Council considers transit cutbacks

By Carol Monaghan
Staff Writer

A $150,000 transit deficit brought on by decreased ridership and federal cutbacks may force Iowa City councilors to approve service and labor reductions to patch up the city's ailing bus system.

"It will be necessary to implement service reductions and fare increases as soon as practical, or plan on carrying over the deficit to fiscal year 1988," Iowa City Manager Stephen Atkins said.

Several councilors gave their tentative approval to the reductions and fare increases at a special informal council meeting Tuesday.

"THE POTENTIAL exists by implementing these reductions that we could be dismantling an excellent transit system," Councilor John McDonald said. "Without outside aid, we can't locally raise the subsidy when the ridership isn't there."

In recent years, the transit system has been plagued with both a trend of decreased ridership and a loss of federal revenue-sharing funds.

In addition, a council plan to shore up the loss of federal dollars with city parking revenues came up short when revenues fell considerably below earlier estimates.

The council budgeted $430,500 for transit this year, but revenue projections are about half the original estimate, or $240,000.

"WE HAVE JUST lost revenue," Iowa City Treasurer Rosemary Vitosh told councilors. "Hours people park are down at the same time we decided to increase rates this year."

Since its record of 2.3 million riders in fiscal year 1983, the transit system has seen a deflection of 600,000 riders in five years, Atkins said.

Dollars from federal revenue sharing to support transit have also steadily declined. In contrast, property tax support for transit has risen.

In fiscal year 1982, $455,950 of federal revenue sharing dollars went to fund transit, while locally, taxpayers gave $95,617 to the system. In fiscal 1987, only $67,072 of federal dollars was given to transit, compared to $788,532 from property taxes.

THE CITY EXPECTS no federal revenue sharing dollars for transit in fiscal 1988.

"In the foreseeable future, I don't see we have much of a chance to have the luxury of revenue sharing," Iowa City Mayor William Ambrisco said. "The sooner we implement the service and rate changes, the quicker we save $150,000, the proposed deficit for (fiscal year) '87."

Service reductions would include reducing bus service to hourly midday service, ending Saturday service at 7:30 p.m., and reducing to hourly service all day the Seventh Avenue route. The Northville/Manville Heights routes and evening routes would combine services.

A monthly pass would increase from $16 to $18. Saturday fares would also increase from 40 cents to 50 cents.

But councilors stressed the cutbacks were not easy choices.

"The council has worked diligently over a year studying the transit problem," Councilor Kate Dickson said. "We're damned whatever direction we go. But I think we have to accept the recommendations of the staff and city manager as the lesser of all evils."

Game over

Mike Symons tests the ice around the edges of the City Park skating pond despite warnings that the ice may be too thin (above). After judging the ice thick enough, Symons decided to play some hockey but was soon reprimanded by a police officer. Buchanan announces resignation

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Patrick Buchanan, the ideological bellwether for two presidents, resigned as President Ronald Reagan's communications director Tuesday to "better influence the issues" from outside the White House.

Two weeks after he took himself out of consideration as a presidential candidate so as not to split conservative support for Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., Buchanan said he would leave the White House as of March 1.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the search for a successor to the blunt-spoken one-time editorial writer is under way. Dennis Thomas, an aide to White House chief of staff Donald Regan, is among the leading candidates for the post.

BUCHANAN, 48, who cut his political teeth attacking the news media on behalf of President Richard Nixon and Vice President Spiro Agnew, was the latest in a line of senior officials to leave the administration as Reagan enters the last two years of his term.

Fitzwater said Buchanan, who was thwarted by Secretary of State George Shultz in his bid to become ambassador to NATO, was quitting now because it is a "natural break point."

"Pat also feels he can better influence the issues in politics in 1988 and the direction of the conservative movement and Republican Party by speaking and writing from a vantage point outside the White House," Fitzwater said.

QUOTING REAGAN, Fitzwater said, "Pat's communications skills and his commitment to conservative political beliefs have played an important part in my administration in the last two years. We'll miss his leadership and support but I count on his voice to remain a beacon for our agenda."

"He has been a strong voice for conservatism and has carried on an aggressive communications policy in behalf of the president's agenda," said Fitzwater.

Buchanan joined the White House staff on Feb. 6, 1985, giving up his television program, column writing and lecturing, which brought him an estimated $400,000 a year, to promote conservative views in the White House.

He is expected to resume his lucrative career and help Kemp's flagging candidacy, GOP political strategists say.

WHEN BUCHANAN TOOK himself out of contention for the presidency — after a three-week boomlet by conservatives — he said his friends had told him that a campaign would "mortally wound" Kemp "whose service to the cause has earned him an unimpeded shot at the nomination."

His departure follows the resignations of CIA Director William Casey, White House political chief Mitchell Daniels, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes and a host of lesser aides.

Buchanan, who began his career writing editorials for the St. Louis Globe-Democrat before joining the 1968 Nixon presidential campaign, was known as "Mr. Conservative" in the White House.

U.S. forces gather near Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — U.S. Navy ships and Marine assault forces were poised off Lebanon Tuesday in response to the latest kidnappings of Americans. A Moslem militia official warned that if the United States attacks it "will pay a very high price."

Two aircraft carrier battle groups with about 180 planes, Marine assault forces and Navy SEAL commandos are standing by in the region if needed to respond to the hostage crisis.

In addition, a five-ship U.S. assault force carrying about 1,900 Marines and tanks pulled out of a Spanish port two days ahead of schedule Tuesday and headed east to join 22 other American warships already in the eastern Mediterranean, Pentagon officials said.

THE FORCE, HEADED by the helicopter carrier USS Inchon and carrying more Marine units, would bring the total number of surface warships in the eastern Mediterranean to 27.

The two carrier battle groups are led by the nuclear-powered USS Nimitz and the conventionally driven USS John F. Kennedy.

U.S. officials would give no details of any plans for the forces.

The military buildup came after two Islamic fundamentalist groups renewed threats to kill their American captives.

In Beirut, the atmosphere was tense, with civilians hurrying home before dark and militiamen manning roadblocks and anti-aircraft guns.

"We call upon the American people to pressure their government not to commit a foolish action in Lebanon and not engage the American people in a new quagmire," said Tarek Ibrahim, military affairs spokesman for Lebanon's Shiite Moslem Amal militia.

"THE AMERICANS will be foolish if they attempt to carry out a military operation in Lebanon," he said. "We are always ready for them and we are always on alert. But we think they are exaggerating their threats."

"They will not do it, and if they do it they will pay a very high price," he told United Press International in a telephone interview.

Diplomatic sources predicted any American attack could result in heavy casualties among U.S. forces and death for the hostages.

Senate OKs speed limit hike

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate, rejecting arguments that thousands of people would be killed in order to save a little time, voted Tuesday to allow states to raise the speed limit from 55 mph to 65 mph on most interstate roads.

On a 65-33 vote, the Senate attached the speed limit increase to a four-year, $52.4 billion highways bill — setting up a confrontation with the House, which has refused to ease the nation's blanket 55 mph speed limit.

The highways legislation, which died last year because of differences between the House and Senate, is needed to authorize road and mass transit projects into the 1990s. Because of the failure to produce a bill last year, supporters argue that quick passage is essential this year so states can plan for the construction season.

HOWEVER, THE Senate's addition of the speed limit amendment, which is supported by President Ronald Reagan, threatens fast action on a compromise between the two chambers.

The speed limit language would give states the authority to raise the maximum speed limit to 65 mph on interstate roads outside of urban areas with 50,000 people. Senators from western states pushed the amendment, arguing that in wide open areas of their states the 55 mph limit was being ignored and state officials should be trusted to allow the increases only where it would be safe.

But opponents contended that raising the limit would save little travel time at the cost of thousands of deaths and injuries.

"THERE HAS BEEN NO law in this country that has been broken or ridiculed more since Prohibition," Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, said of the 55 mph limit, which was passed in an effort to conserve fuel after the 1973 Arab oil embargo. It has also been credited with saving many traffic fatalities.

But Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., said the matter was "a question of weighing the scales — with time saved at one side of the scale and lives saved on the other side. There can be no dispute that the 55 mph speed limit has saved lives. There can be no dispute that raising the 55 mph speed limit will cost lives."

Danforth said estimates showed that the 55 mph limit had saved between 2,000 and 4,000 lives per year and the amendment could cause between 600 and 1,000 new traffic deaths each year.

False bomb threats force evacuation

Two bomb threats recently cleared two University of Pittsburgh buildings, but no bombs were found. Shortly before 9:30 a.m. on Jan. 22, secretaries at Pitt's Learning Research and Development Center and at the university's School of Library Information and Science Building received separate phone calls warning of bombs in each of the buildings.

The anonymous caller, whom both secretaries described as sounding like a woman in her 30s with a Middle Eastern accent, said the bomb would go off in about 20 minutes in both cases.

The Development Center was immediately evacuated, and university police and Pittsburgh's Special Operations Division searched the building but found no bomb.

The library school building was evacuated by an unidentified person who pulled the fire alarm.

People were allowed back in the buildings after about 40 minutes. A Pitt official said he didn't think the threat was necessarily against the university, but no one has claimed responsibility.

UM grad student claims discrimination

A University of Michigan graduate student is claiming the university discriminated against her because she is a former mental patient.

Amy Crancer is taking her case to the Michigan Supreme Court after being turned away by three other courts of law. Crancer contends the head of graduate admissions in Michigan's English department refused to provide her with admissions requirements for the doctoral program because of her history as a mental patient.

Crancer said she suffers from Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder, caused by her experiences in mental institutions. She said her parents wrongly committed her for more than four years in several mental institutions throughout the country.

During her institutionalization, Crancer said she was repeatedly raped and given mind-altering drugs, to which she attributes her present condition.

Victims of her claimed disorder experience sleep disturbances, concentration lapses, memory impairment and flashbacks as a result of trauma. Under Michigan law, former mental patients are considered handicapped and are allowed to receive "reasonable accommodation" when pursuing employment or education.

In May 1983, Crancer asked the university to allow her this accommodation in pursuing her degree. She claims she was told to look elsewhere because the university does not want ex-mental patients in its programs.

IU group lobbies for new football turf

An Indiana University student committee is calling for the school's athletic department to replace the stadium's artificial turf with real grass.

A summer ago, the university spent $770,000 on artificial turf for the football field, but the Student Affairs Committee of the Bloomington Faculty Council says the synthetic surface causes injuries because it is too firm.

The replacement was recommended in a report to the council that claims the safety of Indiana athletes and their opponents should be considered a priority no matter what the cost.

According to the report, scientific evidence shows that the total injury rate on artificial turf was about one and a half times higher than the natural turf rate in both games and practices. Knee injuries requiring surgery occurred at a rate 1.6 times higher on artificial surfaces.

The report also says grass is cheaper to install, never needs replacing and is no more expensive to maintain.

New MTV commercials promote Drake

Drake University in Des Moines has started running commercials on MTV Music Television to promote the university and its students.

Lou Wolter, Drake's director of marketing, said the university went for the idea because it's new and innovative.

A single 60-second and two 30-second spots will feature Drake students, faculty and staff taken from a longer documentary about a day in the life of a Drake student.

Drake decided to use MTV commercials for several reasons, Wolter said, including that 35 to 45 percent of MTV's viewers are in the perfect target age of 12 to 18 years old.

The slots are also relatively inexpensive, Wolter said. The commercials will be seen in the college's primary recruiting areas: Des Moines, Chicago, Omaha, Neb., Milwaukee, Denver, St. Louis, Kansas City, Mo., and Minneapolis/St. Paul.

Sales tax hike likely to pass in Senate

DES MOINES (UPI) — The Democrat-controlled Iowa Senate is likely to approve an increase in the state sales tax and will probably turn thumbs down on a proposed hike in the motor fuel tax, Senate Majority Leader Bill Hutchins said Tuesday.

Hutchins, following a morning caucus with Senate Democrats, said a 1 percent sales tax increase could generate as much as $185 million in additional revenue, depending on whether lawmakers vote to exempt utility bills from the tax.

Gov. Terry Branstad has opposed an increase in the sales tax, instead supporting a plan to raise revenue by coupling Iowa's tax structure with that of the federal tax code.

Branstad's budget also calls for a 4 cents a gallon increase in the motor fuel tax, an increase he wants in order to fund a massive road renovation project in Iowa. Hutchins said there aren't enough votes in the Senate to approve the fuel tax hike.

Hutchins said there aren't enough votes in the Senate to approve the fuel tax hike.

HUTCHINS SAID Branstad's budget proposal disguises an income tax increase. He said the tax reform bill that leaves the Senate will probably call for an income tax increase, but one that is nearly half of what the governor's proposal would lead to.

"We're talking about a more equitable approach than his," Hutchins said. "That's a hands-on business approach rather than that of a farmer-lawyer governor."

The crux of the Democrats' proposal is to raise the $185 million from the sales tax and between $100-150 million by "coupling" Iowa's tax base to match that of the new federal tax plan. The revenue would be used to fund many of the programs called for in Branstad's budget and would also provide some property tax relief while leaving the state with a surplus of $25 million.

Hutchins said Branstad's proposal to use $100 million to upgrade teacher salaries is a good one, but said the entire package may not get Senate approval.

"WE'RE NOT going to spend any more than the governor proposes, and we'll probably be under," Hutchins said.

Branstad's proposal to cut human services, mainly by slicing $2.1 in AFDC payments, will probably be re-drafted to return much of the funding, Hutchins said.

Only two Democrats oppose raising the sales tax, Hutchins said, leaving the majority party with enough votes to get the measure passed. That revenue would be directed at property tax relief, something he said the governor has ignored.

"His proposal is blue smoke and mirrors. It's short term," Hutchins said. "Iowans want more realistic property tax relief."

HUTCHINS SAID with cities like Ames and Sioux City already voting to raise the sales tax locally and cities such as Dubuque and Waterloo considering the same, it may be now or never for the state to raise the sales tax.

"We stand to be in a position where there will not be enough votes in the legislature to increase the sales tax," Hutchins said.

Branstad Press Secretary Dick Vohs said the governor opposes the sales tax increase because of the additional hardship it places on Iowans. He said it's unfortunate the Senate is moving in the other direction.

"They should take their time and analyze it like we did," Vohs said.

Liquor bill debated in state legislature

DES MOINES (UPI) — House Speaker Don Avenson, in what he described as a test of who's running the legislature, ordered majority Democrats Tuesday to halt a movement to keep the state in the retail liquor business.

Avenson said during a news conference he will use his power as speaker to block debate of a proposal to repeal last year's law closing the state's 219 liquor stores March 1 and allowing private businesses to open liquor outlets in their place.

"Leadership needs to use the tools that everyone knows is at its disposal to accomplish what it thinks it needs to accomplish," Avenson said.

"My intention is to have the system privatized. That is not a surprise. That is not a secret.

"It is very, very unlikely in the next three and one-half weeks you will see a bill that goes through the process and can be on the governor's desk in time to be signed and reverse what we already have done," Avenson said.

Rep. Roger Halvorson, R-Monona, one of 52 lawmakers who have sponsored a bill to keep the state stores open, immediately accused Avenson of circumventing the Democratic process by refusing to allow debate on the bill.

"THAT MEANS HE (Avenson) is running the House and the rest of the majority members of the House be damned," Halvorson said.

Halvorson said if necessary, he will file a lawsuit to prevent the state from dismantling its 51-year-old retail liquor monopoly.

He said last year's bill dismantling the liquor monopoly is unconstitutional because it deals with more than one topic — liquor laws and a state appropriation — in a single bill.

The bill to retain the state monopoly currently is bottled up in an unfriendly committee, but Halvorson said he will try to drum up the necessary 51 votes to force the measure out of committee, an effort he gives little chance of success.

"That won't happen. If that happened, obviously the Speaker would not be in control," he said.

Avenson said Halvorson is using political tricks to try to disrupt the agenda of majority Democrats. He said the issue is a test of power politics.

"That's all it is — a test of who's in control. I'm pretty sure who's in control," he said with a smile.

The Iowa Critical Language Program, a UI designed to train students to teach Chinese, Japanese, Russian languages in second schools, is the first of its kind in the nation, UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Richard Remington said. The three-year program, funded by a $475,000 grant from the Ford Foundation, guarantees students teaching jobs when they graduate with a bachelor's degree in the foreign language.

"It's the first program that combines teaching with a substantial period of intentional study and a period of supported teaching in schools," Remington said.

Each year, six students accepted into the program will be obligated to teach in Iowa for at least three months after graduation. They will teach high school language courses at one of the six school districts participating in the program, including Cedar Rapids, Des Moines, Iowa City, Marshalltown, Urbandale and West

Because of low winter heating bills, the financially troubled UI Libraries will reap benefits of redirected funds, according to a report given the UI Faculty Senate Tuesday.

UI Vice President for Financial Affairs Dorsey Ellis informed the senate that most of the redirected funds will enable libraries to make ends meet. According to Ellis, the move will raise the amount budgeted for book acquisitions above last year's level.

"I'm delighted to see what power of prayer on the part of the faculty senate has done," Ellis said.

UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Richard Remington added he was grateful the warm weather will help bail out UI Libraries.

"INFLATION continues to be a big problem," he said. "Even to get to where we were last year means we lose a little."

Some of the redirected funds will go toward building repair and maintenance costs, Remington said.

Ellis also reported reconstruction of the damaged Recreation Building is scheduled to begin this summer and will be completed no later than December.

The budgets of the Johnson County Conservation Board and the Johnson County Sheriff's Department for the 1987-88 fiscal year came under close scrutiny at the Johnson County Board of Supervisors meeting Tuesday.

Supervisors voted 3-1 not to grant the $100,000 vehicle request made by the conservation board. The board also rejected board Chairwoman Betty Ockenfels' attempt, by a 3-1 vote, to cut an additional $17,000 from the conservation board's requested $432,000 budget.

Ockenfels said the $17,000 money the board failed to spend in 1986-87 and she criticized the conservation board for having a lot of "fat" in their budget.

New UI language program first of its kind in the nation

By Shawn Plank
Staff Writer

The Iowa Critical Languages Program, a UI project designed to train students to teach Chinese, Japanese or Russian languages in Iowa's second-grade schools, is one of the first programs of its kind in the nation, UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Richard Remington said.

The three-year program, funded by a $475,000 grant from the Ford Foundation, guarantees students teaching jobs when they graduate from the program with a bachelor's degree in the foreign language.

"It's the first program that combines teaching with a substantial period of international study and a period of supported teaching in high schools," Remington said.

"A LOT OF PEOPLE are interested in staying in Iowa," UI Liberal Arts Program Associate Marcia Lindgren said. "This will be an opportunity."

A major portion of the students' schooling is financed by the grant received by the UI last October. If students do not teach in Iowa, they will be required to pay back the money received when they leave, Remington said.

The languages are dubbed "critical" because the countries where the languages are spoken are important to the United States in economic, trade and world relations, Remington said.

UI Liberal Arts Associate Dean James Lindberg said there is also a need to teach the language because it hasn't been offered to high school students very much.

"There is an critical imbalance and a need for more opportunity to study these languages," he said.

IN THE FIRST phase of the program, beginning this summer, the six students will receive intensive training at a nationally recognized summer language institute.

The students will spend the next academic year at the UI studying language, history and culture before returning for a second session at a summer institute.

The second academic year will be spent studying the language abroad. The final year is spent at the UI completing graduation and teacher certification requirements.

The Ford Foundation grant will finance students for the two summers of intensive language training, the year of study abroad and the final year of advanced study. Students will be required to pay their own way during the first year of the program at the UI, Lindgren said.

Although students would typically enter the program after completing their second year of college, Lindgren said she is receiving applications from graduate students and people already in the work force.

"ALL SORTS of people are interested," she said.

Lindberg said he is optimistic the five-year Ford Foundation grant will be extended beyond the initial grant period.

Remington said he hoped the program will expand beyond the six high schools currently cooperating with the UI. His goal, he said, is to have at least one teacher of a critical language in every high school in the state.

Applications are available from the UI Liberal Arts Office of Academic Programs, Schaeffer Hall Room 116.

Low building heating costs redirect funds to UI Libraries

Joseph Levy
Staff Writer

Because of low winter heating bills, the financially troubled UI Libraries will reap the benefits of redirected funds, according to a report given to the UI Faculty Senate Tuesday.

UI Vice President for Finance Dorsey Ellis informed the senate that most of the redirected funds will enable the libraries to make ends meet. According to Ellis, the monies will raise the amount budgeted for book acquisitions above last year's level.

"I'm delighted to see what the power of prayer on the part of the faculty senate has done," Ellis said.

"INFLATION continues to be a big problem," he said. "Even to get to where we were last year means we lose a little."

Some of the redirected funds will go toward building repair and maintenance costs, Ellis said.

Ellis also reported reconstruction of the damaged Recreation Building is scheduled to begin this summer and will be completed no later than December.

Dorsey Ellis

"The plan is to restore the building so that it has a clear span equivalent to what it has today," Ellis said.

In a separate report, UI Vice President for Educational Development and Research Duane Spriestersbach said construction of the not yet approved UI laser facility could begin as early as this spring.

"We do expect ultimately that the bonds will be approved," he said.

THE CONSTRUCTION schedule for the $25 million facility calls for completion by the fall of 1989, but Spriestersbach said the location of the structure is still up in the air.

"The more we learn, the more we believe the northeast corner of Iowa Avenue and Dubuque Street is less and less practical," he said.

According to Spriestersbach, that location was chosen in an almost arbitrary manner.

"As we think about the possibility of future expansion, that location doesn't seem to offer any possibilities," he said.

Remington used his report to explain the UI's Internal Reallocation Policy, which began in November 1985.

THE POLICY dictates a 2 percent decrease in overall UI allocations from last year. Remington met with the deans of all the UI colleges in November to set reallocation priorities.

Remington said inflation, combined with the lack of an increase in funding to the UI, made a program of reprioritizing necessary.

"We don't want to lose the opportunity to do new things, but we cannot be everything to everybody with a flat budget," Remington said. "Without a great deal of new money coming in, we have to find internal support."

The program will call for a 3 percent cut to be decided each November beginning next year.

Board seeks trimmable 'fat' in county budget proposals

By James Cahoy
Staff Writer

The budgets of the Johnson County Conservation Board and the Johnson County Sheriff's Department for the 1987-88 fiscal year came under close scrutiny at the Johnson County Board of Supervisors meeting Tuesday.

Supervisors voted 3-1 not to grant a $1,000 vehicle request made by the conservation board. The board also rejected board Chairwoman Betty Ockenfels' attempt, by a 3-1 vote, to cut an additional $17,000 from the conservation board's requested $432,000 budget.

Ockenfels said the $17,000 was money the board failed to spend in 1986-87 and she criticized the conservation board for having a lot of "fat" on their budget.

"I really think they could trim their budget back," Ockenfels said. "But we don't have any control over what they spend their budget on. We just control the bottom line allocation."

BOBLOVETINSKY, a member of the Johnson County Rural Taxpayers Association, agreed with Ockenfels and suggested the conservation budget should be cut by at least one-fourth.

"We are going to investigate some of these expenditures," Lovetinsky said. "The salaries alone are far too high for what they are doing out there."

But Supervisor Robert Burns defended the conservation board, arguing that it was doing a "good job" and deserved the request. Burns was the only supervisor in favor of the request.

"I have no reason to think otherwise," Burns said. "I know the people on the conservation board and I trust them when they make a request."

Supervisor Harold Donnelly said he believes the taxpayer association's charges had no substance.

"I can't understand a lot of what they are saying about the conservation board, such as this thing about salaries," Donnelly said. "I just don't see the problems they see."

The board also informally approved a 12 percent increase for the Johnson County Sheriff's Department.

Ockenfels said the board gave the department everything it asked for in the $1.8 million budget, with the exception of one extra employee.

"They got seven new vehicles, a pay increase of 5 percent for all employees and a new intercom system," she said.

Safe and sound?

The case of an Ohio State University woman who was raped in her dormitory room and is now suing Ohio State for a quarter of a million dollars in damages could have implications for other college and university communities. Her suit alleges that the university failed to exercise reasonable care to protect her. Further, her suit argues the university breached a written rental contract that implied the dormitory was habitable and safe.

The case also raises the larger issue of the implied contract between a college or university and its students. What are the expectations a student and her or his parents have about the kind of community a college or university offers? What does the institution imply about a supportive, protective, nurturing environment when recruiting students?

What about students living off-campus, but nevertheless considered a part of the college or university community? Should off-campus students be protected less stringently, especially at a school like the UI, which cannot begin to offer dormitory housing to all its students.

While the assumption among many students and parents is that an educational environment provides more protection and support than would the "real world," reported incidences of rape and harassment at colleges and universities continues to rise; and few institutions offer comprehensive security or prevention programs to combat this terrifying problem.

The UI does offer a fine service in the Rape Victim Advocacy Program, which it partially supports. But RVAP cannot by itself protect everyone in the university community. The UI and other area colleges and universities should keep an eye on the Ohio State case and seek to examine and extend their moral and legal responsibilities toward protecting students.

Families first

Tuesday was a big day in Washington for families. Reps. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., and William Clay, D-Mo., introduced legislation to provide job security to employees who take unpaid leave for certain serious family or medical reasons. The bill — which would allow working parents to spend more time with their children — is being hailed as "preventive medicine" to help alleviate crime, teenage pregnancy and illiteracy.

And it's about time. The return of women to the work place has, unfortunately, meant the ruin of American families as we once knew them. Children have had to bear the burden in our changing society.

The legislation being offered by Schroeder and Clay would specifically allow an employee to take up to 18 weeks of unpaid leave over a two-year period for the birth, adoption or illness of a child.

The parental leave legislation — which applies to working fathers as well as mothers — is not only pro-family, but also pro-business. Businesses which already offer parental leave are better able to attract competent employees and can increase productivity while decreasing absenteeism.

Attitudes in the labor force must change — and change soon — if the family is to survive. The landmark parental leave legislation proposed by Schroeder and Clay has merit and is a valiant effort in the seldom-recognized war to save the American family.

Abandoned ship

There are several tell-tale signs of a sinking ship: the vessel begins to ride low in the water, forward movement slows and crew members start to abandon ship.

Equipped with this handy guide to identifying Titanic-like crafts, it becomes rather easy to pinpoint sinking ships of all kinds. Among the more obvious candidates for the designation "going under" is the Reagan administration, in the aftermath of the Iran-Contra affair.

As everyone knows, the administration suffered some heavy damage from the broadside attack of the Iran-Contra scandal — public confidence in one of the most popular presidents of recent history plummeted to record lows; Congress, which once appeared to flirt with the idea of becoming a rubber stamp legislature, began to scrutinize the executive branch; and the previously tame press scraped away President Ronald Reagan's Teflon coating.

Next, the once-mighty engines of Reagan's steamer began to falter and the presidential agenda lost momentum. Not only has very little of the president's wish list become legislation, he will certainly suffer severe rebuffs, such as the Congressional override of his veto of the Clean Water Bill.

Now, many of the ship's most important crew members appear to have given up hope of saving their vessel. In recent days and weeks, the list of those who have abandoned ship has stretched long: deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, White House political chief Mitchell Daniels, CIA Director William Casey, White House Communications Director Patrick Buchanan and a host of lesser aides.

All that remains to be seen of this drama is whether or not the captain will go down with his ship.

Iowa's new peace institute first of its kind in the nation

Let there be peace on earth and let it begin with me; Let there be peace on earth, the peace that was meant to be. To take each moment and live each moment in peace eternally. Let there be peace on earth and let it begin with me.

Sy Miller and Jill Jackson

SOME IOWANS have taken these sentiments past the heart, and to the drawing board in order to create a permanent fixture of peace in Iowa.

Initially proposed in 1985 by a group of state leaders, the Iowa Peace Institute — the first of its kind in the nation — has been busy promoting peace for the past three months.

Under the direction of former Lt. Governor Robert Anderson, the current focus of the institute is to build a link with universities, private colleges and existing organizations. Gov. Terry Branstad, members of the U.S. Congress and Iowa Legislature have also been contacted about getting involved in the state-wide effort.

Unlike much of the news that has been reported in recent months, coverage of the institute's progress is an encouraging and hopeful sign that better times are around the corner. Although many farmers, strikers and educators may fear the future, the formation of a peace program shows that there is something good in store for Iowa, and ultimately the world.

By Suzanne McBride

Digressions

"Historically, Iowa has played a unique role in peace initiatives," Anderson said. "Iowa's participation in various organizations, such as Refugee Relief, show that Iowa is concerned about peace."

PLANS TO BUILD the institute's facility (Anderson currently works out of a privately-owned house in Des Moines) have been drawn. Eventually, the non-profit corporation hopes to establish separate centers and peace research programs at the state's three public universities.

Another institute goal involves setting aside public and private dollars for endowed distinguished professor positions at the UI, Iowa State University and University of Northern Iowa, with the intent of one day employing recognized experts in the area of peace.

By forming such a program, Anderson and other state leaders, including former Gov. Robert Ray, Des Moines banker John Crystal, Iowa House Rep. Jean Lloyd-Jones, D-Iowa City, and UI President James O. Freedman, are showing Iowans that we must look to the future instead of dwelling on the past.

"Because our economy is not dependent on the weapons industry, the political and economic climate in Iowa is right for the institute," Anderson said. "We have both the public and private leadership — we now just need to pull resources together."

WHILE THE INITIAL stages have been successfully completed, work is still needed to ensure the institute's permanence — more Iowans need to become aware of the corporation and its purpose, money needs to be raised and other states must be encouraged to begin work on similar projects.

Iowa City residents may further the institute's progress by urging such bodies as the Iowa City Council, UI Student Senate and the United Students of Iowa to pass resolutions in favor of the project.

"People may help by promoting support through existing organizations," Anderson said. "Passing a resolution of support for the concept would communicate to both the state and the nation that Iowa is the place to begin."

The first step in fighting war and strife has been taken, but it is now up to Iowans to increase awareness about peace, and work to make it an everyday reality.

Historic houses require protection

By Bruce Japsen

There's a group of neighbors in Iowa City who would like to see their neighborhood stay unique, and many of them have been working at it for about 20 years.

These Iowa City residents live in a neighborhood that represents about a 24-block area, including North Dubuque, Linn, Gilbert, Van Buren, and Johnson streets.

From the Metro Desk

The area includes the northwestern corner of the original town plan of Iowa City where many UI-related faculty and administrators lived. Many of the homes in this area, built in the early 1840s, still exist as do the brick paved streets of that era.

The residents who want their neighborhood to keep its look, recently took their proposal before the Iowa City Council, requesting the city to designate the area as a historic preservation district.

MANY OF THE residents in the area would like to protect their historic neighborhood from the "invasion" of apartment buildings nearby.

"The area represents the feel of mid-19th century," one resident said. "It's a feeling that is quick being lost."

If the council approves the district, changes to the exterior of the buildings that are visible from the street would need to be reviewed by the Historic Preservation Commission.

"Those in older parts of town live in constant fear someone will build a cement-block monstrosity next door," another resident said.

This area is a part of the UI's history as well as Iowa City's, and the residents of this area, as well as Iowa City, deserve to have this commission help this area keep its look.

THERE ARE STILL those in the residential area that don't believe the Historic Preservation Commission should be able to legislate what they do with their property. Several property owners have already objected to the proposed district, claiming its restrictions would infringe on home owners' rights.

But there are also others that believe any changes approved by the historic commission would improve the neighborhood and they believe this stability is important.

It is important. After all, without the historic commission, what would prevent this northwestern Iowa City neighborhood from looking like an apartment row on South Johnson Street?

Not a pretty thought is it?

Still hopeful

To the Editor:

Another year just started! All of us have new and positive expectations for the year. Some of them will come true and probably some will not, but at this moment of the start of a new year, there is a fresh feeling of being able to accomplish and change things for the better.

There are, however, people who hoped for many years for peace, freedom and the end of suffering for them and their children, but that has not come yet. For those, who have been oppressed the hope for a better new year is weaker, but within their hearts there is a belief that the oppressed will overcome the oppressors.

I am a Palestinian, and as a Palestinian I wonder about the expectations that a Palestinian child has, and about what life has to offer him/her. Most people, rich or poor, have a place they call home and country. A Palestinian child does not have a place he/she can call "my country." He/she asks questions such as: "Why don't I have a country?"; "Why am I called stateless?"; "Why was our land taken away from us?" He/she wonders about what Golda Meir, then Israeli premier, declared in the Sunday Times of June 1969: "There was no such thing as Palestinians... It was not as though there was a Palestinian people... and we came and threw them out and took their country from them. They did not exist."

Even though all the conditions of insecurity caused by war and oppression make the situation worse, I believe the Palestinian child still has hope in the future. The hope that some day the war, suffering and massacres will end and he/she will live in peace in the land where his/her ancestors have lived since the 12th century B.C.

Suheir Al-Houbi

Branded

To the Editor:

The branding of livestock is not a pretty picture. The branding of human beings is particularly loathsome. When the UI Physical Plant adopts a policy of branding its staff members by forcing employees to wear an unpopular name tag or lose her/his job it is time for a review by university policy makers of the basic human rights of fairness and dignity in the work place.

One of the most hated practices of the government of South Africa was the requirement of all blacks to carry an I.D. card or suffer the risk of arrest or detention. The practice was discontinued in 1986 as a weak gesture of reform of the apartheid system.

I find it ironic that the UI Physical Plant should in essence institute a policy that the government of South Africa has chosen to rescind. Particularly, when the same UI was one of the first campuses in the country to witness a call for divestiture of university funds from companies that did business with apartheid.

One wonders at what point wrist tatoos or subcutaneous implants might not better serve the designs of the UI Physical Plant management?

Law increases seat belt use

By Brian Olesen
Staff Writer

Iowa City motorists are buckling up more since the seat belt law gained its "teeth" one month ago, but nearly 200 were ticketed in January, says Iowa City Police Chief Harvey Miller.

Iowa City police officers issued 187 seat belt citations after a six-month grace period, which ended Jan. 1, when Iowa law enforcement officers could only issue warning citations to those not wearing seat belts.

"There were no instructions given except that the law was in effect at that time," Miller said. "There was no indication that (officers) should go on a drive or anything like that. The teeth simply became in effect on the law; consequently, people went out and enforced it."

Those who enforce the seat belt law say the fine of $21.50 — which includes an actual $10 fine, $8.50 court costs and a 15 percent surcharge — has increased seat belt use in Iowa City and the rest of the state.

MILLER SAID he estimates seat belt use in Iowa City increased from about 60 percent in 1986 to about 80 percent in 1987.

Statewide compliance deteriorated in July when 70 percent of those traveling on Iowa's highways buckled up, but compliance is again on the rise in 1987, Lt. Richard Aringdale of the Iowa State Patrol in Des Moines said.

Aringdale said state compliance with the law fell below 50 percent just prior to January. He estimates current compliance at 55 percent.

Miller said the end of the grace period will help enforce the seat belt law.

"The offense itself is seat belts, and is not an ancillary to some other charge," Miller said. "I would let it go for a year and see what happens. If there is a noticeable reduction in fatalities and injuries that can be attributed to seat belts then I think the law has been effective."

BUT AT LEAST one Iowa legislator disagrees. Sen. Joseph Coleman, D-Clare, Iowa, increased opposition to the law by collecting letters and petitions aimed at convincing lawmakers they ought to repeal Iowa's seat belt law.

Coleman had received 5,000 signatures as of Monday and would like to reach 50,000.

Coleman, who chairs the Senate Transportation Committee, admits winning committee approval of a bill to repeal the seat belt law may be an uphill battle.

But he's counting on the signatures to help.

"Once the senators see the response from their constituents, the chance for repealing the law is pretty good," Coleman said.

Coleman's campaign may be even harder now that his effort has been countered by one of his colleagues.

Sen. Joy Corning, R-Waterloo, set out Monday to collect and match Coleman's

50,000-signature goal so Iowans who want to retain the law can be heard. Corning said she received numerous calls of support on Tuesday.

"THE BOTTOM LINE is that it saves lives," Corning said of the seat belt law.

Coleman's campaign to repeal the law is similar to an effort in Nebraska, where voters were successful in repealing that state's seat belt law.

But Aringdale said repealing the law, as Nebraska has done, would be a "terrible mistake."

"Twelve lives were saved in January alone in Iowa because of seat belts," Aringdale said.

Twenty-six states have passed seat belt laws, but only five — Iowa, New York, New Mexico, North Carolina and Hawaii — have primary offense clauses, Aringdale said. That means Iowa's motorists can be stopped and ticketed without being suspected of another traffic infraction.

IN STATES without the primary offense provision, such as Illinois, drivers must be ticketed for something else first.

Several Iowa state senators said the law may need to be modified.

Senate Majority Leader C.W. "Bill" Hutchins, D-Audubon, said people who drive less than 45 mph might not be required to wear belts.

Miller agrees that changes in the law are likely, but he would not support them.

"I would suspect there will be a lot of pressure to modify the law because some people find it offensive," Miller said. "That's what laws are passed for. I'm not sure they do any general good."

Iowa City motorists upset by citations

By Brian Olesen
Staff Writer

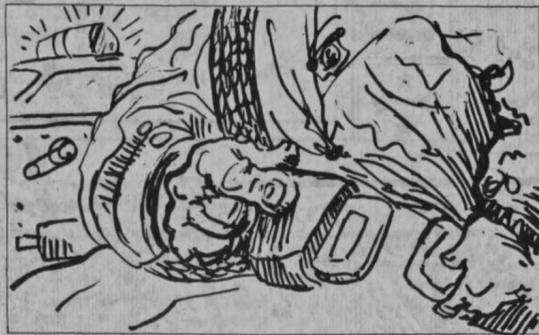

Many Iowa City motorists who were given tickets for not wearing seat belts last month are upset with the recently enforced law.

In January, nearly 200 Iowa City motorists found themselves facing a seat belt citation, which carries a fine and court costs totaling $21.50.

"It's more of a nuisance fine than it is anything else," Iowa City Police Chief Harvey Miller said. "Dollar fines don't mean an awful lot to most motorists."

But several Iowa City motorists who have been ticketed, disagree.

"I DETEST THE LAW," Karim Rezai, 16 Lakeview Circle, said after receiving a Jan. 15 citation. "They (legislators) are trying to impose morality on society as they did in prohibition. We must stop this kind of trend because if this type of reasoning goes on they will stop people from drinking and smoking."

Richard Poe, 461 U.S. Highway 1 West, Apt. 25, who was stopped Jan. 8 by Iowa City police, said he believes the fine is too high for the first offense.

"I usually wear my seat belt," Poe said, "I just forgot on this occasion resulting in the fine.

I don't have trouble remembering anymore."

Two of Poe's passengers, his wife and brother, were also ticketed because all three were sitting in the front seat of his vehicle.

AT LEAST ONE UI student, Brian Dahl, 1644 Aber Drive, said he is ready to do something about doing away with the law.

"It's an invasion of my privacy," Dahl said. "It should be repealed and I'm going to do what I can to help it get repealed. I'm circulating a petition to help the effort."

Nancy Cibulka, 741 Dearborn St., said she agrees the fine is too high, and also thinks there is a problem with the law because she believes police can use selective enforcement.

"If they can't give you a citation for something else like driving through an amber light, and they want to stop you, they can get you for a seat belt violation," Cibulka said.

But Police Chief Miller said there is selectivity on every law.

"I suspect any good traffic officer can follow any person one block driving a car and have at least two offenses," Miller said. "So the idea of making choices as to what is important is not unusual in law enforcement or any other aspect of life, for that matter."

High blood pressure is serious business.

That's one way of looking at it. Another way is to ignore it and hope it goes away. Or tell yourself it's hopeless. And that's called playing with fire. Because there's one thing we know for certain. And that is that high blood pressure can usually be controlled. By following your doctor's advice. By exercising regularly to control weight. By eating the right foods. By cutting down on salt in your diet. And by sticking to your prescribed medication. Because if you don't take it seriously today, it could take you by surprise tomorrow.

Band member survives cyst

By Jill Lauritzen
Staff Writer

Ann Costello
The Daily Iowan/Doug Smith

For most Hawkeye Marching Band members, the semester break is extra special. In each of the past six breaks, the Hawkeye football team has represented Iowa in consecutive bowl games, and at each of those appearances the marching band has accompanied the players for spirit and support.

Ann Costello, a UI senior and flag line member, has spent her last three breaks supporting the Hawkeyes through losses in the Gator and Rose bowls and a victory in the Freedom Bowl. This past break, instead of cheering the Hawks through a long-deserved post season win at the Holiday Bowl in San Diego, Costello was home showing a very different kind of spirit.

She spent the weeks before break waiting for biopsy results — wondering for four weeks if she had cancer.

COSTELLO SAID in November she kept feeling a pain in her left leg, but thought she had pinched a nerve. But just before Thanksgiving a sudden turn caused enough pain that Costello had to be rushed to a hospital.

X-rays showed a 1-by-2-inch shadow behind the top of her femur.

"The radiologist said 'You better get her to a bone doctor right away,'" Ann's father, Cyril, said. "He didn't even want to try to guess what it was."

An orthopedic surgeon said the shadow could be anything from cancer to a cyst.

"They said the worst it could be was cancer," Ann Costello said. "It was really strange not knowing what was wrong. I don't know how else to describe it. It was hard for my family, not knowing what to do. But it was hard for me because it was me — not knowing if it was terminal and I had six months to live."

ANN'S MOTHER, Helen, said "things pretty much went crazy" at home.

"We were real concerned," she said. "Ann broke down sometimes and we had a few good cries, of course. I could barely talk up to the time of the biopsy."

The biopsy results determined the shadow was an aneurismal bone cyst that had formed between the ball of Costello's femur and hip.

"My doctor said they're very rare. He's only seen three in 10 years," she said.

Surgery involved removing the cyst, a bone graft and implanting a pin and plate in Costello's hip. She was released from the hospital two days before the band left for San Diego.

Band Director Morgan Jones said Costello was still invited to join the band on the trip if she wanted, but stiffness and pain prevented her from taking the journey.

"I felt so sorry for her," Jones said. "She's been such a marvelous band member. She was a very faithful and fine performer. Ann's a lovely young lady, one of the finest."

MELISSA MCKENZIE, instructor for the flag line, said the rest of the flag crew missed her at the game.

"I hated to see that happen to her. She's really neat," McKenzie said. "We went to visit her when we got back and brought her a card and a Holiday Bowl T-shirt."

But Costello is not likely to march with the band again.

She will be on crutches for a while and it may take almost a year before she can walk normally, let alone march.

"It doesn't hurt now, but I can't put any weight on my leg," she said. "It's a project to get up the stairs to my apartment on the third floor. I used to always sympathize with handicapped people, but now I empathize, because I'm handicapped in a way."

Costello said she is using the Bionic Bus or just hobbling around campus, trying to finish up the work she missed from classes last semester, as well as continuing her undergraduate work as an education major.

"I'VE SET A GOAL for myself to walk by August," she said. "My friend is getting married then and I was supposed to be in the wedding."

McKenzie is betting Costello will reach that goal.

"That'll happen, too. She's really feisty," McKenzie said.

Now, Costello plans to get on with her life and would like to stay involved with the band as a staff member. For her, she said, the worst part — waiting for the biopsy results — is over.

Her father agrees. "It was a great relief. For a while there, I thought I'd aged about 10 years."

Botha blames U.S. for S. African unrest

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — Foreign Minister Roelof Botha blamed the U.S. Congress Tuesday for violence in South Africa's black communities and said U.S. economic sanctions represented unwarranted meddling in the country's affairs.

Botha said the U.S., by imposing anti-apartheid sanctions, encouraged black militants and discouraged moderates who might have negotiated with the government on reforms.

"I hold Congress responsible for the murder of black people by black people," he said. "Because of the outside interference, many black people have become intimidated."

Archbishop Desmond Tutu called Botha's remarks "nonsense" and said South African blacks depended on American pressure "to bring about changes." Tutu said the Reagan administration's policy of "constructive engagement" was useless.

Soviets arrest Brezhnev's son-in-law

MOSCOW — A Foreign Ministry spokesman disclosed Tuesday the son-in-law of former Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev has been arrested for corruption.

The arrest of Yuri Churbanov, 48, came two years after he was dismissed as first deputy minister in the Interior Ministry.

"He is accused of corruption and bribe-taking," Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennadi Gerasimov said.

A Western diplomat said the arrest of Churbanov represented a new attempt by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to discredit Brezhnev, who led the Soviet Union from 1964 until 1982.

Churbanov's career skyrocketed after he assumed the Interior Ministry post in 1970.

With the death of Brezhnev, however, open criticism of the Interior Ministry began, and in 1985 Churbanov was dismissed.

Coalition calls for chairman's removal

WASHINGTON — A coalition of conservative organizations called Tuesday for the removal of Rep. George Crockett, D-Mich., from the chairmanship of a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee.

At a Capitol Hill news conference, representatives of the groups charged that Crockett, recently named chairman of the subcommittee on Western Hemisphere affairs, is a security risk because of his long association with left-wing groups.

A spokesman for Crockett, who is serving his fifth term in the House, said the congressman had no comment on the charges.

Michael Waller, of the Council for Inter-American Security, charged that Crockett "has dedicated most of his life to promoting the agenda of the Communist Party."

U.S. offers reward for terrorist arrest

WASHINGTON — The United States offered a $250,000 reward Tuesday for help in the arrest and prosecution of the terrorists who put a bomb aboard an American airliner last April.

The bomb exploded as TWA flight 840 approached Athens April 2, 1986, killing four people. The plane landed at Athens International airport with a gaping hole in its side.

It is the fourth such reward offered by the U.S. government under the Combating Terrorism Act. Other rewards have been offered for the 1985 hijacking of TWA 847, the hijacking of the Achille Lauro cruise ship and the hijacking of a Kuwaiti airliner in 1985. None of the rewards have been paid.

Under the terms of the reward offer, up to $250,000 will be paid for information leading to the arrest, prosecution and punishment of those responsible for trying to blow up the plane.

14-year-olds attempt to poison parents

CHICAGO — Two 14-year-old suburban girls were to appear today in Juvenile Court on charges of attempted murder and aggravated battery for allegedly lacing their parents' food with rat poison.

Authorities said the poisoning was part of a plan by the two junior high students, who were not identified, to run away from home. The girls allegedly wanted to run away and make sure there was no one to follow them, Schaumburg, Ill., police said.

A juvenile petition was filed Tuesday against one of the girls, who lives with her parents in Streamwood, Ill. The other girl, who lives with her father in Schaumburg, was named Monday in a similar petition.

The Schaumburg girl's parents brought a can of rat poison to the police station on Friday along with a cake they believed had been spiked, he said. The teenager was arrested and charged the next day.

Iran breaks silence on Seib's detention

By United Press International

Iran acknowledged for the first time Tuesday it was holding Wall Street Journal correspondent Gerald Seib, calling him "a spy for the Zionist regime." An independent news service said the journalist was suspected of collecting secret military information.

The White House said Iranian authorities have refused to meet with officials of the Swiss Embassy, which represents the United States in Iran, to discuss the Seib case.

The United States holds Iran responsible for the journalist's treatment, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

"Seib is not a spy," Fitzwater added. "He is a distinguished reporter."

SEIB, 30, was taken into custody on Saturday for unspecified reasons.

In a one-sentence dispatch that broke Iran's official silence on Seib's detention, Tehran radio Tuesday said, "The United States has officially requested the freedom of Gerald Seib, the spy for the Zionist regime, who entered Iran disguised as a journalist."

The South-North News Service, a news agency based in Hanover, N.H., and established in 1986 to cover Third World countries, said Seib was being held in solitary confinement.

In its Tehran-dated report, the agency quoted an unidentified Iranian intelligence source as saying Seib had collected sensitive information about Iran's military defenses and unspecified charges would be filed against him.

The agency, quoting an unnamed Iranian official, reported Seib would be released within 48 hours.

"If true it's encouraging," said Journal Managing Editor Norman Pearlstine. "But it doesn't carry the weight of an official government statement, only an unnamed official."

"WHAT WE really need is something specific, like the release of Jerry Seib," he said. "We've not had any contact with anybody official in Tehran."

Seib, who is based in Cairo, Egypt, was among more than 50 U.S. and other foreign journalists invited to Iran by the government to visit the battlefield of Iran's war with Iraq.

The journalists were ordered to leave the country by Saturday, but Seib and several others requested extensions.

An Iranian official warned a UPI correspondent in Tehran last week that any reporters who tried to extend their stay "would face serious problems."

U.S. officials Monday asked Iran to release Seib. Wall Street Journal officials speculated his arrest was a "mistake."

Reagan veto loses in House

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Democrat-run House, with extra Republican muscle, voted 401-26 Tuesday to override President Ronald Reagan's veto of a popular $20 billion clean water bill — Reagan's first major defeat of the 100th Congress.

The overwhelming vote on the bill, which Reagan vetoed Friday as a "budget buster," came as Republicans joined united Democrats to provide far more than the two-thirds majority needed to override.

All 26 votes backing the president were cast by Republicans, with House party chief Robert Michel of Illinois leading the way and saying he agreed with Reagan's characterization of the bill as a "boondoggle."

BUT REPUBLICANS rising to urge an override included Reps. Arlan Stangeland, R-Minn., Silvio Conte, R-Mass. and Gerald Solomon, R-N.Y.

Stangeland said he was "disappointed" by Reagan's veto and he believed the president had "listened to the wrong advice on clean water."

Conte called the measure "a necessary, important piece of legislation" to protect the purity of drinking water.

Solomon described himself as "a fiscal conservative" but he voted to override the veto because "America needs it."

After the vote, House Speaker Jim Wright of Texas said the Democrats had not sought a "confrontation" with the president but, "Mr. Reagan, for whatever reasons motivated him, deliberately chose to provoke a contest on this issue."

THE BILL WOULD authorize $18 billion in grants to help cities build sewage treatment plants over nine years, and an additional $2 billion to help clean up the nation's lakes, rivers and estuaries.

It would extend and strengthen pollution control programs set up under the Clean Water Act of 1972, which Congress enacted when it overrode a veto by President Richard Nixon.

The Senate was also expected to override the veto by a large margin as early as today. Should the new Democrat-controlled Senate override the veto, the bill would become law.

DAVID BAKER, a spokesman for the environmentalist group Friends of the Earth, said the fight might hurt the presidential ambitions of Senate Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas.

When the Senate took up the bill, Dole offered a Reagan-backed substitute bill to cut clean water spending from $20 billion to $12 billion. That offer was defeated 82-17.

"The president really made Bob Dole walk the plank on this bill," Baker said. "Dole's performance on the Clean Water Act has been like a kamikaze pilot."

Reagan, in vetoing the measure for the second time last Friday, called it a "budget-buster" and accused lawmakers of larding it with "pork barrel" amendments.

Weinberger's drive to deploy SDI stalls

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's drive for quick deployment of parts of the Star Wars system appeared stalled Tuesday, and Secretary of State George Shultz warned that putting anti-missile weapons in space could violate the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

President Ronald Reagan met with Shultz, Weinberger and other arms advisers Tuesday to discuss whether to prepare for quick deployment of an initial stage of Star Wars. A White House spokesman said Reagan did not make a decision at the meeting.

Debate over how quickly to deploy the Strategic Defense Initiative — the formal name for Star Wars — became sharper last month when Weinberger and other administration officials suggested that parts of Star Wars could be deployed as soon as they are available.

BUT SHULTZ, testifying before the Senate Armed Services Committee, said certain "kinds of deployment (of defensive systems) would not be consistent" with the ABM treaty.

Shultz also said that Reagan had not made a decision on early deployment.

He stressed the difficulty in discussing how quickly Star Wars could be put in space because, "It's hard to talk about something when you don't know exactly what it is."

Although there has been extensive research into Reagan's Star Wars, scientists agree that it would not be possible to begin deploying even the first stages of such a system until early in the next decade.

SHULTZ ALSO played down his apparent policy split with Weinberger.

"The differences between us," he said, "are usually exaggerated."

The longstanding disagreement over Star Wars is whether the ABM treaty would be violated in any deployment of the defensive shield. The 1972 treaty now allows each side to deploy one anti-ballistic missile site to intercept and destroy strategic missiles during flight.

The agreement also strictly limits development of ABM weaponry, including radar and intercepting missiles. The agreement is of unlimited duration but subject to review every five years.

Shultz said research into Star Wars is conducted "presumably in the hope we'll find a positive answer" to whether such a system could work. Once armed with the answer, he said, "then we should consider whether or not to deploy."

White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater said Reagan had not decided on deployment.

"It's still an issue before the administration," he said. "SDI is an ongoing research program. No decision has been made on development or deployment."

Senate panel may question Israelis

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The select Senate committee investigating the Iran arms-Contra aid affair is working out a deal to question Israeli officials in writing about their role in the scandal, the panel chairman said Tuesday.

Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, said the committee is arranging with the State Department to submit written questions to Israelis linked with the secret sale of U.S. arms to Iran and the subsequent diversion of sales profits to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

"Something is being worked out now," Inouye said. "We are advised that the State Department is in touch with parties in Israel... we have not received an official response yet."

Inouye said the committee expected to submit written questions to the Israelis and, "If a clarification is needed, we'll get back to them."

SEN. DAVID BOREN, D-Okla., a member of the select committee, said it was important to interview Israeli officials about their role in what has become the worst scandal of the Reagan presidency.

"I think we also have to understand the process of how... we receive and evaluate advice (from friendly countries such as Israel) when their own national interest might not always be identical to ours," Boren said.

In Israel, a parliamentary panel began its own inquiry Tuesday into the Jewish state's role in the arms deal and heard from two key figures: David Kimche, former director general of the Israeli Foreign Ministry, and Amiran Nir, a counterterrorism adviser.

THE WATERGATE-STYLE panel in the Senate, set up along with a companion House committee, also wants to talk with officials of countries that may be involved in the Iran arms-Contra aid scandal, including Brunei and Switzerland.

The sultan of Brunei was asked to make a $10 million contribution to the Contras, and money from the arms sales were deposited in numbered Swiss bank accounts.

Last week, the Senate Intelligence Committee issued a 65-page report which said that although it was not initially an arms-for-hostages deal, the arms sales to Iran quickly became a deal to try to free Americans held hostage in Lebanon by pro-Iran fanatics.

According to testimony in December hearings, the deal to provide arms to Iran was suggested by Israeli officials.

The report said that among the factors that produced the arms initiative was "Israel's strong and continuing interest in furthering contacts with Iran."

Branstad honors Iowa's women athletes

By Cathryn Cronin
Staff Writer

Elk Horn girls' basketball Coach Rob Hoegh wanted his female athletes to be recognized, but he never thought it would come this far. Conversing with a friend from New Mexico about the Oct. 27, 1986, proclamation signing by President Ronald Reagan, Coach Hoegh decided that if they could do it on a national level why not try it at the state level too. The rest is history.

Today at 10:45 a.m. Gov. Terry Branstad will sign the proclamation declaring "Iowa Women in Sports Day" and "Iowa Women in Sports Week".

The Feb. 4th proclamation signing represents the first time an Iowa governor has recognized a specific day and week in honor of women's athletics.

"THIS IS AN opportunity to recognize the valuable contributions that women athletes have given to our state," Branstad said. "We can be proud of the hard work, dedication and achievements of Iowa's talented women athletes."

Those from Iowa who are attending the signing include: Women's Athletic Director Christine Grant, former Hawkeye and NCAA 10,000-meter champion Nan Doak Davis and field hockey Coach Judith Davidson. Current Iowa athletes include Lana Kuiper, Karen Napolitano, Senta Hawkins, Michelle Conlon and Carol Bruggeman. Attending with Hoegh is Jan

Jensen, one of Iowa's top-ranked high school basketball players.

Jensen said that she is lucky that the state of Iowa is supporting this.

"The national recognition will be a big help," Jensen said. "Hopefully it will generate more interest from other fans, especially male athletics fans. Things are really looking up for women's athletics all together."

DICK VOHS, THE governor's press secretary, believes the term "looking up" is an understatement. "Women athletes deserve a lot of credit," Vohs said. "They've come a long way from my days in Ames High School in 1968. Then there was no competitive athletics for women at all."

"The state of Iowa as a whole has been very supportive of women's athletics," Paula Jantz, Iowa assistant sports information director, said. "The governor is really committed towards equal opportunity. With the state and nation recognizing their accomplishments, other people will be proud of our women athletes as well."

Following the proclamation signing, First Lady Chris Branstad will host a reception at Terrace Hill in honor of the women athletes, coaches and other supporters of women's athletics.

"Athletics can play a significant role in developing self confidence and a positive attitude," Chris Branstad said. "I am pleased that we are proclaiming a specific day and week to recognize Iowa's women athletes."

Chris Gambol, a shot putter for the Hawkeye track team, takes a short break Tuesday during his regular free weight work out.

Gambol 'puts' shot with league's best

By Dan Millea
Staff Writer

Chris Gambol is one of those people you just sense will be a success in life. The only question is in what area he will make his mark.

Gambol, currently a shot putter for the Iowa men's track team, was also a starting guard for the Hawkeye football squad last fall.

Having such dual sports aptitude is not unheard of, but that combined with the 6-foot-7, 297-pounder's academic efforts is unusual.

Gambol, a senior, already has his undergraduate degree in finance, is currently working on his masters degree in business administration and has plans to enter law school in the future.

"THE MOST IMPORTANT thing that can be said about Chris Gambol is he's an example of what a student-athlete should be," men's track Coach Ted Wheeler said. "He's a remarkable story, and we're very fortunate to have someone of his caliber here."

Gambol obviously has a number of doors open to him, the first of which is represented by the NFL draft, coming up in April. He was one of 300 collegiate seniors invited last week to participate in the NFL combine, an Indianapolis camp in which professional scouts took a good look at the draft's best talent.

"I went down there with Dave Croston and Jeff Drost," Gambol said, referring to his football teammates. "They gave us a physical and put us through all kinds of drills."

Gambol said the scouts' ratings of the 300 athletes will be released soon, but until then he's unsure of his stock in the April draft.

"THE SCOUTS TALK to you all year. They'll come into practice and see how you're doing, but they can't really say anything about it they'll draft you."

Should an NFL career never materialize, Gambol — who has done an admirable juggling act with track, football and academics while at Iowa — seems the type of man to perform well in whatever he does.

Assistant men's track Coach Larry Wiczorek, who works closely with Gambol, knows just how dedicated he has been to all three of those interests.

"I remember one time, it was the first Monday after spring football practice, and he came running in about 15 minutes late — and I mean literally running," Wiczorek said of Gambol. "He said, 'I'm really sorry I'm late. I was up until four o'clock working on a paper.' This was the Monday after the end of spring practice. That just shows you what kind of a guy he is."

Gophers thinking upset against Davis' Hawks

By Marc Bona

Carver-Hawkeye Arena has a rodent problem.

Tonight, the Golden Gophers of Minnesota will invade Hawkeye territory and try to avenge their 78-57 loss, suffered almost a month ago in Williams Arena to the then-undefeated Hawkeyes.

But the Gophers will be rather tame when they face the 19-2 Hawkeyes as two key players will probably be out of action.

Sophomore forward Kelvin Smith, in Texas Monday for his grandmother's funeral, is not expected to be in Iowa City tonight, according to Minnesota Assistant Sports Information Director Mark Johnson.

Junior guard Kim Zurcher will also be out, Johnson said. Zurcher, who has the flu, missed the Gophers' 72-60 loss Saturday against Michigan State and is "still trying to shake it off," according to Johnson.

SMITH HAS BEEN leading the Gophers in scoring this year, averaging 14.2 points per game. Zurcher, Minnesota's mild version of Steve Alford, is averaging 9.9 points per game. His best game so far this season — his first with Minnesota after transferring from Lindsey Wilson Community College in Kentucky — came against Iowa when he accounted for 21 of his team's 57 points.

Minnesota's only bright spot may be found in the form of 6-foot-5, 209-pound senior Terence Woods, who has poured in 12.7 points a game. However, he is the only Gopher in double figures starting against the Hawkeyes.

But Woods can't be too much of a bright spot, considering the Gophers have lost their last seven games. In that span, Minnesota's 12-point loss to the Spartans was the closest the Gophers came to victory.

The Daily Iowan/Rod Paccio

THE STRING OF losses came after a string of wins, six to be exact. After barely surviving the Chapman Colleges and Tennessee Techs, the Gophers now stand at 9-10 overall, 2-7 in the Big Ten.

But Iowa Coach Tom Davis believes the Gophers are a team to be reckoned with, saying Minnesota has "played very well in stretches of every game."

"If someone doesn't take them seriously enough," Davis said, "they're going to get beat." Gopher Coach Clem Haskins is in his first campaign with Minnesota after having spent six seasons at Western Kentucky, where he led the Hilltoppers to a 101-73 record.

"We're a young team," Haskins said. "We're outmanned every time we step on the floor. It's not that they're (Minnesota players) not working hard; it's just that we're a year or two away from being a good ball club."

PART OF THE TEAM Haskins envisions includes freshman Willie Burton, a 6-7, 210 forward who is averaging 9.1 points a game. Against the Hawkeyes earlier this season, Burton grabbed seven rebounds to lead the Gophers.

Burton is joined in the frontcourt by center Richard Coffey, also a freshman, and Tim Hanson, a junior. Both are 6-6, but it's Coffey who has been the Gophers' mainstay on the boards, ripping down 6.9 a game while averaging 6.8 points.

Iowa counters with an inside game of its own, averaging 44 rebounds a game. The Hawkeyes, who are leading the nation in rebound margin, have outrebounded their opponents by over 20 a game in their last four outings. Iowa's frontcourt — made up of Brad Lohaus, Ed Horton and Roy Marble — is averaging almost 18 boards a game.

But Iowa's depth is what worries Haskins. "Anytime you can substitute a guy like (Jeff) Moe, (Bill) Jones or (Al) Lorenzen, you're going to have a good game," Haskins said.

The Gophers will be entering tonight's contest with a 77-63 advantage in the two teams' overall series.

Last year the Hawkeyes were led to victory by Bill Jones with 19 points, but the 6-7 guard is doubtful to see any action due to an injury.

Big Ten crown still unsettled

By Mike Trilk
Staff Writer

Halfway through the Big Ten season one thing is for sure — the second half of the season should be just as exciting as the first.

Five teams are still in the hunt for the 1987 league crown, including two-time defending champion Michigan. Not only is the conference race shaping up to be one of the best in recent memory but no less than six teams have a shot at making the NCAA post-season tournament.

The question is: Which is more important — winning the Big Ten title or advancing to the Final Four?

Most of the Big Ten coaches agree that a Big Ten title is more important, but it wasn't a unanimous opinion.

"I'M A LEAGUE championship kind of guy," Purdue Coach Gene Keady said during the Big Ten Teleconference Tuesday. "We're concerned with the Big Ten right now. It's very, very important to us. We're not even in it (the NCAA tournament) yet."

Michigan Coach Bill Frieder had similar thoughts.

"Only one coach has won the title outright, back-to-back in the last seven years, and that was me," Frieder said. "The Big Ten title is very prestigious. The fact that since I've been at Michigan only two coaches have won it outright two years in a row should tell you how tough and prestigious this league is."

But still the fact remains that Big Ten champions haven't produced in the NCAA tournament in recent years.

Indiana was the last Big Ten champion to advance to the Final Four and that was in 1981. Illinois made it to the Elite Eight in 1984 before being eliminated by Kentucky.

"I'm a league championship kind of guy," Purdue Coach Gene Keady says. "We're concerned with the Big Ten right now. It's very, very important to us."

Other than that no Big Ten team, including the champions, have made it past the Sweet 16.

"It is important to us to play well in the tournament," Iowa mentor Tom Davis said. "Look at what happened to last year's Big Ten champions. What has taken over in the fans' minds is who goes the furthest in the tournament. Look how Michigan State did last year."

WISCONSIN COACH Steve Yoder believes that a Big Ten tournament could be the key to helping the Big Ten do better in NCAA play.

"Conference championships are something that every team wants to have," Yoder said. "A championship is a great accomplishment in this league. But it is the teams that are playing well at the end of the season that will do well in the NCAA. It is very important to play well at the end of the year."

Yoder continued: "The one thing that confuses me is why people think a conference tournament would be bad for this league. It would give those teams that are heading into the NCAA a warm-up. It would get them use to the tournament atmosphere, and that is something that everybody else in the nation has an edge on this conference."

Even though the recent past hasn't been kind to the Big Ten as far as the NCAA tournament goes, the coaches around the league are confident that things will get better this year.

"Six teams should make the tournament," Illinois Coach Lou Henson said. "Right now we have six teams that are among the most outstanding in the country. From top to bottom this is the toughest I've ever seen the league, and I think it'll show later on."

Montreal trades Reardon to Minnesota

MONTREAL (UPI) — The Montreal Expos traded top reliever Jeff Reardon to the Minnesota Twins Tuesday in a six-player swap aimed at strengthening their starting pitching.

The Expos sent Reardon and backup catcher Tom Nieto to the Twins for left-hander Neal Heaton, catcher Jeff Reed and pitchers Yorkis Perez and Al Cardwood.

Heaton, who compiled a 7-15 record with a 4.08 ERA in 33 games last year, was the main catch for the Expos, according to General Manager Murray Cook.

Reardon, 31, compiled 35 saves in 62 appearances last year and has averaged 29 saves over the last five years.

Kookaburra begins 'Cup' campaign

FREMANTLE, Australia (UPI) — The Kookaburra syndicate announced plans Tuesday to mount a $30 million program for the 1990 America's Cup campaign.

The syndicate, whose flagship Kookaburra III was trailing 3-0 against U.S. challenger Stars & Stripes in the best-of-seven final, called on all Australian syndicates to join together in research and development of 12-Meter yachts.

It also announced plans to seek 100 percent tax deductions from the Australian government for the technological venture and to have the Royal Perth Yacht Club assign all commercial rights attached to the 1990 campaign.

The Perth Club is the current holder and organizer of the Australia defense.

"The America's Cup is more than a great international sporting event," syndicate chairman Kevin Parry said. "It is a matter of nations competing in the world of new technology."

Explaining the syndicate's motives at a news conference, director Ken Court said with nations such as Japan and West Germany planning to enter the 1990 competition along with the United States and others, Australia would face the most "high-tech and well-funded" countries in the world.

Bills' Kelly top paid '86 quarterback

BUFFALO, N.Y. (UPI) — A published report indicates Jim Kelly of the Buffalo Bills was the highest paid quarterback in the National Football League last season.

The Buffalo News reported Monday a salary survey obtained from the National Football League Players Association listed Kelly as receiving a base salary of $1 million in 1986 and a signing bonus of $2 million.

Kelly, former United States Football League star, signed a five-year contract with the Bills worth an estimated $8 million before the start of last season.

The survey listed Miami's Dan Marino, the league's second-rated passer last season, as having a base salary of $500,000 and a $2 million signing bonus. Minnesota's Tommy Kramer, the top-rated passer in the NFL in 1986, was listed as receiving a $400,000 base salary and getting a $600,000 signing bonus.

According to the survey, San Francisco's Joe Montana was the fourth-highest paid in 1986 at $550,000, followed by Denver's John Elway and Marc Wilson of the Los Angeles Raiders, who were tied for fifth place with $900,000 salaries each.

Falcons name Campbell to vacated post

SUWANEE, Ga. (UPI) — The Atlanta Falcons, frustrated in their attempts to find an outside "name" coach to succeed ousted Dan Henning, Tuesday promoted defensive coordinator Marion Campbell whom they had fired as head coach more than a decade ago.

Since firing Henning Dec. 22 on the completion of a 7-8-1 season, the Falcons first offered the job to former Philadelphia Coach Dick Vermeil, then to UCLA Coach Terry Donahue and reportedly made overtures to several others — all in vain.

Owner Rankin Smith Sr., trying to put a good face on what had become an embarrassing situation, said, "We looked all over the world, when the best guy for the job was here all the time."

The financial terms of Campbell's four-year contract were not disclosed.

Iowa hosts meet away from home

By Robert Mann
Staff Writer

The biggest Iowa-hosted track meet ever awaits the Hawkeye women's team this weekend, even though the event will not be held in Iowa City.

All told more than 300 athletes are expected to be in attendance as well as about 1,000 spectators.

"A lot of people are really psyched up," Iowa Coach Jerry Hassard said of the event. "A lot of coaches and athletes are looking forward to this."

The 12-team competition — nicknamed the "Home Away From Home" meet — will be held at the UNI-Dome in Cedar Falls, Minnesota, Missouri, Iowa State, Western Illinois, Illinois State, Iowa, Mankato State, Northern Iowa, Northeast Missouri State, Central, Grinnell and Wartburg will all provide near equal competition for one another.

"THERE'S NO SUPER team in the field, but there are many good teams," Hassard said. "Many of the competitions will be very close."

Missouri, Illinois State and Iowa probably have the most overall talent, Hassard said, although Western Illinois, Minnesota, Mankato State and Central have some top individuals.

Women's Track

One of the immediate goals for Iowa in this non-scoring meet is to try to qualify some more Hawkeye athletes for an upcoming invitational competition.

"We have some athletes trying to qualify for the Cornhusker meet next weekend," Hassard said. "It's probably one of the top indoor meets in the nation."

Hoping to qualify this weekend are Renee Doyle in the 3,000-meter run, Sherri Suppelsa and Kim Schnecko in the 1,500, Janet Wodek in the 800, Janelle Jaspers in the high jump and the Iowa mile relay team.

SEVERAL IOWA athletes have already qualified for the meet, which means they had to pass both Nebraska's standards and Iowa's, according to Hassard. They are: Senta Hawkins and Aylecia Simpson in the long sprints; Lynn McMillan and Traci Clausen in the high jump; Davera Taylor in the 300; and the 4 x 880-yard relay team.

Gambol

had a number of such experiences while at Iowa. He plays football all fall, competes in track all winter and shuttles between the two sports every spring.

Top that off with year around weightlifting and it's a wonder the Oxford, Mich., native has the grades to enter law school.

"He wants to be the best," Wheeler said, "as a student, as a shot putter and as a lineman. That's the kind of motivation that has made him No. 1. He's the kind of person that makes coaching worthwhile."

Without question the furious pace and scheduling problems have made it difficult for Gambol to perfect his shot and discus throwing.

"He gets off football and we get him some time in January," Wiczorek said. "He'll be progressing real well and then he goes to spring football. That has kept him from really developing a solid technique. Now that he doesn't have football he will improve quite a bit."

IF GAMBOL IMPROVES by much, he could be a favorite to win the Big Ten shot put title both indoors and outdoors.

He has already one won meet crown this winter, last weekend at Princeton, and has been one of Wheeler's most consistent performers.

Last year Gambol placed fifth in the league indoors and fourth outdoors. His best career throw is 58 feet, 1 1/2 inches, about three feet short of an NCAA qualifying toss.

"I'm looking to win the Big Tens indoors and outdoors this year and to qualify for nationals," Gambol said.

Doing that will require hard work, but little else could be expected from Gambol.

"Everything has to come together," he said. "Right now, I'll hit one part of my technique, but another part won't be there. I just have to put it all together."

In the last 10 years metamorphosis of Iowa's athletics has been a place of City campus. Once merely for its 11th program, the University of Iowa has risen to a more prestigious level as national status earned. Iowa's athletics is actually becoming a national powerhouse. But what may be important to many of us is that our city may finally above the depths known as the University of Idaho City, O.

But wait a minute. This is not a question of how can a city in the middle of getting national attention getting players from country drooling chance to spend for years out of their barren wasteland.

Iowa athletic program ranks among the best

What in the world has happened to Iowa's athletic program?

In the last 10 years or so, a metamorphosis of sorts has been taking place on the Iowa City campus. Once known merely for its liberal arts program, the University of Iowa has risen to a new, much more prestigious level as far as national status is concerned. Iowa's athletic program is actually becoming good...

But wait a minute... how can this be? How can a school out in the middle of nowhere be getting national attention and getting players from across the country drooling for the chance to spend four or five years out of their lives in this barren wasteland.

BEFORE EXAMINING the illogical behavior of these people who flock to this state from places such as California, Texas and Arizona, while many Iowa natives try everything possible to get out, we should take a look at the sports that have given our state such a new found attitude.

First, and probably foremost, is the Hawkeye football program, which has just ventured to its sixth straight bowl game. But wait a minute... wasn't it just a few years ago that the Hawkeyes were one of the doormats in the Big Ten as well as the rest of the nation?

IN FACT, THE Iowa football program was so bad that fans could be seen celebrating in the streets if the Hawkeyes were lucky enough to have a 5-6 season.

Well, those days are in the past as Iowa Coach Hayden Fry has his team to the point of being called "a program" by the ultimate sports announcer, Brent Musberger. Now, according to CBS's chief sports person, "They don't rebuild; they just reload."

But wait just minute... in order to have a great athletic program, a school has to have more than just a great football team.

Well, there is the Iowa basketball program which has made the NCAA tournament seven of the last eight years and even made the Final Four once in that same time span.

BEFORE PROGRESSING too far on this point, we should mention that this is the same team that from 1971 to 1976 couldn't buy a winning record in the Big Ten. But thanks to coaches like Lute Olson and even George Raveling, present coach Tom Davis now has a solid nucleus from which to build his team around, and the future is perhaps unlimited.

While we're on the subject of basketball, let's check out the women's club led by Vivian Stringer. Last season, the lady Hawkeyes broke into the national spotlight by attending their first NCAA tournament in the school's history. Since Stringer's arrival the Hawkeyes have blazed their way to a 74-29 record and a .718 winning percentage.

Checking the statistics before the arrival of our latest coach, the Hawkeyes could muster little more than a .385 winning percentage during a span of nine years.

"WELL, SO WHAT?" many Iowans might say. "It takes more than a good football and basketball program to make a good sports program."

Well, there's the Coach Judith Davidson and the women's field hockey team, which just happened to win the national championship this season.

There's also Coach Tom Dunn and his men's gymnastics squad, which has finished in the top 10 in the national tournament for the last three years.

And there's even the men's swimming team led by Coach Glenn Patton, which has finished in the top 25 in the nation for the last seven years and is on the verge of its best finish ever as it is currently ranked No. 7.

And we'd better not leave out Coach Dan Gable and his wrestling program, which have garnered their ninth straight national title and are on the verge of acquiring their 10th in a row, something no other school has ever done in any sport.

By now all of you who weren't convinced should be willing to admit that Iowa does have a fine athletic program, but the question that still remains is why? Why should a school that most people still can't even locate be considered a breeding ground for such diverse athletic ability?

Well, your guess is as good as mine. Don't strain yourself trying to figure it out, just enjoy it.

Julius Erving, background, is shown here in a game versus Phoenix. Erving will be playing in his last All-Star game Sunday in Seattle.

Erving makes final showing in All-Star tilt

SEATTLE (UPI)—Julius Erving, who has delighted professional basketball fans for 16 seasons, appears in his final All-Star game Sunday at the Kingdome.

The 36-year-old Philadelphia 76er was voted to the East starting line-up by fans, even though his name fails to appear among the league leaders in any statistical category. Those numbers obviously meant little to voters, who placed Erving in the backcourt with Michael Jordan of the Chicago Bulls.

Jordan, the NBA scoring leader through the first half of the season with a 37.2 average (through Feb. 1), received a record 1,141,733 votes. In all 3,017,794 ballots, another record, were cast.

Erving joins Jerry West and Bob Pettit as players to be chosen to the All-Star game every year of their careers. His final appearance in a game with his basketball peers will be his 11th in the NBA. Erving appeared in five American Basketball Association All-Star games as well.

"I've played against a lot of guys a lot of years and had the upper hand," Erving, who was named All-Star MVP in 1977 and 1983, said. "I don't want to stay around, expose myself against guys I once handled very easily, who now I might have to struggle against."

"I HAVE NOT BEEN AN average professional, and this will probably be the last year where I can remain close to my standards," Erving said.

Erving will be junior to one All-Star player, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Los Angeles Lakers was voted to the squad an NBA-record 16th time by the West Conference coaches. Wilt Chamberlain, Bob Cousy and John Havlicek each appeared in 13 NBA All-Star games.

The 39-year-old Abdul-Jabbar, who will back-up starter Akeem Olajuwon of the Houston Rockets, has not set a date for his retirement.

"He's (Abdul-Jabbar) the King of the Hill," Erving said. "He's proven himself going on two decades, and the way he's rolling along, he might be able to play two and-a-half decades if he so elects."

"I think to endure this long — physically, mentally, emotionally and spiritually — he's definitely a special person," Erving said.

The 37th All-Star game will reunite Erving with Moses Malone of the Washington Bullets. Malone, the East starting center making his ninth All-Star appearance, was traded to the Bullets after four years with Philadelphia. Malone will face Olajuwon, whom he tutored when the Nigerian was playing at the University of Houston.

"He's just coming into his prime," Malone said of Olajuwon. "Give him a little more time and he'll take this league apart."

Rounding out the East starters are three-time league MVP Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics and last year's scoring champion Dominique Wilkins of the Atlanta Hawks at forward. Bird, an All-Star MVP in 1982, will appear in his eighth All-Star game and Wilkins his second.

THE EAST, WHICH generally is considered to have the tougher competition from top to bottom, leads the series 24-12 and has won six of the last seven games. The East, behind the play of MVP point guard Isiah Thomas of the Detroit Pistons, defeated the West 139-132 last year at Dallas. Thomas, who has won the All-Star MVP two of the last three years, was named to the squad by the East coaches.

The rest of the West starters include Magic Johnson of the Los Angeles Lakers and Alvin Robertson of the San Antonio Spurs in the backcourt and James Worthy of the LA Lakers and Ralph Sampson of the Rockets at forward. Johnson makes his seventh All-Star appearance, Sampson his fourth and Worthy and Robertson their second each.

The rest of the East squad is comprised of Charles Barkley of Philadelphia and Kevin McHale of Boston at forward; Bill Laimbeer of the Detroit Pistons and Robert Parish of Boston at center, and Maurice Cheeks of Philadelphia and Jeff Malone of Washington at guard. K.C. Jones of Boston will coach the East team.

Marceau creates imagery using just talent and thin air

By B. Gordon
Staff Writer

IRONICALLY, much has been said about what Marcel Marceau has done for silence.

But pantomime is much more than the art of silence; the very word means "complete imitation," or "total mimesis." What Marceau creates in emptiness is as real, or perhaps more real, than what speaking actors use to create the illusion of reality in conventional plays.

I SAW MARCEAU, who will be performing tonight at 8 in Hancher Auditorium, 17 years ago when I was about to enter high school. I can't remember scenery from the plays I saw three months ago, but I can remember the "scenes" he painted with vivid clarity.

I remember best a piece he did, titled something akin to "Genesis," where he mimed the creation of the universe. What I see in my mind's eye is dark blue swirls of cosmic dust congealing into a galaxy. I have no idea just what Marceau did to create that image for me — he is not even part of my memory — but the image has remained.

MARCEAU'S stock-in-trade is the power of imagination. And imagination, because it is inside our heads, works of necessity in silence and emptiness.

His career has been one with the story of the growing respect for mime as an art and entertainment form. Born in Lille, France, and having lost his father to Hitler's Holocaust, he grew fascinated with the silent movies of Charlie Chaplin and Buster Keaton as a child.

After training as an actor for some time, he developed the character of Bip — the white-faced, sad-eyed clown with the crepe flower in his hat who is now completely identified with Marceau. Bip's quasi-comical, hopelessly outclassed attempts at grandiosity are the constant theme of Marceau's stage performances. His many disappointments, tenderly depicted by Marceau, are moments all of us can relate to.

SINCE THEN, Marceau has created a school of pantomime in Paris, which trains up to 40 aspiring mimes in such disciplines as acting and fencing as well as mime. Over the years many other schools have sprung up around the world as Marceau's supreme artistry and relentless performing created interest in the field.

Marceau recently had a reminder of just how long his career has been: Last year, he collapsed onstage with a perforated ulcer. He had to cancel several months of performances; they were the first, in four decades, that he had ever missed. But like the character he created, Marceau is not one to be easily defeated by his own limitations. He has gone right back into his usual staggering tour schedule.

And thank goodness. Marceau is the mark of perfection in not only his own art, but all the arts. Pantomime may seem a strange corner of entertainment, part dance, part drama, until you've seen Marceau. After that, it will be a world inside your head.

Report ordered expelled from I

United Press International

Wall Street Journal reporter Gerald Seib, held in Iran for four days on spy charges, was ordered expelled from Iran's official IRNA news agency and Tehran reported.

But Wall Street Journal reporters said they did not believe Seib had left Iran or might be headed for Hays, Kan., said a source buoyed by reports of his expulsion but had no confirmation he was free.

IRNA quoted an Iranian Ministry official as saying Seib was "expelled from Iran on Wednesday after a judgment of his case ended."

Tehran Radio, mentioning Seib's expulsion, also quoted an Iranian Ministry official as saying Seib "has been expelled from the country" for a judicial inquiry.

THE REPORTS did not say Seib's destination or to make clear whether he had left the country. Seib was merely expelled, IRNA later said, "an informed source" saying Seib "will be leaving Iran Thursday."

Seib's wife, Journal correspondent Barbara Seib, flew to Zurich, Switzerland, from Cairo, Egypt, Wednesday.

In New York, Journal Editor Karen Houlihan said "We've heard the news and hope they're not in contact with the family."

At the Seib family home in Hays, Seib's brother said the family was beginning to celebrate when they received official word of Seib's expulsion from the Iranian government.

"WE'RE ELATED," Seib said. "We're happy this is going on," he said.

Prior to the IRNA announcement, Iranian Prime Minister Mir Hossein Musavi said the government-run Kayhan newspaper that Seib was expelled in two or three days.

The newspaper quoted Seib as saying he tried to get "unusual information" from the front lines of the war zone when he was expelled from the front lines last week.

It said Seib tried to get information on Iranian positions and their "lines" but that it was because of the "alert" of our authorities "who panicked him."

SEIB WAS one of a foreign correspondent in Iran last month who was expelled by Iranian troops in their latest offensive against Iraq. The reports were taken under a provision — the front lines brought back to Tehran — ordered to leave the country by Jan. 31 — last Saturday.

Seib and several other journalists requested visa extensions from an Iranian official who said they should be able to extend their stay "without serious problems."
