubuque and Market streets. This year, amid construction on Dubuque Street, Klein's crop died for the first time.

"It looked real good around the first of July," Klein said. "Nice, tall, green stalks. And then it just fizzled out," he said. "I was kind of looking forward to it this year... I've kept up the tradition."

KLEIN SAID HIS field corn is more than just a tradition — it's the only way some people find his station.

"A lot of times people call in and they don't know where the station is at. It's right where the corn's at," he said, looking at idle earthmovers from Metro Pavers Inc. and the one-lane slab of unfinished road beside them.

Before construction began and the corn was doing as well as his service station business. People coming to Iowa City and stopping for gas voiced surprise at the urban field corn.

"Sometimes tourists, like people from New York, would stop in and say 'Hey, you've got corn growing here,'" Klein said, as rain poured onto the discolored stalks. "Some people come here and... they'll go out and look at it, because they've never seen corn before on a stalk."

Klein will even dismantle an ear of corn for would-be farmers and give it to them free.

CORNSTALKS AREN'T the only things

Jim Klein's corn patch, a 40-year-old tradition, failed to produce a crop this year.

dropping at Klein's station. Business is also falling because of construction, he said.

"It's knocked business down about half," Klein said. "If the street were open, we'd get tourists, but we just don't get the traffic through here," he explained.

Klein thinks business will pick up again in November, when Dubuque Street reopens.

"We're about a month behind schedule," Iowa City engineer Frank Farmer said. "Tell me when the rain's going to stop and I'll tell you when the work's going to get done."

Farmer said if the weather gets better, Dubuque Street will be opened south to Church Street and later, Jefferson Street.

"We're widening the streets and we have to put in driveways before we can open everything up," Farmer said. "But, no, we won't have to tear out (Klein's) corn when we widen the road. It's behind the sidewalk."

As for Klein's corn? "I'll try a little harder next year," Klein said. "Maybe it was the fertilizer."

Tic Toc keeps late night tummies full

By Bruce Japsen
Staff Writer

Gota midnight rendezvous, no car and no place to go grab, say, a steak dinner? A new pub in Iowa City claims it has the solution.

Tic Toc, a recently opened restaurant at 223 E. Washington St. — former location of Amelia's — is offering a full menu all day and all night, according to manager Jim Moeller.

"If you're hungry an hour before the bars close, you can stop in and grab a bite to eat," Moeller said. "We offer more than just pizza or gyros. Our rib eye steak is awesome."

Tic Toc is open from 11 a.m. to Review

2 a.m. Monday through Saturday, and 5 p.m. to 12 a.m. Sunday.

Because of the success of Tic Toc in Cedar Rapids, Moeller said the owners decided to open another to serve Iowa City patrons.

LISA MCGRATH, owner of both establishments, said the atmosphere of Tic Toc is the secret of its success.

"There are just not many places that serve food until 2 a.m., where you can go on a date to," McGrath said.

"I went to school in Iowa City and I always wished there was a restaurant that opened late that wasn't so high priced," McGrath said. "We have a nice place and we won't rip your head off when it comes to prices."

UI students and Iowa City residents suggested to Cedar Rapids' Tic Toc employees that their management should expand their business to Iowa City, according to Moeller.

"We're not a franchise," Moeller said. "We had a lot of college students and other people from Iowa City tell us Tic Toc would go over well in Iowa City."

UI Junior Dave Gaimari, who is from Cedar Rapids, agreed.

"THE TIC TOC in Cedar Rapids is for a more varied crowd, but I think it would go over well here to college students," Gaimari said. "It's definitely for college kids because of the food prices. That's the (reputation in Cedar Rapids), good food at good prices."

McGrath said she wants UI students to know Tic Toc is "not only a restaurant, but a bar too."

More than 200 clocks and clock faces decorate the establishment. Moeller said the pub plays "quite a mix" when it comes to music. "We'll play jazz, soul, reggae and some rock," he said.

Driesell claims integrity despite Bias tragedy

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (UPI) — Maryland basketball Coach Charles "Lefty" Driesell, facing mounting pressure for his removal, Tuesday said he runs a program of "integrity" and has not compromised his players' education.

He also called for trimming the basketball season to 25 games, eliminating freshmen eligibility and playing games only on Fridays and Saturdays.

Driesell spoke with reporters for the first time since testifying before a grand jury investigating the June 19 cocaine-induced death of Len Bias. In an elaborate 90-minute defense of his academic record, featuring nearly a dozen charts and diagrams, Driesell said 81 percent (39 of 48) of the players who remained in his basketball program until their senior years have graduated during his 17 years in College Park.

DRIESSELL'S FIGURE did not include last season's senior class, none of whom graduated, 13 transfer students, three players who entered the NBA as early eligibility cases and one player who died in the mid-1970s.

"I know what education is all about," Driesell said. "A lot of people don't know that. They think Lefty is some sort of animal out of the sky because that's my nickname. My name is Charles Driesell and I have an educational background.

"I probably have more advanced degrees than most coaches in the country and all of my degrees are in education, so I feel I know a little something about education."

"I don't think I compromised my players' education. They aren't bums running around the streets without jobs."

Driesell, a fiery and frequently controversial figure, has compiled a 524-224 record in 17 seasons at Maryland and nine at Davidson.

"I HAVE ALWAYS stressed the importance of earning a degree," Driesell added. "The mistaken suggestions to the contrary that have been repeated so often since Leonard Bias' death unfairly malign both me and my players."

He refused to discuss the investigation into Bias' death or drug use among his players.

Driesell has been the target of criticism following revelations that none of the three seniors last year earned degrees and Bias flunked or dropped all of his classes during the spring semester.

Maryland Chancellor John Slaughter is conducting his own investigation to determine whether Driesell should remain coach.

"I like to be put in a corner," Driesell said. "Put me in a corner and I'll get out of it. I always have. I think our program has integrity and when you have integrity, you don't worry."

Driesell, despite published reports to the contrary, said he plans on remaining at Maryland.

"I have a contract and expect to coach," he said. "When the university awarded me a 10-year contract on Dec. 23, 1985, it recognized what I had accomplished and put its trust in me."

Georgia athlete adjusts to Iowa

By Scott Reifert
Staff Writer

Stone Mountain, Ga., is a long way from Iowa City, just ask freshman tennis player Liz Canzoneri.

"I can't wait until Christmas," she said as she talked to a friend from Georgia.

"It's funny," she said, "but I had never been further north than West Virginia before I decided to come here."

But Canzoneri decided to brave the midwestern winters and is pleased with her decision so far.

"I really like it here," she said, "I chose Iowa because it has a totally different atmosphere. I decided to come here because everyone I'd met here was so friendly. At first I thought that everybody from a small town like this wouldn't be very open, but they've been great."

Stone Mountain is ten minutes from Atlanta, Canzoneri said, "and we're not all southern rednecks who talk funny."

CANZONERI SAID she still hasn't gotten used to some northern phrases.

"I can't believe the visions people from the north have of the south," she said. "The way people act here compared to the south — they're so different."

"The way they talk, the way they act, it takes some getting used to. Words they use like 'pop,' I've never heard that before. Down south everybody says 'Coke'."

Though only a freshman, Canzoneri has had an immediate effect on the Iowa women's tennis team.

In the Hawkeye's recent tournament, the Midwestern Invitational at Evanston, Ill., Canzoneri advanced to the third round along with teammates Michele Conlon and Pennie Wohlford.

"I beat some people I wasn't suppose to beat," she said. "Some people didn't expect that from a freshman."

ONE THING working for Canzoneri early this year is that she has had plenty of experience in national tournaments while still in high school.

She first played nationals when she was 12 years old and has played in some other top national tournaments.

In the summer of 1985, Canzoneri played for the South at the U.S. Sports Festival held in Baton Rouge, La. The meeting of U.S. athletes in 1986 was renamed the Olympic Sports Festival.

She and her doubles partner finished third and received a bronze medal.

"That was the greatest event I ever participated in," Canzoneri said, "because there were so many different sports and seeing all of them was really neat. It was more fun watching than playing."

Iowa Coach Charley Darley said he first saw Canzoneri while she was at the Festival that summer.

Hawkeye injuries will aid Spartans

Injured Iowa offensive stars David Hudson and Mark Vlasic have only a 50 percent chance of seeing action Saturday against Michigan State and will probably not practice this week, Coach Hayden Fry said at his weekly press conference Tuesday.

Vlasic, the top rated quarterback in the nation on passing efficiency, hurt his right, throwing shoulder when he was knocked to the ground by a Texas-El Paso defender in Saturday's 69-7 Iowa romp over the Miners. Hudson suffered what Fry called "an explosion of the right quadriceps," a thigh muscle, during a 50-yard would-be touchdown run in the same game. Hudson was originally thought to be lost for three to four weeks.

"The safest thing I can say, the most honest thing I can say, at this time is that there is a 50-50 chance," of Hudson playing, Fry said. "That basically would be about the same ratio we'd have on Vlasic. We're not trying to be deceptive at all. That's just the honest facts. They could play and they could not play."

FRY SAID AS of Tuesday neither player was capable of working out, and if the game had been played Tuesday, Vlasic and Hudson would not have suited up.

"They're injured, they're hurt," Fry said. "I doubt very seriously if either of them will work out at all this week. I want both of them to play (Saturday), but at this point, for both of them to play, I think is just dreaming. I'm not trying to 'poor boy' you, I'm just being honest."

It's possible that a final decision on the pair will not be made until pregame warm-ups

"I want both of them to play," Hayden Fry says of Mark Vlasic and David Hudson, "but at this point, for both of them to play, I think is just dreaming."

Saturday, Fry said. Should Vlasic miss the game, freshman Dan McGwire is the likely replacement. Hudson would be replaced by redshirt freshman Richard Bass.

Fry said McGwire, who threw two touchdowns passes Saturday, could run the Iowa offense, but his presence would limit the number and diversity of plays Fry could call.

"(THE OFFENSE) would look the same to all you people, but from a game plan standpoint it would be condensed," Fry said. "Obviously there's a lot of things a freshman quarterback can't handle against a quality defensive team like Michigan State."

"If McGwire starts, he's a true freshman, and the backup for Hudson is a redshirt freshman," Fry pointed out. "Everybody has got to regroup in this particular game. It's on national television, it's the first Big Ten game, it just goes on and on in regards to importance."

Fry also said receiver Quinn Early is extremely doubtful for Saturday, but running back Kevin Harmon, who has been slowed by injuries for two weeks, is likely to see action.

Iowa State faces tough Cowboy club

AMES, Iowa (UPI) — Iowa State Coach Jim Criner said Tuesday the Cyclones are in for a "knock-down, drag-out fight" this week against a Wyoming team that is as good as any squad in the Big Eight, except Oklahoma and Nebraska.

Criner's comments were similar to the praise he heaped on Indiana State and Wichita State before defeating those non-conference foes the past two weeks, 64-9 and 36-14, respectively.

But the fourth-year Cyclone Coach sounded more convincing as he described the Cowboys, 3-1, during his weekly news conference Tuesday.

Wyoming lost its opener to Baylor, 31-28, but followed with a victory over Pacific and wins at Air Force and Wisconsin. The Cowboys also were named on some ballots submitted this week by members of the UPI Board of Coaches.

"IT IS GOING to be a war. It is going to be a knock-down, drag-out fight. They have got as good of personnel as most Big Eight teams this year," Criner said.

"They have three quarterbacks who could play in the Big Eight and they have wide receivers who are as quick as those in the Big Eight. They are not an Oklahoma by any means. They are not as good as Nebraska, but they are as good as the rest of us," he said.

Glamour, fame aren't part of holder's legacy

Football trivia fans have little problem identifying Tom Dempsey, the man who holds the record for the NFL's longest field goal at 63 yards.

But ask them who was holding the ball at the time, and they may have a bit of a problem answering.

Iowa sophomore Tom Piholsky can relate to that. As the team's current holder for field goal and placekicker Rob Houghtlin, he joins the ranks of the "unsung hero."

Iowa quarterback Mark Vlasic also gained a little notoriety last year when he was the holder as Houghtlin converted on a field goal that gave the No. 1-ranked Hawkeyes a 12-10 victory over Michigan.

"It's not a real glamorous role or anything to hold the ball," Piholsky admitted, "But it's fun. The fact that I don't get any recognition doesn't bother me at all. You're out there on the field, you're playing and you're part of the team. Everybody's looking for the chance to get out there and play, so I'm happy with that."

POHOLSKY, ONE OF three Iowa backup quarterbacks, got his chance to play when Chuck Hartlieb suffered a finger injury. The injury made it impossible for Hartlieb to take snaps, so Piholsky became the holder.

He had no previous experience in high school and began working on the technique last spring.

"It's just a matter of repetition, there's nothing mysterious about it," he said. "You have to do it a number of times with the kicker and the center to make sure the timing coordinates well."

Along with the pressure to hold the ball well for Houghtlin comes an element of nervousness.

"There's a little bit there but you can't let it bother you — you just have to go out and do it. You have to have confidence in the center and he has to have confidence in you," Poholsky added. "You just go out there and try to be relaxed. Hopefully the repetitions in practice will carry over into the game."

ANOTHER DIMENSION of the job is making the most of broken plays. Not only does the holder have to recover the ball if something goes wrong, but he also must try to turn it into a positive situation.

Poholsky did just that against Northern Illinois, by hitting tight end Mike Flagg in the end zone after a poor snap and wet playing conditions caused the ball to slip out of Poholsky's grasp.

"The ball slipped through my hands, it was wet," he explained. "I was able to pick it up and convert on it, which was nice."

AND WHILE HIS main concern is fighting for a starting role as quarterback, he's enjoying his chance to get out on the field for just a few seconds.

"You have to realize everyone has their own spot on the team," he said. "You keep working and contributing and you realize your position is just as important as everyone else's, so you stick in there."

As a sophomore, Poholsky has

plenty of time to make himself known, and he doesn't really mind if his name isn't a household word. After all, he didn't know Joe Scarpati was the holder in the Nov. 8, 1970 game when Dempsey's kick won the game with no time remaining.

Fry puts Hawks through rough workout

Iowa football Coach Hayden Fry said he put his team through a "tough" workout Tuesday afternoon in the indoor practice facility.

"The practice was difficult because preparation for Michigan State is so different," Fry said. "We have such different preparations for both offense and defense." Faced with a talented Michigan State team that has offensive threats in both Lorenzo White and Dave Yarema, Fry said you can't hope to shut down both of them.

Unsigned players abound in 76ers camp

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — The Philadelphia 76ers open training camp in two days with enough unsigned players to form a team.

Five players have yet to sign and are ineligible to report — forward Julius Erving, guards Maurice Cheeks, Sedale Threatt and Perry Moss and swingman David Wingate, Philadelphia's top pick in the 1986 draft.

The 76ers and Erving have agreed on a one-year contract. General Manager John Nash said Tuesday he expects Erving to sign Wednesday, adding he also expects agreements soon with Threatt, Moss and Wingate.

On The Line

It's time to buckle down, faithful readers. Big Ten action is almost upon us. And that means a little more homework for you ballot-casters.

Forget "for sure" picks like Iowa over UTEP or Rose-Hulman over Principia, this week we feature such stumblers as Notre Dame at Alabama and our beloved Hawks traveling way up north to face Lorenzo White and the Michigan State Spartans.

Heck, even Jimmy the Greek might ask Phyllis George for some advice this time around.

Of course, there'll be some games that might be a little easier to pick than others, especially since Wisconsin has been pretty consistent in losing to teams Iowa wouldn't even consider for its pre-Big Ten joyride. Powerhouses like Hawaii, Nevada-Las Vegas and Wyoming. The Badgers battle Bo's boys this weekend.

Even Beano Cook ought to get that one right.

And if you feel the uncontrollable urge to slake your thirst this week, head on over to The Fieldhouse bar, 111 E. College St., for something tall, cool and refreshing. You might want something to drink, too. That Iowa City hotspot is also the creme de la creme of places to watch the Iowa-Michigan State game, and wonder why the networks always

Title hopes tease deserving teams as Series play nears

Who cares if all the pennant races never got started and ended with two weeks left in the season? So what if the dog days of August and the September finale never materialized?

I'll just wait until the playoffs begin, because for once it's what I've been waiting to see — four teams who have just been "dying" to win the big one. I'm an equal opportunity baseball fan — I think every team should win a title of some sort every few years.

What I find fascinating about the best of 1986 is that I do not have a team to hate. I hate the Dodgers. They won three National League titles between 1977-81. I hate the Yankees. They have won too many titles to count. I hate the Cardinals, and I used to hate the Oakland A's after they won three consecutive World Championships in the early 70s. Not one of these teams, nor a handful of others from my list, made it to the big payoff this season.

I WILL BE happy for whichever team wins the World Series in 1986. Look at the facts.

The Mets have not been to a World Series since 1973 and have not won a World Championship since 1969. Some people already hate the Mets because they won the National League East title too easily this year. They've waited their turn.

In 1984 the Mets won 90 games but still finished well back of the Cubs in one of Cubbies' few glory years (Did you know the Cubs last World Championship was nearly 80 years ago, in 1908?). In 1985 New York did it again. This time they won 98 games, but the Cardinals happened to win 101 on their way to the National League Championship.

The Astros have had just a little more hard luck than the Mets. Houston, in its 25 years of participating in the senior circuit, have never played in or won a World Series title. The Astros only glimpse of playoff action was in 1980-81.

IN 1980 THE Phillies knocked off Houston 3-2 before claiming the World Championship, and in the strike year of 1981 the Dodgers knocked off the Astros before defeating Montreal and the Yankees to claim their World Championship.

Both Houston and New York have legitimate claims on a World Series title.

The Red Sox and Angels are both in the same situation. Boston has not won an American League pennant since 1975, the year they knocked the A's off their three year perch as American League Champions, or a World Series since 1918.

In the '75 series I was rooting for the Red Sox when Carlton Fisk hit his famous home run down the left-field line at Fenway Park to tie the series at three games apiece.

I still think Boston should have won game seven because I believe Carl Yastrzemski deserved a World Series victory to go along with his great career. Boston should win it for the "Polish Wonder" in '86.

LIKE HOUSTON, California has never made it to the World Series, and has been in the playoffs on only two occasions. In 1979 the Angels won the American League West and were quickly eliminated 3-1 by the Baltimore Orioles.

New York vs. Boston, Houston vs. Boston, California vs. New York, California vs. Houston. It doesn't really matter too much. I just hope it goes seven.

each other while in Baton Rouge," Darley said, "and I began to recruit her. The best way to recruit a player is through the personal contact between the coach and the player. It's the most effective means to recruiting."

Canzoneri said her experiences at the national level have helped her prepare for college tennis.

"Liz has the shot-making ability to play with the best in the country," Darley said. "I've been really pleased so far this year. She really plays well on important points and some of that comes from all the competition she's been in up to now." Both Canzoneri and Darley agree that her greatest problem is impatience.

"IF ANYTHING, I've had to tighten the reins on her," Darley said. "She needs to play more conservatively. But at the same time that aggressiveness is also her strength. She really has confidence in what she can do with the ball."

Canzoneri and the rest of the Iowa team have its first home meet of the fall season Thursday, when they host Iowa State at 3 p.m. at the Kinnick Stadium Courts.

Play holds Tennessee William's spirit

NEW YORK (UPI) — Tennessee Williams, whom many consider the greatest playwright of our age, died an ignominious death alone in a seedy Manhattan hotel.

It would not have surprised him. Williams, as played by Ray Stricklyn, explains that loneliness haunted him all his life in Confessions of a Nightingale, a one-man dialogue with the audience that opened last week at the off-Broadway Audrey Wood Playhouse.

The piece was written by Charlotte Chandler and Stricklyn, based on a series of conversations Chandler had with the playwright. It rings with such authenticity one could believe Williams wrote it himself, which in a sense he did. It is his voice, his phrasing, his use of language and his view of life.

Theater

ONE CAN'T HELP but wonder, initially, if someone not familiar with Williams' life would enjoy this piece. Yet the personality of the man transcends unfamiliarity because he is so open, so honest and engaging.

The handsome set designed by Richard Lawrence, who co-produced the play, depicts Williams' Key West house, with louvered doors, potted palms and rattan furniture, Stricklyn as Williams wanders the stage sipping wine, smoking cigarettes and meandering through segments of his life.

There is no chronological order; one thought triggers another in a kind of free association. It is the period after his breakdown and hospitalization, after the defection of so-called friends, after the death of the most important friend and lover he ever had, after fame had peaked and left him abandoned.

HE TALKS ABOUT his homosexuality ("I cover the waterfront"), Hollywood (a script he'd written on assignment for Lana Turner was "beyond her comprehension and I'd only used two-syllable words"), his scandalous reputation ("I do publicly what other people do privately"), his work ("more personal than the most intimate details of my sex life").

The playwright who was considered the greatest creator of women characters — such as Blanche in "Streetcar Named Desire," Maggie in "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," Laura in "The Glass Menagerie" — says: "I like women. I understand women better than men. Life is harder for them; they suffer more and they are more complex, but only a woman has that tenderness."

'Crocodile' snaps up movie viewers

Kevin C. Kretschmer
Special to The Daily Iowan

PAUL HOGAN, Australia's most popular television personality, makes his feature film debut as Michael J. "Crocodile" Dundee in the aptly titled new comedy "Crocodile Dundee."

Hogan not only stars in but conceived the original story and co-wrote the screenplay (with Ken Shadie and John Cornell) of the movie that has already become the most successful box-office attraction in Australian exhibition history.

The name Paul Hogan may not immediately ring a bell for most Americans, but most will recognize his face. For the last several years Hogan has starred in the commercials produced by the Australian Tourist Commission that encourages Americans to "come down under." Others may remember him from "The Paul Hogan Show," the wacky television offering that appeared on PBS a few years back. In any case, Hogan is likely to create a legion of fans in America by virtue of his charming, self-assured performance in "Crocodile Dundee."

"MICK" DUNDEE is a safari guide (and sometime crocodile poacher) in the Australian outback whose growing reputation as an outdoorsman has begun to reach far beyond Walkabout Creek, Northern Territory. Actually, it reaches Sydney, where Sue Charlton (Linda Kozlowski), a reporter for a New York daily called Newsday, gets wind of it.

Charlton travels to Walkabout in hopes of meeting Dundee and writing a story on his adventures. Dundee readily agrees to her plan and seizes the opportunity to expertly embellish his already legendary exploits. He even invites her to join him on a two-day safari so that she may gain firsthand knowledge of the harsh reality and constant perils of life in the bush.

Despite her independent attitude it soon becomes apparent that she is out of her league and must rely on Dundee to save her from crocodiles, snakes and kangaroo hunters. The last of these provides the set-up for one of the funniest comedy bits to hit movie screens this year.

UPSET THAT DUNDEE won't take a stand on the cruelty the kangaroo hunters invoke (they kill only for sport), Charlton severely berates him, and he leaves her side. Moments later, the hunters have become the hunted as shots ring out and hit rifles, jeeps and spotlights. When the bewildered hunters pinpoint the source of fire and turn a spotlight on it, they discover a kangaroo with rifle in hand. The astonished hunters waste no time making their premature departure.

Walter Reilly..... John Meillon

Showing at the Englert Theatres

Intrigued by Dundee and hoping to expand story coverage on him, Charlton invites Dundee to accompany her on her return trip to New York. Dundee, who has never seen more than 40 people in the same place at the same time, decides to take her up on the offer.

In New York the tables are turned: Charlton becomes the expert, Dundee the novice. Dundee, in his customary crocodile skin vest, boots and black hat, begins to explore the city and immediately makes an erroneous assumption. He figures that if 7 million people want to live together, New York must be the friendliest city in the world. As a result, he sets about introducing himself to everybody he meets and offers many a cheery, "G'day, mate."

COMPLICATIONS ENSUE when reporter and subject start to go beyond the story stage. One of these complications is Richard Mason (Mark Blum), editor and current boyfriend of Charlton who is convinced that she is ready to marry him.

Although many of the situations tend toward predictability, there are a few comic gems, and the entire movie, if nothing else, certainly is amiable.

Kozlowski (who appeared in the television version of Death of a Salesman) is adequate, if somewhat one-dimensional as Sue Charlton. Blum, nearly recreating his Desperately Seeking Susan role as Rosanna Arquette's smirky, yuppie husband, is here as Charlton's smirky, yuppie boyfriend. Excellent support in smaller roles is provided by Australian actors John Meillon and David Gulpill as Walter Reilly and Neville Bell, respectively.

Director Peter Faiman, producer-writer John Cornell and writer Ken Shadie each make their feature film debuts in their particular specialties. All three are long-time collaborators of Hogan's from his various television efforts.

Hogan may be spending even more time in the states and away from his native Australia — Hollywood has already made him numerous film offers. As "Crocodile" Dundee emerges as the sleeper hit of the fall, Hogan may truly find the United States becoming a home away from home.

Writer speaks on African problems

By Alex Wilding-White
Staff Writer

KENYAN WRITER Ngugi Wa Thiong'o, best known for his novels Weep Not Child, A Grain of Wheat and Petals of Blood, spoke Monday night in Van Allen Hall on his resistance to colonial rule.

Through a chronological survey of his writings, Ngugi detailed not only the processes by which his novels were written, but also his 1977 detention by the Kenyan government, the nature of contemporary Kenyan society and his decision, after writing four novels in English, to write in the Kenyan Gikuyu language.

Toward the beginning of his lecture, sponsored in part by the International Writing Program, Afro-American Studies and the English Department, Ngugi cited an important element in his writing.

"I AM, LIKE MANY other African writers, a product of two important traditions," he said. "On the one hand is the imperialist tradition... and on the other hand, a tradition of resistance, a tradition that captured the very base, the very moment imperialism entered Africa."

Ngugi then went through a number of his works, expounded on one or two important elements and read a brief passage from each. He discussed the importance of the symbolism of the landscape in The River Between and the type of confusion education brings to a growing child in Weep Not Child. He also discussed his change in narrative style from a linear mode to one of leaping forward and backward in time in A Grain of Wheat and the fragmentation of both time and space in Petals of Blood.

In 1977, Ngugi said he began to work with peasants in the Kenyan village of Kamirithu to develop theater and literacy programs. During this tenure, one play presented Ngugi with an interesting problem.

"A FRIEND AND I," Ngugi said, "were asked to write a script for this play... and the question confronted us: 'In what language were we to write the play?' The fact that we asked ourselves that question, 17 years or so after I started writing, was evidence of how far alienated we had been by our colonial education."

It was this experience that firmed Ngugi's resolve to write his future works in Gikuyu.

After reading an excerpt from The Trial of Dedan Kimath, in which Western and African notions of justice and "the law" were brought into sharp contrast, Ngugi ended his appearance by saying that "anyone who felt strongly about this situation, the continuing detention of lecturers without trial or the imprisonment of people on trumped up charges, anything you can do, even a simple letter of concern to the appropriate embassy, can do a great deal of good. Nothing is too small or too little."
