Chemical leaks contaminate 2 U.S. cities

Toxic cloud sends 95 to Gary hospitals

GARY, Ind. (UPI)—A storage tank leaking hydrochloric acid mixed with rain created a toxic cloud that sent nearly 100 people to hospitals and forced more than 2,000 people to evacuate a 3-mile-square area of Gary for about eight hours Tuesday, officials said.

The storage tank of diluted hydrochloric acid, used to clean the inside of tanker trucks at a Gary car and truck wash, began leaking toxic fumes about 8 a.m., and officials ordered about 1,000 people to evacuate the area an hour later.

Shifting winds later forced another 1,000 out of the area, officials said. The evacuees were allowed to begin returning to their homes about 4:30 p.m., officials said.

The rainfall reacted with the 42-percent hydrochloric acid solution, creating the toxic fumes.

A total of 95 people, ranging in age from 3 to 73, sought treatment at three Gary hospitals for headaches, dizziness, nausea and hyperventilation.

Methodist Hospital spokesman John Canright said Dennis Simpson, 31, of Gary was admitted in critical condition with those symptoms.

St. Mary's Hospital spokesman Fredrick Ott said Elenora Matthews, 37, of Gary was hospitalized in good condition and a second patient was expected to be admitted to the hospital.

Garland Lanier, the Gary Civil Defense director, said authorities patched the leak and had the situation almost completely under control by about 2 p.m.

A hazardous materials team from the Hammond Fire Department assisted Gary officials in capping the leak near 15th and Michigan streets in Gary adjacent to Interstate 65. Traffic was snarled on the highway because feeder routes and exit ramps were closed near the scene, officials said.

The evacuations included two schools in the area with about 1,000 students.

Salt Lake City solvent spill leaves 1 dead

NORTH SALT LAKE, Utah (UPI)—A toxic solvent gushed from a ruptured pipe at an industrial chemical lab near downtown Salt Lake City Tuesday, killing the son of the company president and injuring up to 10 others stricken by fumes.

Killed was Lee Hodson, 37, Salt Lake City, chief vice president of Hodson Laboratories Inc., where about 2,000 gallons of the liquid spilled in an industrial park area about 7:20 a.m., officials said.

Officials said up to 10 other people suffered breathing problems and other ailments from the fumes emitted by the escape of trichloroethylene — a toxic, colorless liquid — at the suburban manufacturing plant.

All of the stricken were either emergency response personnel or passersby.

North Salt Lake Mayor DeWayne Simmons said more than 1,000 people were affected by a 2-mile evacuation of the area near the facility, which makes chemicals used in concrete construction, for more than five hours.

"We're estimating that 2,000 gallons spilled," Simmons said at a noon news conference. "But there's no evidence that any of the chemical got into the storm drain. We feel the situation is under control." Officials said the fumes were heavier than air and were primarily contained within the building. There was no danger to Salt Lake City-area residents, they said.

Owen Hogle, company vice president, said Lee Hodson was transferring the toxic solvent used to make concrete sealer between a 1,200-gallon storage tank and a 200-gallon tank when a pipe ruptured.

"Rather than following our normal procedures, which are immediate evacuation or putting on breathing or oxygen gear, he went to try and turn the valve off on the line and was overcome by the fumes within 15 seconds and collapsed in the draining solvent," Hogle said. "There's not much you can do after that."

Gorbachev offers arms concession

MOSCOW (UPI)—Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev said Tuesday the Soviet Union is willing to quickly remove short-range nuclear missiles targeted at Western Europe, eliminating the key stumbling block to a major arms control agreement, the official Tass news agency reported.

Tass said Gorbachev made the offer to Secretary of State George Shultz during a Kremlin meeting in an effort to wrap up an agreement that would remove both superpowers' medium-range nuclear missiles from Europe.

Shultz, according to the Soviet account, again insisted on the U.S. right to match the present Soviet superiority in the shorter-range missile force.

Gorbachev went beyond the issue of shorter-range missiles, indicating that his proposal extended to eliminating tactical weapons, another class of nuclear weapons that NATO allies regard as essential to balance a Soviet advantage in conventional weapons, Tass said.

"WE ARE PREPARED to eliminate also battlefield tactical missiles," the agency quoted him as saying. The tactical weapons are an even shorter range of missiles in which the Soviets hold about a 5-1 advantage over NATO.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman said only that Shultz and Gorbachev had spent a "considerable amount of time" on the subject of intermediate-range missiles, the arms control area most ripe for a superpower agreement.

The State Department did not elaborate on details of the meeting reported by Tass. In California, where President Ronald Reagan was vacationing, the White House also refused to elaborate.

Tass said Gorbachev "expressed the readiness to record in an agreement on medium-range missiles the Soviet Union's obligation to eliminate its shorter-range missiles within a relatively short and clearly defined time frame."

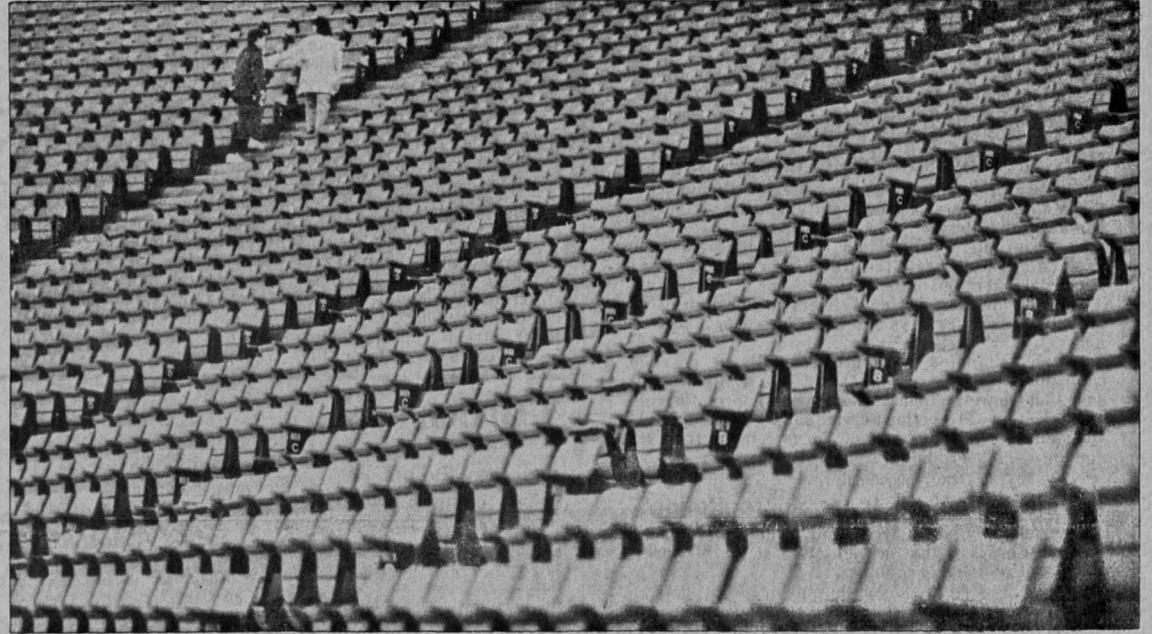

"NEVERTHELESS," it continued, "Shultz insisted on the United States' right to create such weapons and deploy them in amounts approximately equal" to the number of Soviet missiles.

U.S. officials said the United States has never proposed the elimination of shorter-range missiles, only a right to match Soviet deployments in the absence of negotiated reductions.

Shorter-range missiles have become the major stumbling block to a superpower agreement that would eliminate U.S. medium-range missiles from Western Europe in exchange for the removal of Soviet medium-range missiles targeted for that region.

The Reagan administration contends that because the Soviets have between 130 and 150 of the shorter-range missiles on the continent and the United States has none, the United States should be given the right to match the Soviet forces.

Washington has said it would want the right to do this either by converting medium-range missiles being phased out under an arms agreement with Moscow or building new shorter-range missiles.

Teamsters lose Systems bid

By Carol Monaghan
Staff Writer

Systems Unlimited Inc. workers turned away the Teamsters at the polls Tuesday when they defeated a vote to unionize their health care group homes by a margin of more than 4-1.

"I'm so thrilled," Donna Hinkle, associate director of Systems Unlimited Inc., said minutes after the votes were tallied. "We've worked hard for this."

Of the 172 workers who voted, 144 workers voted against the union while 72 voted in its favor. Nearly 280 of the 327 workers Systems Unlimited employs were eligible to vote.

Systems Unlimited operates about 40 group homes and apartments in the Iowa City area for mentally and/or physically disabled children and adults.

Systems workers who organized to install the union said the defeat took them by surprise.

"THE VOTE WAS designed to be a fair representation of employees' feelings," Helene McClain, a Systems worker for more than eight months, said.

Local 238 Teamster business representative Bill Lyman said Systems management campaigned hard against his union.

"Systems, at the last minute, sent a flier to employees that admitted they were not handling relations right and promised to handle them better in the future," Lyman said.

Several Systems employees said they voted against unionization solely because of the Teamsters.

"I think we needed the union, but not the Teamsters," UI senior Kim Davison, who has worked at Systems since last August, said.

Davison said the Teamsters gave workers different answers when questioned about the unionization.

"We need to check out other unions," she said. "We need to find out if there are other unions more experienced with health care."

EMPLOYEES WHO worked to get union representation said they hoped the vote would persuade management to take notice of their grievances and to improve working conditions.

"The whole point of this push was to get better care for the client," McClain said. "I am sorry it had to come up to this extreme for them to realize there are problems."

Workers sympathetic to the union complain a high employee turnover rate disrupts the client's care and progress.

Associate Systems director Hinkle said the union vote did bring attention to problems of communication between management and workers.

"This has truly been a pain," Hinkle said. "What is frustrating to us is that workers were upset enough and went outside for help instead of trying to get through internally."

She also said there may be more training to prepare workers.

Workers, both those who voted for the union and against it, said they hope some changes come as the result of yesterday's vote.

"If Systems does improve its working conditions, then we have won," Systems worker Jeff Potter, who helped organize the union, said. "I am really hopeful through our drive management will take more note how they treat their employers."

Budget revision attracts UI backers

By Monica Seigel
University Editor

As the U.S. Senate prepares to debate 1988 fiscal year budget resolutions, UI student government leaders said Tuesday they plan to lobby for a budget that will favor funding for higher education programs.

The House passed a budget resolution last week that would raise $18 billion in new taxes and would divide $17.5 billion in spending cuts between defense and domestic programs.

"It isn't great, but it's better than what (President Ronald) Reagan proposed," UI Student Senate President Joe Hansen said of the House's budget proposal. "Now we'll have to see what's going to happen in the Senate."

According to Gregg Shultz, UI campus director of United Students of Iowa, a budget resolution proposed by Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., is one that looks the most favorable to student aid programs.

"THERE ARE basically four budget resolutions in the Senate right now," Shultz said. "The Chiles one is the best because it keeps funding for education programs pretty much where it has been."

Mary Preston, legislative director for the United States Student Association, agreed, saying she sees the Chiles resolution as the most likely to win Senate approval. Preston said the resolution would appropriate the same amount for student aid programs as was appropriated for fiscal year 1987, plus a 5 percent inflationary increase.

"That's the one we're going to be targeting," Preston said, adding students are going to lobby for an amendment to whatever budget plan is passed — an amendment by Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., and John Danforth, R-Mo., which calls for an increase in higher education funding of $1.7 billion.

HANSEN SAID any of the budget alternatives would be better than the one Reagan proposed, which cut funding for higher education programs by 48 percent compared to the 1987 fiscal year.

"It was a ridiculous proposal," Hansen said. "I'm absolutely certain Congress is going to come up with something better than that. I know that's what we're going to have to work for."

Hansen added, however, that he anticipates conflict within Congress concerning the tax increase to increase funding for domestic programs.

"There are congressmen who are going to have people in their constituencies pointing fingers and saying, 'You voted for higher taxes,' he said.

USC president apologizes for spending

University of South Carolina President James Holderman is attracting national interest, including attention from CBS's "60 Minutes," over alleged discretionary spending abuses.

Norman Gorin, producer of the CBS investigative news show, attended a campus meeting which was mistakenly advertised as a discussion of the discretionary expenditures issue. Gorin would not say what the show wanted to cover, but did say he wasn't interested in the tuition increases Holderman discussed at the public meeting.

Holderman reportedly used public funds to buy eight personal gifts over the past three years. Discretionary spending records released Feb. 12 showed Holderman repaid about $1,011 spent on personal gifts. However, a Charlotte, N.C., newspaper reported the money wasn't repaid until March 6, 10 days after the newspaper asked to see proof of the reimbursement.

Pete Denton, senior vice president of USC business and finance, said the discrepancies stemmed from a lengthy review of documents and bills to be reimbursed by Holderman. Denton said the gift money had been inadvertently paid from public funds instead of personal funds.

Holderman has since apologized for his sometimes "excessive" use of public funds.

"In hindsight, I realize that this method of recognizing university friends, while done with the single purpose of moving this institution forward very rapidly, was, in some instances, excessive, and I am sorry for this error," Holderman said at a board of trustees meeting, emphasizing the board knew of his discretionary fund gift-giving.

Michigan honors Mandela with degree

The University of Michigan Board of Regents went against a regents policy in granting imprisoned South African leader Nelson Mandela an honorary degree in absentia.

The regents maintain their decision was not influenced by recent student outrage against racism, but student activists proclaimed the measure their first victory against racism.

For the past year and a half, the regents refused to grant Mandela an honorary degree because he could not attend commencement, and because the university has traditionally avoided taking sides on political issues.

Cartoon strip sparks campus enterprise

A group of University of New Mexico students have taken a Doonesbury cartoon feature to heart and set up a condom delivery service on campus.

Joe Quartell, a senior and founder of the Mercury Protection Service, said the group is faring well after its first weekend of business.

The confidential service delivers to dormitories and greek houses on Fridays and Saturdays from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m.

"We just handled it as professionally as possible," Quartell said of the first weekend. "We wanted to make sure that we weren't making (customers) uncomfortable."

The Mercury Protection Service sells only condoms, but Quartell said a University of Texas campus firm sells condoms and spermicidal sponges.

Florida vet school loses accreditation

Florida's only "fully accredited" school of veterinary medicine has lost that accreditation status because of space and ventilation problems.

A report by a national team showed long-term space and toxic fume problems were severe enough to warrant disciplinary action against the University of Florida school. The report also said the school has inadequate research and teaching equipment, which has not been properly maintained.

UF administrators say the loss in prestige will not affect this year's graduates, and may be a blessing in disguise if state legislators see the loss as a sign that the school needs funds to add building space.

Veterinary Medicine Dean Kirk Gelatt said an all-out effort has begun to bring the school's standards and equipment up to par.

Since last May toxic fumes have seeped into the school's ventilation system, making more than 200 workers ill. To correct the problem, air and exhaust vents carrying toxic fumes are being moved farther apart and a new roof is being installed.

UI may extend language requirements

By AnJanette Brush
Staff Writer

Future UI students may spend more time studying a foreign language if the Faculty Assembly votes in favor of a change in the present foreign language graduation requirements today.

A proposal to be presented by the UI Educational Policy Committee recommends requiring two years of college-level foreign language study or the equivalent for all liberal arts students.

Currently, two years of a language are required for only the bachelor of arts degree, and only one year is required for the degree of bachelor of science, bachelor of fine arts, bachelor of music or bachelor of general studies.

According to UI College of Liberal Arts Associate Dean James Lindberg, the proposal originated in the UI Foreign Language Council.

THE COUNCIL felt that a two-year foreign language requirement would benefit the development and encouragement of foreign language study, Lindberg said.

UI English Professor Don Marshall, secretary of the council, said the requirement would "reaffirm" the UI's commitment to liberal arts.

According to Marshall, students now avoid or postpone studying a foreign language, which he says is an important part of their education.

"Foreign language is a reminder that it's a very large world we live in; it makes different cultures and ways of life a reality to those who study it," Marshall said. "Language provides for reflection on one's own culture. Even if it's forgotten, you are a different person for having done it, and that difference stays with you."

THE COUNCIL recommends the requirement be put into effect for students entering the UI in fall 1989, coordinating with the introduction of new Liberal Arts College admissions requirements. Also recommended is a review of the requirement at the end of its first five years.

Some UI students, however, feel the adoption of the new requirement would place a burden on students with majors or degrees that already allow limited hours of electives and make graduation in eight semesters difficult.

"Students majoring in the natural sciences or fine arts would have a hard time with the additional semester hours," said UI junior Ann Naffier, co-chairwoman of the Liberal Arts Students Association Academic Affairs Committee and member of the council. "For them, the classes they are already required to take are more important than foreign language."

Former Iowa City Manager Neil Berlin and Iowa City Police Chief Harvey Miller are being sued by a former Iowa City police officer who claims they prevented him from receiving his pension.

Robert A. Vevera, who worked for the Iowa City Police Department for 14 years, was dismissed in May 20, 1975, for misconduct after an altercation with his supervisor, court records state. Vevera needed to work one more year to receive his pension.

Vevera appealed his case to the Iowa City Civil Service Commission, which recommended he be granted a leave of absence without pay to give him the 15 years needed for him to be eligible for pension.

But a ruling handed down in Johnson County District Court states the Board of Police Trustees, not the commission, had the authority to decide the case. The board ruled they could only grant him credit for one month's leave without pay. Vevera's lawyer, William Meardon, said the board gave him the one month credit with the idea that Vevera would have to return to work to receive his pension.

Vevera wanted to return but he was elected to the Iowa City Council for six years, Meardon said. According to Meardon, Vevera was not allowed back on the police force after the six years.

"I think they didn't want him back at all," Meardon said.

Meardon said his client is not asking to be rehired by the police department, but is suing for the amount in his pension fund.

"I don't think there is any way to make someone take someone back," Meardon said. "They ought to at least give him what he has in his pension fund. We don't know how much money is in his account."

Current Iowa City Manager Stephen Atkins said he did not know why Berlin was being sued, but said it might be because Berlin issued the ruling on the board's decision.

Berlin's lawyer, David Brown, was unavailable for comment.

Council defines faculty terms

By Shawn Plank
Staff Writer

The policy for renewable term appointments for UI administrators was clarified Tuesday by the UI Faculty Council after the UI Faculty Senate returned the motion to the council last week.

The senate approved the resolution 26-17, April 7, but sent it back to the council because it was too general, senators said. The resolution called for all academic administrators, including the president, vice presidents, deans and department heads, to be appointed for specified, renewable terms.

The council clarified the resolution, asking the senate to deliberate separately on each of the four groups of administrators — the president, the vice presidents, the deans of the colleges and the departmental heads. If the senate agrees to the renewable terms, its request will be forwarded to the state Board of Regents, the body that approves administrative nominations.

THE COUNCIL ALSO passed a resolution that would make the proposed policy effective campus-wide. Some colleges, such as the colleges of Medicine and Dentistry, however, oppose the terms, and wish to be exempt from a proposed policy to maintain their autonomy.

"If this resolution is defeated, there will be a lot of complex questions," council member and UI English Professor Don Marshall said.

To solve the questions, a resolution drafted by council member and UI Law Professor Michael Green was passed that would send the resolution back to council for refinement if the senate defeats it.

UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Richard Remington said offices such as associate vice presidencies and assistant deans would not be covered by the proposed renewable terms because they have appointments within the academic departments.

A UI FACULTY Council committee recommended a policy to establish five-year renewable terms for administrators to make dismissal of poor administrators easier. Currently, a majority of faculty members within a college must express dissatisfaction with an administrator to have the dismissal considered.

Remington also answered questions from council members about the resignation of UI President James O. Freedman, who announced Monday he will accept the president's job at Dartmouth College.

Critical language program selects 6

By John Bartenhagen
Staff Writer

Six UI students have been selected to participate in a UI Critical Languages Program that would train them to teach Japanese, Chinese and Russian in at least six Iowa school districts, including Iowa City.

The five-year program begins this summer and is funded by a Ford Foundation Grant providing each student with financial aid for two summers of intensive language training, one year of study abroad and a final year of advanced study.

Each participant in the program is obligated to teach at an Iowa high school for three years after graduation.

UI Associate Dean of Liberal Arts James Lindberg said the program was initiated because of a need to increase the availability of these languages in high schools.

"When compared to the three traditional languages (Spanish, French and German), Russian, Japanese and Chinese are newer world languages in terms of the importance of information exchange," Lindberg said. "U.S. citizens must become knowledgeable about these cultures and the first step is to learn their languages."

RUSSELL P. DAMON, a UI graduate in English education, said the program is necessary because of a changing world market.

"From a practical standpoint, it's going to put us on even footing when we trade with these people," he said. "In the past, foreigners either had to speak English or they didn't deal. I don't think that will hold true in the future."

But an increased understanding of cultural differences is every bit as valuable as economic concerns, Damon said.

"For a long time, the American people have stereotyped Orientals. We see them as the 'yellow horde' and not as people," he said.

UI freshman Lisa Brinkmeyer said Asian countries have become more important in U.S. trading and politics.

"I think the Asian market is especially important to Iowa because of our large grain surpluses," she said. "Better communication can only improve the situation."

LINDBERG SAID the program is the only one of its kind. In the second phase of the program, the Ford Foundation will subsidize teacher salaries to reduce the financial burden placed on participating school districts, he said.

Professor Ray Parrott, chairman of the UI Russian Department, said the Ford Foundation selected the UI as an experimental site because of the weakness of language programs here.

"Iowa hasn't been in the forefront of international language programs for a long time," Parrott said. "They figured if this program was successful in Iowa, it would make it anywhere."

Parrott said the program should increase information exchange between the U.S. and other cultures on at least a small scale.

"The more direct contact Americans have with the Soviets, the higher the chances are that the Soviet people will hear something other than the propaganda they are fed as a daily diet," he said.

LINDBERG ADDED strained relations between the two countries increase the importance of improved communication.

"Quite often when a country is perceived as an adversary, it makes knowledge of that language a valuable commodity," he said.

Damon and UI graduate Jean McDonald will study Chinese, Brinkmeyer and UI sophomore Karl Hack will study Japanese, and Watzke and UI sophomore Kristen Reynolds will study Russian.

Changing of the guard

UI President James O. Freedman announced his resignation Monday. While the news was surprising, it was not entirely unexpected, for in recent months Freedman had been mentioned as a candidate for the presidency of several major universities.

Naturally, the reaction to Freedman's decision to accept the presidency at Dartmouth College was mixed. Most people in the UI community were pragmatic, expressing their regret at losing an eminent scholar, but recognizing the outstanding career opportunities represented by the Dartmouth post. Such comments, after all, are the polite, safe thing to say at times like this. Others were less cautious and admitted to feeling betrayed, since Freedman had only recently expressed his commitment to the UI.

But the people of the UI should remember that life as they know it will continue in the post-Freedman era. As UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Richard Remington noted, "The University of Iowa is not just President Freedman."

Furthermore, it is worth pointing out that Freedman's five years at the UI will not go down as this university's most glorious. Sour grapes? Perhaps ... but true, nonetheless.

To Freedman's credit, he battled against state funding cuts, defended the liberal arts and expanded the UI's international studies programs. But, in other areas, Freedman failed to establish the UI as a leader of social conscience. Why was his support of anti-apartheid activists only lukewarm? Why did he testify in favor of the nomination of Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist despite lingering allegations of Rehnquist's unimpressive civil rights record? Why did he not address student concerns about CIA recruitment on campus?

These are important moral questions deserving of a university president's consideration and Freedman could have been a more forceful spokesman on these and other social issues.

But now, as Freedman brings his UI tenure to a close, it is only reasonable to wish him the best of luck at Dartmouth. Certainly, his new position offers exciting academic opportunities. As for the UI community, it should not be overlooked that this university has significant resources of its own which will attract first-rate candidates for its presidency.

Justice prevails

Yesterday's announcement that 15-year-old Jody Collins of Newton, Iowa, will not be forced to stand trial for the death of a junior high classmate is a reassuring sign. Collins had been charged with involuntary manslaughter and serious assault following a hallway fight with Justin "Charlie" Cupples last fall. But after hearing evidence presented last week, a Jasper County judge ruled Monday that Collins should instead be placed on probation.

The ruling, made by District Associate Judge Thomas Mott, is encouraging for two reasons. First, it shows that judges, although under a great deal of outside pressure, can make rational decisions.

The media attention the case received was phenomenal. Two weeks after the scuffle, the Des Moines Register had run a half dozen articles about the case, many of which appeared on the front page. These reports, coupled with harsh comments from Cupples' family concerning the police investigation of the fight, immediately made the case controversial.

Despite this coverage, Mott was able to set aside emotions and decide that a one-year probation term rather than a three-year probation — the stiffest sentence Collins could have received if found guilty of the charges — made more sense.

The decision is also encouraging because it recognizes that, in some instances, the personal feelings of guilt and pain a person suffers following such a tragedy can be as punitive as a prison term.

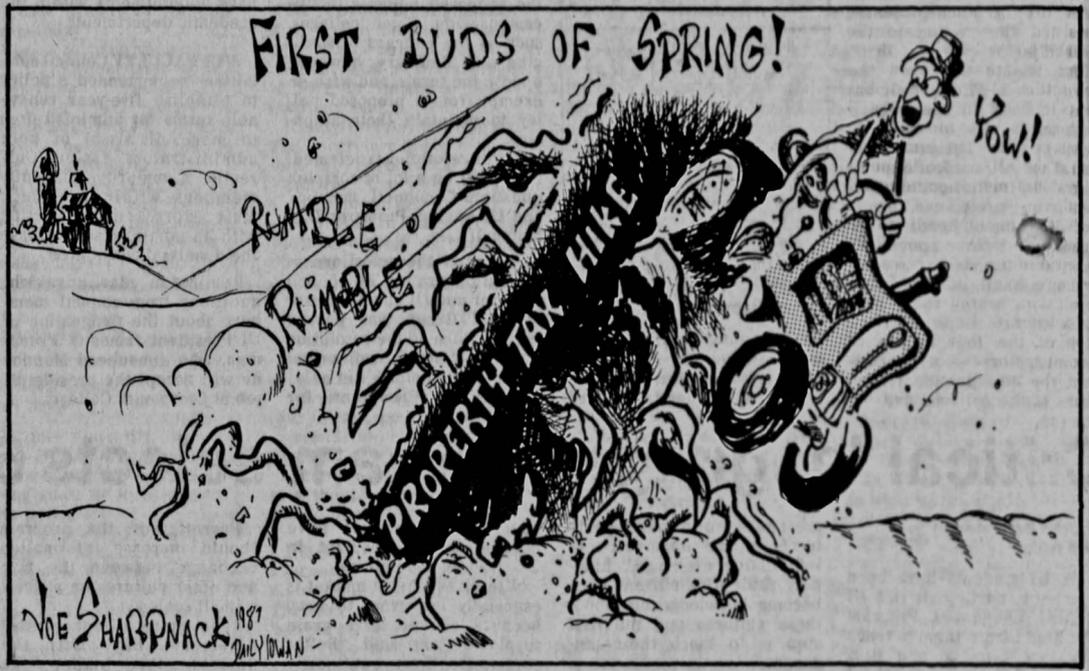

"It was just regular seventh-grade stuff," Cupples told reporters shortly after Collin's death. "I'm sorry that I hit him and I'm sorry that he died," he added with tears in his eyes.

An apology will not bring Cupples back nor begin to ease the pain Collins' family and friends still feel, but putting a young boy with no previous criminal record on trial in order to possibly grant him a longer probation term does not make sense. The peer alienation and feelings of shame that will most likely remain with Collins the rest of his life is punishment enough.

Setting the record straight

By Monica Seigel

YESTERDAY my name was in the New York Times.

Late Monday afternoon a reporter from the Times called me for a "positive comment" about UI President James O. Freedman and his announcement that he will leave the UI to be president at Dartmouth College.

As tempting as this potential brush with fame (I mean, wow, the New York Times!) was to me, I suggested the reporter call elsewhere for a quote. I gave him the phone number of the student government office and the names of a few individuals who perhaps know more about the president than I.

But the reporter was persistent. He began to ask me things like, "Would you say the president has a calming influence?"

"Well, yeah, I guess so," I said. "Can you be more specific," he asked.

"No," I said. "Not really."

I BEGAN TO REALIZE that the reporter already had his

From the Metro Desk

story written long before he called me, and I think the reporter began to realize that I wasn't going to be the most ideal source.

But still he kept on. "Off the record, can you tell me why you are so reluctant to say anything?" he asked.

Those three magic words — "off the record" — have a tendency to make a person talk, so I explained to the reporter that even though my personal experience with Freedman has been extremely limited, I felt his leaving the UI for Dartmouth was kind of a betrayal. After all he's only been here five years. And when rumors circulated that he was being considered for the presidency of Indiana University, Freedman said he wanted to stay at the UI. At least until something better came along is how it seems now.

THEN THE TIMES reporter asked — back on the record, I guess — "How does he handle student uprising?" He explained to me that student uprising has been a problem at Dartmouth with both the conservative and liberal factions of students.

I thought of two major incidents of "student uprising." The first, I told him, was when tuition increases were being proposed and students were trying to lobby against them. I said even though Freedman spoke in favor of the increases, nobody really blamed him too much since he justified the increases by saying they would help to raise faculty salaries.

The reporter seemed to like this. I could hear him typing away furiously. "So he balanced things out?" he asked.

"Yeah, he balanced things out," I said.

But when I mentioned another, bigger, incidence of student uprising, the reporter stopped typing.

I TOLD HIM WHEN the CIA recruited on campus earlier this semester, there were several days of large student protests. I explained how students stood outside Freedman's office and tried to elicit a response from him on his position on the CIA.

The reporter asked how Freedman handled that.

"He wasn't there," I said. "He didn't really handle it at all."

Apparently, the reporter wasn't incredibly interested in that incident, or at least he didn't mention it in the story. Nor did he mention how I saw his resignation as somewhat disloyal. In fact, I come across as something of a Freedman-worshiper.

That's all right. I really do think Freedman is — or was — a good president. He has without a doubt done some great things for the UI.

Just to set the record straight, though, I don't think it's very nice of him to leave.

Arms agreement is essential

By James W. McCormick

Thank goodness America's syndicated columnists aren't always taken seriously. A case in point is the latest flap over allegations of Soviet spying. Strangely, the Moscow embassy spy scandal has engendered some of the silliest public commentary in some time.

The current furor over Soviet espionage arose with the discovery that Marine guards at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow had "fraternized" with Russian females. These women, it turned out, were the bait in a classic Le Carre "honey trap." That is, sex was the inducement in a Soviet intelligence operation that gained the KGB full physical access to our Moscow embassy — including its most secure rooms.

Shortly thereafter, two members of Congress inspected the still unoccupied new American embassy and found it overrun with electronic bugs. The new embassy, they said, was unuseable. An indignant U.S. Senate, fearful that no diplomatic communications could be secured, recommended that Secretary of State George Shultz cancel his scheduled arms control talks in Moscow. Meanwhile, the Soviet Foreign Ministry played diplomatic tit-for-tat by making their own allegations of United States spying.

HARD-LINERS PREDICTABLY sought to use the spy issue as a pretext for cancelling the Shultz mission. George Will charged that the "striped pants" diplomats in the State Department were willing to subject the nation to any indignity in their headlong pursuit of arms control. In the face of this Soviet outrage, Will thundered, relations with the Soviets cannot go on as usual.

Vexed with the flabby response of the Reagan administration, he advocated delaying the Shultz trip and elevating Soviet spying into a major foreign policy issue. America must demonstrate "national resolve" and attain satisfaction, Will implied, even if this meant precipitating a diplomatic crisis and dashing the prospects for arms control.

Of course, the very idea of an arms control treaty with the Kremlin is anathema to many conservatives, because they believe that the Russians can't be trusted to abide by its terms. In this sense, the spy scandal provided Will with a convenient vehicle for trashing the wisdom of superpower summitry and arms control negotiations altogether.

IN CONTRAST TO WILL'S truculence, Richard Cohen affected an attitude of extraordinary complacency. In a "contemporary perspective" on spying apparently animated both by sentimentalism and the pessimism bred of apocalyptic antinuclearism, Cohen argued that espionage is just less important today than it used to be.

First, he argued, the arrest of alleged spies in the United States these days is almost commonplace. Moreover, governmental officials routinely assess the damage as incalculable. Therefore, he suggested, the damage must actually be minimal. Second, modern spying is unglamorously bureaucratic and based on avarice instead of ideology. Ergo — you guessed it — spying must be less consequential today than in the romantic days of Mata Hari.

Third, he declared that foreign intelligence gathering is only critically damaging where it affects the outcome of a military conflict. Because all military conflict between the superpowers must be nuclear, and because nuclear conflict must inevitably lead to planetary annihilation, Cohen speciously concludes that Russian skullduggery poses no significant threat to American security. Its really all just a silly "game."

UNFORTUNATELY, THE FACT of the matter is that American vulnerability to foreign espionage is a matter of serious concern. A special State Department advisory panel warned as early as 1983 that more than 100 American embassies and consulates were vulnerable to foreign spying, especially those in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

The real scandal here is not that the Soviets take every opportunity to spy — just as we do — but that the State Department has apparently failed to implement appropriate countermeasures. The recent spy cases are vivid and embarrassing reminders that America needs to upgrade its counter-intelligence capabilities. Not only is our diplomatic and military security at stake, but also the lives of human agents and intelligence sources abroad.

Nevertheless, the Soviet spy operation in our Moscow embassy was not a major diplomatic incident. To cancel the Shultz trip in response to our own incompetence would have been the height of petulant folly. Of far greater foreign policy consequence is the purpose of the Shultz trip: reaching agreement with the Soviets on both long and short range Euromissiles, and laying the groundwork for a third superpower summit in Washington sometime this year.

Let's keep our priorities in perspective, bill the Russians for the cost of securing our new embassy and plunge ahead in the effort to make this a safer world.

Area counties face budget dilemmas

By James Cahoy
Staff Writer

Johnson County's budget problems are not unique, as several neighboring counties face the same dilemma of cutting services or raising property taxes.

But solutions to the problem differ among the counties.

"We didn't raise property taxes this year because we didn't feel we could justify it with the farm situation," Cedar County Board of Supervisors Chairman Leo Shuger said.

"We actually lowered taxes slightly," he reduced some of the office budgets and made some cuts so we didn't have to raise taxes, even though we raised salaries in the county this year," Shuger said.

Although Cedar County, which includes Tipton, Iowa, as its county seat, did not have to raise property taxes this year, Shuger said his county is faced with many of the same problems as Johnson County. About 15,000 people reside in

Johnson County Budget

This is the last in a series of stories examining financial problems facing Johnson County.

Cedar County while Johnson County has about 85,000 residents.

"WE'RE CERTAINLY not in a very flexible position," Shuger said. "A lot of our funding is mandated by the state, and we have to spend a lot of money on human services. Since we are a predominantly agricultural county, it would be nice to give farmers some relief, but there's not much we can actually do."

In Muscatine County, property taxes were reduced by dipping into the county's reserve fund, a move the Muscatine County Board of Supervisors had little choice about, according to Board Chairman Chad James.

"We wanted to hold the line and not reduce services, but at the same time we wanted to reduce taxes," James said.

While James said he was satisfied with having reduced taxes while maintaining funding levels for services, he said he was unsure of that being a possibility in the future.

"IT'S HARD TO predict what we will face," James said.

"Muscatine County is about half agricultural and half urban," he added, referring to the county's seat, Muscatine, Iowa. "Right now, the rural section is having problems. Hopefully, we will find some alternative to using our reserve, which we don't want to reduce anymore."

But not all counties were able to keep property taxes down. Rural property taxes in Linn County, which includes Cedar Rapids, increased by 10 percent.

"We had a lot of disagreement over how much property taxes should be raised," Linn County Board of Supervisors Chairwoman Jean Oxley said. "We wanted to build up our cash reserves and we also wanted to maintain the level of human services in the county, so it was not a question of whether to raise property taxes, but how much to raise them."

OXLEY SAID THAT while she was in favor of a lower tax increase, two of Linn County's three supervisors voted a higher increase because they were concerned about avoiding cuts in human services and wanted to make up funds lost from revenue sharing, which the state discontinued this year.

"We had a lot of elderly people and others concerned about human service cuts at our budget hearing, and they made themselves heard," Oxley said. "Farmers also came to the hearing to speak against the tax increase, but they didn't seem to carry as much weight."

Linn County is coping with the same problems of Johnson County because land values are declining while the cost of services are rising within the county, Oxley said.

"IN SOME WAYS it may be worse here, because Johnson County, which is half our size, gets as much grant money for social service programs from the federal government as this county does," Oxley said. "In the future, it's going to become harder and harder for us to live within our budget without either raising property taxes substantially or cutting spending for services."

But if the situation in Cedar, Muscatine and Linn counties seems much the same as Johnson County in terms of basic problems, Johnson County Auditor Tom Slockett said it would be difficult to apply their solutions to Johnson County.

"There is no free ride in the budget process, and no easy way to do it," Slockett said.

Pipeline fire may die out by weekend

By James Cahoy
Staff Writer

The Mid America Pipe Line Co. fire still has three to five days left before it burns out, according to officials at the plant.

"Nothing has changed in the situation," said a Mid America Pipe Line employee, who asked to remain anonymous.

The employee said all questions about the fire were being referred to officials at Mid America headquarters in Tulsa, Okla., who were unavailable for comment Tuesday.

The fire, which has been burning since Saturday, April 5, has not disrupted service to Mid America customers, company officials said. Only the propane loading part of Mid America's operation is shut down.

The Johnson County Mutual Aid Association is monitoring the fire by using four, six-hour shifts. Three men are assigned to each shift.

All of the 250 local residents originally evacuated because of the fire have been allowed by Johnson County Sheriffs officials to return. It is not known if any of the evacuees are still staying away from the plant, officials said.

The fire is estimated to have cost the Mid America company more than $1 million in damages to the plant. In addition, the company will reimburse all people evacuated for expenses as well as the fire companies involved in fighting the blaze.

An investigation is still being conducted into the cause of the fire by the Iowa Utilities Division.

A preliminary report by the division has indicated a design flaw was the principal cause of the fire, which began because one of the plant's release valves was located too close to an engine.

American Legion road, which leads to the plant, still remains closed. The Johnson County Sheriff's Department has also asked for sightseers to stay away from the fire until it is completely extinguished.

ACT aids students, schools

By Lisa Murano
Special to The Daily Iowan

With mixed feelings and a few butterflies in his stomach, Troy Whitehill, a West High School junior, will take an important step on June 13. He will take the ACT Assessment at his high school.

"I'm really nervous because I am afraid I won't do well enough to get me into the school I'm interested in, which puts a lot of pressure on me to do well," Whitehill said. He aspires to attend Luther College in Decorah, Iowa.

Whitehill is just one of 1 million high school students who take the ACT Assessment each year in hopes of gaining admission to the college of their choice. The test is given to high school juniors and seniors to help predict how well they will do during their first year in college.

The agency responsible for administering the test that affects the future of so many high school students is headquartered here in Iowa City.

This story is part of a series examining Iowa City's major employers.

THE AMERICAN College Testing Program, a non-profit service organization specializing in educational measurement and assessment, employs 500 people in its Iowa City offices on U.S. Highway 1.

"(ACT scores are) pretty important on being admitted for those students who don't have good grades or who are interested in selective schools," West High Guidance Counselor Bill Mitchell said.

E.F. Lindquist and Ted McCarrel founded the ACT program, now the world's second-largest educational testing program, 28 years ago as a standard "that allowed schools to compare everybody regardless of where they went to high school or what part of the country they are from on the same standard," Pat Farrant, assistant vice-president of the Public Affairs Division at ACT, said.

THE ACT PROGRAM also serves organizations not associated with high schools.

"We serve post-secondary institutions, colleges, universities and professional (schools) for licensure and certification," Farrant said.

ACT offers a variety of programs, including academic assessment for students in eighth grade and beyond, career planning, continuing education and scholarship opportunities. This variety makes ACT's impact worldwide.

"ACT has 300 test centers worldwide in addition to the 3,400 centers in the United States. We test on every continent," Farrant said.

With increasing requests for services, ACT is growing and exploring new areas, including pre-ACT Assessment Program testing.

ACT is developing a new program, to become available in October 1987, for high school sophomores that will help them assess their strengths and weaknesses, which in turn will enable them to better prepare for college, Farrant said.

WHILE ACT IS reaching out to meet the needs of future generations, it has also been criticized for having a cultural bias in its testing programs.

"What people are concerned about when they talk about bias in testing is the question of whether the test has inherent in it something that makes it unfair to members of a particular group — most often minorities," Farrant said.

To avoid bias, ACT hires people of minority groups to write questions. A board of minorities then examines the test, which takes 18 months to create. Lastly, a panel of experts examines the final test, Farrant said.

Bill would uncover corporate raiders

DES MOINES (UPI) — Corporate raiders attempting hostile takeovers would be required to disclose their intentions ahead of time, the Iowa House voted Tuesday.

Under the bill, sent to Gov. Terry Branstad on a 62-27 vote, businesses or investors purchasing more than 10 percent of the stock in an Iowa company or increasing existing holdings by 5 percent would be required to file the disclosures with the insurance commissioner.

The commissioner would have the power to suspend the takeover if the disclosure was incomplete or inadequate.

"This would not prevent a hostile takeover. It only would give the people of Iowa notification of what is taking place," said Rep. Gene Blanshan, D-Scranton, the bill's sponsor.

"If Ivan Boesky decided to mount a hostile takeover to take Maytag out of our state there would be outcry from Iowans to do something. This is a good bill for Iowa's economy," he said.

OPponents SAID the bill would protect wealthy corporate executives at the expense of small stockholders.

"A lot of the whining and gnashing the teeth over takeovers comes from the executives who stand to lose the most. We've got to decide whether we are more concerned about executives or stockholders," Rep. Darrell Hanson, R-Manchester, said.

He said the most likely targets for hostile takeovers are firms that have accumulated cash instead of making investments.

"That means the stock is at a relatively low price compared to the value of the company. I'm not sure we should insulate a company like that," Hanson said.

Rep. Hugo Schneklath, R-Eldridge, said the proposal "runs counter to the usual trend" established under four years of Democrats' majority control of the Legislature.

"Usually corporations are the big, bad guys. Suddenly, for some reason we are making a 180 degree turn and helping the big, bad guys at the expense of stockholders," he said.

"THIS IS NOT necessary. If a corporation wants to protect itself from a takeover, they have the tools at hand to stop it. . . What we are doing here is basically creating a tool to protect corporate mismanagement and work to the disadvantage of small stockholders," Schneklath said.

Blanshan said Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca has written that typical targets of takeovers are firms with a solid asset base and low debt — not necessarily mismanaged companies.

"He said the surest way to avoid a takeover is to take money that would have been used for research and development and buy up your own company stock to protect yourself from corporate raiders," Blanshan said.

"That is hardly a good business practice when we are trying to compete with Japan and Germany and every other industrialized nation in the world," he said.

Under the bill, Blanshan said the disclosure would have to state if the investor had plans to change management of the company or move the firm out of Iowa.

"It could be they just want to invest in Maytag because it is a good company. This bill simply calls for the disclosure of someone who is buying up relatively large chunks of an Iowa business," he said.

Authorities begin probe into slaying

DES MOINES (UPI) — Authorities Tuesday refused to speculate on the motive behind the slaying of a 12-year-old mildly retarded Ottumwa, Iowa, girl who was taken from her home during the weekend.

Officials found the body of Kathy Allen in a ditch in Schuyler County, Mo., Sunday. An autopsy showed she died of a single stab wound, but authorities Tuesday refused to say whether the girl had been sexually abused.

"I couldn't comment on that," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Guy Cook. "All I can say is it was a brutal, senseless crime."

TWO MEN ACCUSED of the crime were moved from Beaumont, Texas, Tuesday, where they have been held since their apprehension in Moscow, Texas, early Sunday. The pair will be returned to Iowa authorities sometime this week, Cook said.

Andrew Six, 22, of rural Pershing, Iowa, and Donald E. Petary, 49, of Ottumwa face kidnapping and murder charges in federal court, a crime punishable by life in prison, but Cook said after the investigation is completed authorities will have to decide whether to try the men in U.S. District Court or under Missouri law.

OFFICIALS STILL DO not know if Allen was killed in Iowa or Missouri. Missouri law provides for the death penalty in murder cases.

The two suspects reportedly stopped at Allen's trailer home Friday night to look at a pickup for sale by her father, Don. The men took the truck for several hours and when they returned they bound Don Allen into a chair with duct tape and demanded title to the truck. Don Allen said he was willing to give them the title but they began taking his wife Janet and Kathy with them. He broke out of the tape and grabbed for one of the assailants but they fled, after slashing Janet Allen across the throat with a knife, and shoving Kathy into a car. Janet Allen was recovering in good condition at a local hospital.

According to state parole board records, Petary served prison time for larceny and receiving stolen property. Six has no record with the parole board.

They are scheduled to appear in U.S. District Court April 22 for a preliminary hearing.

Swiss laws may help Secord

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A federal judge said Tuesday that if he grants a request by Senate Iran-Contra affair investigators for the foreign bank records of retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard Secord, he will be "writing an order that I know is a charade."

The Senate last month cited Secord for contempt of Congress for refusing to sign a directive granting investigators access to the records. If the court sides with the Senate and Secord continues to refuse, he could be jailed.

During a hearing on the Senate's request for a court order against Secord, the Senate's legal counsel conceded the unusual effort to gain access to Secord's records may be rebuffed by the Swiss, who have strict bank secrecy laws.

"WHETHER OR NOT this is ultimately a useful device will depend on the Swiss," Counsel Michael Davidson said. "The hope is the Swiss will be responsive."

But U.S. District Judge

Richard Secord

Aubrey Robinson — considering whether to order Secord to sign a consent directive to banks in Switzerland, the Cayman Islands and Panama or face possible imprisonment — must decide if Secord's documents are protected by the Fifth Amendment's guarantee that a person not be compelled to be a witness against himself.

Although Robinson called the directive "a charade" because it clearly would not be a truthful consent by Secord to release his documents, it was unclear how he would rule.

"I will issue an order on whether it's appropriate and the Court of Appeals will determine it," he said at the end of the hearing.

EARLIER, HOWEVER, the chief judge suggested the Senate panel, which believes Secord's accounts can help unravel the trail of money in the Iran-Contra affair, simply approach the Swiss government and banks in the Cayman Islands and tell them diplomatically that Secord "does not have 5th Amendment protection... so can you turn over the information."

"It's the Swiss authorities that have the right to" decide if the directive is adequate, Robinson said. "They would know that this is not a consent" and signed only under threat of jail.

"I have a problem with charades," he said. "I just have a problem writing an order that I know is a charade."

Davidson conceded, "The Swiss government will need to make a judgment."

Secord's attorney, Thomas Green, also argued the directive would violate Secord's First Amendment right of freedom of speech.

SECORD, BELIEVED to be a key figure in aiding Lt. Col. Oliver North in the sale of U.S. arms to Iran and the possibly illegal diversion of profits to Nicaraguan rebels, was not present at the hourlong hearing in federal court.

He has declined to testify before the Senate and House select committees investigating the scandal.

Davidson said legal precedent clearly shows such documents are not protected by the Constitution because a simple signature on the directive would not be considered testimony.

Deficit skyrockets; economists gloomy

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The merchandise trade deficit rocketed to $15.06 billion in February — its third-highest total ever — triggering more cuts in the dollar's value Tuesday and making economists gloomy about the government's recovery plan.

The Commerce Department said America imported $33.72 billion worth of goods during February, 17.4 percent more than January's total, while exporting 14 percent more, to total $18.66 billion. Neither sum was adjusted for seasonal factors.

January's trade deficit figure was revised to $12.3 billion. The government originally reported a $14.8 billion gap.

Japan accounted for more than a third of the deficit, or $5.1 billion, followed by Western Europe and Canada at $1.9 billion each, Taiwan at $1.5 billion, OPEC nations at $1.2 billion, Mexico at $800 million and South Korea at $700 million.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE dealers immediately began selling dollars when they heard the news. The dollar hit a new low of 140.10 yen before recouping slightly, traded to 1.7925 German marks, not far from its all-time low of 1.75 marks, and fell below 6 French francs.

Gold moved above $450 for the first time in more than four years.

February's $15.06 billion deficit trails only last July's $16.05 billion and November's $15.44 billion. It ran at least $1 billion above most experts' expectations, and analysts did not hesitate to call it bad news.

"There's really no comfort in the trade report," said Allen Sinai, an economic analyst for Shearman Lehman Brothers in New York. "We not only have a stubborn trade deficit, but one that gives no evidence of a clear-cut turnaround."

In California, where President Ronald Reagan was vacationing, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater called the trade figures "disappointing."

COMMERCE SECRETARY Malcolm Baldrige noted February's $18.66 billion in exports during February was 5.6 percent above the monthly average exports of $17.66 billion for January through March 1986.

"Improvement in our real trade balance since February 1986, although slower than we had projected, reflects the dollar's sharp decline," he said. "The inflationary impact of higher import prices has not been large, so overall economic growth will pick up as the trade deficit continues to shrink."

The trade deficit hit a record $166 billion last year, and the Reagan administration has tried to curb it by reducing the dollar's value against other currencies. Through Tuesday, the dollar fell at least 45 percent against the yen and mark since late February 1985.

Consequently, the government and many economists expected the deficit table to look bad this year, but analysts said February's report was worse than expected.

Cargo plane crashes; 4 die near Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI)—Federal investigators Tuesday inspected charred wreckage of a Boeing 707 cargo carrier that crashed and burned in a pasture 2 miles short of Kansas City International Airport, killing four people.

The plane, operated by Buffalo Airways of Waco, Texas, for Burlington Air Express of Irvine, Calif., crashed and caught fire about 10 p.m. Monday as it tried to land in fog and light rain, a Burlington official said.

The National Transportation Safety Board said it was not known if the weather was a factor in the accident.

"We can't even begin to talk about (the weather factor)," said William Klassen, head of the NTSB's Kansas City office. "There are a lot of things we have to look at."

"It takes six to nine months on an investigation like this to develop a factual report and then another three months to determine a probable cause," Klassen said. "It could easily take a year."

NTSB investigator Bud Donner from the agency's

Washington office and his team of assistants set up an office at an airport hotel late Tuesday morning.

Besides the on-site investigation, team members will gather information on the aircraft, the company, the pilots and their training and the weather at the time of the crash, officials said.

Charles Laney, the Platte County coroner, said the individual bodies had not been positively identified, but those killed in the crash were Clarence Brenner, 52, of Henderson, Nev.; David Lee Zupancic, 40, of Flower Mound, Texas; Nichols Paul Pannell, 22, of Axtell, Texas; and John Earl Lemery, 36, of Wichita, Kan.

LEMERY WAS LISTED as a passenger on the flight and was a 12-year employee of Mid-Continent Transport Inc., a Burlington agent in Wichita. The other three victims worked for Buffalo Airways, officials said.

Bob Raynesford, a Federal Aviation Administration spokesman, said that at the time of the accident winds were not particularly high. He said the cloud ceiling was about 100 feet and it was foggy, but there was plenty of forward visibility.

Klassen said it was misting but not raining hard at the time of the crash.

Bomb explodes in Indiana courthouse

KOKOMO, Ind. — A bomb apparently smuggled into the Howard County Courthouse by a drug suspect exploded Tuesday, killing a man believed to be the defendant and injuring the sheriff, a lawyer and four other people, authorities said.

Robert Gray, 37, of Marion, Ind., who was free on bond and awaiting trial on a drug charge, apparently smuggled the bomb into the courthouse in a briefcase and detonated it during a meeting in the office of Sheriff J.D. Beatty, a sheriff's office statement said.

Sgt. Fred Biggs of the Indiana State Police said the building was evacuated and sealed off after the bomb exploded.

Officials at St. Joseph Hospital said Beatty was the most seriously injured, suffering burns over 25 percent of his body.

Court will hear appeals in Gandhi case

NEW DELHI, India — The Supreme Court Tuesday agreed to hear appeals from three Sikhs sentenced to death for the 1984 assassination of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and ordered a stay of their executions, defense lawyers said.

"The Supreme Court will reopen the whole case and we will now build up our defense afresh," defense attorney Rupinder Singh Sodhi told United Press International.

A panel of two Supreme Court judges ruled the court should hear the appeals of Satwant Singh, Balwant Singh and Kehar Singh, convicted and sentenced to death for the Oct. 31, 1984, assassination of Gandhi.

During a hearing before the panel, Ram Jethmalani, another defense lawyer, argued the death sentences were "void" because the trial of the three Sikhs was held in the Tihar jail in New Delhi and was not open to public.

Waldheim invited to Egypt and Hungary

VIENNA — President Kurt Waldheim, shunned by foreign governments since allegations surfaced linking him to Nazi war crimes, has been invited to visit Egypt and Hungary, his spokesman said Tuesday. The move represented an apparent easing of his diplomatic isolation.

Waldheim was elected June 8 despite accusations by the World Jewish Congress that he participated in shipping Greek Jews to their deaths during World War II. Waldheim has maintained he only worked as a military translator.

Before Tuesday's announcement, Waldheim had received only an invitation from Jordan to pay an official visit. He is scheduled to visit Jordan July 1-4 and will meet with King Hussein during his first state trip abroad.

It was not immediately known whether Waldheim has accepted the invitations issued by Egypt and Hungary.

Defaulters may receive lower refunds

DES MOINES — Former Iowa college students who defaulted on their student loans may find their income tax refunds are smaller than expected, the Iowa College Aid Commission was told Tuesday.

Commission staffers reported a total of $259,228 from income tax refunds has been applied to overdue student loans. The money comes from the tax refunds of nearly 500 student loan defaulters. Officials say the money from the 1986 federal tax returns averages $471 per former student.

The new program, in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Education and Internal Revenue Service, allows the commission to claim a defaulter's refund and apply it to the balance due. This year, the commission referred 4,181 overdue accounts to the IRS.

Former nun looking to bike to Moscow

WASHINGTON — A former nun bicycling her way to Moscow in a quest for world peace was not dismayed when only one reporter showed up at high noon Tuesday for her news conference in the nation's capital.

But remaining unfazed by the media's lack of interest, Caroline Killen settled for telling one news agency reporter how she expects to convince Soviet Premier Mikhail Gorbachev to join her in Moscow in planting a tree as a peace symbol.

"He's a Pisces and I'm a Capricorn," she explained. "Those are signs that are terribly compatible. Pisces are poets and dreamers. We Capricorns tend to be very serious about issues."

Killen admits it has been difficult to get a visa. However, she planned to leave later Tuesday for New York, where she expects to put herself and her bike on a plane for Moscow.

Judge rejects recall of 1 million GMC X-cars

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A federal judge rejected the government's request for a mandatory recall of 1.1 million 1980 X-cars Tuesday and the maker, General Motors Corp., said the ruling "vindicates a whole generation" of vehicles.

Federal officials said they are considering an appeal of the ruling from U.S. District Judge Thomas Jackson. The Justice Department filed suit Aug. 3, 1983, claiming the X-cars were a "grave danger" because of premature rear wheel lockup — a brake defect — that caused the cars to spin, skid and fishtail.

Jackson dismissed five of the six counts in the suit, leaving to be decided only a charge that the nation's No. 1 auto-maker failed to give federal safety officials "accurate and complete information" about the brakes when they were investigating the car.

The judge delayed action on that count until he ruled if there was a brake defect.

IN DETROIT, GM Chairman Roger Smith said in a statement: "This decision is good news for GM's X-car owners, our other GM customers and the public because it vindicates a whole generation of outstanding GM automobiles. This decision acknowledges the good safety record these cars have compiled over the years."

The X-cars were sold under the nameplates of Chevrolet Citation, Oldsmobile Omega, Pontiac Phoenix and Buick Skylark and debuted as 1980 models.

In his 71-page ruling, Jackson concluded, "The government has failed to meet its burden of showing that current configuration 1980 X-cars now present, or have ever presented, an 'unreasonable risk' of accidents due to a 'defect' that causes 'premature rear brake lockup.'"

Clarence Ditlow, director of the Center for Automotive Safety, said his interpretation of Jackson's ruling "is the government brought a defective case" by failing to get first an agency ruling that the cars were defective.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has received reports of at least 2,000 accidents blamed on X-car brakes, Ditlow said.

Investigation grows in Marine scandal

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Marines' sex-for-secrets scandal spread Tuesday to Warsaw Pact nations as embassy guards were called home for questioning about their actions while in Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Bulgaria, a Pentagon spokesman said.

Defense Department spokesman Robert Sims said the Marines were summoned home in the widening investigation into the scandal at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow.

Earlier, Sims said four Marine guards at the U.S. Embassy in Vienna were being sent back to the United States for questioning about unauthorized relationships with women while serving at U.S. stations in Warsaw Pact countries — but he did not identify the nations involved.

Later, Sims said the countries were Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Bulgaria — marking the first time the investigation into Marine guards trading sex for secrets has spread outside the Soviet Union.

SIMS SAID A SIXTH Marine at the embassy in Vienna also is returning because he is suspected of "local security violations" unrelated to the spy scandal, Sims said.

Four of the guards are suspected of striking up illegal relationships with women while previously serving in Warsaw Pact nations, Sims said. The information about the guards apparently arose from questioning by Ronald Lauder, the U.S. ambassador to Austria.

A statement released by the embassy said the investigation of the five Marines "has nothing to do with anything they did while serving in Vienna."

A fifth guard already was scheduled to return to the United States to testify at criminal proceedings today against Sgt. Clayton Lonetree, 25, at the Marine barracks in Quantico, Va.

The government says Lonetree and Cpl. Arnold Bracy permitted Soviet agents to roam the embassy in exchange for sexual favors from Soviet women between May 1985 and May 1986.

TWO OTHER MARINES, including one assigned to the U.S. consulate in Leningrad, have also been implicated for failing to report contacts with Soviet citizens.

Today's proceeding, called an Article 32 hearing, will determine if Lonetree will face a court martial for alleged espionage, Sims said, and the Marine guard from the Vienna embassy who will testify at the hearing is en route to Quantico.

The other five Marines were in Frankfurt, West Germany, and on their way to the United States, he said. None have been arrested or formally charged.

The six guards from Vienna are in addition to the 28 guards being brought home from Moscow and the six-man detachment returning from the consulate in Leningrad.

In a related development, Sims said a study by the Navy inspector general showed the State Department should consider random lie detector tests in monitoring the performance of Marine embassy guards as well as conduct more frequent investigations.

Hinckley letter probe continues

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Florida death-row inmate Ted Bundy told officials he corresponded regularly with John Hinckley Jr. last year, receiving as many as four letters from the presidential assailant and replying at least twice, prosecutors said Tuesday.

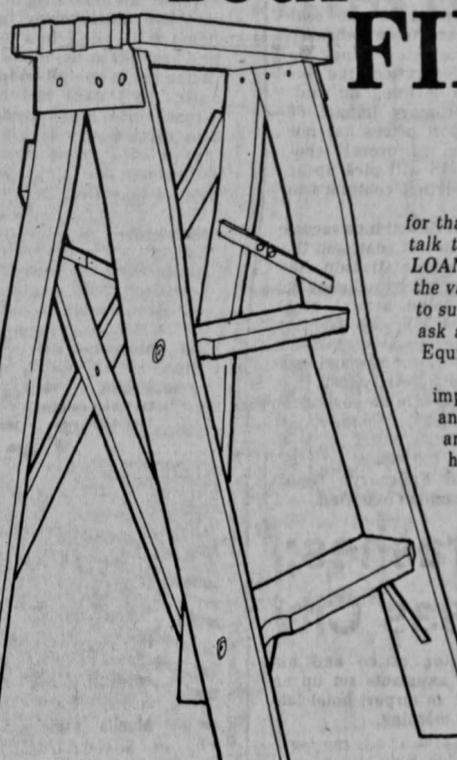

Assistant U.S. Attorney Roger Adelman also told a federal court hearing that "the flagrant tone of the letters" concerned officials enough to subpoena all of Hinckley's personal correspondence since he was committed to St. Elizabeth's mental hospital after his 1982 assassination attempt on President Ronald Reagan.

He said Bundy's letters to Hinckley "certainly bear some similarities" to Hinckley's earlier obsession with actress Jodie Foster and the movie Taxi Driver.

Tuesday's proceedings were prompted by surprise revelations in court Monday that Hinckley had written to Bundy to "express his sorrow" over his plight.

The hearing concerning Hinckley's original request for an unescorted Easter visit with his parents was postponed until later today.

Botha downplays criticism of S. Africa's detention policies

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (UPI) — Foreign Minister Roelof "Pik" Botha Tuesday rejected criticism by U.S. Ambassador Edward Perkins of South Africa's policy of detention without trial and defended his nation's curbs on protest.

In a statement, Botha also said he had instructed an aide to summon diplomats from all 31 embassies for a briefing on the threat facing his country from the outlawed African National Congress, which is waging a guerrilla war against the white government and its policy of apartheid, or racial segregation.

American and British diplomats said late Tuesday they had heard nothing about the meeting.

The government Bureau for Information said Tuesday that four blacks died in renewed political violence, the worst in four weeks.

Also Tuesday, police and transport officials said they were investigating possible links between the torching of 26 train coaches in the black township of Soweto and a 33-day-old strike by black transport workers.

PERKINS, THE first black U.S. ambassador to Pretoria, Monday condemned the government's detention without trial of at least 25,000 apartheid foes — many of them children — since a state of emergency was imposed June 12.

Perkins also said Friday's clampdown on opposition to political detention underlined "the erosion of fundamental liberties in this country."

In his statement, Botha said, "The South African government rejects that statement."

"The American government knows very well that the African National Congress and its fellow travelers want to gain power through violence and death," he said.

Botha said Friday's ban on inciting protest against detention without trial was "directed at countering confrontation and violence and to promote peace and stability." Black and white opposition leaders condemned the ban Tuesday. Roman Catholic Bishop Wilfrid Napier said the church "cannot and will not tolerate it" and said Catholics are "horrified by the government's measures aimed at outlawing all and any actions on behalf of those unjustly deprived of their liberty."

Attack on embassy injures 14

LA PAZ, Bolivia (UPI) — A stick of dynamite exploded Tuesday outside the U.S. Embassy, injuring two security officers and at least 12 other people as 10,000 workers marched past in a protest against government austerity plans.

In Washington, the State Department said the dynamite was thrown from the crowd of demonstrators and struck the embassy building in La Paz.

"The device struck the building and bounced back into the crowd," a State Department statement said. "There were some injuries among the marchers: A Bolivian policeman guarding the embassy and one American, the regional security officer, were slightly injured."

"We strongly condemn this type of unlawful action," the statement said.

OFFICIALS IN LA PAZ said the protesters later threw a firebomb at a building housing the offices of state tax collectors, causing minor damage but no injuries.

Five people were admitted to the Workers' Hospital but aides there declined to identify the victims or say how seriously they were hurt. Workers at a state health clinic near the embassy said they treated nine people for slight injuries.

The Bolivian Workers Central, a confederation representing 90 percent of unionized labor, called for protest marches in cities.

Wall blocks Kim's activities

SEOUL, South Korea (UPI) — The government tightened its crackdown Tuesday on dissident Kim Dae Jung, building a concrete wall in front of his home and preventing supporters and reporters from seeing him.

A government spokesman said the new measures against correspondents were taken because reporters were "directly and indirectly" helping Kim, who is under house arrest, engage in politics.

The well-known dissident is banned from engaging in politics as part of a 20-year suspended prison sentence he received in 1980 after being convicted of sedition.

KIM, WHOSE MOST recent house arrest began last Wednesday, denounced the move against him in a telephone interview, saying his confinement at home was "totally illegal."

"If I have violated some law, they only have the right to put me in prison, they have no right to put me under house arrest," he told United Press International.

In the past, Kim has been prevented from attending sensitive political meetings but his supporters and foreign journalists could meet with him at his house.

Since his return from self-imposed exile in the United States in February 1985, Kim has been placed under house arrest 54 times, 15 times since the beginning of the year.

Two United Press International correspondents were prevented Tuesday from entering Kim's house by uniformed and plainclothes riot police.

THE MAIN ENTRANCE to Kim's house was blocked by six police buses and a concrete wall is being built that will block any view of his home from the main street. Police in front of the home insisted the wall was being built to "beautify the neighborhood."

Same old story plaguing Hawkeys

By Marc Bona
Staff Writer

Going into Saturday's annual spring game, two words can give an entire definition to Iowa's football team — injuries and quickness.

Injuries the Hawkeys have, and they come in the form of many. Fry mentioned 19 in all during Tuesday's press conference.

Players who are listed as injured on the offensive depth chart with Fry's evaluation: Richard Bass, fullback (injured early in the spring); Travis Watkins, wide receiver (injured Saturday); Eric Miller, wide receiver (possible for spring game); Greg Fedders, lineman (outside chance); Jim Poynton, lineman, and Bob Schmitt, lineman (questionable).

DEFENSIVE INJURIES listed on the depth chart: Myron Keppy, lineman; Dan Wirth, linebacker; and Kerry Burt, defensive back (all three have been out entire spring). Linebacker Tom Beacom and tackle Jim Johnson (recent injuries), along with J.J. Puk — who is questionable for the spring game — are also out.

During the conference Fry added that defensive end Joe Mott, (who was mistakenly left off the depth chart), is the No. 1 defensive end. Sean Ridley, defensive end, had "a really outstanding spring" up until his injury.

Defensive backs Dwight Sistrunk and Keaton Smiley are also injured. Sistrunk has been out all spring with a leg injury and is doubtful for Saturday's game. Smiley is not expected to be back until the fall.

Fry also stated wide receivers Deven Harberts and Steve Green "have been injured at one time or another during the spring." Both, though, are listed on the depth charts.

"We've had a rash of leg injuries in the last week, offensive lineman and defensive linebackers in particular," Fry said.

OTHER INJURIES include another defensive end, Mike Ertz, who is coming off knee surgery. "If he's healthy enough, he'll play in Saturday's game at center," Fry said. "Bill Anderson could

Pryor, Taylor doubtful to return to Hawkeyes

Tyrone Taylor

Richard Pryor

By Marc Bona
Staff Writer

Iowa football players Richard Pryor and Tyrone Taylor, both juniors, are not listed on the spring roster and are not expected to play this fall, Iowa Coach Hayden Fry announced Tuesday at his press conference.

"Both of those kids have academic problems," Fry said. "They both are in real academic trouble at this point, so we won't have them out there any longer."

"It's very questionable if either one of them will make it this fall but they do have a chance. By doing well this spring and going to summer school they could be eligible, but it's very, very questionable," Fry added.

Pryor, a 6-foot-3, 231-pound defensive end from Elizabeth, N.J., recorded 47 tackles over the past three seasons. He earned two letters with Iowa.

After recording 14 tackles in the 1985 spring game, a pre-season injury forced Taylor to miss the rest of the season. He saw limited action with the Hawkeyes in 1986. The 6-foot-2, 241-pound linebacker hails from Monroe, La.

Both Pryor and Taylor are general studies majors.

very well have to rotate, play both No. 1 and No. 2 at center ... if Anderson goes down look out. We may have to turn everybody out tailgating early."

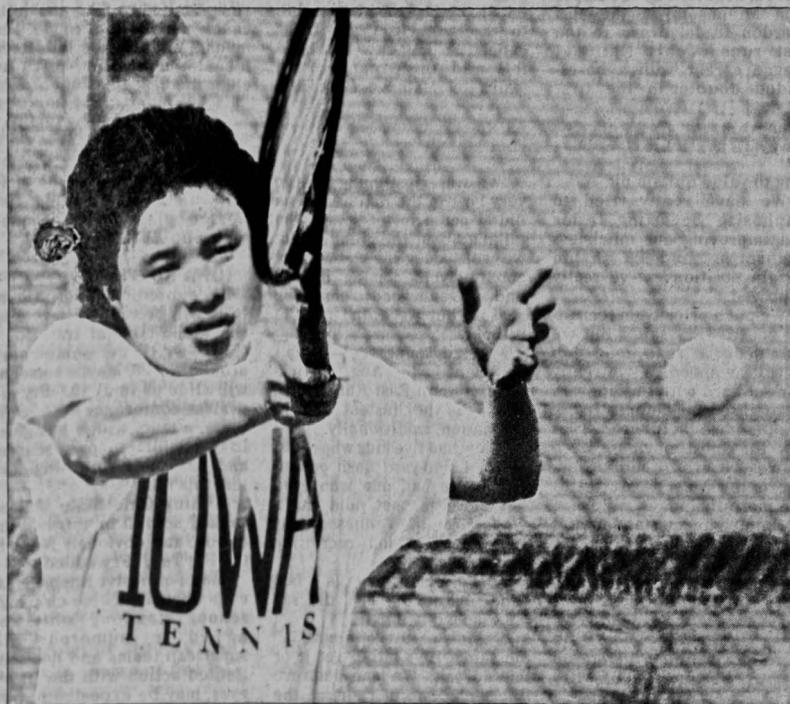

The question of having a qualified player at center worries Fry, who jokingly added, "If the NCAA permitted, we could run Joel Hilgenberg (former Hawkeye now with the New Orleans Saints) in at No. 3."

The high number of injuries prompted one reporter to ask if this has been an unusual spring for injuries. Fry replied, "No, not really. I'd say it's normal, considering we've probably had less contact. It seems that every year as I get older I cut back on the number of contact sessions we have just to keep the guys healthy."

"We get very few youngsters injured in practice," Fry continued. "It's the game-type scrimmages or the game itself where I'd say we have 80 percent of the injuries. The other 20 percent are free-type injuries where the guy plants his foot and his knee goes out on him."

Rudy Foo, Iowa tennis player and Malaysian wins. Foo and the Hawkeyes will take on Iowa native, recently set the school record for career State today, weather permitting, in Ames at 2 p.m.

'Foo'ey to Iowa net records, says Malaysian tennis star

By Robert Mann
Staff Writer

Rudy Foo went from Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia to the records book at Iowa in just over four years.

Earlier this semester the No. 2 doubles player and No. 3 singles player on the men's tennis team became Iowa's all-time winningest doubles player and collected the most wins by a Hawkeye in the process.

"He's had a good career here," Iowa Coach Steve Houghton said of his senior co-captain. "He's been particularly outstanding as a doubles player — probably one of the best we've had at Iowa since I've been here."

"His attitude has been particularly good this year. He recognizes that this is his last year, and he wants to have a good one," Houghton added.

This year Foo is sporting an 11-8 singles record and a 13-4 doubles record. Doubles have been Foo's specialty, and he recognizes that.

"I like playing doubles bet-

Men's Tennis

ter than singles," Foo said. "Because I like to volley and I like the faster pace."

In Malaysia he began playing tennis when he was about 10 years old.

"I was going to a country club, and most of my friends there played tennis," Foo said. "So I started."

As he improved at tennis, he needed to decide where he wanted to go for a post-high school education. He could either follow relatives or set a new course.

"My brother and sister went to England to go to school," Foo said. "I could have, but I wouldn't have been able to play tennis. Here I get the best of both worlds, academics and athletics."

"He's done a good job of succeeding in tennis and academics," Houghton said. "He's a good example of how you combine the two."

He said he was not impressed with the sports atmosphere in Great Britain. The trip from Malaysia to Iowa had a stop over in Florida, though, where Foo attended a tennis academy his senior year in high school.

There he met a tennis player, who knew Houghton. After meeting with Houghton and visiting Iowa, he decided this would be the place for him. Forget that San Diego, the other school he considered, had weather more like he is used to.

"The weather at home is 80 or 90 degrees, and we don't really have seasons," Foo said. "I complain a lot, but it makes me appreciate the sun more. So it was a nice change."

The Iowa team was off to a strong start early in the season, but has since dropped four straight Big Ten matches.

"The team this year has been a little inconsistent," Foo said. "We win when we shouldn't, and we lose some matches we should win."

Flyers outskate Rangers, 3-1

United Press International

PHILADELPHIA — Tim Kerr scored to break a second-period tie Tuesday night and lead Philadelphia Flyers to a 3-1 victory over the New York Rangers and a 3-2 lead in their Stanley Cup playoff series.

The Flyers can wrap up the best-of-seven Patrick Division semifinal series with a victory in Game 6 Thursday night in New York.

Kerr's second goal of the playoffs gave the Flyers a 2-1 lead at 14:13 of the second period as he ignored a check by James Patrick to redirect a shot by Pelle Eklund under the outstretched leg of New York goaltender Bob Froese, who stopped 37 shots.

Rick Tocchet scored his second goal of the game with 26 seconds left to play after New York's Pierre Larouche threw his stick at the puck to prevent Philadelphia from scoring on a breakaway.

After a scoreless first period, the Flyers dominated play in the second period, outshooting the Rangers 15-5 to take their 2-1 lead on goals by Tocchet and Kerr.

Tocchet's fourth goal of the playoffs put Philadelphia in front 1-0 at 2:02 of the period. After Tocchet's shot went off the right side of the net, he retrieved his own rebound and centered the puck to Derrick Smith, who redirected it across the goal mouth. Tocchet then came out from behind the net and knocked the puck in while Froese and defenseman Larry Melynk were at the left post.

N.Y. Islanders 4, Washington 2
LANDOVER, Md. — Brad Lauer and Pat LaFontaine scored 20 seconds apart in the first period and Greg Gilbert broke a second-period tie Tuesday night, allowing the injury-riddled New York Islanders to stave off Stanley Cup playoff elimination with a 4-2 victory over the Washington Capitals.

The Islanders, getting 40 saves from goalie Kelly Hrudey, overcame a 42-24 shot disadvantage to reduce their deficit in the best-of-seven Patrick Division semifinals to three games to two.

The series resumes Thursday night at the Nassau Coliseum in Uniondale, N.Y. before switching back to the Capital Centre Saturday if Game 7 is necessary.

The Islanders played without team captain and defenseman Denis Potvin (lower back strain), right winger Mike Bossy (sprained left knee), and center Brent Sutter (out for the 16th straight game with a groin strain).

On the game-winner, New York's Patrick Flatley foiled Rod Langway's attempt to clear the puck and sent a pass behind the net to Randy Wood. Wood passed from the back boards to Gilbert, who beat Pete Peeters from the slot at 14:13 of the second period for a 3-2 lead.

New York, which has eliminated the Capitals from the playoffs three of the past four seasons, handed the Capitals only their second loss in the past 13 games, extending back to the final nine games of the regular season.

Quebec 7, Hartford 5

HARTFORD, Conn. — John Ogronick completed a hat trick with 1:07 remaining Tuesday night to snap a tie and move the Quebec Nordiques within one game of the Adams Division final with a 7-5 victory over the Hartford Whalers.

The triumph marks the first time in 13 meetings between the teams this season the visiting club has won. The Nordiques can end the best-of-seven series when the series returns to Quebec for Game 6 Thursday night.

Quebec's first five goals came on the power play, one short of the single-game playoff mark for most man-advantage goals.

Ogronick, who has four goals in the series, took a cross-ice pass from Paul Gillis and, from inside the right circle, shot the puck inside the net post under sprawling goaltender Mike Liut to give the Nordiques a 6-5 lead.

Mike Eagles added an empty-net goal with 41 seconds remaining, seven seconds after Liut was pulled for an extra skater. Quebec's Risto Siltanen finished with five assists to tie a playoff record for defenseman in one game.

Toronto 2, St. Louis 1

ST. LOUIS — Goalie Ken Wregget made 33 saves and Mike Allison broke a tie at 11:24 of the third period Tuesday night, lifting the Toronto Maple Leafs to a 2-1 comeback victory over the St. Louis Blues and a 3-2 edge in their Stanley Cup playoff series.

The Maple Leafs, leading the best-of-seven Norris Division semifinal for the first time, can advance to the second round against the Detroit Red Wings with a victory at home Thursday in Game 6.

McCallum's career may be put on hold

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Navy Secretary James Webb banned all active-duty sailors Tuesday from playing professional sports, a move that could temporarily halt the playing career of Los Angeles Raiders running back Napoleon McCallum.

Webb also said the Navy will honor a deal it had made with Navy basketball star David Robinson, allowing him to serve only two years active duty after graduating rather than the usual five.

Last season Robinson finished fourth in the nation in scoring and rebounds while leading the Midshipmen to the NCAA tournament. Robinson scored 50 points in Navy's first round loss to Michigan.

"Ensign McCallum nor any other individual will be given any special preference with regard to choice of duty assignments or any other decision regarding his military responsibilities," Webb said in a statement.

McCallum is currently assigned to the Navy Supply Corps in Athens, Ga. Former Navy Secretary John Lehman had given McCallum a special job and allowed him to make special arrangements to be freed weekends to play for the Raiders.

RAIDERS SPOKESMAN Irv Kaze said the team was unaware of the Navy secretary's ruling.

In his statement, Webb said, "As a general policy, no special accommodation will be made in order to allow active-duty personnel to play professional sports."

Webb said an exception would not be made for McCallum, but added, "His assignment will be made balancing the needs of the Navy and his personal desires."

Webb said he believed Robinson had relied on "good faith" on that understanding when he decided to remain at the academy rather than resign.

"Consequently, it would now be unfair to require him to serve on active duty for five years," the Navy Secretary said.

Lt. Cmdr. Steve Clawson, a Naval Academy spokesman, said Robinson was "told of the decision today. I've talked with him, but he's decided not to do any interviews or have official comments tonight because he's getting ready for final exams with his classmates."

Oldis rolls along as Midwest scout

By Scott Reifert
Special to the Daily Iowan

It used to be easy to pick out the major league scouts at a ball game. They would cruise to a local high school contest in their big city cars, watch with their fingers cocked on their stopwatches as the local Mickey Mantle hit two over the fence and maybe sign the kid to a big league contract.

But that was before big bucks and the computer caught up with major league scouting.

Iowa City's Bob Oldis, 59, a former major league catcher with the Washington Senators, Pittsburgh Pirates and Philadelphia Phillies, is the Midwest region scouting supervisor for the Montreal Expos. Since he began scouting in 1970, Oldis said the changes in scouting have been drastic.

"There's so much more paperwork now, I think," Oldis said. "They (the major league clubs) want to know everything about a kid anymore. In the past, if a scout saw a good player, he just went and said, 'Let's sign and get it over with.' No money was involved. Now, a kid asks, 'If you're going to sign me, how much money are you going to give me?' That's the first thing everybody wants."

AS MIDWEST SUPERVISOR, Oldis is in charge of five full-time Expo scouts who range within 12 states, checking out prospects.

When one of the five area men finds a player he thinks is worth drafting, the scout files a report with Oldis and with the Expo front office. Then, before the June draft, Oldis two other regional supervisors and the scouting directors for the team meet to go over the nation's prospects and determine what the team's order of picks will be for the amateur draft.

It's the chance of coming up with the superstar in the draft that is Oldis' biggest kick.

"Signing prospects, big league ball players, that would be my biggest thrill," he said.

Included among the Midwest players Oldis has had a hand in drafting are current major league pitchers Bill Gullickson, Scott Sanderson and Shane Rawley.

BUT AS SCOUTING SUPERVISOR, Oldis leaves most of the game scouting to the area men.

"They do most of the dirty work, but then they get all the credit if we draft the players," he said.

As an Iowa City high school

"Now days it's really hard to find that 'diamond in the rough,' it really is. You think you've got a kid hidden out and the next thing you know there are 40 scouts at his next game," Bob Oldis says.

player in the late 1940s, Oldis signed a big league contract and spent several years in the minors before making it to the major leagues for the first time in 1953. Now, Oldis admits that college baseball allows a choice for a player coming out of high school. For some, college could slow a potentially sky-rocketing career. For others, it can provide the security of a diploma for the day when baseball ends.

"If a kid in high school is mature enough to handle it in three years instead of being in college, he'll be in the big leagues," Oldis said of the players who pass on college to sign professional contracts. "It has a lot to do with the maturity of a kid out of high school. Otherwise, you can't beat an education."

EACH JUNE THE MAJOR

leagues hold their amateur draft of high school players. Once a player elects to attend a college, he cannot be drafted again until after his junior season. The days heading up to the draft are Oldis' busiest of the year.

"I probably haven't missed many super players since 1970," Oldis said as he named Dave Winfield and Paul Molitor, both Minnesota graduates, as two of the best Midwest area players he's seen over the years. "We just weren't in the right place at the right time in the draft to get them."

Oldis said there is no doubt about what athletic tools attract big league scouts.

"A good arm and speed are the two things God gave us. If you can run fast, beautiful. If you can throw hard, great. Those are God-given things. It's tough to teach a kid how to run faster. You can teach a kid how to hit the ball or throw a curve ball, things like that. If a kid can't hit but can run like hell, just throw him into the batting cage till he learns to hit," Oldis said.

THE EXPOS, ALONG WITH every other major league team, are now required to belong to the major league scouting bureau. The bureau functions by providing a scouting service to all the clubs.

"It's a great benefit," Oldis said. "They dig up a lot of players and find a lot of players. We only have five scouts, they have 20."

But the service also helped to destroy the old method of scouting players. During the 1950s and 1960s, each team would rely on its own scouts canvassing the countryside searching for that "diamond in the rough." Story after story told of a scout who was driving down the street, happened to see a kid hit a ball a mile and signed him on the spot. No more.

"Now days it's really hard to find that 'diamond in the rough,' it really is. You think you've got a kid hidden out and the next thing you know there are 40 scouts at his next game," Oldis said. "It's really hard to hide anyone anymore."

AND MONEY HAS CREATED problems while at the same time creating many opportunities for scouts. Many prospects hold out for the big bonus and play the scouts off against a college scholarship. Money, or the lack of, brought about the existence of the scouting bureau, which was created in large part to give each club a fair shot at each prospect. And the flow of money down to the scouting system is directly related to the success of the major league club.

"You're darn right we worry about the big club. That's where all the money's at," Oldis said. "We need a (Tim) Lincecum. You don't find many (Andre) Dawsons and those kind of people."

But Oldis said the major league club's immediate needs don't affect his scouting decisions.

"We always go after the best athletes whoever is in our order because it takes two or three years to get there," Oldis said.

Campanis wins 'Idiot Award'

Whenever given the opportunity to write a column, sports-writers develop a trend in what we write about. Dan Mil-lea gets threatened for what he writes while Cathy Cronin marvels at the grace of gymnasts. Steve Williams reminds us how fortunate the Iowa sports programs have been over recent years; Mike Trilk lets us know how much he enjoys that.

Marc Bona

I ALSO ENJOY granting my Idiot Award, and this week's champ has won it hands down — FORMER Los Angeles Dodger Vice-President Al Campanis.

I stress "former" because, after many years with the Dodger organization, Campanis resigned under pressure for an unprecedented comment regarding blacks. More specifically, his comment about blacks contained what he saw as the reason why blacks — in his words — are "not good swimmers."

The comment occurred while Campanis was being interviewed on ABC's "Nightline," April 6. Campanis told the show's host, Ted Koppel, "So it just might be — why are black men, or black people, not good swimmers? They just don't have the buoyancy."

A slip of the tongue is a mistake. A slip of the tongue while being interviewed is a grave mistake. But an idiotic comment like that is ridiculous. Al Campanis, what the hell were you thinking!?

THE LACK OF BLACKS in sports' administrative or managerial positions is not limited to baseball, however. In Sports Illustrated's Feb. 23, 1987, "Point After" column, Rick Telander makes note of the high percentage of blacks as football players, but the percentage of coaches — "one black per 10-man staff" — is low. Telander's assessment is correct: "perfect tokenism."

"Evidently blacks can pull the oars," Telander writes, "but they can't crack the whips."

Conditions on the collegiate level aren't much better. Of the 284 Division I schools in the nation last year, Iowa was one of a select few — maybe the only — which employed black men's and women's head basketball coaches. According to Ursula Walsh, director of research at NCAA headquarters in Mission, Kans., 283 schools offered men's basketball programs and 275 offered women's programs. However, "the NCAA doesn't keep any statistics on race," she said.

If the NCAA kept these statistics, then maybe more people would realize the imbalances of the system as it applies to coaching positions in sports.

Sports world, listen up: Campanis resigning for his backward mentality attitude was right but not right enough. Now try adding to the number of blacks in administrative positions.

Religious leaders threaten game sit-ins

NEW YORK (UPI) — A minister and councilman Tuesday threatened to disrupt Mets and Yankees games by holding sit-ins on the field if team owners fail to meet with them over hiring blacks for executive jobs.

Bronx Councilman Wendell Foster and the Rev. Al Sharpton said if the owners of two New York teams do not meet with black religious and civic leaders by April 24 they would picket the Mets next home game, scheduled for that day.

"FORTY YEARS AFTER Jackie Robinson supposedly integrated baseball there still is no real integration in that there is none in the front office," Foster, chairman of the Committee on International Intergroup Relations, said.

Sharpton, a black activist who heads the National Youth Movement, said a telegram had been sent to the team owners seeking the meeting to discuss alleged racism in executive hiring.

"We will begin picketing the stadium and are willing to go on the field and have a sit-in and disrupt the game," if there is no response from management, Sharpton said.

Mets owner Nelson Doubleday was out of town and unavailable for comment. Yankee officials had no immediate comment on whether they would meet with the delegation.

Foster said the city should not subsidize teams that engage in discrimination. He said he plans to introduce a resolution calling for hearings into the hiring practices of the Yankees and Mets.

Spring classics set in cycling circles

Imagine racing a bicycle over 250 kilometers (155 miles) in cold, rainy and windy weather, weather like ours of the past few days. Throw in some muddy, cobble-stoned roads, a few steep hills, like the Koppenberg climb or the Wall of Grammont, and some incredibly tough professional cyclists and you have the ingredients for a spring classic.

To American sports fans, April is the month when the baseball season opens. But to Europeans, April is the month of the spring classics — the most grueling one-day bicycle races in the world.

The long distances, rough roads, inclement weather and fierce competition turn these famous races into tests of will.

Irish superstar Sean Kelly claims these races are won not so much by athletic ability as by will power and strength of character.

LAST YEAR AFTER winning Paris-Roubaix, the most famous (infamous?) of the spring classics, Kelly claimed he was so numb the pain didn't matter any more. That's probably why he won.

Most of these annual races were founded around the turn of the century and have long and glorious histories. Devotees of the sport still tell epic stories about the immortals — Coppi, Merckx and Godefroot.

Last Sunday was the 85th running of the Paris-Roubaix, which was won by Belgian favorite Eric Vanderaerden of the powerful Panasonic team. He was followed into the Roubaix velodrome by three of his countrymen — Patrick Ver-sluis, Rudy Dhaenens and Jean-Philippe Vandenbrande.

THERE WERE ONLY 28 finishers in a field of over 150 riders. Earlier in the month Dutch rider Tuen Van Vliet won the 51st Het Volk, a race in which less than one-quarter of the riders finished. The harsh rate of attrition speaks of the difficulty of these races. In a normal race, three-quarters of the riders would finish.

Most of the riders drop out due to fatigue and mechanical failure. The cobble-stoned roads of Northern France and Belgium are known for their ability to puncture tires, smash wheels and break frames.

The constant jarring also takes its toll on the riders. Surviving such a race is a feat to be proud of. Those who drop out or crash out of the race are picked up by the "broom wagon."

April is the cruelest month of the year if you happen to be a professional cyclist racing in Europe. Most of the peleton ends up demoralized and disappointed, and only a hardened remnant survives to tell the story.

Mark Parman is an Iowa City bicyclist. His bicycling column appears in the DI every other Wednesday.

'Skeletons' author fails to create original style

By Teresa Heger
Arts/entertainment Editor

HENRIETTA GARNETT'S first novel, Family Skeletons, oozes with manners of the British upper class. It evolves around the unusual circumstances, impeccable politeness and hidden secrets of an eccentric family.

It also oozes with pretention. The first clue is the book jacket. The brief synopsis of Garnett's life runs:

Henrietta Garnett was born in Gordon Square, Bloomsbury in 1945. She is the daughter of David and Angelica Garnett, granddaughter of Vanessa Bell and Duncan Grant and great-niece of Virginia Woolf. In 1962, at the age of 17, she married Lytton Burgo Partridge (son of Ralph and Frances Partridge). He died a year later, three weeks after the birth of their daughter. After traveling extensively in Europe and America, she now divides her time between France and Italy. She is currently at work on her second novel.

IT IS HARDLY fair to compare a young author to Virginia Woolf, especially if they happen to be related. Some shoes can never be filled. But the book practically begs for the comparison; the only thing that it doesn't state outright is that Garnett is a new Woolf.

Stylistically, the novel is reminiscent — slightly — of Woolf's meaty prose. The language and tone of the novel are interesting. Garnett uses a clipped, concise voice, opening most of her sentences with the subject. Her lines are ungarnered by clauses or phrases and the impression she creates in hard and concrete. She has a definite knack for developing vivid images.

But the novel itself serves only as a feeble vehicle for her outstanding style. The plot is ridiculous and predictable, the pace is ponderous. Garnett might be better off writing poetry; her style lends itself more to creating an image than telling a tale.

THE CHARACTERS themselves are insulting in their Bloomsbury allusions. The heroine, Catherine, is apparently modeled off Woolf. She is a gifted writer who was raised by an eccentric 'uncle' who recalls Woolf's infamously cold father. Catherine, because of one tragedy after another, is struggling to maintain her sanity. As for the "family skeletons," they too are definitely grounded in the myths, rumors and realities surrounding Woolf's and Vanessa Bell's childhoods.

Garnett has definite potential as a writer, but literary success does not run, like blue eyes, down generations. She should stop trying to mirror the success of her ancestors and put her talent to original use.

'Joshua Tree' showcases U2's varied style, talent

By Shannon Heaton
Copy Editor

U2, ARGUABLY Ireland's best band, is a group that builds a future from their past. Since 1980, when the band released Boy in Europe, U2 has become one of the tops in alternative music.

The Joshua Tree, U2's latest effort, owes in great part its brilliance to virtuoso synthesist and producer Brian Eno, who lent his synthesizers to many of the songs. "Where the Streets Have No Name," the first song on the album, starts off with an anthemic Eno synth rhythm. Edge also leads with an powerful guitar. The song is upbeat not because it deals with a positive theme, but rather because it is a rebellious statement against society.

THE SECOND TRACK, "I Still Haven't Found What I'm Looking For," is another anti-big society song where vocalist Bono is not happy being trapped in the city. Adam Clayton, bassist, and Larry Mullen Jr., percussion, pound out an exciting backbeat during the song.

The first single off the album is "With or Without You," a track that shouldn't have been a first release. Because of its slow beginning, the listener may advance the album or switch off MTV before the song's passions emerge.

The first song Bono does not dominate with his voice is "Bullet the Blue Sky," where U2 no longer hides its political convictions behind shadowy words. This song requires heavy music, and U2 delivers. Edge's guitar, Clayton's bass and Mullen's drums pound out a message not soon to be forgotten.

THE WESTERN INFLUENCES in "Running to Stand Still" promote a feeling of casualness. Edge's guitars sound lazy, almost as if he were sitting around a gas station in Arizona, plucking at the strings of a banjo. The harmonica work at the end of the track gives the listener a folksy feeling.

Every young person who ever became bored with a small town's routines can identify with "Red Hill Mining Town." Bono, obviously a young man in the song, wants to get away from these routines and start his own life, make his own way.

Edge displays why he is considered one of the best rock guitarists today in "In God's Country." It may be said that Bono is the spiritual leader, but Edge is what makes the band the best. In "In God's Country," Edge leads off with upbeat guitars. Bono sings of the beauty of the West and wants to be set free there, where the land's greatest gift is gold. "Trip Through Your Wires" is a quick "cute" song where Bono meets a girl and knows he is in love. Although they are not normally depicted as outstanding individuals, like Bono or Edge, Mullen and Clayton together put down one hell of a rhythm.

Bono

THE EDGE BRINGS out his "infinite" guitar in "One Tree Hill," ripping chords similar to Jimi Hendrix. Bono's vocals also stretch the outer limits of possible ranges in this tune. Meanwhile, Clayton and Mullen stay contentedly in the background, putting out the rhythm as Bono and Edge defy musical reason.

Eno puts most of his time and energy into the song "Exit." This track probably will be recognized as the best instrumental work on the album as Edge jams on his "infinite." Clayton sets down a new, funky bass rhythm and Mullen bangs away at his drums.

"Mothers of the Disappeared," an extremely political track, shows quiet sadness and embarrassment for a world that would not only allow prisoners of conscience to be held, but also would keep the outside world from finding out about it.

War introduced the world to U2, and its style revolutionized alternative music. Unforgettable Fire was a mystical way of dealing with the world's problems. Joshua Tree combines the best of both albums.

'Fun' Fox prevents a 'Success' failure

By Teresa Heger
Arts/entertainment Editor

As graduation approaches, hundreds of UI students will be anxiously mailing out cover letters, sweating through interviews and desperately praying for a job.

These unemployed graduates should be able to relate to Michael J. Fox in The Secret of My Success.

Fox plays Brantley Foster, a 24-year-old would-be executive from Kansas who travels to New York to make it in the big-time business world. Brantley has tenuous connections with the Pemrose Corporation, a huge conglomerate that is run by his uncle, Howard Prescott (Richard Jordan). His uncle graciously gets Brantley an "entry-level" position — a job in the mailroom.

Brantley's spirits are not dampened by this lowly assignment; instead, he uses his access to company memos and files to begin formulating plans of his own. He moves into a vacant office, puts a pseudonym on the door and begins to shake up the system.

FOX IS THE KEY that keeps The Secret of My Success flowing. The film, quite simply, would have failed without him. While Fox's performance is nowhere near the level of humor and quality found in

Film

Back to the Future, he manages to project his sense of fun into the otherwise predictable film.

Perhaps part of the reason why Fox succeeds in The Secret of My Success is that the role of Brantley mirrors the character of Alex in "Family Ties." Brantley, like Alex, is a whiz kid ready to make it to the top. Sitcom-like situation comedy fills the film; it could be retitled Alex Gets A Job or Family Ties in The Business World. Fox hardly progresses in his role of Brantley, but he does maintain a passable level of humor.

The rest of the characters in Success simply stand in Fox's shadow, filling conveniently-placed stereotypes. Helen Slater plays Brantley's lover, Christy Wills, a woman who has slept with the boss to get ahead in the business world. Jordan does an efficient job of portraying the cold, hard-nosed company president and Margaret Whitton does a competent job playing his sexually frustrated wife.

The Secret of My Success is a light piece of fluff that showcases Fox quite nicely. "Family Ties" fans will probably like the film; others may want to stick to writing their resumes.

Love and Rockets 'Express' talent

By Jeff Rynott
Staff Writer

FROM 1979 to 1983 the British band Bauhaus was one of the more important bands in the "positive punk" movement at the close of the punk era. Often disparaged by critics as being pretentiously artsy, Bauhaus swung between moments of real talent and promise and moments of abject stupidity.

The band was a success in England but never made an impact in the United States, breaking up in 1983 and leaving behind a legacy which can be heard in such popular bands as The Fixx, INXS and the Psychedelic Furs.

BAUHAUS FANS will be surprised, however, at the latest offering from the current incarnation of the band, Love and Rockets. Love and Rockets includes all the Bauhaus members (guitarist/vocalist Daniel Ash, bassist/vocalist David J., and drummer Kevin Haskins) except for lead singer Peter Murphy (who is pursuing a solo career).

Records

The group's "Express" replaces Bauhaus gothic negativity with a sound harkening back to '60s psychedelia, right down to the paisley print on the album jacket.

"Express" delivers on the potential hinted at in Love and Rockets' hit-and-miss 1985 offering Seventh Dream of Teenage Heaven and some of the better moments of Bauhaus. The music is still experimental, but finally under control, resulting in songs that are always shifting and yet still "songs" and not excuses for electronic effects and distortion.

MOST OF the pieces are an audiophile's dream. There is always something going on in the music: shifting rhythms, styles, effects and instrumentations which often leave the endings of songs 180 degrees from where they began. "Express" is the first Love and Rockets or Bauhaus album without a "clunker" track; the songs are often very good, especially on the tour de force second side.

"Express" includes one cover — appropriately a '60s one, "Ball of Confusion" — and two versions of the same song, "All In My Mind." At first glance this points to a lack of originality, but the cover is well done and the two song versions are the same in name only, one a single version for the charts and the other a haunting acoustic rendition.

"Yin and Yang The Flower Pot Man" (yes, that is the correct title) combines a relentless acoustic guitar with early Pink Floyd experimentation, while "Love Me" offers a beautiful melody and a lyrical appeal for love and guidance.

"Life In Laralay" and "An American Dream" attack the California and American lifestyles, respectively.

WHILE THE lyrics occasionally falter (it is hard to swallow lines like "My love won't last for just one day/My love will last for two" or "you've never been ripped off/It's all in your mind") or inscrutable, they usually blend well with the music. The undercurrent of spirituality that ran through Seventh Dream is still present, but much more subtle.

Ash has always been an interesting guitarist, and his work is standout here, with Haskins and David J. adding the quality drums and bass that made "Bela Lugosi's Dead" a hit for Bauhaus. Ash and David J. add good vocals and fine harmonies as well.

With "Express", Love and Rockets has finally cashed in on their potential to create a fine album.
