Farmers struggle as taxes increase
by James Coley

Bob Ars is a Johnson County pineapple farmer and has been at it all his life. Next year, Ars plans to sell off the proceeds he hopes to get from his crop and retire. Ars is one of the many farm owners who feel the burden of increased taxes.

"I've still got to pay property taxes on the land and the house I've been on for years that I wouldn't be able to do if I wasn't running a farm," Ars said. "I've been on here for over 25 years, and I've always had to pay the property taxes."

As a member of the Johnson County Farm Bureau and the Iowa Farmers Union, Ars is strongly in favor of cutting property taxes for county residents. Ars says the Johnson County Board of Supervisors should consider reducing the property tax rate.

"The county is too high," Ars said. "When you talk about the county going down in numbers, we can't afford to lose that funding."

Ars and McCartney represent the farming community of the Johnson County area. According to the county budget, property taxes are the largest source of revenue for the county. But Ars says if the number of property owners continues to decline, the county may be forced to cut services.

There is extreme pressure on the county to reduce property taxes economically, but there is also the need to keep up services in the rural areas.

Veto prompts slimmed-down fund package
by Susan Teare

The bonding proposal for the U.S. Laser Center and other projects is in jeopardy because the Governor vetoed the proposal. The veto places the projects in a state of limbo, awaiting a new proposal.

This is due to a series of events that came before the Governor's veto. The Governor vetoed the proposal because it included projects that were not funded.

The Governor's veto means that the projects will have to be reevaluated and revised. This could delay the projects for an undetermined amount of time.

The Correctional list named to the nation’s Powell Award for 2008, which will be awarded to the National Center for Correctional Education, was announced by the Illinois State Journal. The award is given to the organization that has made the most significant contribution to the field of correctional education. Pittman was selected for his work on the Illinois State Journal, which is the state’s primary source of news and information on the criminal justice system.

Using data compiled by the National Center for Correctional Education, Pittman was selected for the award because of his contributions to the field of correctional education. Pittman has been a journalist for the Illinois State Journal for more than 20 years and has covered a wide range of topics, including corrections, criminal justice, and public policy. He is a graduate of the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign and has received numerous awards for his work, including the Journalist of the Year award from the Illinois Press Association.

UI library gets new computer system

By Brian O’Hearn

The University of Iowa library has purchased a new computer system that will allow the library to enter and access information more efficiently. The new system, called PaperChase, will be used to manage the library’s collections, including books, journals, and databases. The system will also allow the library to provide online access to patrons, allowing them to view and search the library’s collections from anywhere.

The library currently uses a manual system to catalog and manage its collections, which can be time-consuming and inefficient. PaperChase will allow the library to enter new materials into the system quickly and easily, and will also allow patrons to search for materials more efficiently. The library plans to roll out the system gradually, starting with the law library and expanding to other departments in the future.
County supervisors defend rural property tax increase

By June Spain

Editor

Although many Johnson County residents are upset at the increase in local property taxes, county officials said rural taxes have increased more in recent years.

"I feel for the people in the rural areas," a county resident said. "But if you're going to have county services, you'll have to pay for it." Other residents said rural taxpayers are more sophisticated and better able to take care of themselves.

"It gives them a better chance to deal with it," county Supervisor Tom Muller said. "If they are going to be sent to a nursing home, they can pay for their own care."

Another example of decentralization is the county Board of Supervisors decision to give the property tax receipts to local governments.

EXEMPLARY. The Johnson County Elderly Services Board decided to retain its own county tax revenue, and Johnson County Board of Supervisors decided to give the property tax receipts to local governments.

BUDGET. The county's proposed budget for fiscal year 1988-89 includes a 7% property tax increase.

HIGH blood pressure is serious business.

Councl approves licenses; food vendors set up shop

By Carol Marshall

Dail News

Shoppers strolling through the downtown pedestrian mall will see another new sign appearing this week. The signs will be advertising the new food vendors who will be setting up shop in the mall.

Outdoor food vendors have come from a variety of places to entice downtown pedestrians with the aromas of their culinary offerings that range from tacos to barbeque sandwiches.

Five mobile cart food vendors applications were approved by the Iowa City Council last week. The Hawkeye Times, a semi-weekly publication owned by Tom Hallet, was also approved a permit.

HARRY Bremer, who has had the past two years of his career in Iowa City, was recently granted a permit to operate his cart. He said the permit was granted after his application was approved by the Iowa City Council.

Inauspicious opening

As most baseball fans know, last Monday marked the opening day of the 1987 baseball season. Opening Week this year proved to be somewhat of an auspicious beginning in that something that the start of this season was not. Al Campanis was promoted to a field job.

When interviewed on ABC's Nightline, Campanis made the mistake of saying the reason Michaels were underrepresented in some of the managerial positions in the majors was because, "they may not have some of the necessary skills."

That comment, which was the beginning of a three-week discussion on an already unpopular subject, was enough to ignite a change in the position of Los Angeles Dodgers general manager.

In the wake of that comment, Dodgers owners, management and players voted to promote Al Campanis from vice president of player personnel to general manager of the Dodgers organization.

Said Campanis, "Ever since that incident, I have been on the lookout for ways to improve the organization and its operation."

The decision to change the general manager position was made by the Dodgers organization, which is the same one that made the decision to promote Campanis in 1982.

The Dodgers organization has made the decision to promote Al Campanis from vice president of player personnel to general manager of the Dodgers organization.

Campanis was appointed to the position of vice president of player personnel in 1982 after serving as a scout for the Los Angeles Dodgers.

He is the first black person to be appointed to the position of general manager in the major leagues.

As a result of Al Campanis' appointment as general manager, the Dodgers organization has made the decision to promote Campanis to the position of vice president of player personnel.

The decision to promote Campanis to the position of vice president of player personnel was made by the Los Angeles Dodgers organization.

Parents' Day surprise honors senior's courageous mother

Tuttle's story began in a war-torn Vietnam. When 14-year-old Nguyen Van Pham decided to leave Vietnam in 1968, she wanted to help others and that is so important," Tuttle said. "It was exactly what she wanted to do for me."

The hospital staff, patients and cancer survivors in that room in 1968 also made the decision. Nguyen Van Pham, the first of Tuttle's patients, was a young girl who came to the hospital for her cancer treatments.

"It was a special relationship," said Tuttle. "The hospital staff, patients and cancer survivors were always there for me. They were my family."

Tuttle also mentions the importance of the strong relationships she built with her patients. "It was a special relationship," she said. "The hospital staff, patients and cancer survivors were always there for me. They were my family.

The hospital's growth and development were driven by Tuttle's dedication to providing excellent care. "It was a special relationship," she said. "The hospital staff, patients and cancer survivors were always there for me. They were my family.

She also credits the hospital's success to the dedication of her staff and the support of the community. "It was a special relationship," she said. "The hospital staff, patients and cancer survivors were always there for me. They were my family.

Tuttle's impact on the hospital and the city of Dubuque is immeasurable. "It was a special relationship," she said. "The hospital staff, patients and cancer survivors were always there for me. They were my family."

State may see Amtrak re-route

WASHINGTON (UP) Amtrak said Monday the company may have to change the route of the Sunset Limited, which runs between Chicago and Miami, in order to improve service and ridership.

Amtrak said it is considering several options, including changing the route to avoid congested areas and adding new stops.

The Sunset Limited is one of the oldest and most popular train routes in the country, with stops in 19 states.

The company said it is looking at alternatives to the current route, which includes stops in Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, and Denver.

Iowa dioecesis will award prize to Tutu

DAVENPORT (UP) — South African Archbishop Desmond Tutu will receive a prestigious peace prize from the Iowa Catholic Bishops' Conference in recognition of his work to promote peace and understanding among people of different races.

The award, which is given every year at a gathering of Iowa bishops, recognizes the work of someone who has made significant contributions to the cause of peace and understanding.

Tutu has been a staunch defender of human rights and has worked tirelessly to promote peace and reconciliation in South Africa, where he was the first black South African to serve as a bishop.

The award will be presented at the Iowa Catholic Bishops' Conference's annual meeting on April 13.

The conference has recognized Tutu's efforts to promote peace and understanding in South Africa, and has called on his passionate advocacy for human rights and social justice.

The conference has also praised Tutu's work as a leader in the struggle against apartheid and his commitment to promoting reconciliation and peaceful coexistence.

The award is a testament to Tutu's dedication to the cause of peace and understanding, and his tireless efforts to promote human rights and social justice in South Africa and beyond.

The conference has called on all Iowa Catholics to join in supporting Tutu's work and efforts to promote peace and understanding around the world.
Nakasone's sales tax gives opposition strong election

TOKYO (UPI) - Opposition parties scored impressive gains on the governing Liberal Democratic Party in national elections in southern Japan, Prime Minister Nakasone signaled the end of an unpopular sales tax.

The losses to the Liberal Democratic Party in its first national test of strength in nine months could combine into a national test of strength in Parliament, Nakasone said. It meant seven days advance notice was required.

Texaco files bankruptcy suit

NEW YORK CITY — Texas-
co, the nation's third-largest oil company, announced Sunday that it was filing for bankruptcy protection because of a "grave recession in the petroleum industry," according to a statement by their chief executive officer.

The statement released by Texaco said the move was made in consultation with Pennzoil Co., the company Texaco said it had bought 40 milk.

The company, which ranked first in production under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, said it will work towards an "amended plan of organization." The company said it had enough money to pay their debts.

The statement added, "We are convinced that the bankruptcy filing is a necessary step to return the company to a position of strength." The company has asked for a stay of its bankruptcy case.

Derailment causes toxic chemical leak

people were treated for a head injury after a train carrying toxic chemicals derailed.

The train, carrying the chemical 234,456 which is highly toxic and can cause cancer, derailed in a wooded area near Pittsburgh early Sunday.

The chemicals were contained in a single rail car and there were no reports of injuries from the spill.

The toxic chemical is used in the production of plastics and rubber products.

Hawks storm to Big Ten lead

By Mike Trik

There is a new attitude in the Iowa basketball team and as a result there are new results. The Hawks have won two straight games after losing two in a row and it's a different story now.

The Hawks are now 7-6 overall and 2-3 in the Big Ten, the same record as the Wolverines and the Buckeyes. They are close to the top of the conference and just two games out of first place.

In the past two games, the Hawks have played well on defense and have held their opponents to an average of 65 points. They have also shot better from the field, scoring 42 percent in the last two games.

The Hawks have also been able to score more points in the paint, which has helped them to score more points overall.

Tharp troupe transcends dance forms

The 15-member company does not just take on Fool for Love, but also in its dancing, according to Karen Hoyt, dance director of the company dancers. "Sometimes you feel you're doing on the stage what the actors do on the stage," Hoyt said. "The dancers are all carefully planned. During the Upper Room, for example, there is a large distance to jump across to your partner," the au.

Tharp begins her composing with the dancers who have already tried out the company. "They often change, especially as new members with varied talents come into the troupe. "Tuyl Tharp may see someone who speaks to her, but she may never see someone different, Jones said."

LIKE MANY choreographers, Tharp starts with the score. The music is already chosen, but it also incorporates Fool for Love with a repetitive quality about it. Tharp's music is complex, in Hancher Auditorium.

The only music in "Fool for Love" is the music of the show, and before hitting the amplifiers, it kreates the rhythm and sets the tones of the show and the dancers. The music sets the tone for each other for the rest of the production. "It's extremely intimate, a close-up look at the inside of a car. You can't figure out how it works when you see it. It's the car it goes," Jones said. Although there have been two performances already, "Fool for Love" has never been seen on a stage until today. Jones said that she had never seen a work in such a degree. There are no comparisons.

"The company's romantic ballroom dancing to Duke Ellington's 'Love, Jones.'" The dance is refined and elegant ball gown designed by the dancer in the upper. The work is a further indication of Tharp's strong links with popular dance. Tharp is not torquing with the group, but the students have been with the company for years and knows her style well. She has been with the company for five years and knows of Willie by one critic as "an American heroic type are well, but allows the play to branch out. Steven Arnold gives her best performance during Eddie's long explanations. Eddie and May are hopelessly in love, "Counselor" (Dean Martin) (Ross White) as Kurt Christianen's elegant ball gown designed by the dancer in the upper.
