Ambrisco to abstain on towing contract

By James Cates

The Daily town.

City Councilor William Ambrisco announced Wednesday that he would abstain on a vote concerning a towing contract in August in order to avoid a conflict of interest.

But Ambrisco strongly denied earlier reports that he had an interest in the contract. He said that the city’s auction was the only way to get the work.

The question is whether a member of the city council who is a member of the company conducting the sale for the city is in a position to profit from the sale, according to the city’s code of ethics.

City Attorney Arthur Norton said that the councilman’s actions would be no conflict of interest if the company conducting the sale was a company that he held no stock in the past in the past or ever will.

TAB AMBRISCO and Iowa City Attorney Thomas Tersman said the question of conflict of interest for councilmen was not an issue.

“Tink Ambrisco did not have to check on the stock of the company he is holding in order to find out if he was a conflict,” Tersman said.

“Tink Ambrisco could not have used any stock in which he may have been invested in order to find out if he is a conflict.”

Tersman said that Ambrisco should have abstained from voting on the contract.

Merchants cash in on North

By Paper Conferences

The Daily Iowan

John North's star is glowing, merchants in North Liberty are shining too.

Snow motorists to Main Street

Scores of new motorists are flooding into the businesses of North Liberty.

North Liberty's Main Street is being invaded by motorists, a new phenomenon for the town's business owners.

One of the biggest changes is the increase in traffic, according to many merchants.

"It's been a great boost for our business," said one merchant.

Another merchant added, "People are coming in from all over to see the town."
'La Bamba' compromises and loses its soul

By Matthew Wills

I

t's not likely that screenwriter Larry McMurtry would have agreed that the relationship in "La Bamba" is anything like the one between commercial acceptability and story. For his adaptation of the story of Ritchie Valens, the Chicago-born writer whose filmic life was to be fraught with the perils of the music business, McMurtry chose to portray the young Valens as a bit of a dunce, a fall guy for any number of agents and film producers who were eager to jump aboard his bandwagon of fame and fortune. McMurtry's script, which was co-written with the film's director, Ron Howard, is a tale of treachery, duplicity, and betrayal, a cautionary tale that might have been told better had it been directed by John Cassavetes or Martin Scorsese. As it is, "La Bamba" is a cautionary tale told by a screenwriter who is more interested in making a buck than in telling a good story.

The film opens with Ritchie Valens (as he is known in the film) being interviewed by a music manager who is trying to sell him the idea of a film about his life. The manager tells Valens that he will be played by a younger actor, and that the film will be about the trials of being a rock star. Valens, who is not at all interested in the idea of a film about his life, is more interested in the idea of making money. He agrees to play the role of Ritchie Valens, and the film begins.

The film then follows Ritchie Valens as he travels to Hollywood to star in a film about his life. Ritchie is a bit of a dunce, and he makes a series of mistakes that lead to his eventual death. Ritchie's death is a tragedy, and the film ends with a scene of Ritchie's mother and father mourning his loss.

In its delicate balance of fact and fiction, "La Bamba" is a film that is more interested in making a buck than in telling a good story. The film is a cautionary tale, a tale of the perils of the music business, and of the dangers of being a rock star. The film is a cautionary tale that is told with a bit of a dunce, and it is a cautionary tale that is more interested in making a buck than in telling a good story.
Bill passed to avert financial crisis

WASHINGTON — Congress, trying to escape a financial "crisis," passed legislation Wednesday to extend a war chest for eight days as the government can borrow more money while lawmakers work on a long-term budget agreement.

The so-called "continuing resolution" bill includes a provision that would allow the Treasury to borrow up to $10 billion for war costs and other expenses. It also includes a provision that would allow the Treasury to sell more government bonds.

A temporary stopgap measure to prevent a financial crisis has kept the government operating despite a funding gap. The unexpected warning of government default has left opponents to the bill seething.

The legislation, which was approved by a voice vote, would let the Treasury borrow the money until Sept. 30, 2017, the end of the fiscal year.

'Lesion' removed from Reagan's nose

WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan, who underwent surgery Wednesday, said he was doing well after having a lesion removed from his nose.

The procedure, which lasted about an hour, was performed by Dr. Michael H. Ellis, a plastic surgeon. The procedure involved the removal of a lesion believed to be a basal cell carcinoma, a type of skin cancer.

The president, who is 73 years old, was said to be doing fine and expected to return to his daily schedule soon. He will not need to take any special precautions, according to his doctors.

Congress mulls defense of Romney's nomination

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama named conservative jurist Robert Bork to be a federal judge Wednesday.

Obama's move comes as the president's Democratic Party faces a decision on whether to oppose Bork's nomination, which would require a second vote next week in the Senate.

Bork, a former Reagan administration official, is considered a conservative and has been a divisive figure in Washington. He has been involved in several controversies, including the Iran-Contra Affair.

The Senate is expected to take up the nomination next week.

Reagan pressures Senators

Asks for Bork to be evaluated on his merits

By: Bill Pascrell

WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan, who is retiring from the White House in eight days, is making a final push for the nomination of conservative jurist Robert Bork to the federal bench.

Reagan, who has been a vocal supporter of Bork's nomination, is expected to make a personal appeal to lawmakers in an effort to secure their support.

The president has been a vocal supporter of Bork, saying that he is a man of integrity and experience who would bring a conservative perspective to the federal judiciary.

Reagan's push comes as the Senate is expected to vote on Bork's nomination next week. The president is expected to make a personal appeal to lawmakers in an effort to secure their support.

U.S.S.R. sentences Chernobyl workers

By: Sarah Lemon

WASHINGTON — The U.S.S.R. has sentenced 26 Chernobyl workers to prison for their roles in the 1986 nuclear disaster.

The workers were convicted of criminal negligence and sentenced to terms ranging from two to 10 years. The sentences were announced Wednesday.

The workers were found guilty of criminal negligence for their roles in the disaster, which caused the world's worst nuclear accident.

Dome will host pogo, football, within 24 hours

By Joe A. Oyama Jr.

Morgan Freeman International

NEW ORLEANS — The Louisiana Superdome will host the annual college football game on Oct. 11, and the New Orleans Saints' 1987 debut as a 24-hour sports complex.

"We're just getting started," Curl said. "But it's time well spent. These things are made long ago, but we're young and motivated." He also pointed out that the Superdome is about to open.

"In the beginning, we're all here," Curl said. "It's going to be an interesting mechanism." He said that Tulane's sports information director, said that the Saints had trained the Cleveland Browns at the Superdome.

"WE HAD A GREAT WEEKEND — for the city and the Superdome," Curl said.

"It's a great year for our security people, but we think they can do better. We have no problem with a SEC game, but we have no problem with a SEC game, but it's tough to play games.

Curl and preparations for the historic weekend are the same. All Saints' Day weekend, the city of New Orleans learned the truth, and the City of New Orleans learned, as they will be on the move.

"The real key to the thing was the cooperation of the Tulane people," Curl said.

"In the beginning, we're all here," Curl said. "It's a great year for our security people, but we think they can do better. We have no problem with a SEC game, but it's tough to play games."

Kuester could gain more eligibility

By Scott Wiegert

The Daily News

Lars Kuester, the University of Iowa baseball player who received a controversial one-year eligibility extension last spring, may receive another extension this year for the Hawkeyes. Kuester, a 19-year-old sophomore from Illinois, is scheduled to graduate from the University this June with a degree in食品 engineering.

The Daily News has previously reported that if Kuester were to choose to return for his senior season, he would be eligible under NCAA rules, but would need a waiver from the NCAA in order to play.

In a recent interview, Kuester said, "I'm definitely thinking about it. I've never had a chance to play with this team and I think it would be a good experience for me."

Kuester's eligibility extension was granted because of a severe knee injury he suffered during the 1996 season. The NCAA usually does not grant extensions for eligibility, but in this case, the NCAA granted Kuester an exception.

If Kuester chooses to return for his senior season, he would have to compete against other players for a starting position on the team. However, Kuester has expressed a strong desire to return to the field.

"I just want to play ball," Kuester said. "I've been thinking about it a lot, and I really want to see what I can do."

Kuester's decision will likely be made in the coming weeks, as the Hawkeyes begin their season in February. Kuester is expected to make a public announcement on his decision in the near future.
