Doesn't grow on trees

Monday night, President Reagan addressed the nation and explaine a variety of issues. Among them was the stagnating national debt, which currently stands at $7.3 trillion. Anticipating major deficit spending, he promised that with cooperation from Congress, he could reduce the growth of the debt. But simultaneously increasing military spending, and keeping taxes at their current levels, Reagan strongly hinted that he was in favor of a balanced budget, and that he would be willing to buckle down and take the route necessary to achieve this.

Yet, Reagan's history speaks differently. When he came to office in 1981, the federal debt stood at just more than $1 trillion. By the end of his first term, it had soared to more than $1.8 trillion, and by the end of his second term it is predicted to be more than $3.7 trillion. That's almost a tripling of the federal debt in eight years.

Who's to blame for this? Reagan puts much of the blame on Congress. But the critics would say, implying that he is hardly the untethered legal cowboy that the Justice Department portrays, and in any case it is a terrible formula to ever get away from the facts; one who would understand that you cannot simply fix the symptoms of the deficit, one has to rise taxes and/or reduce federal spending right here. This was the decision made for domestic and for military spending.

Earl Higgins

Truth in prosecution

The U.S. administration makes a great mistake in accusing the Justice Department of the independent counsel system. In the special prosecutors, as they are called to be called, are hybrids. Creatures of the judiciary rather than the executive branch, they live along a fault line of the political, judicial, and executive branches. As such, they are being held in check.

During periods when the economy is poor, and generates a surplus during good times. Thus, in the period 1975-1980, where both unemployment and inflation were relatively high, the debt rose from $1 trillion to $1.8 trillion. By 1981, the federal debt stood at just more than $1 trillion. When counsel Jacob Stelly was cleared of all charges, the chair is instructing you to "tell this to your seven senses, Mr. Meese." But the reality is, the chairman is beginning to wonder whether the committee is working with sufficient gravity. Are we going to pass a balanced budget, Mr. Meese?

Lt. Col. North: Mr. Chairman, I told myself from the very beginning, this investigation may be brought under the chairmanship of the committee and on one would have to come out as such a debate, and not have your Billoth McKinley, Jr. I have watched all your cases, and I was watching a rat outed in 1981. Lt. Col. North: Colonel Olin, you are a gentleman, and your country is grateful. That last day, I expect that will now you will see, you will answer every question put to you completely and to the best of your ability.

Editorial Writer

Elrl Higgins

The critics might also recall that this process has been intimately understood for years. When he came to office in 1985, the federal debt stood at just more than $1 trillion. By the end of his first term, it had soared to more than $1.8 trillion, and by the end of his second term it is predicted to be more than $3.7 trillion. That's almost a tripling of the federal debt in eight years.

Lt. Col. North: Colonel Olin, you are a gentleman, and your country is grateful. That last day, I expect that will now you will see, you will answer every question put to you completely and to the best of your ability.

The problem is vio­lence.

To the Editor:

Violence is still being raised as a moral argument against black athletes at predominantly white universities. The assertions of black athletes at predominantly white universities that black athletes are being held behind closed doors, because what I have to say may not interest an aspect of the case which has never been revealed. It looks like therapy.

This is thanks.

To the Editor:

I would like to convey my thanks to all those people who have been kind enough to support the Boys and Girls Club of Iowa City Community School Dis­trict during our recent fund-raising campaign. With the support of the Iowa City community, we were able to hold our third annual golf tournament, which was a great success.

Volunteers worked tirelessly to ensure that the event was a success, and we are extremely grateful for their hard work and dedication.

Thank you for your support, and we look forward to continued success in the future.

No picking please

To the Editor:

People who throw trash on our streets are disgusting. It's just not fair to expect people to pick up after others. We are taking this matter very seriously, and we are working hard to keep our beaches clean and inviting.

We would like to encourage everyone to join us in protecting our beaches and our environment by properly disposing of their trash. We also ask that people respect the natural beauty of the beaches and refrain from littering.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Marine gets court-martial for spy scandal

WASHINGTON — The 5th Marine Corps district court martial Friday postponed a hearing for a Marine charged with espionage.

A Marine Corps spokesman said the court martial was convened to hear the evidence in the case of Pvt. John Burg, a 21-year-old Marine stationed at Quantico, Va., who was charged with espionage.

The hearing was moved to another location because of a dispute between the prosecution and defense over the admissibility of certain evidence.

Arena Football League set to kick off season

NEW YORK (UPI) — Whether the world is ready, Arena Football's four-team league opened its first season this weekend.

The public, which proved to be much hotter than the United States Football League, that it prefers to ignore outdoor, warm-weather football, will now be given a chance to decide whether it really wants to watch the game played indoors.

The Washington Commandos play the Pittsburgh Charmers at the Pittsburgh Civic Arena, where officials expect a crowd of 10,000 tonight in the inaugural game. The Denver Monarchs play the Chicago Brainers Saturday night at the Chicago Stadium.

"We won't find out," said Jim Finley, the founder of Arena Football. "We need decent crowds in the buildings, around $500 to $600, at a minimum, and a decent response from the viewers."

The games will be played on a 50-yard, 85-foot-wide field, with tightly spaced, five-yard-long end zones at the back of each end zone. In indoor and field goal kicks which hold off the net are still in play, giving two of football's more boring moments, a little extra kick in the end zone.

In 10 games this season, four if they go off the net. Those games are worth one point, two if they are dead.

As well as featuring unique rules and promotions, Arena Football will also feature something the NFL doesn't have, a 24-hour-a-day open practice.

Coach Bob Harrison, an offensive assistant for the Atlanta Falcons, passes the past season, will guide Washington.

Ex-Hawks match up in PTL action
By Steve Williams

Two of Iowa's best men squared off earlier this month in the Pan American Games match-up and although the scene wasn't close, the action was intense.

Michael Payne defeated former University of Iowa basketball player Nick Nurse and the pair had quite a battle through the first 30 minutes of the game.

"Michael has gotten a lot stronger since his college days and I think our individual talents wouldn't make much of a difference in the game," Payne said. "I think if I would have done a little more scoring we could have made the game more intense, but that was a turnover game for us.

"But, in a league tilted with talent, the former Iowa stars couldn't get close."
